START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

July 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER:
BSO-56-055

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959

VOL	TITLE	DATES
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: IA IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK:

REEL 55

Volume 91

European Tour

1956

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

2.0

2.2

2.5

2.8

3.2

3.6

4.0

4.5

5.0

5.6

6.3

7.1

8.0

9.0

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 91

European Tour

1956

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH, Music Director

—

EUROPEAN TOUR 1956

Conductors:

CHARLES MUNCH PIERRE MONTEUX

—

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of Europe is made in co-operation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy.

—

European Tour Management:
HAROLD HOLT, LTD
IAN HUNTER, Managing Director
122, WIGMORE STREET
LONDON, W.1., ENGLAND

THOMAS D. PERRY JR., Manager
G. U. RECBA, Assistant Manager

—

BALDWIN PIANO R.C.A. VICTOR RECORDS

THIS SCHEDULE contains the best information at the time of printing, all times shown are local time. There will be changes and additions of detail as we go along, and all members are warmly urged to keep close tabs on the official bulletin board which will be placed backstage at each hall, and will contain the final information on the next move. All members will be responsible for knowing the information posted thereon day by day.

*

THE MANAGEMENT can be reached, if required, at the official hotels listed. Please keep it informed of what it should know, but not of every breath you take.

*

FOR EUROPEAN FLIGHTS, personal baggage (including instruments, if carried) is limited to forty-four pounds per passenger.

*

Baggage is carried at the risk of the owner.

SUBJECT TO CHANGE.

Friday, 24th August, 1956

CORK

Local Agent: Mr. Louis Elliman,
Theatre Royal,
Hawkins Street, Dublin.

General Staff booked at: Metropole Hotel,
Cork.

Rehearsal: Savoy Theatre. Time, 11.00–13.30 hrs.

Concert: Savoy Theatre. Time, 20.00 hrs.

Conductor: Charles Munch.

Programme: Anderson – Irish Suite
Haydn – Symphony No. 102.
Dukas – L'Apprenti Sorcier.
Brahms – Symphony No. 2.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Friday, 24th August, 1956

CORK

Local Agent: Mr. Louis Elliman,
Theatre Royal,
Hawkins Street, Dublin.

General Staff booked at: Metropole Hotel,
Cork.

Rehearsal: Savoy Theatre. Time, 11.00–13.30 hrs.

Concert: Savoy Theatre. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Anderson – Irish Suite
Haydn – Symphony No. 102.
Dukas – L'Apprenti Sorcier.
Brahms – Symphony No. 2.

Saturday, 25th August, 1956

CORK/DUBLIN/EDINBURGH

Personnel: On departure: pick up point for buses Imperial Hotel, 08.30 hrs.
Depart: Cork, Glanmire Station, 09.00 hrs.
Arrive: Dublin, 12.00 hrs.
On arrival in Dublin direct by bus to Theatre Royal.

Local Agent: Mr. Louis Elliman, Theatre Royal, Hawkins Street, Dublin. Telephone No. Dublin 70587, 79418.

Rehearsal: Theatre Royal. Time, 13.45–14.15 hrs.
Concert: Theatre Royal. Time, 15.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Haydn – Symphony 102.
Hanson – Elegy.
Strauss – Don Juan.
Schumann – Symphony No. 2.
Coaches will leave the theatre for the docks and the airport immediately after the concert.

Personnel: Depart: by air from Dublin Airport:
Flight I, 18.15 hrs.
Flight II, 18.30 hrs.
By sea from Dublin North Wall Quay on B.I. Steamer at 18.30 hrs.
Dinner has been ordered on board.
Arrival: by air at Edinburgh Turnhouse Airport:
Flight I, 19.50 hrs.
Flight II, 20.05 hrs.
Buses to George Hotel, Edinburgh.
Edinburgh Festival Society:
Office: Synod Hall, Castle Terrace, Edinburgh, 1.
Telephone: FOU 1432.

Sunday, 26th August, 1956

Personnel: Arrive: on B.I. Steamer at Glasgow at 08.00 hrs.
NOTE: Breakfast on boat prior to disembarkation.
On arrival: SMT coaches will meet ship in Glasgow and take passengers to Princes Street Station, Edinburgh.

General staff booked at: Caledonian Hotel.

Rehearsal: Usher Hall. Time, 17.00 hrs.
NOTE: Cold buffet arranged at Caledonian Hotel, 18.45–19.30 hrs.

Concert: Usher Hall. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Haydn – Symphony 102.
Piston – Symphony 6.
Strauss – Don Juan.
Dukas – L'Apprenti Sorcier.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Monday, 27*th August*, 1956

EDINBURGH

Rehearsal: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 10.00–12.30 hrs.

Concert: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Programme: Creston – Symphony No. 2.
Bartok – Concerto for Orchestra.
Schubert – Symphony No. 7.

Reception by U.S. Consul General after Concert at the Caledonian Hotel.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Tuesday, 28*th August*, 1956

EDINBURGH

Rehearsal: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 10.00–12.30 hrs.

Festival Garden Party: Lauriston Castle. Time, 15.00 hrs.
(Transport to be provided.)

Concert: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch. Soloist: Isaac Stern.
Programme: Copland – Symphonic Ode.
Beethoven – Violin Concerto.
Schumann – Symphony No. 2.

Saturday, 25th August, 1956

CORK/DUBLIN/EDINBURGH

Personnel: On departure: pick up point for buses Imperial Hotel, 08.30 hrs.

Depart: Cork, Glanmire Station, 09.00 hrs.

Arrive: Dublin, 12.00 hrs.

On arrival in Dublin direct by bus to Theatre Royal.

Local Agent: Mr. Louis Elliman, Theatre Royal, Hawkins Street, Dublin. Telephone No. Dublin 70587, 79418.

Rehearsal: Theatre Royal. Time, 13.45–14.15 hrs.

Concert: Theatre Royal. Time, 15.00 hrs.

Conductor: Charles Munch.

Programme: Haydn – Symphony 102.
Hanson – Elegy.
Strauss – Don Juan.
Schumann – Symphony No. 2.

Coaches will leave the theatre for the docks and the airport immediately after the concert.

Personnel: Depart: by air from Dublin Airport:
Flight I, 18.15 hrs.
Flight II, 18.30 hrs.
By sea from Dublin North Wall Quay on B.I. Steamer at 18.30 hrs.
Dinner has been ordered on board.

Arrival: by air at Edinburgh Turnhouse Airport:
Flight I, 19.50 hrs.
Flight II, 20.05 hrs.
Buses to George Hotel, Edinburgh.

Edinburgh Festival Society:
Office: Synod Hall, Castle Terrace, Edinburgh, 1.
Telephone: FOU 1432.

Sunday, 26th August, 1956

Personnel: Arrive: on B.I. Steamer at Glasgow at 08.00 hrs.
NOTE: Breakfast on boat prior to disembarkation.

On arrival: SMT coaches will meet ship in Glasgow and take passengers to Princes Street Station, Edinburgh.

General staff booked at: Caledonian Hotel.

Rehearsal: Usher Hall. Time, 17.00 hrs.
NOTE: Cold buffet arranged at Caledonian Hotel, 18.45–19.30 hrs.

Concert: Usher Hall. Time, 20.00 hrs.

Conductor: Charles Munch.

Programme: Haydn – Symphony 102.
Piston – Symphony 6.
Strauss – Don Juan.
Dukas – L'Apprenti Sorcier.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Monday, 27*th August*, 1956

EDINBURGH

Rehearsal: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 10.00–12.30 hrs.

Concert: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Programme: Creston – Symphony No. 2.
Bartok – Concerto for Orchestra.
Schubert – Symphony No. 7.

Reception by U.S. Consul General after Concert at the Caledonian Hotel.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Tuesday, 28*th August*, 1956

EDINBURGH

Rehearsal: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 10.00–12.30 hrs.

Festival Garden Party: Lauriston Castle. Time, 15.00 hrs.
(Transport to be provided.)

Concert: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch. Soloist: Isaac Stern.
Programme: Copland – Symphonic Ode.
Beethoven – Violin Concerto.
Schumann – Symphony No. 2.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Wednesday, 29th August, 1956

EDINBURGH

No Morning Rehearsal.

Concert: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux. Soloist: Casadesus.
Programme: Freed – Festival Overture.
Brahms – Symphony No. 3.
Franck – Symphonic Variations.
Ravel – Piano Concerto for left hand.
Strauss – 'Der Rosenkavalier'.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Thursday, 30th August, 1956

EDINBURGH

Rehearsal: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 10.00–12.30 hrs.

Concert: Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch. Soloist: Curzon.
Programme: Hanson – Elegy.
Schumann – Piano Concerto.
Honegger – Symphony No. 5.
Debussy – La Mer.

Homage to Koussevitzky.

Reception by Lord Provost at 22.30 hrs., City Chambers.

Friday, 31*st August*, 1956

EDINBURGH/COPENHAGEN

Personnel: On departure: buses leave Usher Hall, Edinburgh at 08.00 hrs. for Prestwick.
Depart: Flight I, DC6B ex Prestwick, 12.00 hrs.
Flight II, DC6 ex Prestwick, 12.10 hrs.
Arrive: Flight I at Copenhagen, 14.55 hrs.
Flight II at Copenhagen, 15.00 hrs.
On arrival: buses from Airport to Hotel Angleterre, Copenhagen.

Local Agent: Mr. Fleming Sonnerup, Wilhelm Hansen Musik-Forlag, Gothersgade 9/11, Copenhagen K. Telephone No. Central 5183.

General Staff booked at: Hotel Angleterre.

No Rehearsal.

Concert: Tivoli Hall. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Programme: Rossini – L'Italiana.
Brahms – Symphony 3.
Creston – Symphony 2.
Strauss – Rosenkavalier Suite.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Saturday, 1*st September*, 1956

COPENHAGEN/OSLO

Personnel: On departure: buses leave Hotel Angleterre. (Time to be advised.)
Depart: Flight I, Convair from Copenhagen, 13.00 hrs.
Flight II, DC6B from Copenhagen, 13.30 hrs.
Arrive: Flight I in Oslo, 14.50 hrs.
Flight II in Oslo, 15.00 hrs.
On arrival: buses from airport to Hotel Bristol.

Local Agent: Mr. Per Gottschalk Tollbodgaten 3iv, Oslo. Telephone No. 42.63.79.

General Staff booked at: Hotel Bristol.

Rehearsal: Folketeateret. Time, 18.45–19.15 hrs.

Concert: Folketeateret. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Beethoven – Eroica.
Piston – Symphony 6.
Ravel – Daphnis.

Reception after Concert by U.S. Ambassador at Embassy.

Sunday, 2*nd September*, 1956

REST DAY in OSLO

EUROPEAN TOUR

Monday, 3rd September, 1956

OSLO/STOCKHOLM

Personnel: On departure: buses from Hotel Bristol. (Time to be advised.)

Depart: Flight I: SAS SK916, depart 12.14 hrs.
Flight II: BEA BE 210, depart 12.20 hrs.
Flight III: DC6 B, depart 13.45 hrs.

Arrive: Flight I: SK 916, Stockholm, 13.35 hrs.
Flight II: BE 210, Stockholm, 13.30 hrs.
Flight III: DC6 B, Stockholm, 15.05 hrs.

On arrival: buses to Grand Hotel, Stockholm, from Airport.

Local Agent: Mr. Helmer Enwall, Konsertbolaget, Hamngatan 22A, Stockholm C. Telephone No. 22.00.22.

General Staff booked at: Grand Hotel.

Rehearsal: Stockholm, Concert Hall. Time, 18.45–19.15 hrs.

Concert: Stockholm Concert Hall. Time. 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Beethoven – Eroica.
Piston – Symphony 6.
Ravel – Daphnis.

Reception after Concert at U.S. Embassy.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Tuesday, 4th September, 1956

STOCKHOLM/HELSKINI

Personnel: On departure: buses from Grand Hotel to Airport (Time to be advised.)

Depart: from Stockholm:
Flight I: DC6B, 09.00 hrs.
Flight II: Convair, 09.00 hrs.
Flight III: Finnair, AY782, 10.15 hrs.

Arrive: Helsinki: Flight I: 11.20 hrs.
Flight II: 11.20 hrs.
Flight III: 12.40 hrs.

Local arrangements: On arrival: buses to Kamp Hotel from Airport.

Local Agent: Mr. Roger Lindberg, Fazer Konsertdirektion, Alexandersgatan 11, Helsinki. Telephone No. 10751.

General Staff booked at: Kamp Hotel.

Rehearsal: A Messuhalli. (Fair Trade Hall A). Time, 17.00–19.30 hrs.

Concert: A Messuhalli. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Beethoven – Eroica.
Piston – Symphony 6.
Ravel – Daphnis.

Wednesday, 5th September, 1956

HELSINKI/LENINGRAD

Personnel: On departure: buses from Kamp Hotel to Airport. (Time to be advised.)

Depart: ex Helsinki by special Aeroflot flights at

Flight I: 08.30 hrs.
Flight II: 08.45 hrs.
Flight III: 09.00 hrs.
Flight IV: 13.25 hrs.
Flight V: 13.40 hrs.
Flight VI: 13.50 hrs.
} Flight approx. 1½ hrs.

Local arrangements:

NOTE: Local arrangements throughout Russia to be advised.

Thursday, 6th September, 1956

LENINGRAD

Rehearsal: Great Hall of Conservatoire. Time, 18.45–19.15 hrs.

Concert: Great Hall of Conservatoire. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Beethoven – Eroica.
Piston – Symphony 6.
Ravel – Daphnis.

Friday, 7th September, 1956

LENINGRAD

No Rehearsal.

Concert: Great Hall of Conservatoire. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Programme: Haydn – Surprise Symphony.
Creston – Symphony 2.
Schubert – Symphony 7.

Personnel: Depart: overnight Leningrad/Moscow after concert by sleeper.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Saturday, 8th September, 1956

MOSCOW

Personnel: Arrive: Moscow, at time to be advised.

Rehearsal: Great Hall of Conservatoire. Time, 12.00–14.30 hrs.

Concert: Great Hall of Conservatoire. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Beethoven : Eroica.
Piston – Symphony 6.
Ravel – Daphnis.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Sunday, 9th September, 1956

MOSCOW

No Rehearsal.

Concert I: Great Hall of Conservatoire. Time, 14.00 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Programme: Haydn – Surprise.
Creston – Symphony 2.
Schubert – Symphony 7.

Concert II: Great Hall of Conservatoire. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Haydn – Symphony 102
Copland – Ode.
Strauss – Don Juan.
Dukas – L'Apprenti

Monday, 10*th September*, 1956

MOSCOW/PRAGUE

REST DAY

Personnel: On departure: buses will be provided to airport. Departure point and time to be advised.

Depart: by air from Moscow, evening, time to be advised.

Arrive: Prague, time to be advised.

On arrival: buses from airport at Prague to Hotel Alcron.

Local Agent: Dr. Vilem Pospisil, "Prague Spring Concert Agency", Dum Umekie, Prague 1. Telephone No. Prague 638.56.

General Staff booked at: Alcron Hotel.

Tuesday, 11*th September*, 1956

PRAGUE

Local Agent: Dr. Vilem Pospisil, "Prague Spring" Concert Agency, Dum Umelcu, Prague 1. Telephone No. Prague 638.56.

General Staff booked at: Hotel Alcron.

No Rehearsal.

Concert: Smetana Hall. Time, 20.00 hrs.

Conductor: Charles Munch.

Programme: Hanson – Elegy.
Honneger – Symphony 3.
Beethoven – Eroica,
or
Brahms – Symphony 2.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Wednesday, 12*th September*, 1956

PRAGUE/VIENNA

Personnel: On departure: buses from Hotel Alcron to Airport at time to be advised.

Depart: KLM DC4: Flight I: Prague, 08.00 hrs.
Flight II: Prague, 13.00 hrs.

Arrive: Vienna: Flight I, 09.20 hrs.
Flight II, 14.20 hrs.

On arrival: buses to Sacher Hotel.

Local Agent: Martin Taubman, Lothringerstrasse 20, Vienna 3. Telephone No. B 50 2 48.

General Staff booked at: Sacher Hotel.

No Rehearsal.

Concert: Hall, Konzerthaus. Time, 19.30 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Hanson – Elegy.
Honegger – Symphony 3.
Ravel – Daphnis.
Brahms – Symphony 2.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Thursday, 13*th September*, 1956

STUTTGART

Personnel: On departure: buses from Sacher Hotel to Airport at time to be advised.

Depart: Flight I: KLM DC4, 07.30 hrs.
Flight II: KLM DC4, 13.00 hrs.

Arrive: Flight I: at Stuttgart, 09.25 hrs.
Flight II: at Stuttgart, 15.05 hrs.

On arrival: buses from Airport to Reichsbahnhotel.

Local Agent: Gustav Fineman, Cologne.

General Staff booked at: Reichsbahnhotel.

Rehearsal: Leiderhalle. Time, 18.45–19.15 hrs.

Concert: Liederhalle. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Hanson – Elegy.
Honegger – Symphony 3.
Ravel – Daphnis.
Brahms – Symphony 2.

Friday, 14th September, 1956

STUTTGART/MUNICH

Personnel: Depart: Hauptbahnhof on German Railways train D 203, from Stuttgart, 10.16 hrs.

Arrive: Munich, 13.12 hrs.

Local Agent: C. W. Winderstein, Sendlingerstrusse 55. Telephone 290.483.

General Staff booked at: Vier Jahreszeiten Hotel.

Rehearsal: Kongressaal, Deutchesmuseum. Time, 15.00–17.30 hrs.

Concert: Kongressaal, Deutchesmuseum. Time, 20.00 hrs.

Conductor: Charles Munch.

Programme: Haydn – Symphony 102.
Hanson – Elegy.
Martinu – Fantaisies.
Brahms – Symphony 2.

Reception after Concert at Hall.

Saturday, 15th September, 1956

REST DAY

Personnel (Group I): Depart: Hauptbahnhof on German Railways train D 80, from Munich, 08.29 hrs.

Arrive: Zurich, 13.06 hrs.

Local Agent: in Zurich: Toni Stoeckli, Zurichbergstrasse 7, Zurich. Telephone No. Zurich 347710.

General Staff booked at: Hotel Eicher (Zurich).

EUROPEAN TOUR

Sunday, 16*th September*, 1956

ZURICH

Personnel (Group II): Depart: Hauptbahnhof, German Railways train D 80, 08.29 hrs.
Arrive: Zurich, 13.06 hrs.

Local Agent: Toni Stoeckli, Zurichbergstrasse 7, Zurich. Telephone No. 347710.

General Staff booked at: Hotel Eicher.
No Rehearsal.

Concert: Tonhalle, Zurich. Time, 20.15 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Programme: Haydn – Surprise Symphony.
Creston – Symphony No. 2.
Schubert – Symphony No. 7.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Monday, 17*th September*, 1956

ZURICH/BERNE

Personnel: Depart: Hauptbahnhof, 09.27 hrs.
Arrive: Berne, 11.14 hrs.

Local Agent: Toni Stoeckli, Zurich.

General Staff booked at: Hotel Bellevue Palace.
No Rehearsal.

Concert: Casino Hall, Berne. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Programme: Haydn – Surprise Symphony.
Creston – Symphony No. 2.
Schubert – Symphony No. 7.

Reception by U.S. Consul General after Concert.

Personnel (Group I): Depart: Berne at time to be advised.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Tuesday, 18*th September*, 1956

BERNE/PARIS

REST DAY

Personnel (Group I): Arrive: Paris at time to be advised.
(Group II): Depart: Berne, 22.05 hrs. by sleeper for Paris.

Local Agent: in Paris: Charles Kiesgen, 252 Faubourg St. Honoré, Paris VIII. Telephone No. Wagram 2125.

General Staff booked at: Plaza Athenée Hotel.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Wednesday, 19*th September*, 1956

PARIS

Personnel: (Group II) Arrive: Paris, Gare de Lyon, 06.25 hrs.

Local Agent: Charles Kiesgen, 252 Faubourg St. Honoré, Paris, VIII. Telephone No. Wagram 2125.

General Staff booked at: Hotel Plaza Athenée.

Rehearsal: Theatre Champs-Elysées. Time, 12.00–14.30 hrs.

Concert: Theatre Champs-Elysées. Time, 21.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Hanson – Elegy.
Martinu – Fantaisies.
Debussy – La Mer.
Brahms – Symphony No. 2.

Homage à Koussevitzky.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Thursday, 20*th September*, 1956

PARIS

Local Agent: Charles Kiesgen, 252 Faubourg St. Honoré, Paris VIII. Telephone No. Wagram 2125.

General Staff booked at: Hotel Plaza Athenée.
No Rehearsal.

Concert: Champs-Elysées. Time, 21.00 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Soloist: Yehudi Menuhin.
Programme: Bach – Sinfonia.
Brahms – Violin Concerto.
Freed – Festival Overture.
Enesco – Suite

In Memory of Enesco.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Friday, 21*st September*, 1956

CHARTRES

Personnel: Depart: Paris by bus from Plaza Athenée at time to be advised.

Return to Paris by bus after concert.

Local Agent: Charles Kiesgen, 252 Faubourg St. Honoré, Paris VIII. Telephone No. Wagram 2125.

General Staff booked at: Plaza Athenée Hotel, Paris.

Rehearsal: Chartres Cathedral. Time, 19.30–20.00 hrs.

Concert: Chartres Cathedral. Time, 21.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Barber – Adagio.
Honneger – Symphony 3.
Beethoven – Eroica.

Saturday, 22*nd September*, 1956

PARIS

REST DAY

PARIS/LEEDS

Sunday, 23rd September, 1956

Personnel: On departure: by bus from Plaza Athenée Hotel at time to be advised.

Depart: Flight I: Le Bourget, BE Flight 759, 09.00 hrs.
Flight II: Le Bourget, BE Flight 760, 09.15 hrs.
Flight III: Le Bourget, BE Flight (regular) 332, 10.00 hrs. (32).

Arrive: Manchester Ringway, Flight I, 10.40 hrs.
Manchester Ringway, Flight II, 11.25 hrs.
London Airport, Flight III, 11.25 hrs.

Flight III Depart: London Airport on BE Flight 772, 12.30 hrs.

Flight III Arrive: Manchester Ringway, 13.50 hrs.

On arrival: by road direct to Leeds Town Hall.

Local Agent: Harold Holt Ltd. and Leeds Civic Music Committee.

General Staff booked at: Queen's Hotel.

No Rehearsal.

Concert: Town Hall, Leeds. Time, 19.30 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Programme: Rossini – Semiramide.
Brahms – Symphony No. 3.
Creston – Symphony No. 2.
Strauss – Der Rosenkavalier.

Monday, 24th September, 1956

LEEDS/LONDON

Personnel: Depart: Leeds Central Station, 09.50 hrs.
Arrive: London, Kings Cross, 13.45 hrs.

Local Agent: Harold Holt Ltd., 122 Wigmore Street, London, W.1. Telephone No. Welbeck 2331.

General Staff booked at: Savoy Hotel.

Rehearsal: Royal Festival Hall. Time, 18.45–19.15 hrs.

Concert: Royal Festival Hall. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Charles Munch.
Programme: Beethoven – Eroica.
Piston – Symphony 6.
Debussy – La Mer.

Reception given by U.S. Ambassador at Hall after Concert

EUROPEAN TOUR

Tuesday, 25th September, 1956

LONDON

Local Agent: Harold Holt Ltd., 122 Wigmore Street, London, W.1. Telephone No. Welbeck 2331.

General Staff booked at: Savoy Hotel.
No Rehearsal.

Concert: Royal Festival Hall. Time, 20.00 hrs.
Conductor: Pierre Monteux.
Programme: Rossini – L'Italiana.
Brahms – Symphony 3.
Creston – Symphony 2.
Strauss – Rosenkavalier Suite.

EUROPEAN TOUR

Wednesday, 26th September, 1956

LONDON

REST DAY

General Staff booked at Savoy Hotel.

—

Thursday, 27th September, 1956.
REST DAY.

Personnel: buses will leave from Royal Festival Hall at 20.30 hrs.
N.B. Those travelling independently should check in at London Airport North at 21.30 hrs.

Depart: KLM Flight X (6337) from London Airport, 22.30 hrs.

—

Friday, 28th September, 1956

Personnel: Flight X arrives Boston, 09.15 hrs.

—

Monday, 1st October, 1956

Personnel: buses will leave from Royal Festival Hall at 20.30 hrs.
N.B. Those travelling independently should check in at London Airport North at 21.30 hrs.

Depart: KLM Flight Y (7804) from London Airport, 22.30 hrs.

—

Tuesday, 2nd October, 1956

Personnel: Flight Y arrives Boston, 09.15 hrs.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 55,423

JUL 27 1955

Following the Farmers

So stimulating has been the experience of Soviet agriculturalists in Iowa and Iowa farmers in Russia that the idea of professional and cultural exchange between the two countries is catching on in other fields. When six of the dozen touring Communists attend Sunday services in a little Presbyterian church out in the corn country, almost anything can happen.

Among the first to jump in with an offer to join the goodwill movement has been the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At Tanglewood, where it is taking part in the Summer season with customary success, the Boston orchestra reacted promptly. Henry B. Cabot, president of trustees, said the Boston orchestra is "ready and eager, if the President wishes, to be the first American orchestra to play in Moscow."

Well, it should be said immediately that a few concerts in Moscow by an American orchestra, even the excellent Boston Symphony, will not untangle the German unification knot. Nor will the tour of a Moscow ballet company in this country accomplish disarmament. Yet if the Iron Curtain is to come down, as it must in order to dispel hostile feelings, cultural exchanges will be important.

Certainly there is not the slightest harm in sending all the orchestras and other cultural agencies we can to the Soviet Union. Nor can any harm be done by welcoming Russian performers here. If we can book a few Soviet lecturers for some of our clubs, let them come. The only requirement should be that the exchange be two-way, as in the case of the farmers.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

JUL 28 1955

Symphony Bids To Visit Russia In 1956 Tour

With the announcement in Geneva that President Eisenhower suggested to the Soviet leaders that the iron curtain be lifted for the interchange and improvement of cultural relations, the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra through its president Henry B. Cabot announced that the Boston Symphony would be happy

Continued on Page Eight

Symphony Bids

Continued from Page One

Russia while visiting European countries in 1956. According to Mr. Cabot, the invitation was extended to the appropriate authorities in Moscow but no official reply has as yet been received.

The orchestra is planning a European trip in September, 1956. Present plans in the negotiating stages include an opening week festival at Edinburgh after that a visit to Russia could very well be arranged. Mr. Cabot pointed out that if the invitation of the Boston Symphony is accepted that it would be the first time for an American orchestra to visit Russia.

In former years Russia produced musicians and artists of renown. In fact, Serge Koussevitsky, late leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was Russian born and a product of its musical schools. So too, we had frequent visits and concerts by individual artists and composers but there is no record of a full symphony orchestra interchange between the two countries.

N. Y. Times
SUNDAY, JULY 24, 1955.

SYMPHONY OFFERS TO PLAY IN SOVIET

Boston Orchestar Is 'Eager' to Aid in Eisenhower Plea to Lift Iron Curtain

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., July 23—The Boston Symphony Orchestra offered today to tour in the Soviet Union as a step toward implementing President Eisenhower's request in Geneva yesterday for lifting of the Iron Curtain.

The orchestra is planning a European trip in September, 1956. It also would be willing to play in the satellite countries.

After consulting with other officials of the Boston Symphony who are here at Tanglewood, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, issued this statement:

"We welcome the President's suggestions to help remove the Iron Curtain by a cultural and intellectual exchange with the Soviet Union. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is ready and eager, if the President wishes, to be the first American orchestra to play in Moscow."

As far as the records show, no American orchestra has ever visited Russia, either in Czarist days or since the Communists took over power. A few individual American musicians have appeared there, but virtually none since the "cold war" started.

Mr. Cabot disclosed that in the early years of World War II, when Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor, was head of the Boston Symphony, an invitation was sent to Moscow through the State Department to Eugen Mravinsky, Leningrad conductor, to be a guest leader in Boston.

Though Mr. Mravinsky cabled that he would be delighted to come, neither the Boston Symphony nor the United States received an official reply, and he did not come.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony since the late Mr. Koussevitzky's retirement in 1949, expressed enthuiasm about the plan to take the Boston Symphony to the Soviet Union.

Since foreign tours by modern symphony orchestras comprising more than a hundred men take a lot of arranging, the Boston officials feel that it would not be a moment too soon to start negotiations.

The New York Philharmonic-Symphony, will be touring in Europe this September. But it has a full schedule and could not be rerouted to Soviet cities without canceling engagements in other European capitals.

By a coincidence, an official of the International Exchange Program, which has been arranging the sending of American cultural units to foreign lands, arrived at Tanglewood today. Robert C. Schanker, executive secretary of the program sponsored by the American National Theatre and Academy, was here to confer with Thomas [illegible] Jr., the orchestra's manager, about next year's [illegible].

Mr. Cabot said that should the Boston Symphony accept the Soviet trip and should the Russians respond by sending an orchestra or ballet to the United States, the Boston Symphony would be glad to sponsor the performances in Boston.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
Circ. D. 173,591

JUL 28 1955

If the Summit Is Good The Valleys Are Better

A delegation of Russian farmers seems to be having a fine time visiting the farmers of Iowa, U.S.A. The Russian press is playing their visit up big, and all the comment is friendly.

At the same time a group of American farmers is visiting in Russia. The press reports the greatest amity there, too. The visitors have been entertaining their hosts with native songs, maybe even the one about Davy Crockett.

All this fits in nicely with President Eisenhower's plea that the Iron Curtain be lifted somewhat so that the people of the East and the West can get a good, uncensored look at each other. Adding to this hands-across-the-ocean meeting is an offer by the Boston Symphony to extend its European tour to include Russia and its satellites.

Farmers have a lot in common, whether they be Russian or American. And symphonic music is a common language shared by many races. Meetings at the summit are splendid, and surely they must accomplish some good, if only to light a peace spark, as the President has said.

The meetings on the lower level, though, between everyday citizens, are the ones that eventually will bring about understanding, and possible peace, between the two countries.

* * *

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
LIGHT
Circ. D. 101,225 - S. 135,919

JUL 28 1955

Say It With Music

THE BOSTON Symphony orchestra, one of the finest anywhere in the world, has sent out a flute-like feeler toward Moscow about being invited to tour the Soviet Union next year.

It is an idea to which we would like to give big-drum support.

Such a visit would be in line with President Eisenhower's suggestions for lifting the Iron Curtain by cultural exchange.

It fits in perfectly with the conviction W. R. Hearst jr. brought back with him from his Moscow visit that this nation has a great many good things to show the world besides Cadillacs and bathtubs * * * and must show them to win the battle of competitive co-existence.

There is going on right now an exchange of American and Russian farmers. Why not an exchange of orchestras, or ballet companies?

In the meantime, a bravo for Boston.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
Circ. D. 324,905 - S. 671,613

JUL 27 1955

Say It With Music

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the finest anywhere in the world, has sent out a flute-like feeler toward Moscow about being invited to tour the Soviet Union next year. It is an idea to which we would like to give big-drum support.

Such a visit would be in line with President Eisenhower's suggestions for lifting the Iron Curtain by cultural exchange. It fits in perfectly with the conviction W. R. Hearst, Jr., brought back with him from his Moscow visit that this nation has a great many good things to show the world besides Cadillacs and bathtubs . . . and must show them to win the battle of competitive co-existence.

There is going on right now an exchange of American and Russian farmers. Why not an exchange of orchestras, or ballet companies? In the meantime, a bravo for Boston.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
Circ. D. 60,449 - S. 116,052

JUL 27 1955

Say It with Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the finest anywhere in the world, has sent out a flute-like feeler toward Moscow about being invited to tour the Soviet Union next year. It is an idea to which we would like to give big-drum support.

Such a visit would be in line with President Eisenhower's suggestions for lifting the Iron Curtain by cultural exchange. It fits in perfectly with the conviction W. R. Hearst, Jr., brought back with him from his Moscow visit that this nation has a great many good things to show the world besides Cadillacs and bathtubs . . . and must show them to win the battle of competitive co-existence.

There is going on right now an exchange of American and Russian farmers. Why not an exchange of orchestras, or ballet companies? In the meantime, a bravo for Boston.

LONDON TIMES - Aug. 17, 1955

BOSTON ORCHESTRA AND [illegible]

PROPO[illegible]

FROM A N[illegible]

The B[illegible] ay appear at the [illegible] val before under[illegible] in the course of which it is propos[illegible] give concerts in the U.S.S.R. [illegible] September, 1956. If this pla[illegible]erializes, the orchestra will be the first important western one to appear in Russia since the revolution, and the first American one ever to play there.

The projected visit to Russia is part of new pattern of cultural exchange between th two countries that will see the pianist Mr. Emil Gilels, winner of the Stalin Prize, making his first appearance at Carnegie Hall next autumn, and an American concert tour next spring by Mr. David Oistrakh. It is reported that neither the United States State Department nor the Russian Foreign Office is putting undue obs[illegible]cles in the way of these visits.

During its visit to Brit[illegible] the Boston Symphony Orchestra will h[illegible]e time, it is hoped, to hold auditions for s[illegible]dents for the 1957 session of the B[illegible]o Centre, the summer music [illegible]rchestra runs in conjunc[illegible]kshire Festival. It was S[illegible]eam that the school whi[illegible]d in time become an [illegible] for young m[illegible]ts now com[illegible]; this year [illegible]g countri[illegible] compo[illegible] no les[illegible] Domi[illegible] it has [illegible] Gre[illegible]ntre Orc[illegible] that leading [illegible] music scho[illegible] will nominate outstanding pupils in composition, conducting, vocal, or instrumental work for consideration as scholarship students at the 1957 session.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 165,872

AUG 1 1955

THE NEW YORK

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 1,965

SEP 15 1955

Boston (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to appear at Europe's famed Edinburgh Festival during the last week of August 1956, it was announced Wednesday.

AUGUST 4, 1955.

TIMES, THURSDAY,

ART EXCHANGE PLANNED

U. S.-Russian Program Pushed by National Foundation

Efforts are being made to pave the way for an exchance of paintings and entertainers with the Soviet Union. Carleton Smith, chairman of the advisory committees of the National Arts Foundation said yesterday that the approval of the Soviet Embassy in Washington had been obtained.

Mr. Smith will leave tomorrow by plane for Moscow to confer with the Minister of Culture and VOKS, a Soviet Government department that handles foreign cultural relations.

The first step is under way, according to Mr. Smith. At the request of the Stanislavsky Museum in Moscow, the National Arts Foundation is sending photostatic copies of letters written by Konstantin Stanislavsky, the famous Russian stage director. Those having such letters are urged by Mr. Smith to allow his office at 60 Broadway to make copies.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 180,559

SEP 15 1955

Boston Symphony To Go to Scotland

Mayor Hynes announced yesterday that the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its famous music director, Charles Munch, have accepted an invitation to appear at the Edinburgh Festival in Scotland in late August, 1956.

Hynes said present plans also call for return engagements in London and Paris following five concerts at Edinburgh. The orchestra visited England, France, Holland and Germany in its triumphal tour in 1952, but did not play in Scotland.

Hynes called attention to the fact that transportation costs for the orchestra will be "quite heavy" and that an additional $20,000 is necessary to make certain that the full orchestra will make the trip. He said contributions may be sent to Richard C. Paine, treasurer, Symphony Hall, Boston.

Music at Tanglewood

Isaac Stern Soloist in Brahms

By Jules Wolffers
Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

News that there is to be a cultural exchange between the United States and the Soviet Union involving Yehudi Menuhin and David Oistrakh has increased the speculation at the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra about the orchestra's proposed tour to Russia, mentioned in these columns last week.

Unfortunately there is little more to add at this time. The orchestra is ready and willing to go, but final word must come from the sources which control decisions in such matters.

Apparently the climate here is ready for such a cultural mission. If farmers, why not also musicians? One was unable to find a single person who did not favor the trip among the dozen or so with whom one discussed the matter. Undoubtedly there are Americans who may be opposed, but they were not in evidence at Tanglewood.

Regarding the Menuhin Oistrakh exchange, for the sake of the record it should be stated that Mr. Menuhin is by no means "the first American musician to gain international celebrity," as was stated in at least one newspaper. Mr. Edward MacDowell was greatly admired in Europe, as were Lily Nordica and Geraldine Farrar. Albert Spalding, another prime example, actually was more appreciated in Europe than he was in his native country.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 397,884

SEP 15 1955

HUB SYMPHONY SCOTLAND-BOUND

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch has accepted an invitation to appear at Scotland's famed Edinburgh Festival next August. Following the five concerts on its first visit to Edinburgh, the orchestra will make other visits to London and Paris where it was warmly received during its tour of 1952.

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,447

SEP 15 1955

Boston Symphony Invited to Play In Scotland

BOSTON, (AP)—Boston Mayor John B. Hynes announced the noted Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit Scotland, for the first time in its 75-year-history, to participate in the famous Edinburgh Festival the last week of August 1956.

Mayor Hynes said that when he learned the Boston orchestra had been invited to the climactic week of the festival and that the Boston Symphony and its music director—Charles Munch—would accept, he desired to make the announcement as a matter of civic pride.

The Boston orchestra, Mayor Hynes [illegible] from high [illegible] in England, [illegible] Germany [illegible] tour in 1952, [illegible] all for return [illegible] last year in London and Paris—after the Boston orchestra's five concerts at the Edinburgh Festival.

Symphony Hall and City Hall Together for Announcement

Herald - Sept 18 (?) 55

By RUDALPH ELIE

The announcement last Thursday that the Boston Symphony has accepted an invitation to be the climactic event of the Edinburgh Festival next August may be regarded as significant in many ways. The first is that the announcement was made by Mayor Hynes and not by the Symphony itself, which serves to underline the emergence of the mayor as the most culturally enlightened city official to serve in City Hall in recent times. It was he, indeed, despite the constantly diminishing sources of revenue in the city, who recognized the public nature of the Boston Symphony's mission and removed the tax burden on the Hall while his sponsorship of the Boston Arts Festival as well as the annual Christmas Festival has revealed a broader outlook toward the arts than possessed by any of his predecessors.

The city is in no way able to help the orchestra financially on its forthcoming tour, which will include return concerts in London, Paris and undoubtedly a good many other European cities; merely that it recognizes the enormous value of the orchestra as a cultural ambassador is enough, and the orchestra is to be congratulated for its gesture in giving Mr. Hynes the chance to announce the news of the tour.

As for the tour itself, the details are pretty few so far. Save for its week of concerts in Edinburgh and apparently several each in London and Paris, no other engagements were announced at that time. It was clear, however, that the management has many musical irons in the fire and, in the five-week period possible for the orchestra at that time (from late August to October) a far more extensive tour may be arranged. Indeed, it appears to be open for an offer to visit Moscow on the motto have "tuxedo, will travel" . . . if invited.

It is far too early to conjecture on the programs the orchestra will feature on this, its second European visit, but a hint is provided in the fact that it this season celebrates its 75th anniversary with a series of new works commissioned for the occasion. It is consequently more than likely it will present the most successful of these in Europe, with Mr. Munch and Mr. Monteux sharing, as they did last time, the conducting assignments.

Another significant thing about the announcement was the fact it was made at all. For, though hard to believe now, the era of the touring orchestra is little more than five years old. In that period the orchestras of the world have taken to the road by the dozen and, what is more, been met by capacity audiences everywhere. Boston has heard the French National orchestra, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Amsterdam Concertgebow, the Israel Philharmonic, and the London Philharmonic, not to mention such domestic orchestras as the Philadelphia and the Minneapolis. And in each case the concerts were given before sold out houses—and this in a city that had hitherto been remarkably cold to visiting orchestras.

With respect to this assertion I find that in October, 1948, I wrote an article in this department rebuking the city for its coolness to visiting orchestras. "The major musical mystery of Boston," I wrote at that time, "is why this city turns such a cold shoulder to visting orchestras. "The most recent fiasco along these lines was the visit of the New York Philharmonic: the hall was not quite three quarters full. It was the second time in eight years the New York Philharmonic has come to grief here. The San Francisco symphony failed to fill the hall as did the Indianapolis."

The first visting orchestra that did find a large audience was the Orchestre National when it come with Charles Munch as conductor. He was then conductor-elect of the Boston Symphony and the interest in him was keen, but the hall was by no means filled to capacity. It remained for Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic to crack Boston's disinterest in visting orchestras and there has never been a less than capacity audience since for any orchestral visitor.

"The reason is apparent: The advent of the long playing record. Prior to 1950, when LP's appeared, record sales were comparatively low. The discs were heavy, the albums bulky and glum in appearance, surface noise was appalling (though by 1950 a suppressor had just made its appearance) and two manufacturers with hardly any other competition were laboring under the impression that there was no market for anything but Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony and all the standard war horses of the repertoire. Victor had a connoisseur's series but it was slim indeed, while operas and other extended works were hardly feasible (When the Koussevitsky version of the B minor Mass came out it consisted, as I recall of nearly 220 discs, the whole thing weighing perhaps 30 pounds.)

LP changed all that. Almost overnight there were dozens of new recording companies issuing discs in fantastic profusion. They still are. The current issue of "The Long Player," an invaluable catalogue, runs to 240 pages of listings in small type. Though it might not be said LPs are much less expensive than the old shellac albums, they are basically more at-

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,241

SEP 15 1955

Boston Symphony to Play in Scotland

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch will give five concerts during the last week of the 1956 Festival at Edinburgh, Scotland. First announcement of the tour was made yesterday by Mayor Hynes.

The Mayor pointed out that this will be the orchestra's first visit to Scotland, and recalled the high tributes which the Symphony received during its initial visit to other countries of Europe in 1952.

Five concerts will be played in Edinburgh during the last week in August. Present plans also include engagements in London and Paris.

It is said that the orchestra has received invitations to appear in Israel, Italy, Athens and elsewhere and that the United States State Department would favor Boston Symphony appearances in certain other countries. Yugoslavia and Egypt have been mentioned informally.

The orchestra already has expressed willingness to go to Moscow if that is feasible.

The Edinburgh tour will require approximately $50,000. The greater part of this amount is understood to have been received and the remainder pledged.

VARIETY Wednesday, September 28, 1955

BOSTON SYMPH HEADS EDINBURGH FESTIVAL

Edinburgh, Sept. 20.

Boston Symphony Orch, on first lap of an extended European trek, will make its bow at the 10th annual International Festival here next year. Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux will conduct. Piccolo Teatro of Milan will be a major legit contribution to the 1956 junket, Aug. 19-Sept. 8.

The Sadler's Wells Ballet, under Dame Ninette de Valois, will return to the festival, with a new ballet preem skedded. A dramatic Auld Lang Syne show is lined up for the Assembly Hall apron stage, where Thornton Wilder's "A Life in the Sun" was preemed this year.

Opera will be in the hands of the Hamburg State Opera, under Gunther Rennert. "Die Zauberflote" will be staged to celebrate the bi-centenary of Mozart, plus a double bill of two Strawinsky operas, "Oedipus" and the shorter comic opera "Mavra."

THE NEW YORK TIMES, AUGUST 12, 1955.

Soviet Considers Visit by 'Porgy and Bess'; Operetta Suggests U. S. Tour by Ballet

Special to The New York Times.

MOSCOW, Aug. 11—The press department of the Foreign Ministry said today a proposal that "Porgy and Bess," American Negro folk opera, appear in the Soviet Union was under consideration by the Moscow Ministry of Culture.

Recently the management of the "Porgy and Bess" company that is playing in South Africa informed Soviet Government leaders that the company would welcome an invitation to this country. It has already played in fourteen other foreign countries.

Today's statement was the first official acknowledgment of the proposal. At the same time the press department said no proposals had been received from two other United States organizations that have expressed interest in appearing here.

One of these is the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which volunteered during the Geneva conference to present a series of concerts in the Soviet Union. The other is the Skiffle-Finegan Band, which has made tentative inquiries about playing American jazz in Moscow.

A tour of the United States by the Moiseyev State Folklore Ballet, one of the best known Soviet dance troupes, was suggested by the "Porgy and Bess" management in its proposal to the Soviet Government.

Boston Symphony Accepts Bid

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Sept. 14—Mayor John B. Hynes announced today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra would visit Scotland next year. He said the directors of the symphony and Charles Munch, conductor, had accepted an invitation to appear at the Edinburgh Festival in August. The Mayor said the orchestra must raise an additional $20,000 to finance the trip, and said a campaign would get under way immediately to raise the funds.

N.Y. Times Sept 15 '55

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 Richmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538

SEP 15 1955

Boston Symphony To Visit Scotland

BOSTON, Mayor John B. Hynes announced yesterday that the Boston Symphony Orchestra would visit Scotland next year. He said the directors of the symphony and Charles Munch, conductor, had accepted an invitation to appear at the Edinburgh Festival in August. The mayor said the orchestra must raise an additional $20,000 to finance the trip, and said a campaign would get under way immediately to raise the funds.

Sept 13 '55

BSO to Edinburgh

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible]

Sept. 15 '55 THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—

Boston Symphony to Play in Scotland

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch will give five concerts during the last week of the 1956 Festival at Edinburgh, Scotland. First announcement of the tour was made yesterday by Mayor Hynes.

The Mayor pointed out that this will be the orchestra's first visit to Scotland, and recalled the high tributes which the Symphony received during its initial visit to other countries of Europe in 1952.

Five concerts will be played in Edinburgh during the last week in August. Present plans also include engagements in London and Paris.

It is said that the orchestra has received invitations to appear in Israel, Italy, Athens and elsewhere, and that the United States State Department would favor Boston Symphony appearances in certain other countries. Yugoslavia and Egypt have been mentioned informally.

The orchestra already has expressed willingness to go to Moscow if that is feasible.

The Edinburgh tour will require approximately $50,000. The greater part of this amount is understood to have been received and the remainder pledged.

VARIETY Wednesday, September 28, 1955

BOSTON SYMPH HEADS EDINBURGH FESTIVAL

Edinburgh, Sept. 20.

Boston Symphony Orch, on first lap of an extended European trek, will make its bow at the 10th annual International Festival here next year. Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux will conduct. Piccolo Teatro of Milan will be a major legit contribution to the 1956 junket, Aug. 19-Sept. 8.

The Sadler's Wells Ballet, under Dame Ninette de Valois, will return to the festival, with a new ballet preem skedded. A dramatic Auld Lang Syne show is lined up for the Assembly Hall apron stage, where Thornton Wilder's "A Life in the Sun" was preemed this year.

Opera will be in the hands of the Hamburg State Opera, under Gunther Rennert. "Die Zauberflote" will be staged to celebrate the bi-centenary of Mozart, plus a double bill of two Strawinsky operas, "Oedipus" and the shorter comic opera "Mavra."

THE NEW YORK TIMES, AUGUST 12, 1955.

Soviet [illegible] Visit by 'Porgy and Bess' Operetta Suggests U. S. Tour by Ballet

Special to The New York Times.

MOSCOW, Aug. 11—The press department of the Foreign Ministry said today a proposal that "Porgy and Bess," American Negro folk opera, appear in the Soviet Union was under [illegible] eration by the Moscow [illegible] of Culture.

Recently the management of the "Porgy and Bess" [illegible] that is playing in Sweden [illegible] ica informed Soviet Government leaders that the company would welcome an invitation to this country. It has already played in fourteen other foreign countries.

Today's statement was the first official acknowledgment of the proposal. At the same time the press department said no proposals had been received from two other United States organizations that have expressed interest in appearing here.

[illegible] of these is the Boston [illegible] Orchestra, which vol- [illegible] during the Geneva con- [illegible] presented a series of [illegible] Union. [illegible] Finnegan [illegible] tentative inquiries [illegible] American jazz [illegible]

A tour [illegible] United States by the Moscow State Folklore Ballet, one of the best known Soviet dance troupes, was suggested by the "Porgy and Bess" management in its proposal to the Soviet Government.

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 48,118

SEP 15 1955

Boston Symphony Will Visit Scotland

BOSTON, Sept. 14 (AP) — Boston Mayor John B. Hynes today announced the noted Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit Scotland, for the first time in its 75-year history, to participate in the famous Edinburgh Festival the last week of August, 1956.

Mayor Hynes said that when he learned the Boston orchestra had been invited to the climactic week of the festival and that the Boston Symphony and its music director — Charles Munch — would accept, he desired to make the announcement as a matter of civic pride.

The Boston orchestra, Mayor Hynes commented, won high tributes from critics in England, France, Holland and Germany during a European tour in 1952.

Current plans call for return engagements next year in London and Paris — after the Boston orchestra's five concerts at the Edinburgh Festival.

Boston Symphony Accepts Bid

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Sept. 14—Mayor John B. Hynes announced today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra would visit Scotland next year. He said the directors of the symphony and Charles Munch, conductor, had accepted an invitation to appear at the Edinburgh Festival in August. The Mayor said the orchestra must raise an additional $20,000 to finance the trip, and said a campaign would get under way immediately to raise the funds.

NY Times Sept 15 '55

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538

SEP 15 1955

Boston Symphony To Visit Scotland

BOSTON—Mayor John B. Hynes announced yesterday that the Boston Symphony Orchestra would visit Scotland next year. He said the directors of the symphony and Charles Munch, conductor, had accepted an invitation to appear at the Edinburgh Festival in August. The mayor said the orchestra must raise an additional $20,000 to finance the trip, and said a campaign would get under way immediately to raise the funds.

Globe — Sun. Sept 18 '55

BSO to Edinburgh

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give five concerts during the final week of the 1956 Festival at Edinburgh, Scotland. Appearances in Paris and London will follow, and if additional financing turns out well, the Orchestra may go to Israel, Italy and Greece, Yugoslavia, Egypt, and even perhaps Moscow. But only Edinburgh, Paris and London are definite at the moment.

Sept. 15 '55 THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE

Boston Symphony to Play in Scotland

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch will give five concerts during the last week of the 1956 Festival at Edinburgh, Scotland. First announcement of the tour was made yesterday by Mayor Hynes.

The Mayor pointed out that this will be the orchestra's first visit to Scotland, and recalled the high tributes which the Symphony received during its initial visit to other countries of Europe in 1952.

Five concerts will be played in Edinburgh during the last week in August. Present plans also include engagements in London and Paris.

It is said that the orchestra has received invitations to appear in Israel, Italy, Athens and elsewhere, and that the United States State Department would favor Boston Symphony appearances in certain other countries. Yugoslavia and Egypt have been mentioned informally.

The orchestra already has expressed willingness to go to Moscow if that is feasible.

The Edinburgh tour will require approximately $50,000. The greater part of this amount is understood to have been received and the remainder pledged.

BOSTON TRAVELER, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1955

Greater Boston Irish News

Dublin Invites Hub Symphony

Leaders on Both Sides Urge Date; Eire Society to Hear Montgomery

By MARY TIERNEY

Boston and Dublin Irish leaders have launched a joint effort to promote the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dublin sometime next September.

This was revealed today as plans were outlined for the second European tour of the orchestra since its founding 75 years ago.

Considered an institution in Boston, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first appearance in Scotland at the Edinburg Festival in late August next year.

Other scheduled appearances have been announced for London and Paris, where the orchestra appeared three years ago during its first European concert tour.

At the present time, tentative additional appearances are also being planned for Vienna, Cairo, Athens and possibly Moscow.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN IRISH leaders in Boston and Dublin has been in progress for weeks in an effort to bring to Irish audiences the orchestra that has contributed in a major way to Boston's fame.

Here in Boston, the 103-piece orchestra has already begun rehearsals for the European tour.

In the event the orchestra visits Ireland, special emphasis will be placed on Irish music with recognition of Irish composers.

DUBLIN IN LINE FOR ORCHESTRA

Conductor Charles Munch is already familiar with The "Water Music" Suite, the celebrated piece by Handel for which Irish-born conductor-composer Sir Hamilton Harty has made an arrangement for modern orchestra.

During the last European tour of the orchestra in 1952 various influences tried unsuccessfully for a Dublin appearance. Due to a tightly planned schedule, the Boston musicians were unable to appear in Ireland.

However, next year, the schedule will be much more flexible, allowing The Boston Symphony Orchestra to present debut concerts in five additional countries.

THE EIRE SOCIETY of Boston will hold its second meeting of the season Sunday afternoon in the main ballroom of the Sheraton-Plaza Hotel.

INTERESTING, INSTRUCTIVE TALK PROMISED

Recently referred to as "an Early Irish in Massachusetts." eminent Boston attorney who watches over the lives and affairs of the Irishmen of the past with a fierce and vigorous scholarship," Montgomery's talk should be both interesting and instructive.

Also on the program will be a musical presentation by lyric tenor Luigi Vena.

Special honor will be paid to Eire Society Gold Medalists Henry L. Shattuck and Fred N. Robinson, who recently received honorary degrees from Trinity College in Dublin.

THE ST. COLUMBAN Sisters Guild will hold its first meeting of the season Tuesday, Oct. 4 at Ashmont Hall, Dorchester.

Guest speaker will be Rev Thomas McGilicott of St. Columban's Major Seminary in Milton. President Eugene Hickey of Milton, will preside.

THE COBH SOCIAL Club of Boston will hold its first Fall meeting Friday evening, Sept. 30 at Arcadia Hall, Dorchester.

Michael J. Cogan of Dorchester will serve as chairman.

(Mary Tierney's Irish column appears every Tuesday in the Boston Traveler.)

C. S. MONITOR – Sept 14 '55

Edinburgh to Hear Boston Orchestra

By Harold Rogers

Music Critic of The Christian Science Monitor

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is going abroad next year.

Charles Munch, its conductor, has accepted an invitation to appear at the Edinburgh Festival during the last week of August. This will mark the orchestra's first visit to Scotland, a country not included in its European tour of 1952. The announcement of this event was made by Mayor Hynes in his office this morning.

The plans, as outlined, include five concerts in Edinburgh during the climactic week of the festival. The orchestra will then play engagements in London and Paris.

These three engagements are the only definite dates thus far, but Mayor Hynes joined with the officials of the Boston Symphony in the hope that its European engagements may be extended.

$50,000 Sought

Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony, said that the tour could be lengthened to cover a period of five weeks, provided both the invitations and sufficient funds were received. The arrangements already made will cost around $50,000, the greater portion of which has been guaranteed by the State Department and the Radio Corporation of America.

Funds for an extended tour, Mr. Perry said, would have to be raised from private sources, and he pointed out that the orchestra's trustees did not feel that this added amount should be asked of the Friends of the Boston Symphony.

There is a possibility, he said, that the orchestra will visit such countries as Italy, Greece, Egypt, Israel, and Yugoslavia.

Visit to Moscow?

The management is very keen to have the orchestra visit Moscow, provided an invitation is forthcoming and the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union continues to improve.

The Edinburgh programs by the Boston Symphony will be offered as "homage to Koussevitsky." They will feature mainly new works that are being composed on commission from the orchestra for its 75th anniversary this season. The programs will also include some of the works that were commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary.

The concerts will be conducted by Mr. Munch and by one other conductor. Final arrangements for the second conductor have not yet been made.

Boston Orchestra To Visit Edinburgh

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to play at the Edinburgh Festival next summer. Plans, as outlined by Boston's Mayor Hynes, include five concerts at the festival, as well as engagements in London and Paris.

Orchestra officers are hoping for an invitation to take the symphony to Moscow, provided that the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union continues to improve.

Greater portion of the $50,000 needed for the tour in Scotland, England, and France has been guaranteed by the State Department and the Radio Corporation of America. Funds for a larger tour would have to come from private sources.

Story: Page 7.

STON DAILY GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1956

Boston Symphony's European Tour Next Summer to Include 25 Cities

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Europe for five weeks next August and September, after the close of the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. The itinerary has yet to be completed, but five concerts will be played, Aug. 26-30 at the Edinburgh Festival, and visits will be made to principal cities in England, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France and possibly Italy. It is expected that the orchestra will be heard in Cork and Dublin, en route to Edinburgh.

This was announced yesterday by Robert W. Dowling, chairman of the board of American National Theatre and Academy. The tour will be made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of A. N. T. A., the professional agency appointed by the United States Department of State for the administration of the President's Fund for International Affairs to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

A subsidy from the International Exchange Program will help cover costs of transportation and deficits to the orchestra from its concerts aboard. To secure the balance of money essential to the undertaking, private contributions have been made, and other funds are being solicited.

The tour will be under the direction of Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, who has invited his friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, to share the conducting. Similar arrangements prevailed when the orchestra toured Europe for the first time in 1952, and when it made a transcontinental United States trip in 1953. According to present plans, the only cities to be revisited in 1956 will be London and Paris.

The tour will end about Sept. 25, and the orchestra will return immediately to begin its 76th season in Boston Oct. 5.

Eve. Globe - Sept 14 '55

First Appearance in Scotland

Boston Symphony Going to '56 Edinburgh Fete

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, will go to Edinburgh to appear during the last week of the famous Edinburgh Festival of 1956, it was announced today by Mayor Hynes.

The Mayor pointed out that this will be the orchestra's first visit to Scotland, and recalled the high tributes which the Symphnoy received during its initial visit to other countries of Europe in 1952.

Five concerts will be played in Edinburgh during the last week in August. Present plans also include engagements in London and Paris thereafter. The Mayor further said that he hoped, together with officials of the Symphony, that other concerts may be arranged in the following weeks.

It is said that the Orchestra has received invitations to appear in Israel, Italy, Athens and elsewhere, and that the United States State Department would favor Boston Symphony appearances in certain other countries. Yugoslavia and Egypt have been mentioned informally.

The Orchestra already has expresesd willingness to go to Moscow if that is feasible.

Unofficially it is believed that the Moscow project will await the outcome of the conference of Foreign Ministers at Geneva in October.

The Edinburgh tour will require approximately $50,000. The greater part of this amount is understood to have been received and the remainder pledged. A large portion is said to have been given by the R. C. A. Corporation.

Further financing must be undertaken if the Orchestra is to extend its tour beyond Edinburgh, Paris and London.

Since the tour will come soon after the conclusion of the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the orchestra and its instruments, scores and other equipment, must be flown to Scotland. The Symphony will have a possible maximum period of five weeks to play in Europe before it is obliged to return for the opening of the season at Symphony Hall in October, 1956.

"I think it is wonderful that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been invited to go abroad," declared Mayor Hynes. "This orchestra is one of the leading cultural assets of our city, and without it Boston would not be at all the same."

Present in the Mayor's office, during the annoucement, were Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony trustees, and Francis W. Hatch, member of the board.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1956

Bostonians Plan Tour Of Europe

Orchestra Visit To Last 5 Weeks

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open a five-weeks tour of Europe in Edinburgh on Aug. 26 with the co-operation of the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy.

Robert W. Dowling, chairman of the A. N. T. A. board, announced yesterday that a subsidy from this program, which represents the State Department, will help the orchestra to cover the cost of air transportation for its 104 members and their instruments and to defray part of the deficits of to touring concerts. The orchestra is soliciting funds to meet the rest of the trip's expenses.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Pierre Monteux, its conductor from 1919 to 1924, will direct the concerts abroad, which will be held in approximately twenty-five cities.

The itinerary, after the five concerts in Edinburgh Aug. 26 to 30, is not yet settled, but the orchestra will probably appear in Cork and Dublin in Ireland and in Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France and possibly Italy. At the end of the tour, the orchestra will return to Boston to open its seventy-sixth regular season Oct. 5.

The Boston Symphony has already expressed its willingness to extend its tour to Russia. No definite arrangements have yet been undertaken with American or Russian authorities, but it was learned yesterday that the touring schedule can be adjusted to permit a few concerts in the Soviet Union before the orchestra leaves Europe on or about Sept. 25. If these take place, they would presumably immediately precede or follow the orchestra's appearance in Helsinki.

This will be the Boston Symphony's second trip abroad. The first, also under Messrs. Munch and Monteux, was in the spring of 1952. According to present plans, Paris and London are the only cities which the orchestra will revisit in its coming travels.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON,

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1956 Art—Music—Theater 11

-Symphony's Plans for Europe

Orchestra Expects to Visit Almost Twenty-Five Cities

Plans are now shaping up for the tour of Europe next summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The ensemble will travel for five weeks during August and September in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy.

Robert W. Dowling, chairman of the ANTA board, announced today that a subsidy from the International Exchange Program will help cover the cost of transportation of the orchestra's 104 men and instruments by air, as well as help defray deficits to the orchestra from its concerts abroad.

The International Exchange Program is the professional agency appointed by the State Department for the administration of the President's Fund for International Affairs to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

The tour will take place under the direction of Charles Munch at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the dates of which are July 2 to Aug. 12. The orchestra will go to Edinburgh where it will give five concerts, from Aug. 26 to 30, in Usher Hall as part of the Edinburgh Festival. It will then tour four weeks to the principal cities of Scandinavia, northern and western Europe, and the British Isles. The tour is planned to include about 25 cities and will cover more than 4,000 miles.

The itinerary is still to be worked out, but it is expected that the orchestra will also visit Cork and Dublin en route to Edinburgh; then to Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England, and possibly Italy.

Mr. Munch has invited his friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, to conduct some of these concerts. The Boston Symphony made its only previous tour of Europe in May, 1952, when it performed in France, Germany, Belgium, Holland and England.

According to present plans the only cities to be revisited are Paris and London. All other places on the proposed itinerary are cities where the orchestra has not previously played.

To secure the balance of funds necessary to cover the expensive undertaking, private contributions have been made, and other funds are being solicited. At the close of the European tour, about Sept. 25, the orchestra will return immediately to open its 76th season in Boston on Friday, Oct. 5, in Symphony Hall. Mr. Munch will then begin his eighth year as its music director.

IE NEW YORK TIMES, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1956.

28 C

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO TOUR EUROPE

5-Week Summer Itinerary Is Planned—Munch and Monteux to Conduct

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Europe for five weeks during August and September, in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy. Announcement of the tour was made yesterday by Robert W. Dowling, chairman of the board of A. N. T. A.

A subsidy from the International Exchange Program will cover part of the cost of transporting the 104 members of the orchestra and their instruments by air and will help defray deficits from concerts abroad.

To provide the additional funds necessary, private contributions have been made to the orchestra and other funds are being solicited.

The European tour of the Boston Symphony will be under the direction of Charles Munch, its music director for the last seven years. Mr. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, onetime conductor of the Boston Symphony, to lead some of its concerts abroad.

The orchestra will leave for Europe at the conclusion of this year's Berkshire Music Festival, which ends Aug. 12. It will play five concerts in Usher Hall, Edinburgh, Aug. 26 through 30, as part of this year's Edinburgh Festival.

The orchestra will then travel for four weeks, performing in about twenty-five cities. Although the itinerary is not definitely settled, it is expected to include Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England and possibly Italy.

Boston Symphony spokesmen yesterday made no mention of performances in the Soviet Union, although these had been discussed as a possibility when the plans for the tour were being formulated.

The Boston Symphony made its only previous trip to Europe in May, 1952, under the auspices of the Congress for Cultural Freedom. The only cities to be revisited this year are Paris and London.

Immediately after the close of its European tour the orchestra will return to Boston for its winter season, which begins on Oct. 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538

APR 24 1956

Boston Symphony ~~May Visit Russia~~ This Summer

WASHINGTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra may give some concerts in Russia late this summer as a substitute for the Philadelphia Orchestra, according to the State Department. Invited last winter by the Soviet government, the Philadelphia Orchestra decided yesterday not to go, though the State Department agreed to pick up the $80,000 tab.

If the BSO, already scheduled to play in Edinburgh, London, Paris, Helsinki and several cities in Germany after the close of the Berkshire Festival in August, agrees to make the Russian trip, some of the other bookings will be canceled. The BSO trip also is being financed by the State Department to the tune of $120,000.

VARIETY 5/16/56

Philly Won't, But Hub Symph Will Okay USSR Bid

Boston, May 15.

Boston Symphony Orchestra members are jumping with enthusiasm over the possibilities of going to Soviet Russia. The 104 members voted almost unanimously when queried by management.

Invitation from Russia is to extend European tour five days or so. As in the case of the "Porgy and Bess," the Soviet government guarantees expenses no matter what the gross.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., business manager of the orch, has been in Washington talking over plans with Robinson McIlvaine, State Dept. deputy assistant for public affairs.

In Boston it's understood the Philadelphia Orchestra voted unanimously against a trip to Russia and their nix opened the way for Boston.

David Oistrak, Soviet violinist, played with the Philadelphia Orchestra during his American tour last year, a factor that entered into the Russian invite going to that city first.

Localites are going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September, and officials are optimistic that it can be arranged to detour into Russia.

Telegram and World-Herald
Omaha, Nebr.
Circ. 223

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO PLAY AT EDINBURGH

BOSTON (INS)—Mayor [illegible] Times announced the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Charles Munch, have accepted an invitation to appear at Europe's famous Edinburgh Festival in August.

The mayor said the news has been announced as a matter of civic pride. His will be the orchestra's first visit [illegible]

[illegible]

[12]

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1956

Bostonians Plan Tour Of Europe

Orchestra Visit To Last 5 Weeks

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open a five-weeks tour of Europe in Edinburgh on Aug. 26 with the co-operation of the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy.

Robert W. Dowling, chairman of the A. N. T. A. board, announced yesterday that a subsidy from this program, which represents the State Department, will help the orchestra to cover the cost of air transportation for its 104 members and their instruments and to defray part of the deficits of to touring concerts. The orchestra is soliciting funds to meet the rest of the trip's expenses.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Pierre Monteux, its conductor from 1919 to 1924, will direct the concerts abroad, which will be held in approximately twenty-five cities.

The itinerary, after the five concerts in Edinburgh Aug. 26 to 30, is not yet settled, but the orchestra will probably appear in Cork and Dublin in Ireland and in Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France and possibly Italy. At the end of the tour, the orchestra will return to Boston to open its seventy-sixth regular season Oct. 5.

The Boston Symphony has already expressed its willingness to extend its tour to Russia. No definite arrangements have yet been undertaken with American or Russian authorities, but it was learned yesterday that the touring schedule can be adjusted to permit a few concerts in the Soviet Union before the orchestra leaves Europe on or about Sept. 25. If these take place, they would presumably immediately precede or follow the orchestra's appearance in Helsinki.

This will be the Boston Symphony's second trip abroad. The first, also under Messrs. Munch and Monteux, was in the spring of 1952. According to present plans, Paris and London are the only cities which the orchestra will revisit in its coming travels.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON,

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1956 Art—Music—Theater 11

—Symphony's Plans for Europe

Orchestra Expects to Visit Almost Twenty-Five Cities

Plans are now shaping up for the tour of Europe next summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The ensemble will travel for five weeks during August and September in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy.

Robert W. Dowling, chairman of the ANTA board, announced today that a subsidy from the International Exchange Program will help cover the cost of transportation of the orchestra's 104 men and instruments by air, as well as help defray deficits to the orchestra from its concerts abroad.

The International Exchange Program is the professional agency appointed by the State Department for the administration of the President's Fund for International Affairs to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

The tour will take place under the direction of Charles Munch at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the dates of which are July 2 to Aug. 12. The orchestra will go to Edinburgh where it will give five concerts, from Aug. 26 to 30, in Usher Hall as part of the Edinburgh Festival. It will then tour four weeks to the principal cities of Scandinavia, northern and western Europe, and the British Isles. The tour is planned to include about 25 cities and will cover more than 4,000 miles.

The itinerary is still to be worked out, but it is expected that the orchestra will also visit Cork and Dublin en route to Edinburgh; then to Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England, and possibly Italy.

Mr. Munch has invited his friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, to conduct some of these concerts. The Boston Symphony made its only previous tour of Europe in May, 1952, when it performed in France, Germany, Belgium, Holland and England.

According to present plans the only cities to be revisited are Paris and London. All other places on the proposed itinerary are cities where the orchestra has not previously played.

To secure the balance of funds necessary to cover the expensive undertaking, private contributions have been made, and other funds are being solicited. At the close of the European tour, about Sept. 25, the orchestra will return immediately to open its 76th season in Boston on Friday, Oct. 5, in Symphony Hall. Mr. Munch will then begin his eighth year as its music director.

E NEW YORK TIMES, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1956.

28 C

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO TOUR EUROPE

5-Week Summer Itinerary Is Planned—Munch and Monteux to Conduct

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Europe for five weeks during August and September, in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy. Announcement of the tour was made yesterday by Robert W. Dowling, chairman of the board of A. N. T. A.

A subsidy from the International Exchange Program will cover part of the cost of transporting the 104 members of the orchestra and their instruments by air and will help defray deficits from concerts abroad.

To provide the additional funds necessary, private contributions have been made to the orchestra and other funds are being solicited.

The European tour of the Boston Symphony will be under the direction of Charles Munch, its music director for the last seven years. Mr. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, onetime conductor of the Boston Symphony, to lead some of its concerts abroad.

The orchestra will leave for Europe at the conclusion of this year's Berkshire Music Festival, which ends Aug. 12. It will play five concerts in Usher Hall, Edinburgh, Aug. 26 through 30, as part of this year's Edinburgh Festival.

The orchestra will then travel for four weeks, performing in about twenty-five cities. Although the itinerary is not definitely settled, it is expected to include Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, England and possibly Italy.

Boston Symphony spokesmen yesterday made no mention of performances in the Soviet Union, although these had been discussed as a possibility when the plans for the tour were being formulated.

The Boston Symphony made its only previous trip to Europe in May, 1952, under the auspices of the Congress for Cultural Freedom. The only cities to be revisited this year are Paris and London.

Immediately after the close of its European tour the orchestra will return to Boston for its winter season, which begins on Oct. 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,538
APR 24 1956

Boston Symphony May Visit Russia This Summer

WASHINGTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra may give some concerts in Russia late this summer as a substitute for the Philadelphia Orchestra, according to the State Department. Invited last winter by the Soviet government, the Philadelphia Orchestra decided yesterday not to go, though the State Department agreed to pick up the $80,000 tab.

If the BSO, already scheduled to play in Edinburgh, London, Paris, Helsinki and several cities in Germany after the close of the Berkshire Festival in August, agrees to make the Russian trip, some of the other bookings will be canceled. The BSO trip also is being financed by the State Department to the tune of $120,000.

VARIETY 5/16/56

Philly Won't, But Hub Symph Will Okay USSR Bid

Boston, May 15.

Boston Symphony Orchestra members are jumping with enthusiasm over the possibilities of going to Soviet Russia. The 104 members voted almost unanimously when queried by management.

Invitation from Russia is to extend European tour five days or so. As in the case of the "Porgy and Bess," the Soviet government guarantees expenses no matter what the gross.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., business manager of the orch, has been in Washington talking over plans with Robinson McIlvaine, State Dept. deputy assistant for public affairs.

In Boston it's understood the Philadelphia Orchestra voted unanimously against a trip to Russia and their nix opened the way for Boston.

David Oistrak, Soviet violinist, played with the Philadelphia Orchestra during his American tour last year, a factor that entered into the Russian invite going to that city first.

Localites are going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September, and officials are optimistic that it can be arranged to detour into Russia.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 55,423
S 15 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO PLAY AT EDINBURGH

BOSTON (INS)—Mayor John B. Hynes announced the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Charles Munch, have accepted an invitation to appear at Europe's famous Edinburgh Festival in August, 1956.

The mayor said he made his announcement as a matter of civic pride. This will be the first visit of the orchestra to Scotland, which was not included in its European tour of 1952.

This tour, the mayor said, won high tributes from the critics in England, France, Holland and Germany.

[12]

Boston Symphony May Tour Soviet

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1956 C 3

One Concert Already Set For Prague

The Boston Symphony Orchestra which already has scheduled one concert behind the Iron Curtain may enter Russia this summer for a brief tour.

The State Department yesterday requested the Symphony to substitute for the Philadelphia Orchestra which cancelled its planned Russian tour.

Capital Talks

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., business manager of the Boston Symphony, spent two hours yesterday afternoon in Washington discussing arrangements with Robinson McIlvaine, State Department deputy assistant for public affairs.

While no announcement was made, it was understood that nothing remained to be settled except the orchestra's consent to make the tour. The State Department said there would be no trouble obtaining visas and arranging travel and accommodations.

Now booked for a tour of Western Europe this summer, the orchestra had left two dates open in which it might enter Russia. The open dates of Sept. 5-6 follow the concert Sept. 4 at Helsinki, Finland. From the Finnish capital it's an easy hop to Leningrad and then on to Moscow.

The 104-piece orchestra will leave in mid-August for its second European tour. It will be featured at the famed Edinburgh Music Festival in Scotland. It will land in Ireland to play a concert in Cork Aug. 24 and in Dublin Aug. 25. From there it goes to Scotland.

Concert in Prague

The Iron Curtain concert already scheduled will be played Sept. 11 in Prague, Czechoslovakia.

Charles Munch, conductor, and Pierre Monteux, associate conductor, will head the tour. The orchestra made a similar tour, its first of Europe, in 1952. It will return to Boston Sept. 26.

The State Department said that the Russian government would act as impressario for the orchestra tour, as it did in the Porgy and Bess Opera Co. trip. It would guarantee expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, which would have made the Soviet concert tour as part of the State Department's program for spreading American culture abroad, was forced to cancel because of a labor dispute.

BOSTON POST, SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1956

May Play in Russia

Boston Symphony 'Happy' To Accept Soviet Offer

The world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra would be "very happy" to accept an invitation to play in Soviet Russia this summer if one is received and other details can be worked out.

The possibility of extending a planned European tour behind the Iron Curtain came into the limelight yesterday when it was announced that the Philadelphia Orchestra had cancelled a scheduled trip to Russia and that the State Department was looking to Boston to fill the gap.

A spokesman for the Boston orchestra expressed the feeling that the invitation should come direct from the Soviet, and not from the State Department, if it is to be considered.

David Oistrahk, Soviet violinist played with the Philadelphia orchestra during his American tour last year, a factor that entered into the Russian invitation going to that city first.

Expenses Guaranteed

Since the Boston orchestra is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September, officials are optimistic that it can be arranged to extend the tour into Russia for five days or so.

As in the case of the Porgy and Bess Opera Company, the Soviet government guarantees expenses and a profit no matter what the gate receipts are.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SATURDAY,

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAY PLAY IN SOVIET

WASHINGTON, April 27 (AP) —The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that the substitution of the Boston Orchestra, if it could be arranged, would [illegible] added virtue of costing [illegible] government nothing.

Donald L. En[illegible]ager of the 10-member P[illegible]ia Orchestra, telegraph[illegible] State Department last [illegible] that the group had voted unanimously against going through with a proposed trip to the Soviet Union beginning Aug. 15.

The Boston Symphony, which also has a world reputation, is going to be in Western Europe and the Scandinavian countries during [illegible] September. Officials said they hoped a way could be found to extend this tour in[illegible] Union for about [illegible]

The [illegible] Government [illegible] impressario, as it did [illegible] of the Porgy and B[illegible] troupe. This would [illegible] and a profit no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

A [illegible] Boston Symphony, [illegible] time available in the orchestra's European tour schedule to fit in the Soviet concerts if they could be arranged. He said the orchestra management would have a statement "as soon as things are definite."

APRIL 28, 1956

Symphony Going to U.S.S.R.?

Edward P. Harding

Charles Munch Leads Boston Symphony—to Soviet Union?

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

The world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has scheduled one concert behind the Iron Curtain this summer, may accept an invitation to extend its tour into the Soviet Union from the British Isles and Scandinavia.

In Washington, the State Department has requested the Boston Symphony to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has just canceled a scheduled trip to the Soviet Union.

David Oistrahk, Soviet violinist, and hailed as the world's greatest, played with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy last year—resulting in an invitation being extended by the Soviet Government to the Philadelphia Orchestra to come to Russia.

However, Donald L. Engle, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, wired the State Department April 26 that the group had voted unanimously against going through with the proposed trip in August.

In view of the fact that the Boston Symphony will be in Western Europe and the Scandinavian countries in August and September, officials now hope a way can be found to extend this tour into the U.S.S.R. for several days.

A spokesman for the Boston Symphony, who said the group would be "very happy" to accept an invitation to play in the Soviet Union, also expressed the feeling that the invitation should come direct from the Soviets, and not from the State Department, if it is to be considered.

Officials of that department said substitution of the Boston Symphony, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the government anything.

The Soviet Government would act as impresario, as it did in the case of the Porgy and Bess Company. This would guarantee expenses and a profit, no matter what the gate receipts turned out to be.

The whole question of exchanges of technical and cultural [illegible] the U.S.S.R. has outrun the State Department's facilities for handling them [illegible]

The State Department has asked Congress for $55,625 to add nine persons to its payroll to handle such affairs. In the meantime, temporary arrangements have been made, by use of available workers. Officials expressed the hope that by next week two foreign services, with the aid of two secretaries, can take over the problem.

Hour (e)
NORWALK, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 16,281

JUN 8 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY WILL PLAY IN RUSSIA

BOSTON, June 7—(AP)—The Boston symphony orchestra tonight announced acceptance of a soviet invitation to play in Russia this summer on its European tour.

The world famed orchestra will be the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The Boston symphony has scheduled a European tour during August and September. The formal Russian invitation from the ministry of culture in Moscow called for the orchestra to spend six days in Russia.

Although details are not complete, concerts are planned for Leningrad and Moscow. Boston symphany officials said "it is understood" that the Russians will assume the transportation expenses of the 104 players and Conductor Charles Munch during the six-day trip.

Citizen (e)
LACONIA, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 6,138

JUN 9 1956

SYMPHONY RUSSIA BOUND

The Boston Symphony Orchestra accepted an invitation for a six-day visit to Russia, with concerts in Moscow, Leningrad and other cities.

Boston Symphony Will Play in Russia

By ROSS PARMENTER

The Boston Symphony has received a formal invitation to play in the Soviet Union. Yesterday its manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr., arranged with the Soviet Embassy in Washington for the orchestra to visit the Soviet Union between Sept. 5 and 10 and give concerts in Leningrad and Moscow.

Thus the Boston Symphony will be the first major United States symphony to appear in the Soviet Union. The distinction has been sought since last summer when Henry D. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, announced from Englewood, Mass., that if invited, the orchestra would be willing to include the country in the European tour it was planning.

For a while, however, it looked as if the Philadelphia Orchestra would go to the

---

SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1956
NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE,

Boston Orchestra May Tour Russia

WASHINGTON, Apr. 27 (AP).—The State Department is looking to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take the place of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has canceled plans to play in the Soviet Union this year.

Department officials said today that substitution of the Boston Orchestra, if it can be arranged, would have the added virtue of not costing the United States government one penny. The Boston Symphony is going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September. Officials said they hope a way can be found to extend this tour into Russia for five days or so.

BOSTON DAILY RECORD, FRIDAY,

Symphony to Visit Russia

Boston Symphony Orchestra last night accepted an invitation from the Soviet government to play in Russia for six days during this summer when the group is making a European tour.

Henry D. Cabot, president of board of trustees, said there are still details to be worked out but that the 104 players and conductor Charles Munch would play concerts at Leningrad and Moscow during its tour of Europe in August and September.

JUNE 8, 1956
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

---

[13]

THE NEW YORK TIMES, FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1956.

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE
APRIL 28, 1956.

Symphony Men Vote Soviet Tour

'Not Afraid,' Say Members Born in Russia

By JOHN WM. RILEY

The next unofficial United States ambassadors to Russia may be the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At least, if the members of the orchestra have anything to say about it, the Symphony will extend its planned tour from the British Isles and Scandinavia into the Soviet Union.

The 104 members, when asked their opinion by the Symphony management, voted almost unanimously this week to go along with the proposal to extend their tour into Russia.

This is the sort of democratic process which might not be understood in the Soviet Union, where men and groups do as they are told. The members of the Boston Symphony have accepted the responsibility and challenge of performing their art, as ambassadors, just as did the members of the "Porgy and Bess" troupe which performed Gershwin's opera in Moscow last season to Russian acclaim.

Philadelphia Orchestra members have voted unanimously against a trip to Russia proposed for them. This opens the way for the Boston Symphony which, originally, was the favored ambassador.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., business manager of the orchestra, spent two hours yesterday afternoon in Washington talking over plans with Robinson McIlvaine, State Department [illegible] assistant for public affairs.

The few Russian-born member of the Boston Symphony expres no fear about the trip.

SYMPHONY
Page Fourteen

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 39,951

JUN 8 1956

Symphony to Visit Russia

C.S. MONITOR JUNE 8, 56

Boston Symphony Accepts Soviet Bid

The World's Day
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Boston: Symphony Orchestra to Tour U.S.S.R.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted a formal invitation to visit the Soviet Union for six days during its European tour in September. [Page 5.]

Washington: Eisenhower Engagements Canceled

President Eisenhower's engagements for today were canceled by an indisposition which his physician described as an "upset stomach and headache" which had nothing to do with his heart. The White House announcement had an immediate effect on the stock market which opened slightly lower. Brokers advised customers to accept the statements on the President's indisposition at their face value and not to become alarmed.

Spending for military defense over the 15-year period from 1951 to 1965 may total more than half a trillion dollars, it is estimated—even with the nation at peace.

Secretary of Welfare Folsom has promised to seek more money for services to the elderly.

Europe: Queen Elizabeth Arrives in Stockholm

Queen Elizabeth II and the Duke of Edinburgh arrived in Stockholm today for the first British royal visit to Sweden in almost half a century. They were greeted by cannon salutes, an escort of 300 jet fighters, and thousands of persons jammed onto the dock where they landed.

Asia: Heavy Water Shipment Reaches Bombay

Seven tons of heavy water arrived in Bombay from New York for use in India's atomic research program. The Indian Government is buying some 21 tons of it from the United States for peaceful nuclear uses.

Art, Theater, Music: Page 5. Radio, TV, FM: Page 7

Weather Predictions: Cloudy Tonight (Page 2)

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON,

Formal Invitation Accepted For Six Days in September

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received a formal invitation to visit the Soviet Union this summer on its European tour.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, announced last night that the invitation had been presented by Yuri Gouk, cultural attaché of the Soviet Embassy in Washington. The orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, will spend six days in Russia after a Helsinki concert on Sept. 4.

It is understood that the Soviet government will assume the expenses of the orchestra and its staff from the time it leaves Helsinki until it arrives in Prague for a concert there on Sept. 11. Although final dates for concerts within Russia have not been penciled in, programs are planned for Leningrad and Moscow.

Both Henry C. Cabot, president of the Board of Trustees, and Mr. Perry expressed their gratification for the cooperation of the United States and the Soviet governments "in making this important cultural visit possible."

The orchestra's tour will commence after the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood which ends on Aug. 12. Two chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines planes will carry most of the personnel to Europe on Aug. 22. Other members, plus the instruments, will sail on the Nieuw Amsterdam on [illegible] 14.

The European tour will be made through the cooperation of the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy. Private contributions have also been secured to help defray expenses. About 25 cities will be included in the itinerary.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra Accepts Bid to Tour Russia

Boston—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night accepted a Soviet invitation to tour Russia this autumn, giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad.

It will be the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

The State Department approved the inclusion of a six-day visit to the Soviet Union on the orchestra's visit to Europe starting in August, manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. said.

SYMPHONY

Continued from the First Page

"We hope we will go . . . it will be wonderful," says one member who, though born in Poland, studied and worked in Russia for nearly 10 years. "We would like to go very much," he says. "We might do much good."

He says the Russian-born members are all in favor of the trip. Members of the orchestra have not been in touch with friends in Russia since the war although before the war some visited the Soviet Union and corresponded with people there.

No cost would accrue to the United States Government if the Boston Symphony extended its tour into Russia. The Soviet Union would guarantee the costs as impresario, as it did with the "Porgy and Bess" company.

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PLAY IN RUSSIA

Continued From Page 1

Soviet Union first. Despite the Boston orchestra's willingness to go, the Philadelphia Orchestra was the first one to receive an official invitation. It came from the Soviet Ministry of Culture on March 6.

But on April 14 the Philadelphia Orchestra Association declined the invitation. It did so because members of the orchestra had voted that they would not approve the tour unless an announced plan to retire three members of the orchestra was canceled. The month's tour was to have begun on Aug. 15.

The Boston Symphony can only spend six days in Russia because of other commitments. Time for the engagements in Russia was carefully hoarded. They will be between a Sept. 4 concert in Helsinki and a Sept. 11 program in Prague.

Assistance of the Soviet

The Soviet Union will feed and house the orchestra while it is there. The Soviet Union will also provide the transportation from Helsinki and to Prague.

In addition the Soviet Government will arrange the concerts and pay the orchestra a fee for appearing. Just how many concerts there will be, however, has not been decided. Charles Munch will lead the orchestra. Whether Pierre Monteux will also conduct the group in the Soviet Union is not known, but he is going on its tour.

In arranging the dates so early in September the Boston Symphony is also letting the London Philharmonic to Russia. That the London group would play there under Sir Adrian Boult was announced in February. But its concerts were arranged for October.

Since so many details of arrangements hinged on whether the Soviet Union would issue its invitation, Mr. Perry has been on the anxious seat for a long time. He had reached the point of making daily telephone calls to Yuri Gouk, cultural attaché to the Soviet Embassy in Washington.

When he made his usual call on Wednesday Mr. Gouk told him that at last the invitation had come. Mr. Perry went to Washington by train and completed the major details of the arrangements yesterday afternoon.

The State Department gave its approval for the visit of the Boston Symphony some time ago. The Federal Government is putting up some of the money for the European tour because that is under the sponsorship of the American National Theatre and Academy.

Before going to the Soviet Union the orchestra will play at the Edinburgh Festival. After its Russian appearance it will play in Paris.

Symphony Plans Trip To Russia

Boston, June 8—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit Russia this September, giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad.

Acceptance of a Soviet invitation to spend six days in Russia was announced last night by Orchestra Mgr. Thomas D. Perry, Jr.

The 104-piece Boston orchestra led by Charles Munch will be the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

The Russian trip will come as a "side trip" on the symphony's second European tour, which starts Aug. 22. The trip has been approved by the State Department.

The invitation was extended by the Russian Ministry of Culture through the Soviet Embassy in Washington, Perry said. He said orchestra Pres. Henry B. Cabot made known its willingness" to include Russia on the tour at last August's Geneva Conference.

Though details of the Russian visit have not yet been worked out, Perry said it was "understood" that Russia will assume transportation expenses and "pay a stipend" for the concerts as it did when the Gershwin folk opera "Porgy and Bess" performed there last January.

The Russian tour will follow a concert in Prague Sept. 11.

Other costs of the tour are being defrayed by private contributions and the international exchange program of the American National Theater and Academy, a professional agency acting in behalf of the State Department.

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,679

JUN 8 1956

Hub Symphony Accepts Invitation from Russia

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U. S. S. R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay for transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Russian Culture Snubs Hub Famed Orchestra

The entire 104 man Boston Symphony orchestra may end up playing second fiddle.

The Muscovites have bypassed an offer by Boston's world renowned symphony to perform in Russia. Worse yet, the Soviet minister of culture has extended a concert invitation to a symphonic competitor, the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra.

Moreover, the Philadelphians have accepted and have applied to the U. S. State Department for $110,000 to balance expenses under President Eisenhower's emergency fund to support the international cultural exchange program.

One country behind the Iron Curtain did pick up the Boston offer, but it's a mere satellite.

Czechoslovakia's music festival director has asked the Boston orchestra to include performances there while on tour in Western Europe this summer.

Thomas D. Perry, business manager for the Hub symphony, said the Czech invitation was still under consideration. The orchestra will begin a 10-country $300,000 tour in August.

They were hopeful that Russia would pick up their offer to play in Moscow, which was announced last summer.

For undisclosed reasons, the Russians evidently prefer the music of Quakers rather than of Pilgrims.

Perhaps it's just that the Boston Symphony has too much class for the classless society of the Soviet.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN, TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1956

GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 1956

Symphony Still Ready to Visit Russia, If Asked

Unaware of the Soviet invitation to the Philadelphia Orchestra, a spokesman for the Hub Boston Symphony Orchestra said last night the group still stands ready to visit Russia if invited.

Business Manager Thomas D. Perry said "There have been no developments" on the Boston orchestra's offer to play in Russia during its European tour this summer.

"We'll be as close to Russia as Helsinki," he said, "and if our government wishes us to go to Russia we'd be pleased to do so. We'd welcome any way of using our art to improve international feelings."

A substantial share of the $300,000 cost of the tour to include 10 and possibly 12 countries—will be met by funds from President Eisenhower's $5,000,000 fund for [illegible] trade fairs and cultural [illegible]

One Iron Curtain nation, Czechoslovakia, has invited Conductor Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony to appear there, but the offer has not yet been accepted. Perry said a trip [illegible] is entirely a matter of finance.

The Boston Symphony's tour opens in Ireland Aug. 24, then moves to Scotland, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland—maybe Czechoslovakia and Italy—and France, and winds up in London Sept. 26.

[19]

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE
APRIL 28, 1956

Symphony Men Vote Soviet Tour

'Not Afraid,' Say Members Born in Russia

By JOHN WM. RILEY

The next unofficial United States ambassadors to Russia may be the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At least, if the members of the orchestra have anything to say about it, the Symphony will extend its planned tour from the British Isles and Scandinavia into the Soviet Union.

The 104 members, when asked their opinion by the Symphony management, voted almost unanimously this week to go along with the proposal to extend their tour into Russia.

This is the sort of democratic process which might not be understood in the Soviet Union, where men and groups do as they are told. The members of the Boston Symphony have accepted the responsibility and challenge of performing their art, as ambassadors, just as did the members of the "Porgy and Bess" troupe which performed Gershwin's opera in Moscow last season to Russian acclaim.

Philadelphia Orchestra members have voted unanimously against a trip to Russia proposed for them. This opens the way for the Boston Symphony which, originally, was the favored ambassador.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., business manager of the orchestra, spent two hours yesterday afternoon in Washington [illegible] over plans with [illegible] State De[illegible] assistant for public [illegible]

The few Russian-born member of the Boston Symphony expres no fear about the trip.

SYMPHONY
Page Fourteen

SYMPHONY
Continued from the First Page

"We hope we will go . . . it will be wonderful," says one member who, though born in Poland, studied and worked in Russia for nearly 10 years. "We would like to go very much," he says. "We might do much good."

He says the Russian-born members are all in favor of the trip. Members of the orchestra have not been in touch with friends in Russia since the war although before the war some visited the Soviet Union and corresponded with people there.

No cost [illegible] in the United Sta[illegible] the Boston Sym[illegible] its tour into Russ[illegible] Soviet Union would guarantee the costs as impresario, as it did with the "Porgy and Bess" company.

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 39,951

JUN 8 1956

Symphony Plans Trip To Russia

Boston, June 8—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit Russia this September, giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad.

Acceptance of a Soviet invitation to spend six days in Russia was announced last night by Orchestra Mgr. Thomas D. Perry, Jr.

The 104-piece Boston orchestra led by Charles Munch will be the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

The Russian trip will come as a "side trip" on the symphony's second European tour, which starts Aug. 22. The trip has been approved by the State Department.

The invitation was extended by the Russian Ministry of Culture through the Soviet Embassy in Washington, Perry said. He said orchestra Pres. Henry B. Cabot made known its willingness" to include Russia on the tour at last August's Geneva Conference.

Though details of the Russian visit have not yet been worked out, Perry said it was "understood" that Russia will assume transportation expenses and "pay a stipend" for the concerts as it did when the Gershwin folk opera "Porgy and Bess" performed there last January.

The Russian tour will follow a concert in Prague Sept. 11.

Other costs of the tour are being defrayed by private contributions and the international exchange program of the American National Theater and Academy, a professional agency acting in behalf of the State Department.

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,679

JUN 8 1956

Hub Symphony Accepts Invitation from Russia

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U. S. S. R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay for transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

C.S. MONITOR JUNE 8, 56

Boston Symphony Accepts Soviet Bid

The World's Day

Boston: Symphony Orchestra to Tour U.S.S.R.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted a formal invitation to visit the Soviet Union for six days during its European tour in September. [Page 5.]

Washington: Eisenhower Engagements Canceled

President Eisenhower's engagements for today were canceled by an indisposition which his physician described as an "upset stomach and headache" which had nothing to do with his heart. The White House announcement had an immediate effect on the stock market which opened slightly lower. Brokers advised customers to accept the statements on the President's indisposition at their face value and not to become alarmed.

Spending for military defense over the 15-year period from 1951 to 1965 may total more than half a trillion dollars, it is estimated—even with the nation at peace.

Secretary of Welfare Folsom has promised to seek more money for services to the elderly.

Europe: Queen Elizabeth Arrives in Stockholm

Queen Elizabeth II and the Duke of Edinburgh arrived in Stockholm today for the first British royal visit to Sweden in almost half a century. They were greeted by cannon salutes, an escort of 300 jet fighters, and thousands of persons jammed onto the dock where they landed.

Asia: Heavy Water Shipment Reaches Bombay

Seven tons of heavy water arrived in Bombay from New York for use in India's atomic-research program. The [illegible] government is buying some 21 tons of it from the [illegible] States for peaceful nuclear uses.

Art, Theater, Music: Page 5. Radio, TV, FM: Page 7.

Weather Predictions: Cloudy Tonight (Page 2)

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON,

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PLAY IN RUSSIA

Continued From Page 1

Soviet Union first. Despite the Boston orchestra's willingness to go, the Philadelphia Orchestra was the first one to receive an official invitation. It came from the Soviet Ministry of Culture on March 6.

But on April 14 the Philadelphia Orchestra Association declined the invitation. It did so because members of the orchestra had voted that they would not approve the tour unless an announced plan to retire three members of the orchestra was canceled. The month's tour was to have begun on Aug. 15.

The Boston Symphony can only spend six days in Russia because of other commitments. Time for the engagements in Russia was carefully [illegible]arded. They will be between a Sept. 4 concert in Helsinki and a Sept. 11 program in Prague.

Assistance of the Soviet

The Soviet Union will [illegible] and house the orchestra while it is there. The Soviet Union will also provide the transportation from Helsinki and to [illegible]

In addition the Soviet [illegible]nment will arrange the concerts and pay the orchestra [illegible] for appearing. [illegible] concerts there will be, however, [illegible] not been decided. Charles Munch will lead the orchestra. Whether Pierre Monteux [illegible] the group in [illegible] Union is not known [illegible] on its tour.

In arranging the tour so early in [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] the London Symphony [illegible] Russia. That the [illegible] group would play there under Sir Adrian Boult was announced in February. But its concerts were arranged for October.

Since so many details of arrangements hinged on whether the Soviet Union would issue its invitation, Mr. Perry has been on the anxious seat for a long time. He had reached the point of making daily telephone calls to Yuri Gouk, cultural attaché to the Soviet Embassy in Washington.

When he made his usual call on Wednesday Mr. Gouk told him that at last the invitation had come. Mr. Perry went to Washington by train and completed the major details of the arrangements yesterday afternoon.

The State Department gave its approval for the visit of the Boston Symphony some time ago. The Federal Government is putting up some of the money for the European tour because that is under the sponsorship of the American National Theatre and Academy.

Before going to the Soviet Union the orchestra will play at the Edinburgh Festival. After its Russian appearance it will play in Paris.

Symphony to Visit Russia

Formal Invitation Accepted For Six Days in September

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received a formal invitation to visit the Soviet Union on its European tour.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, announced last night that the invitation had been presented by Yuri Gouk, cultural attaché of the Soviet Embassy in Washington. The orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, will spend six days in Russia after a Helsinki concert on Sept. 4.

It is understood that the Soviet government will assume the expenses of the orchestra and its staff from the time it leaves Helsinki until it arrives in Prague for a concert there on Sept. 11. Although final dates for concerts within Russia have not been penciled in, programs are planned for Leningrad and Moscow.

Both Henry C. Cabot, president of the Board of Trustees, and Mr. Perry expressed their gratification for the cooperation of the United States and the Soviet governments "in making this important cultural visit possible."

The orchestra's tour will commence after the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood which ends on Aug. 12. [illegible] chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines planes will ca[illegible] of the personnel to Eu[illegible] Aug. 22. Other members [illegible] instruments, will sa[illegible] Nieuw Amsterdam on [illegible]

The Europea[illegible] will be made through [illegible]ration of the Internation[illegible]nge Program of the A[illegible] National Theater and A[illegible]. Private contributions have [illegible] been secured to help defray expenses. About 25 cities will be included in the itinerary.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra Accepts Bid to Tour Russia

Boston—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night accepted a Soviet invitation to tour Russia this autumn, giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad.

It will be the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

The State Department approved the inclusion of a six-day visit to the Soviet Union on the orchestra's visit to Europe starting in August, manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. said.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN, TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1956

Russian Culture Snubs Hub Famed Orchestra

The entire 104-man Boston Symphony orchestra may end up playing second fiddle.

The Muscovites have by-passed an offer by Boston's world renowned symphony to perform in Russia. Worse yet, the Soviet minister of culture has extended a concert invitation to a symphonic competitor—the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra.

Moreover, the Philadelphians have accepted and have applied to the U. S. State Department for $110,000 "to balance expenses" under President Eisenhower's emergency fund to support the international cultural exchange program.

One country behind the Iron Curtain did pick up the Boston offer, but it's a mere satellite.

Czechoslovakia's music festival director has asked the Boston orchestra to include performances there while on tour in Western Europe this summer.

Thomas D. Perry, business manager for the Hub symphony, said the Czech invitation was still under consideration. The orchestra will begin a 10-country, $300,000 tour in August.

They were hopeful that Russia would pick up their offer to play in Moscow, which was announced last summer.

For undisclosed reasons, the Russians evidently prefer the music of Quakers rather than of Pilgrims.

Perhaps, it's just that the Boston Symphony has too much class for the classless society of the Soviet.

GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 1956

Symphony Still Ready to Visit Russia, If Asked

Unperturbed by a Soviet invitation to the Philadelphia Orchestra, a spokesman for the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra said last night the group still stands ready to visit Russia if invited.

Business Manager Thomas D. Perry said "There have been no developments" on the Boston orchestra's offer to play in Russia during its European tour this Summer.

"We'll be as close to Russia as Helsinki," he said, "and if our government wishes us to go to Russia, we'd be pleased to do so. We'd welcome any way of using our art to improve international feelings."

A substantial share of the $300,000 cost of the tour—to include 10 and possibly 12 countries—will be met by funds from President Eisenhower's $5,000,000 fund for support of trade fairs and cultural exchange.

One Iron Curtain nation, Czecho-Slovakia, has invited Conductor Charles Munch and the 104-man Boston orchestra to appear but the offer has not yet been accepted. Perry said a trip to Prague and Italy is entirely a matter of finances.

The Boston Symphony's tour opens in Ireland Aug. 24, then moves to Scotland, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland—maybe Czecho-Slovakia and Italy—and France, and winds up in London, Sept. 26.

[14]

BSO to USSR

DURING THE PAST YEAR we have been undergoing a Russian invasion. Focal points of the Soviet drive have been our recital halls and recording studios, which have fallen defenseless before such People's Heroes as David Oistrakh and Emil Gilels.

Apparently the American way to answer a move like this really is massive retaliation, and volunteers have not been lacking. Early this spring the clarion was sounded, in a published statement which ended: ". . . Ready and eager, if the President wishes, to be the first American orchestra to play in Moscow. (signed) Henry B. Cabot." Henry B. Cabot is, of course, the president of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it is the BSO that will be the first American orchestra to play in the USSR. As a matter of fact, so far as anyone seems to know, it will be the first American orchestra to play in Russia at all. Before World War I, American orchestras, whatever their merit, were not much in demand in Europe, and ever since World War I such devices as the cordon sanitaire and the Iron Curtain have precluded junkets into Russia. (Just as a point of interest, no Russian orchestra seems ever to have played in America, either, a fact which, no doubt, is currently being mulled over by astute New York concert managements. Tovarishchi seem to be SRO material nowadays, and might not 110 Comrades pull even better than two?)

Whatever the conclusions of New York managements, the Moscow management (singular) seems to have no misgivings about the allure of Bostonians. The Russian government, indeed, has plunged into show business with a surety and sang froid not unworthy of a Billy Rose. The Ministry of Culture in Moscow, dealing directly with the BSO, handed out no-loss guarantees for four concerts with the greatest readiness, though the Orchestra does not actually expect to make a profit. (It doesn't make a profit in the United States either, of course.)

The BSO's overseas tour, which begins August 14, naturally will not be limited to Russia. Starting out with two chartered airplanes (and some space on the New Amsterdam), the Orchestra's 115 men, together with 40 wives, and 88 pieces of musical baggage occupying 1985.7 cubic feet and weighing 8 tons, will play 26-29 concerts (bookings were incomplete at the time of this writing) in 17-19 cities in 12 nations. Cities fairly firm in the itinerary include Cork, Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Munich, Stuttgart, Paris, Chartres, Leeds, and London. The portion of the tour west of the Iron Curtain will be subsidized in part by a government grant administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

At Helsinki the Soviet Ministry of Culture takes over, flying the Bostonians to Leningrad (without their wives) for two concerts. Thence they proceed to Moscow, for two more, one of which may feature the Beethoven Ninth Symphony, with Russian soloists and chorus. They hope also to appear in joint performance with Oistrakh or Gilels, or both. (Oistrakh played with them in Boston last winter.) The Ministry also will furnish housing, meals, and entertainment, and the musicians already have been heard remarking to one another that the latter, as purveyed by Soviet officialdom to foreign guests, is supposed to be something really memorable. From Moscow, the Ministry will fly them to Prague, whence they will cross the Curtain again, back to Vienna.

It can be stated, not without a glow of vicarious pride, that at summer's beginning, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was facing its journey into Communism's heartland with the aplomb which Bostonians are reputed to bring to any adventure, however novel. There was to be no special supervision of personnel within the Curtain countries. They were expected, as a staff member put it, to get to rehearsals and performances on time, just as they must in Boston, and the rest of what they might do would be their own business, also as it is in Boston. However, it was thought likely that the State Department would send someone to brief them, before departure, on such matters as what not to try to photograph while in Moscow, what conversational topics to avoid, and the like. For the rest, reliance for the making of a favorable impression was left to natural Bostonian decorum.

That refers, of course, to deportment only. No one had the slightest doubt what kind of impression the BSO would make musically, and this is of considerable intercultural importance, if that is the word I want. There is growing awareness of the need these days to show people not only behind the Curtain, but in Western Europe as well, that America is not a soulless Power concerned purely with dollars and gadgets. It would be hard to think of a more potent argument than the flawless glowing sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, irrefutable evidence of devotion to and labor for the most spiritual of the arts.

Anyway, at the time of the BSO's advent, Muscovites seemed to be taking to American musicians as heartily as the American public had received last winter's Russians. Isaac Stern had passed through in triumphal progress; Jan Peerce had won a five-minute standing ovation after singing in La Traviata with the Bolshoi company. The Boston Symphony Orchestra had no slightest doubt of being a sellout attraction — just as it is everywhere else.

J.M.C.

June 8 '56
HERALD TRIBUNE NEW YORK

Soviet Visit For Boston Symphony

Adds 6-Day Stay To Europe Tour

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, June 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will spend a week in Russia during its European tour this summer, it was announced today at Symphony Hall. Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager, is now in Washington completing official arrangements. It will be the first American organization of its kind to play in the Soviet Union.

The orchestra will leave the United States a week after the close of its Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 12, and will be heard in Ireland, Scotland, England and the Scandinavian countries before playing in Helsinki Sept. 4.

Six Days Scheduled

It will then tour the Soviet Union for six days, and also play in Prague on Sept. 11 before continuing its travels in Central and Western Europe. Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux will share the conductorship during the tour, which is sponsored by the State Department.

The idea of playing in Russia has been under consideration since last July, when Henry B. Cabot, the Boston Symphony's president, said that the orchestra would be ready and eager to play there in accord with President Eisenhower's suggestions of helping to lift the Iron Curtain by cultural and intellectual exchange with the Soviet Union.

Philadelphia Declined

Last April, after the Philadelphia Orchestra had declined a Soviet invitation to come to Russia in August, State Department officials looked to the Boston Symphony to take its place, especially since adding Russia to the tour would cost the government nothing extra.

The Boston Symphony will also have the probable distinction of being the first major orchestra from outside the Soviet orbit to go to Russia. For a while, it seemed that the London Philharmonic would win this honor, but its tour will follow the Bostonians' visit by two weeks.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,115

JUN 10 1956

Boston Symphony Accepts Invitation To Play In Russia

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received and immediately accepted a formal invitation from the U.S.S.R. to include Soviet Russia in the tour of Europe the symphony will make during August and September. The invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow was transmitted by Yuri Gouk, cultural attache of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, to the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr.

The Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch will be the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia. Last August during the Geneva Conference the orchestra, through the president of its Board of Trustees, Henry B. Cabot, made known its willingness to include a visit to the Soviet Republic during its projected tour of Europe in the autumn of 1956.

The Russian invitation to the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to spend six days of its autumn tour within the Soviet border, and although details are not yet worked out, concerts are planned in Leningrad and Moscow. It is understood that the U.S.S.R., as it did in the case of "Porgy and Bess" when the Gershwin folk opera performed in Russia last January, will assume the expenses of transportation of the 104 members of the orchestra, Music Director Charles Munch and the orchestra's staff and equipment from Helsinki, where a concert is planned on Sept. 4; and to its next date, in Prague, capital of Czechoslovakia, on Sept. 11. The U.S.S.R. will also pay a stipend for the concerts given within the Soviet territory.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of Europe, announced last January, is to be made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad, to help cover the cost of trans-Atlantic transportation by air and to help defray deficits to the orchestra from concerts abroad. Private contributions have also been secured to help with the costs of the tour.

Journal (e)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 8,203

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Give Concerts In Russia

Boston, June 8 (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit Russia this September, giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad.

Acceptance of a Soviet invitation to spend six days in Russia was announced last night by orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry Jr.

The 104-piece Boston orchestra led by Charles Munch will be the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

The Russian trip will come as a "side trip" on the symphony's second European tour, which starts August 22. The trip has been approved by the State Department.

The invitation was extended by the Russian Ministry of Culture through the Soviet embassy in Washington, Perry said. He said orchestra President Henry B. Cabot "made known it's willingness" to include Russia on the tour at last August's Geneva conference.

Though details of the Russian visit have not yet been worked out, Perry said it was "understood" that Russia will assume transportation expenses and "pay a stipend" for the concerts as it did when the Gershwin folk opera "Porgy and Bess" performed there last January.

The Russian tour will follow a concert in Prague Sept. 11.

News (e)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 5,895

JUN 8 1956

ORCHESTRA—The Boston Symphony Orchestra accepted a Soviet invitation to tour Russia this fall giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad. The State Department okayed the trip, making the orchestra the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

DEATH ... of America's

[15]

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,790

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Accepts Bid to Play in Russia

BOSTON, June 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight announced acceptance of a Soviet invitation to play in Russia this summer on its European tour.

The world famed orchestra will be the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The Boston Symphony has scheduled a European tour during August and September. The formal Russian invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow called for the orchestra to spend six days in Russia during the autumn tour.

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 25,494

JUN 8 1956

day.

Soviet Invite Accepted By Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

BSO to USSR

DURING THE PAST YEAR we have been undergoing a Russian invasion. Focal points of the Soviet drive have been our recital halls and recording studios, which have fallen defenseless before such People's Heroes as David Oistrakh and Emil Gilels.

Apparently the American way to answer a move like this really is massive retaliation, and volunteers have not been lacking. Early this spring the clarion was sounded, in a published statement which ended: ". . . Ready and eager, if the President wishes, to be the first American orchestra to play in Moscow. (signed) Henry B. Cabot." Henry B. Cabot is, of course, the president of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it is the BSO that will be the first American orchestra to play in the USSR. As a matter of fact, so far as anyone seems to know, it will be the first American orchestra to play in Russia at all. Before World War I, American orchestras, whatever their merit, were not much in demand in Europe, and ever since World War I such devices as the cordon sanitaire and the Iron Curtain have precluded junkets into Russia. (Just as a point of interest, no Russian orchestra seems ever to have played in America, either, a fact which, no doubt, is currently being mulled over by astute New York concert managements. Tovarishchi seem to be SRO material nowadays, and might not 110 Comrades pull even better than two?)

Whatever the conclusions of New York managements, the Moscow management (singular) seems to have no misgivings about the allure of Bostonians. The Russian government, indeed, has plunged into show business with a surety and sang-froid not unworthy of a Billy Rose. The Ministry of Culture in Moscow, dealing directly with the BSO, handed out no-loss guarantees for four concerts with the greatest readiness, though the Orchestra does not actually expect to make a profit. (It doesn't make a profit in the United States either, of course.)

The BSO's overseas tour, which begins August 14, naturally will not be limited to Russia. Starting out with two chartered airplanes (and some space on the New Amsterdam), the Orchestra's 115 men, together with 40 wives, and 88 pieces of musical baggage occupying 1985.7 cubic feet and weighing 8 tons, will play 26-29 concerts (bookings were incomplete at the time of this writing) in 17-19 cities in 12 nations. Cities fairly firm in the itinerary include Cork, Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Munich, Stuttgart, Paris, Chartres, Leeds, and London. The portion of the tour west of the Iron Curtain will be subsidized in part by a government grant administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

At Helsinki the Soviet Ministry of Culture takes over, flying the Bostonians to Leningrad (without their wives) for two concerts. Thence they proceed to Moscow, for two more, one of which may feature the Beethoven Ninth Symphony, with Russian soloists and chorus. They hope also to appear in joint performance with Oistrakh or Gilels, or both. (Oistrakh played with them in Boston last winter.) The Ministry also will furnish housing, meals, and entertainment, and the musicians already have been heard remarking to one another that the latter, as purveyed by Soviet officialdom to foreign guests, is supposed to be something really memorable. From Moscow, the Ministry will fly them to Prague, whence they will cross the Curtain again, back to Vienna.

It can be stated, not without a glow of vicarious pride, that at summer's beginning, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was facing its journey into Communism's heartland with the aplomb which Bostonians are reputed to bring to any adventure, however novel. There was to be no special supervision of personnel within the Curtain countries. They were expected, as a staff member put it, to get to rehearsals and performances on time, just as they must in Boston, and the rest of what they might do would be their own business, also as it is in Boston. However, it was thought likely that the State Department would send someone to brief them, before departure, on such matters as what not to try to photograph while in Moscow, what conversational topics to avoid, and the like. For the rest, reliance for the making of a favorable impression was left to natural Bostonian decorum.

That refers, of course, to deportment only. No one had the slightest doubt what kind of impression the BSO would make musically, and this is of considerable intercultural importance, if that is the word I want. There is growing awareness of the need these days to show people not only behind the Curtain, but in Western Europe as well, that America is not a soulless Power concerned purely with dollars and gadgets. It would be hard to think of a more potent argument than the flawless glowing sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, irrefutable evidence of devotion to and labor for the most spiritual of the arts.

Anyway, at the time of the BSO's advent, Muscovites seemed to be taking to American musicians as heartily as the American public had received last winter's Russians. Isaac Stern had passed through in triumphal progress; Jan Peerce had won a five-minute standing ovation after singing in La Traviata with the Bolshoi company. The Boston Symphony Orchestra had no slightest doubt of being a sellout attraction — just as it is everywhere else.

J.M.C.

June 8 '56
NEW YORK

Soviet Visit For Boston Symphony

Adds 6-Day Stay To Europe Tour

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, June 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will spend a week in Russia during its European tour this summer, it was announced today at Symphony Hall. Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager, is now in Washington completing official arrangements. It will be the first American organization of its kind to play in the Soviet Union.

The orchestra will leave the United States a week after the close of its Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 12, and will be heard in Ireland, Scotland, England and the Scandinavian countries before playing in Helsinki Sept. 4.

Six Days Scheduled

It will then tour the Soviet Union for six days, and also play in Prague on Sept. 11 before continuing its travels in Central and Western Europe. Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux will share the conductorship during the tour, which is sponsored by the State Department.

The idea of playing in Russia has been under consideration since last July, when Henry B. Cabot, the Boston Symphony's president, said that the orchestra would be ready and eager to play there in accord with President Eisenhower's suggestions of helping to lift the Iron Curtain by cultural and intellectual exchange with the Soviet Union.

Philadelphia Declined

Last April, after the Philadelphia Orchestra had declined a Soviet invitation to come to Russia in August, State Department officials looked to the Boston Symphony to take its place, especially since adding Russia to the tour would cost the government nothing extra.

The Boston Symphony will also have the probable distinction of being the first major orchestra from outside the Soviet orbit to go to Russia. For a while, it seemed that the London Philharmonic would win this honor, but its tour will follow the Bostonians' visit by two weeks.

BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1956

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,115
JUN 10 1956

Boston Symphony Accepts Invitation To Play In Russia

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received and immediately accepted a formal invitation from the U.S.S.R. to include Soviet Russia in the tour of Europe the symphony will make during August and September. The invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow was transmitted by Yuri Gouk, cultural attache of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, to the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr.

The Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch will be the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia. Last August during the Geneva Conference the orchestra, through the president of its Board of Trustees, Henry B. Cabot, made known its willingness to include a visit to the Soviet Republic during its projected tour of Europe in the autumn of 1956.

The Russian invitation to the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to spend six days of its autumn tour within the Soviet border, and although details are not yet worked out, concerts are planned in Leningrad and Moscow. It is understood that the U.S.S.R., as it did in the case of "Porgy and Bess" when the Gershwin folk opera performed in Russia last January, will assume the expenses of transportation of the 104 members of the orchestra, Music Director Charles Munch and the orchestra's staff and equipment from Helsinki, where a concert is planned on Sept. 4; and to its next date, in Prague, capital of Czechoslovakia, on Sept. 11. The U.S.S.R. will also pay a stipend for the concerts given within the Soviet territory.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of Europe, announced last January, is to be made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad, to help cover the cost of trans-Atlantic transportation by air and to help defray deficits to the orchestra from concerts abroad. Private contributions have also been secured to help with the costs of the tour.

Journal (e)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 8,203
JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Give Concerts In Russia

Boston, June 8 (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit Russia this September, giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad.

Acceptance of a Soviet invitation to spend six days in Russia was announced last night by orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry Jr.

The 104-piece Boston orchestra led by Charles Munch will be the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

The Russian trip will come as a "side trip" on the symphony's second European tour, which starts August 14. The trip has been approved by the State Department.

The invitation was extended by the Russian Ministry of Culture through the Soviet embassy in Washington, Perry said. He said orchestra President Henry B. Cabot "made known its willingness" to include Russia on the tour at last August's Geneva conference.

Though details of the Russian visit have not yet been worked out, Perry said it was "understood" that Russia will assume transportation expenses and "pay a stipend" for the concerts as it did when the Gershwin folk opera "Porgy and Bess" performed there last January.

The Russian tour will follow a concert in Prague Sept. 11.

News (e)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 5,895
JUN 8 1956

ORCHESTRA—The Boston Symphony Orchestra accepted a Soviet invitation to tour Russia this fall giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad. The State Department okayed the trip, making the orchestra the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

[illegible] of America's

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,790
JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Accepts Bid to Play in Russia

BOSTON, June 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight announced acceptance of a Soviet invitation to play in Russia this summer on its European tour.

The world famed orchestra will be the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The Boston Symphony has scheduled a European tour during August and September. The formal Russian invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow called for the orchestra to spend six days in Russia during the autumn tour.

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 25,494
JUN 8 1956

[illegible] day.

Soviet Invite Accepted By Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

[15]

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

JUN 14 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra Accepts Invitation To Perform In Soviet Union

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received and immediately accepted a formal invitation from the U. S. S. R. to include Soviet Russia in the tour of Europe the symphony will make during August and September. The invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow was transmitted by Yuri Gouk, Cultural Attache of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, to the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry, Jr.

The Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch will be the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia. Last August during the Geneva Conference the Orchestra, through the president of its board of trustees, Henry B. Cabot, made known its willingness to include a visit to the Soviet Republic during its projected tour of Europe in the autumn of 1956.

The Russian invitation to the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to spend six days of its autumn tour within the Soviet border, and although details are not yet worked out, concerts are planned in Leningrad and Moscow. It is understood that the U.S.S.R., as it did in the case of "Porgy and Bess" when the Gershwin folk opera performed in Russia last January, will assume the expenses of transportation of the 104 members of the orchestra, Music Director Charles Munch and the orchestra's staff and equipment from Helsinki, where a concert is planned on September 4; and to its next date, in Prague, capital of Czechoslovakia, on September 11. The U.S.S.R. will also pay a stipend for the concerts given within Soviet territory.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of Europe, announced last January, is to be made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad, to help cover the cost of trans-Atlantic transportation by air and to help defray deficits to the orchestra from concerts abroad. Private contributions have also been secured to help with the costs of the tour.

Both Mr. Cabot and Mr. Perry expressed their gratification when the Soviet invitation was annouced, for the cooperation of both governments in making this important cultural visit possible.

In December, Soviet violinist, David Oistrakh, was guest soloist at a Boston Symphony Pension Fund Concert. He made a recording with Mr. Munch and the orchestra for RCA Victor and is known to have brought back to Russia high praise for the American orchestra.

The European tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place under the direction of Charles Munch, its Music Director, at the conclusion of the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., whose dates are July 4 through August 12. Mr. Munch has invited his friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, once regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, to share the concerts abroad.

Two planes charted from KLM Royal Dutch Airlines will transport most of the Boston Symphony's personnel to Europe on August 22. A part of the orchestra and the instruments will sail on the Nieuw Amsterdam on August 14.

WINSTON-SALEM [illegible]
JOURNAL
JUN 12 1956

Boston to Moscow

WHEN IT comes to getting through to the Russians, our music apparently has been speaking louder than our words.

"Porgy and Bess," playing in Russia [illegible] last January, drew such tremendous [illegible] from the cast and audiences that a member of the cast said it was going to be "hard to get used to Western applause again." Just a few weeks ago, [illegible] Violinist Isaac Stern broke a [illegible] of American solo artists in Russia by [illegible] to what has been termed the most elegant gathering seen in Moscow [illegible] Tour Jan Peerce is [illegible] there now. And now comes news that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in Russia [illegible].

[illegible] is all most gratifying. For the United States, despite some foreign criticism to the contrary, does have culture as well as dollars, tools and advice which it wants to share. And it unusually isn't trying out for the [illegible] thing with to show this culture to the people of other countries. Particularly in Russia [illegible] musicians seem to have almost a [illegible] hard [illegible] to speak, which is [illegible] statesmen and diplomats have failed to reach.

For this reason, it is especially good news that the Boston Symphony is going to Russia. For one thing, the [illegible] under which the orchestra was invited couldn't have been friendlier. Last December, David Oistrakh, the great Russian violinist, was guest soloist at a Boston Symphony Pension Fund Concert. He made a recording with Conductor Charles Munch and the orchestra, and reportedly took back to Russia high praise for the American orchestra. Also, [illegible] Henry B. Cabot, [illegible] willingness to include [illegible] visit to the Soviet Republic during its projected tour of 1956.

These overtures [illegible] Curtain no doubt [illegible] pounding on the iron [illegible] cation and [illegible] come to the Boston Symphony [illegible] Ministry of Culture in Moscow [illegible] way [illegible] that [illegible] the orchestra [illegible] the same arrangement [illegible] exception [illegible] other artists who have [illegible] Russia.

[illegible] Symphony [illegible] through [illegible] Middle East and [illegible] going to the City [illegible] on this trip [illegible] their [illegible] aspect of [illegible] the Boston Symphony.

—FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1956
THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE

Boston Symphony Accepts Invitation to Tour U.S.S.R.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra received and accepted yesterday a formal invitation from the U. S. S. R. to include Soviet Russia in its tour of Europe during August and September. The invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow was transmitted by Yuri Gouk, cultural attache of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, to the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr.

The Boston Symphony, under the direction of Charles Munch, will be the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia. Last August during the Geneva Conference the orchestra, through the president of its trustees, Henry B. Cabot, made known its willingness to include a visit to the Soviet Republic during its projected tour of Europe in the Autumn of 1956.

The Russian invitation is to spend six days within the Soviet border. Concerts are planned in Leningrad and Moscow. It is understood that the U. S. S. R., as it did in the case of "Porgy and Bess" when the Gershwin folk opera performed in Russia last January, will assume the expenses of transportation from Helsinki, where a concert is planned Sept. 4; and to its next date in Prague, capital of Czecho-Slovakia, Sept. 11. The U. S. S. R. will also pay a stipend for the concerts in Soviet territory.

Part of Exchange Program

The orchestra's tour of Europe is to be made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, professional agency appointed by the State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad, to help cover the cost of trans-Atlantic transportation by air and to help defray deficits from concerts abroad. Private contributions have also been secured toward costs of the tour.

Both Cabot and Perry expressed gratification when the Soviet invitation was announced, for the cooperation of both governments in making this important cultural visit possible.

Monteux to Share Podium

In December, Soviet violinist David Oistrakh was guest soloist at a Boston Symphony pension fund concert. He made a recording with the orchestra for R. C. A. Victor and is known to have taken back to Russia high praise

The European tour will be under the direction of Charles Munch at the conclusion of the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 12. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, once conductor of the Boston Symphony, to share the concerts aboard.

Two planes, chartered from K. L. M. Royal Dutch Airlines, will transport most of the symphony's personnel to Europe Aug. 22. Part of the orchestra and the instruments will sail on the Nieuw Amsterdam Aug. 14.

Five concerts [illegible] Aug. 26-30 [illegible] burgh Festival [illegible] will then [illegible] ing "concerts [illegible] Northern and Western Europe and the British Isles. The tour is planned to include about 25 cities, covering more than 4000 miles.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Perform In Russia

BOSTON (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced last night it will give concerts in Moscow and Leningrad, becoming the first American symphony orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

The Ministry of Culture in Moscow invited the 104-piece orchestra through the Soviet embassy in Washington. The State Department approved the inclusion of the Soviet Union in the orchestra's visit to Europe which starts next August.

BOSTON POST, FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1956

Symphony to Play For Muscovites

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted the invitation of the Russian government to give concerts at Moscow and Leningrad late this summer, it was announced last night by the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry, Jr.

The orchestra already has scheduled a European tour for August and September at the end of the Tanglewood Festival in the Berkshires. The invitation calls for the orchestra to spend six days in Russia.

Symphony officials said the Russian government, "it is understood," will assume all transportation costs for the 104 musicians and their conductor, Charles Munch, during the six-day stay. In addition, the orchestra is expected to receive a stipend.

Six-Day Russian Tour in September

Boston Symphony Accepts Bid to Visit Soviet

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will include a six-day visit to Russia, with concerts in Leningrad, Moscow and possibly other cities, in its European tour during August and September, it was announced last night.

The orchestra yesterday received and immediately accepted a formal invitation to visit Russia from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow, transmitted by Yuri Gouk, cultural attache of the Soviet Embassy in Washington.

In announcing the orchestra's acceptance, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, said it was understood the Soviet government would assume the expenses of transporting the orchestra and its assisting staff from the time it leaves Helsinki, after a concert Sept. 4, until it reaches Prague for a concert on Sept. 11. The Soviets will also pay a fee for the concerts given on Russian territory.

Both Henry B. Cabot, chairman of the symphony's board of trustees, and Perry last night expressed their pleasure at the invitation and for the co-operation of the Soviet and United States governments in making the visit possible.

Perry pointed out that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch, would be the first American orchestra to perform in Russia.

The orchestra will leave for Europe in August. Most of the personnel will leave Aug. 22 on two chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines planes. Other members of the orchestra and the instruments will sail on the Nieuw Amsterdam Aug. 14.

Times (e)
BARRE, Vt.
Republican
Circ. 8,248

JUN 8 1956

PLAYS IN RUSSIA

Boston Symphony Accepts Invitation For Tour

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 5,886

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Play in Soviet

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 10,000 Free

JUN 14 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra Accepts Invitation To Perform In Soviet Union

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received and immediately accepted a formal invitation from the U. S. S. R. to include Soviet Russia in the tour of Europe the symphony will make during August and September. The invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow was transmitted by Yuri Gouk, Cultural Attache of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, to the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry, Jr.

The Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch will be the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia. Last August during the Geneva Conference the Orchestra, through the president of its board of trustees, Henry B. Cabot, made known its willingness to include a visit to the Soviet Republic during its projected tour of Europe in the autumn of 1956.

The Russian invitation to the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to spend six days of its autumn tour within the Soviet border, and although details are not yet worked out, concerts are planned in Leningrad and Moscow. It is understood that the U.S.S.R., as it did in the case of "Porgy and Bess" when the Gershwin folk opera performed in Russia last January, will assume the expenses of transportation of the 104 members of the orchestra, Music Director Charles Munch and the orchestra's staff and equipment from Helsinki, where a concert is planned on September 4; and to its next date, in Prague, capital of Czechoslovakia, on September 11. The U.S.S.R. will also pay a stipend for the concerts given within Soviet territory.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of Europe, announced last January, is to be made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad, to help cover the cost of trans-Atlantic transportation by air and to help defray deficits to the orchestra from concerts abroad. Private contributions have also been secured to help with the costs of the tour.

Both Mr. Cabot and Mr. Perry expressed their gratification when the Soviet invitation was annouced, for the cooperation of both governments in making this important cultural visit possible.

In December, Soviet violinist, David Oistrakh, was guest soloist at a Boston Symphony Pension Fund Concert. He made a recording with Mr. Munch and the orchestra for RCA Victor and is known to have brought back to Russia high praise for the American orchestra.

The European tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place under the direction of Charles Munch, its Music Director, at the conclusion of the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., whose dates are July 4 through August 12. Mr. Munch has invited his friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, once regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, to share the concerts abroad.

Two planes charted from KLM Royal Dutch Airlines will transport most of the Boston Symphony's personnel to Europe on August 22. A part of the orchestra and the instruments will sail on the Nieuw Amsterdam on August 14.

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.
JOURNAL
Circ. D. 52,896

JUN 12 1956

Boston to Moscow

WHEN IT comes to getting through to the Russians, our music apparently has been speaking louder than our words.

"Porgy and Bess," playing in Russia in January, drew such tremendous ovations from Soviet audiences that a member of the cast said it was going to be "hard to get used to Western applause again." Just a few weeks ago, too, Violinist Isaac Stern broke a 10-year silence of American solo artists in Russia by playing to what has been termed "the most elegant gathering seen in Moscow in years." Tenor Jan Peerce is over there now. And now comes news that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in Russia this fall.

This is all most gratifying. For the United States, despite some foreign opinion to the contrary, does have culture as well as dollars, tools and advice which we can share. And it obviously isn't hurting our bid for friendship one whit to show this culture to the people of other countries. Particularly in Russia, our musicians seem to have struck a responsive chord, so to speak, which in so many instances our diplomats have failed to reach.

For this reason, it is especially good news that the Boston Symphony is going to Russia.

For one thing, the circumstances under which the orchestra was invited couldn't have been friendlier. Last December, David Oistrakh, the great Russian violinist, was guest soloist at a Boston Symphony Pension Fund Concert. He made a recording with Conductor Charles Munch and the orchestra, and reportedly took back to Russia high praise for the American orchestra. Also, at Geneva last summer, the president of the orchestra's board of trustees, Henry B. Cabot, made known the orchestra's willingness to include a visit to Russia during its projected tour of Europe in the fall of 1956.

These overtures from both sides of the Iron Curtain no doubt had much bearing on the invitation which has now come to the Boston Symphony from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow. And such preliminary paving of the way gives us all the more reason to believe that the orchestra will experience the same enthusiastic reception accorded our other artists who have begun to trickle into Russia.

That bodes good for the cause of peace.

And we can be proud, too, that it is the Boston Symphony which may do this good. For, if we are to speak to Russia through our music, there is no spokesman we'd rather have talk for us than the beloved, respected Boston Symphony. We can be sure it will do us proud both in music and in manners.

In fact, so venerated is the Boston Symphony that probably those folks who stopped our Symphony of the Air from going to the Middle East and stopped our paintings from going to the Olympics in Australia haven't given this trip a second thought. Even they most likely wouldn't suspect leftist leanings in the Boston Symphony.

—FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1956
THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE

Boston Symphony Accepts Invitation to Tour U. S. S. R.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] yesterday a formal invitation from the U. S. S. R. to include Soviet Russia in its tour of Europe during August and September. The invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow was transmitted by Yuri Gouk, cultural attache of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, to the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr.

The Boston Symphony, under the direction of Charles Munch, will be the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia. Last August during the Geneva Conference the orchestra, through the president of its trustees, Henry B. Cabot, made known its willingness to include a visit to the Soviet Republic during its projected tour of Europe in the autumn of 1956.

The Russian invitation is to spend six days within the Soviet border. Concerts are planned in Leningrad and Moscow. It is understood that the U. S. S. R., as it did in the case of "Porgy and Bess" when the Gershwin folk opera performed in Russia last January, will assume the expenses of transportation from Helsinki, where a concert is planned Sept. 4; and to its next date in Prague, capital of Czecho-Slovakia, Sept. 11. The U. S. S. R. will also pay a stipend for the concerts in Soviet territory.

Part of Exchange Program

The orchestra's tour of Europe is to be made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, professional agency appointed by the State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad, to help cover the cost of trans-Atlantic transportation by air and to help defray deficits from concerts abroad. Private contributions have also been secured toward costs of the tour.

Both Cabot and Perry expressed gratification when the Soviet invitation was announced, for the cooperation of both governments in making this important cultural visit possible.

Monteux to Share Podium

In December, Soviet violinist David Oistrakh was guest soloist at a Boston Symphony pension fund concert. He made a recording with the orchestra for R. C. A. Victor and is known to have taken back to Russia high praise for the American orchestra.

The European tour will be under the direction of Charles Munch at the conclusion of the 1956 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 12. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, once conductor of the Boston Symphony, to share the concerts aboard.

Two planes, chartered from K. L. M. Royal Dutch Airlines, will transport most of the symphony's personnel to Europe [illegible] Part of the orchestra and the instruments will sail on the Nieuw Amsterdam [illegible]

Five [illegible] Aug. 22 [illegible] burgh [illegible] will then [illegible] ing "[illegible] Northern and Western [illegible] and the British Isles. The tour is planned to include about 25 cities, covering more than 4000 miles.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Perform In Russia

BOSTON (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced last night it will give concerts in Moscow and Leningrad, becoming the first American symphony orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

The Ministry of Culture in Moscow invited the Boston orchestra through the Soviet embassy in Washington. The State Department approved the inclusion of the Soviet Union in the orchestra's visit to Europe which starts next August.

BOSTON POST, FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1956

Symphony to Play For Muscovites

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted the invitation of the Russian government to give concerts at Moscow and Leningrad late this summer, it was announced last night by the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry, Jr.

The orchestra already has scheduled a European tour for August and September at the end of the Tanglewood Festival in the Berkshires. The invitation calls for the orchestra to spend six days in Russia.

Symphony officials said the Russian government, "it is understood," will assume all transportation costs for the 104 musicians and their conductor, Charles Munch, during the six-day stay. In addition, the orchestra is expected to receive a stipend.

Six-Day Russian Tour in September

Boston Symphony Accepts Bid to Visit Soviet

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will include a six-day visit to Russia, with concerts in Leningrad, Moscow and possibly other cities, in its European tour during August and September, it was announced last night.

The orchestra yesterday received and immediately accepted a formal invitation to visit Russia from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow, transmitted by Yuri Gouk, cultural attache of the Soviet Embassy in Washington.

In announcing the orchestra's acceptance Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager, said it was understood the Soviet government would assume the expenses of transporting the orchestra and its assisting staff from the time it leaves Helsinki, after a concert Sept. 4, until it reaches Prague for a concert on Sept. 11. The Soviets will also pay a fee for the concerts given on Russian territory.

Both Henry B. Cabot, chairman of the symphony's board of trustees, and Perry last night expressed their pleasure at the invitation and for the co-operation of the Soviet and United States governments in making the visit possible.

Perry pointed out that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch, would be the first American orchestra to perform in Russia.

The orchestra will leave for Europe in August. Most of the personnel will leave Aug. 22 on two chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines planes. Other members of the orchestra and the instruments will sail on the Nieuw Amsterdam Aug. 14.

Times (e)
BARRE, Vt.
Republican
Circ. 8,248

JUN 8 1956

PLAYS IN RUSSIA

Boston Symphony Accepts Invitation For Tour

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Independent
Circ. 5,886

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Play in Soviet

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

JUN 8 1956

WILL PLAY FOR RUSSIANS

Some few months ago it was announced the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra would go to Russia this Summer or Fall and give a series of concerts in Leningrad, Moscow and possibly some other cities of the Soviet Union. However, complications arose. The orchestra members demurred because of the decision of the management to put three members on the retired list and the concert by the Philadelphia Symphony was called off. Now it is announced that the Boston Symphony has received a formal invitation to play in the Soviet Union and has accepted.

The Boston orchestra will give concerts on Sept. 8 and 10 in Leningrad and will be the first major United States symphony orchestra to appear in the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union will take care of certain expenses, including transportation from Helsinki and to Prague. The orchestra in addition will get a fee for playing. Later on it is expected that the London Philharmonic will play in Russia but the Boston will have the edge in that it will have been the first to give concerts.

Before going to Russia the Boston orchestra will play at the Edinburgh Festival and later on in Paris. The whole thing of course is a good will gesture. Music has charm. Because of that the federal government is putting up some of the money to defray expenses.

Express (e)
NEWPORT, Vt.
Republican
Circ. 4,234

JUN 8 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PLAY IN RUSSIA

BOSTON, (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U. S. S. R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 27,830

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Play in Russia

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U. S. S. R. during its European tour next August and September.

Boston symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Henry C. Cabot, president of the orchestra board of trustees, and orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. expressed "gratification for the cooperation of both ((the U. S. and Russian) governments in making this important cultural visit possible."

Details of the concert tour are not complete but at least two concerts are planned for Moscow and Leningrad.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Off For Russia This Fall

BOSTON, June 7 (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight accepted a Soviet invitation to tour Russia this autumn, giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad.

It will be the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

The State Department approved the inclusion of a six-day visit to the Soviet Union on the orchestra's visit to Europe' starting in August, Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., said.

The invitation to the 104-piece orchestra directed by Charles Munch was extended by the Ministry of Culture in Moscow through the Soviet Embassy in Washington, Perry said. He said Orchestra President Henry B. Cabot "made known its willingness" to include Russia on the tour during the Geneva Conference last August.

Register (e)
TORRINGTON, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 10,140

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Accepts Soviet Bid

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Record (m)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 16,196

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Visit Russia

BOSTON, June 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight announced acceptance of a Soviet invitation to play in Russia this summer on its European tour.

The world famed orchestra will be the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The Boston Symphony has scheduled a European tour during August and September.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 20,613

JUN 8 1956

SOVIET INVITATION ACCEPTED

BOSTON, June 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight announced acceptance of a Soviet invitation to play in Russia this summer on its European tour. The world famed orchestra will be the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The Boston Symphony has scheduled a European tour during August and September. The formal Russian invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow called for the orchestra to spend six days in Russia during the Autumn tour.

CHARLOTTE, N. C. NEWS

JUN 16 1956

Diplomacy: The Missiles Are Musical

MUSIC'S charm hath recognized beast-soothing potency but what about its effect on the Bear-That-Walks-Like-A-Man? Can it win the Russian to our side?

The answer, of course, is no. Not exactly.

But the performance of American music by American musicians in the Soviet Union can indeed promote better people-to-people understanding.

It is for this reason that we applaud plans to send America's superb Boston Symphony Orchestra to the U.S.S.R. for a series of engagements. Charlotteans who heard the orchestra in Ovens Auditorium during the past concert season can appreciate fully what it can do for the nation's cultural reputation.

Music provides a means of interchange among peoples that is both unique and powerful. Isaac Stern, the violinist, brought this fact home to us the other day when he returned to the United States after giving 21 concerts to capacity audiences in the Soviet Union. Music and the arts, he said, constitute a language that "cannot be perverted to either side" and that shows "the validity of a human being's existence which may not jibe with what either they read about us or what we read about them."

Cultural exchange, said Mr. Stern, "will be far more effective than several thousand diplomatic notes" in promoting international understanding.

He is right. Music rises above mere words, which can lie, to penetrate a higher realm of feeling. The more communication in this way the better for all of us.

ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR-GAZETTE
Circ. D 38,453

JUN 16 1956

Musical Ambassadors

ARRANGEMENTS HAVE been completed to take the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Soviet Union for a brief series of engagements as part of the orchestra's tour of Europe.

The Russians made the visit possible and they are to be congratulated. The Boston Orchestra will be the first to appear in the Soviet Union. Let it be hoped that it won't be the last.

The musicians will be excellent spokesmen for America, since theirs is a language all can understand. The Russians won't need an interpreter and there will be no doubt as to what the Americans are saying with their instruments.

We welcome this new contact with the people behind the Iron Curtain. People, as President Eisenhower said in a recent speech, "are what count." The orchestra will reach people.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 58,894

JUN 12 1956

MUSICAL ENVOYS

The U.S. State Department has been exporting ever greater quantities of music to show the folk of other lands that Americans may not be so material as they have been painted.

The Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra and the U.S. Air Force Band have been playing engagements in the Far East this Spring. Plans have been completed for diverting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, during its own European tour this Summer, to the Soviet Union, which will enable Muscovites to hear their Shostakovich played by visitors known for their excellent interpretation of Russian composers.

It hasn't all been smooth sailing for the musical envoys. Last year, the State Department sent a symphonic group to the Far East without adequately checking the ideological background of its members. A good part of them displayed such pro-Communist feelings, once overseas, that there were several embarrassing incidents and, on return, the "loyal" nucleus resigned. This ill-fated tour cost the taxpayers more than $1,000,000.

There has also been a question of whether a symphonic orchestra is the best emissary to, for instance, Malaya. Recently, by poor planning, both the Air Force and Los Angeles groups were in Singapore on the same night. The latter orchestra played to a select but sparse audience while down the street a five-man local combination played jazz before twice as many listeners.

Fresh in memory is the triumph scored by veteran Louis Armstrong, exponent of jazz. "Satchmo" is reported to have charmed Britons, including Queen Elizabeth, with his musical style and unfettered personality, and he very nearly set all of West Africa to stomping while he was there.

All kinds of music get an ear in the United States and it would seem foolish to pretend otherwise. Fortunately, the lighter melodies and rhythms at which we excel have a vast and appreciative audience among other peoples.

Caledonian Record (e)
ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt.
Independent Republican
Circ. 5,231

JUN 8 - 195

SYMPHONY GOING TO RUSSIA

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 24,020

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Play in Russia

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U. S. S. R. during its European tour next August and September.

Boston symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and Conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Henry C. Cabot, president of the orchestra board of trustees, and orchestra Manager Thomas D. Perry, Jr. expressed "gratification for the cooperation of both (the U. S. and Russian) governments in making this important cultural visit possible."

Details of the concert tour are not complete but at least two concerts are planned for Moscow and Leningrad.

News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 11,628

JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Play In Russia

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
Circ. D. 55,128
JUN 8 1956

WILL PLAY FOR RUSSIANS

Some few months ago it was announced the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra would go to Russia this Summer or Fall and give a series of concerts in Leningrad, Moscow and possibly some other cities of the Soviet Union. However, complications arose. The orchestra members demurred because of the decision of the management to put three members on the retired list and the concert by the Philadelphia Symphony was called off. Now it is announced that the Boston Symphony has received a formal invitation to play in the Soviet Union and has accepted.

The Boston orchestra will give concerts on Sept. 5 and 10 in Leningrad and will be the first major United States symphony orchestra to appear in the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union will take care of certain expenses, including transportation from Helsinki and to Prague. The orchestra in addition will get a fee for playing. Later on it is expected that the London Philharmonic will play in Russia but the Boston will have the edge in that it will have been the first to give concerts.

Before going to Russia the Boston orchestra will play at the Edinburgh Festival and later on in Paris. The whole thing of course is a good-will gesture—music has charm. Because of that the federal government is putting up some of the money to defray expenses.

Express (e)
NEWPORT, Vt.
Republican
Circ. 4,234
JUN 8 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PLAY IN RUSSIA

BOSTON, (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U. S. S. R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 27,830
JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Play in Russia

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U. S. S. R. during its European tour next August and September.

Boston symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Henry C. Cabot, president of the orchestra board of trustees, and orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. expressed "gratification for the cooperation of both ((the U. S. and Russian) governments in making this important cultural visit possible."

Details of the concert tour are not complete but at least two concerts are planned for Moscow and Leningrad.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 94,124
JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Off For Russia This Fall

BOSTON, June 7 (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight accepted a Soviet invitation to tour Russia this autumn, giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad.

It will be the first American symphony ever to perform in Russia.

The State Department approved the inclusion of a six-day visit to the Soviet Union on the orchestra's visit to Europe starting in August, Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., said.

The invitation to the 104-piece orchestra directed by Charles Munch was extended by the Ministry of Culture in Moscow through the Soviet Embassy in Washington, Perry said. He said Orchestra President Henry B. Cabot "made known its willingness" to include Russia on the tour during the Geneva Conference last August.

Register (e)
TORRINGTON, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 10,140
JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony Accepts Soviet Bid

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Record (m)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 16,196
JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Visit Russia

BOSTON, June 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight announced acceptance of a Soviet invitation to play in Russia this summer on its European tour.

The world famed orchestra will be the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The Boston Symphony has scheduled a European tour during August and September.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 20,613
JUN 8 1956

SOVIET INVITATION ACCEPTED

BOSTON, June 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight announced acceptance of a Soviet invitation to play in Russia this summer on its European tour. The world famed orchestra will be the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The Boston Symphony has scheduled a European tour during August and September. The formal Russian invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow called for the orchestra to spend six days in Russia during the Autumn tour.

CHARLOTTE, N. C. NEWS
JUN 16 1956

Diplomacy: The Missiles Are Musical

MUSIC'S charm hath recognized beast-soothing potency but what about its effect on the Bear-That-Walks-Like-A-Man? Can it win the Russian to our side?

The answer, of course, is no. Not exactly.

But the performance of American music by American musicians in the Soviet Union can indeed promote better people-to-people understanding.

It is for this reason that we applaud plans to send America's superb Boston Symphony Orchestra to the U.S.S.R. for a series of engagements. Charlotteans who heard the orchestra in Ovens Auditorium during the past concert season can appreciate fully what it can do for the nation's cultural reputation.

Music provides a means of interchange among peoples that is both unique and powerful. Isaac Stern, the violinist, brought this fact home to us the other day when he returned to the United States after giving 21 concerts to capacity audiences in the Soviet Union. Music and the arts, he said, constitute a language that "cannot be perverted to either side" and that shows "the validity of a human being's existence which may not jibe with what either they read about us or what we read about them."

Cultural exchange, said Mr. Stern, "will be far more effective than several thousand diplomatic notes" in promoting international understanding.

He is right. Music rises above mere words, which can lie, to penetrate a higher realm of feeling. The more communication in this way the better for all of us.

ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR-GAZETTE
Circ. D. 38,453
JUN 16 1956

Musical Ambassadors

ARRANGEMENTS HAVE been completed to take the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Soviet Union for a brief series of engagements as part of the orchestra's tour of Europe.

The Russians made the visit possible and they are to be congratulated. The Boston Orchestra will be the first to appear in the Soviet Union. Let it be hoped that it won't be the last.

The musicians will be excellent spokesmen for America, since theirs is a language all can understand. The Russians won't need an interpreter and there will be no doubt as to what the Americans are saying with their instruments.

We welcome this new contact with the people behind the Iron Curtain. People, as President Eisenhower said in a recent speech, "are what count." The orchestra will reach people.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 58,894
JUN 12 1956

MUSICAL ENVOYS

The U.S. State Department has been exporting ever greater quantities of music to show the folk of other lands that Americans may not be so material as they have been painted.

The Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra and the U.S. Air Force Band have been playing engagements in the Far East this Spring. Plans have been completed for diverting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, during its own European tour this Summer, to the Soviet Union, which will enable Muscovites to hear their Shostakovich played by visitors known for their excellent interpretation of Russian composers.

It hasn't all been smooth sailing for the musical envoys. Last year, the State Department sent a symphonic group to the Far East without adequately checking the ideological background of its members. A good part of them displayed such pro-Communist feelings, once overseas, that there were several embarrassing incidents and, on return, the "loyal" nucleus resigned. This ill-fated tour cost the taxpayers more than $1,000,000.

There has also been a question of whether a symphonic orchestra is the best emissary to, for instance, Malaya. Recently, by poor planning, both the Air Force and Los Angeles groups were in Singapore on the same night. The latter orchestra played to a select but sparse audience while down the street a five-man local combination played jazz before twice as many listeners.

Fresh in memory is the triumph scored by veteran Louis Armstrong, exponent of jazz. "Satchmo" is reported to have charmed Britons, including Queen Elizabeth, with his musical style and unfettered personality, and he very nearly set all of West Africa to stomping while he was there.

All kinds of music get an ear in the United States and it would seem foolish to pretend otherwise. Fortunately, the lighter melodies and rhythms at which we excel have a vast and appreciative audience among other peoples.

Caledonian Record (e)
ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt.
Independent Republican
Circ. 5,231
JUN 8 - 195

SYMPHONY GOING TO RUSSIA

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 11,628
JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Play In Russia

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U.S.S.R. during its European tour next August and September.

Symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 24,020
JUN 8 1956

Boston Symphony To Play in Russia

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to become the first American symphony to play in Russia.

The orchestra announced acceptance last night of a Russian invitation to appear in the U. S. S. R. during its European tour next August and September.

Boston symphony officials said it is "understood" the Russians will pay the transportation costs for 104 musicians and Conductor Charles Munch during the six-day visit.

Henry C. Cabot, president of the orchestra board of trustees, and orchestra Manager Thomas D. Perry, Jr. expressed "gratification for the cooperation of both (the U. S. and Russian) governments in making this important cultural visit possible."

Details of the concert tour are not complete but at least two concerts are planned for Moscow and Leningrad.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat & Chronicle
Circ. D. 117,818 - S. 172,719

AUG 19 1956

Hanson Work in Orchestra Tour

DR. HOWARD HANSON'S Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky is one of the American compositions to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its forthcoming tour of 13 European countries. The work was written last year as a tribute to the former famed conductor of the Boston Symphony, a personal friend of Dr. Hanson. The orchestra gave it its premiere performance last winter and it won high praise from audiences and reviewers.

The work was commissioned by the Boston Symphony as a feature of its observance of its 75th anniversary.

Each of the 27 concerts of the orchestra in Europe will feature a symphonic work by a contemporary American composer. Nine United States composers will be represented.

The orchestra's European tour, the longest it has ever made, is in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States Department to assist American performing artists to study abroad. The United States compositions have been included on each program in order to demonstrate America's stature in the field of music.

Last year the New York Philharmonic Orchestra was criticized because in its European "good will" tour it played no contemporary American music but instead played mainly works of Russian, German, French and other composers with whom, the critics said, Europe was already familiar.

* * *

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860

JUN 3 1956

HOMAGE: Tomorrow is the fifth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky. That he has not been forgotten is attested by several signs. One is that the International Music Council of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization is carrying on the International Music Fund, which he founded in 1948 to aid composers all over the world. The other is that the Boston Symphony has added a second "Homage to Koussevitzky" concert to its European schedule. Besides the one in Paris on Sept. 19, Charles Munch will conduct one at the Edinburgh Festival on Aug. 30. The program in Scotland will include Honegger's Fifth Symphony, which Koussevitzky commissioned, and Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky."

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS
Circ. D. 27,410 - S. 43,920

SEP 16 1956

Boston Orchestra Concerts Memorial

Three of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in its present European tour have been designated as memorials. One this week in Edinburgh and one in Paris during September will honor its long-time director, Serge Koussewitzky, in the presence of his widow, Mme. Olga Koussewitzky. Later in September Pierre Monteux will direct a concert in memory of Georges Enesco. Yehudi Menuhin, who studied with the famous Romanian composer-violinist-conductor-pianist, will contribute his services in a performance of the Brahms Violin Concerto.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 111,372

SEP 2 1956

THREE MEMORIAL CONCERTS PLANNED

New York, Sept. 1—Three of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in its present European tour have been designated as memorials. One this week in Edinburgh and one in Paris during September will honor its long-time director, Serge Koussevitzky, in the presence of his widow, Mme. Olga Koussevitzky.

Later in September Pierre Monteux will direct a concert in memory of Georges Enesco. Yehudi Menuhin, who studied with the famous Romanian composer-violinist-conductor-pianist, will contribute his services in a performance of the Brahms violin concerto.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

JUL 11 1956

Plan Concert Tour

LENOX, July 11—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play 27 concerts in 13 countries during its five-and-a-half week tour of Europe in August and September, Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., announced today.

Under the baton of Dr. Charles Munch the 106 players will fly to Europe immediately following the close of the orchestra's current Berkshire Festival Aug. 12.

A highlight of the tour is the invitation for the Symphony to be the first American orchestra to perform in Russia. From Sept. 5 to 10, the orchestra will be in Soviet territory, a pair of concerts will be given each in Leningrad and Moscow.

Concerts also will be performed in Cork, Dublin, Edinburgh, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London.

Pierre Monteux has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct 10 of the concerts.

On Sept. 25, two chartered planes again will fly the Boston Symphony's tour personnel across the Atlantic for the opening of the orchestra's 76th season in Boston's Symphony Hall Oct. 5.

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 9,986

JUL 11 1956

ALONG . . . THE WHITE WAY

The Junior Legion baseball team went down to a 9-3 defeat at the hands of Fall River at Hayward Field last night in a Zone 9 encounter. Attleboro plays Dartmouth tomorrow night in a return game with Fall River on Friday.

The technical High School in Boston may be as old fashioned and out of repair as some persons say, but when the students learn to work on and repair belt-operated machinery they are becoming well trained for work in some factories here where belt-operated machinery is still considered useful equipment. All factories do not have the very latest yet they do fine work. Shops here could look to graduates of that school for more help should they exhaust the local market.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's schedule for its European trip has finally been worked out. The Orchestra will play 27 concerts in 13 countries. At the close of the orchestra's Berkshire Festival Aug. 12, conductor Charles Munch and his 106 musicians (with some wives, a staff, newspaper critics, and 16,000 pounds of equipment), will go by plane and boat to Ireland for concerts in Cork and Dublin on Aug. 24 and 25. Five concerts as part of the Edinburgh Festival and four in Scandinavia will be given before leaving Helsinki for Russia. On invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow the orchestra will will give a pair of concerts in both Leningrad and Moscow between Sept. 5 and 10.

Sheldon Rotenberg, formerly of this city, is first violinist with the orchestra.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 13,357

JUL 11 1956

Book 27 Concerts In 13 Countries For Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony orchestra will play 27 concerts in 13 countries during its 5½ week tour of Europe in August and September, manager Thomas D. Perry, Jr., announced today.

Under the baton of Charles Munch, its music director for the past seven years, the 106 players of the Boston symphony will fly to Europe immediately following the close of the orchestra's current Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, on Aug. 12.

The first of two concerts in Ireland will be played in Cork on Friday evening, Aug. 24, followed by a matinee in Dublin the next day. Five concerts will be given at Usher hall, Edinburgh, as part of the Edinburgh festival, Aug. 26-30, then the symphony will visit Scandinavia for four days.

A highlight of the tour is the invitation, recently issued by the Ministry of Culture in Moscow and immediately accepted by the board of trustees of the orchestra, for the Boston symphony to be the first American orchestra to perform in the U.S.S.R. During the six days, Sept. 5-10, the orchestra will be in Soviet territory, a pair of concerts will be given each in Leningrad and Moscow. The U.S.S.R. will assume the expenses of this portion of the tour, including transportation by air and train, and will also pay a stipend for the four concerts. It is expected the Russian government will fly the members of the orchestra, its staff and equipment from Helsinki to Leningrad, and from Moscow to its next date in Prague, capital of Czechoslovakia.

Concerts subsequently will be performed in Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres - the orchestra has been invited to play in the famous cathedral, - Leeds and London.

Pierre Monteux, once regular music director of the Boston symphony (1919-1924), has been invited by his friend and colleague, Dr. Munch, to conduct some ten of the orchestra's twenty-seven concerts abroad.

The Boston Symphony orchestra's tour of Europe is to be made in cooperation with the international exchange program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the State department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad, to help cover the cost of trans-Atlantic transportation by air, and to help defray deficits to the orchestra from concerts abroad.

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,811

JUL 11 1956

Boston Symphony To Play in 13 Countries

LENOX—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play 27 concerts in 13 countries during its five-and-a-half week tour of Europe in August and September, Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., announced today.

Under the baton of Charles Munch, the 106 players will fly to Europe immediately following the close of the orchestra's Berkshire Festival here Aug. 12.

The first of two concerts in Ireland will be played in Cork on Aug. 24, followed by a matinee in Dublin the next day. Five concerts will be given at Usher Hall, Edinburgh, as part of the Edinburgh Festival, August 26-30, then the symphony will visit Scandinavia for four days.

A highlight of the tour is the invitation, recently issued by the Ministry of Culture in Moscow and immediately accepted by the board of trustees of the orchestra, for the Boston Symphony to be the first American orchestra to perform in Russia. During the six days, September 5-10, the orchestra will be in Soviet territory, a pair of concerts will be given each in Leningrad and Moscow.

Concerts subsequently will be performed in Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres—the orchestra has been invited to play in the famous Cathedral—Leeds and London.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,928

JUL 11 1956

Boston Symphony Announces Itinerary Of Trip Abroad

TANGLEWOOD—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play 27 concerts in 13 countries during its five-and-a-half week tour of Europe in August and September, manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. announced today.

Under the baton of Charles Munch, its music director for the past seven years, the 106 players of the Boston Symphony will fly to Europe immediately following the close of the orchestra's current Berkshire Festival here on Aug. 12.

The first of two concerts in Ireland will be played in Cork on Friday evening, Aug. 24, followed by a matinee in Dublin the next day. Five concerts will be given at Usher Hall, Edinburgh, as part of the Edinburgh Festival, Aug. 26-30, then the symphony will visit Scandinavia for four days.

A highlight of the tour is the invitation, recently issued by the ministry of Culture in Moscow and immediately accepted by the Board of Trustees of the orchestra, for the Boston Symphony to be the first American orchestra to perform in the U.S.S.R. During the six days, Sept. 5-10, the orchestra will be in Soviet territory, a pair of concerts will be given each in Leningrad and Moscow. The U.S.S.R. will assume the expenses of this portion of the tour, including transportation by air and train, and will also pay a stipend for the four concerts. It is expected the Russian government will fly the members of the orchestra, its staff and equipment from Helsinki to Leningrad, and from Moscow to its next date in Prague, capital of Czechoslovakia.

Concerts subsequently will be performed in Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres—the orchestra has been invited to play in the famous Cathedral—Leeds and London.

The itinerary follows:

Cork, Ireland, Aug. 24; Dublin, Ireland, Aug. 25 (matinee); Edinburgh, Scotland, Aug. 26 through 30; Copenhagen, Denmark, Aug. 31; Oslo, Norway, Sept. 1; Stockholm, Sweden, Sept. 3; Helsinki, Finland, Sept. 4; Leningrad, U.S.S.R., Sept. 5 and 6; Moscow, U.S.S.R., Sept. 8 and 9; Prague, Czechoslovakia, Sept. 11; Vienna, Austria, Sept. 12; Stuttgart, Germany, Sept. 13; Munich, Germany, Sept. 14; Zurich, Switzerland, Sept. 16; Berne, Switzerland, Sept. 17; Paris, France, Sept. 19 and 20; Chartres, France, Sept. 21; Leeds, England, Sept. 23; London, England, Sept. 24 and 25.

Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 27,830

JUL 11 1956

Boston Symphony Plans Appearance in Moscow

LENOX, MASS. (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced its itinerary for a fall European tour which will mark the first appearance of an American symphony orchestra in Russia.

The orchestra will leave the U. S. Aug. 14, with 27 concerts in 13 countries scheduled, Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., announced. On that day, 79 members will fly from Logan International Airport and 40 more will sail with the orchestra's 16,000 pounds of instruments and baggage.

They will head for Shannon, Ireland.

The appearance behind the Iron Curtain followed an invitation by the Ministry of Culture in Moscow.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259

JUL 11 1956

Boston Symphony to Go to Russia

With a visit to Russia as the highlight of its European tour next month, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play 27 concerts in 13 countries, manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. announced yesterday.

At the close of the orchestra's Berkshire Festival Aug. 12, conductor Charles Munch and his 106 musicians (with some wives, a staff, newspaper critics, and 16,000 pounds of equipment), will go by plane and boat to Ireland for concerts in Cork and Dublin on Aug. 24 and 25. Five concerts as part of the Edinburgh Festival and four in Scandinavia will be given before leaving Helsinki for Russia.

On invitation from the Ministry of Culture in Moscow the orchestra will give a pair of concerts in both Leningrad and Moscow between Sept. 5 and 10. The Boston Symphony will be the first American orchestra to perform in the U.S.S.R., and that nation will assume expenses for the tour in its territory.

Thereafter the orchestra will give concerts in Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, the famous Cathedral in Chartres (another invitation), and then to Leeds and London for the windup of the tour t. 25.

SARASOTA-FLA. HERALD-TRIBUNE - AUG 5, 1956

SOON TO TRAVEL—Charles Munch conducting his Boston Symphony Orchestra in the permanent music shell at Tanglewood. The shell is open at three sides, giving the illusion of an open-air concert, and thousands listen not only in the chairs but outside on the grass.

To Visit 13 Countries During August, September

Boston Symphony Keen For European Tour

By LAWRENCE DAME

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.—If Boston Symphony Orchestra players have shown an added zest in their programs at the Berkshire Festival this year—and I think they have—it may be because they are getting into topmost fettle for the forthcoming European tour. Under the direction of Charles Munch, 106 members of the famed orchestra will give 27 concerts in 13 countries, including Russia, during a five-and-a-half week sweep of the continent in August and September.

But, while most musicians are looking forward to the visit with keen pleasure, it isn't going to be any vacation. And for a few who long ago escaped Soviet tyranny in their homelands, the tour has a certain danger.

International guarantees of safe passage, subscribed to by Moscow, have calmed the initial fears of those who used to be Russian subjects or who came from Russian-dominated lands.

"After all, this is the only chance I'd ever have to revisit my native country," a friend of long standing told me. "I can take the chance. But, believe me, my wife stays in Vienna while I am in Leningrad and Moscow."

Blanks which touring orchestra members have had to fill out for the Russian part of the musical voyage look innocuous enough on one side, which asks name, address and profession. However, on the other side, a demand is made for the names and addresses of all relatives in Russian territory. For exiles in America, giving the names of relatives has always been one of the major taboos. In this case, it is a question of giving all required information or staying behind.

Nobody knows just what programs will be played by the orchestra in Russia. The reason is that the Russians, through their Ministry of Culture in Moscow, asked for a number of sample programs. Presumably, these are being scanned for subversive or anti-Communist thought, and acceptable material will be sanctioned for Conductor Munch's baton.

Nor is it known definitely whether the orchestra will be flown to Leningrad from Helsinki, the terminal of a brief Scandinavian tour, or be forced to take the dreary, long train ride, nearly two days, from the Finnish frontier.

Munch himself, a heavy-set but energetic and determined man who has headed the orchestra for seven years, is delighted about the first foreign tour his players have made in four years. It's the first visit to Russia, and as far as this Frenchman is concerned, he would march in his men like soldiers, on foot, if they could but add this feather to his bonnet of musical achievement. Most of all, of course, he is charmed at the prospect of being back in Paris for two concerts, Sept. 19 and 20, and particularly over the honor of leading his sterling group at a concert in Chartres Cathedral, Sept. 21.

The musicians, many of whom will be seen and heard under the direction of Arthur Fiedler in the Boston Pops Orchestra when it visits Sarasota during the next Community Concert Association season, will play at the Edinburgh Festival Aug. 25-30, and will previously give two concerts in Ireland.

All in all, a considerable measure of international good will is expected to be whipped up, especially in countries where people have been taught that Americans are barbarians who pay little attention to arts above the level of TV clowning.

"We're delighted to be going but we're all very tired," a Czechoslovakian player told me. "We haven't had a vacation for nearly a year and here we have all this performing and all this travel ahead of us. We'll be dead when it's all over. But we'll have some tales to tell, at that."

The orchestra doesn't expect to make money. If it breaks even, it will do well. If it gets into a hole, the State Department has arranged to have the tabs picked up!

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,118

AUG 23 1956

Boston Orchestra Will Perform "Eire Suite" In Cork

CORK, Ireland (UP)—A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy Theater here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the board of trustees of the orchestra, will make a short speech. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

On Saturday afternoon the orchestra will play in Dublin's Theater Royal before a distinguished audience including President Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, opposition parliamentary leader Eamon Devalera and American Ambassador William Howard Taft III.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH
Circ. D. 123,471 - S. 174,705

AUG 19 1956

BostonSymphony To Visit Soviet

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will tour Europe in August and September, has accepted an invitation from the Soviet government to include Russia on the itinerary.

The Boston Symphony thus will be the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia. The orchestra will spend six days within the Soviet border with concerts planned at Leningrad and Moscow, as well as possible other cities.

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGON JOURNAL
Circ. D. 195,441 - S. 214,380

AUG 19 1956

Bostonians Off to Eire

Symphony Will Play First Irish Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 18.-(Special) Twenty-seven concerts are on the schedule of the Boston Symphony orchestra for its tour of Europe, starting this coming week with two concerts in Ireland.

Because of the large Irish population of Boston, where the orchestra was founded in 1881, it is considered appropriate for the tour to start in Eire.

TWO CONCERTS in Ireland—in Cork August 24 and in Dublin August 25—are the realization of a dream by Michael T. Kelleher, trustee of the orchestra, who has arranged for their sponsorship. His parents came as immigrants to Boston from Cork, where the opening concert will take place with Kelleher giving an address just prior to the orchestra program.

It will mark the first time an American symphony orchestra has ever appeared in Ireland. Its 105 members have just concluded the 1956 season at the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973

AUG 23 1956

Symphony to Start Europe Tour in Cork

Fifty nine Boston Symphony Orchestra members, headed by Richard Burgin, associate conductor, neared Shannon, Ireland today after a flight from Logan Airport.

They meet the vanguard of the orchestra in Cork, where the 120-piece opens its European tour which will include concerts in Russia.

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 22,452

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony To Play In Ireland

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which concluded its 1956 Berkshire Festival of 24 concerts during six weeks in July and August at Lenox, Mass., yesterday, will commence its tour of Europe immediately, giving 27 concerts during five-and-one-half weeks on the Continent, the first two in Ireland on Aug. 24 and 25.

The Boston Symphony of 195 players, with Charles Munch, its music director during the past seven years, conducting, will become the first American symphony orchestra to play in Eire when it gives a concert in Cork on August 24, and in Dublin on August 25.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 99,506

AUG 19 1956

MUSIC

Boston Symphony To Open European Tour In Ireland

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Having just concluded another successful Berkshire Music Festival, the Boston Symphony will spend the next several weeks as a cultural ambassador of this country in a tour of 13 European countries. Part of the orchestra left these shores by plane and ship last week and the remainder will fly from Boston on Wednesday of this week arriving in time for the first concert of the tour in Cork, Ireland, on Friday evening.

Charles Munch and his Boston musicians were honored with an official send-off in Boston last Monday. The orchestra was presented with an official City of Boston flag which will be hung at all of the concerts abroad. Pierre Monteux, who will again act as the orchestra's guest conductor for 10 of the concerts abroad, received an ebony baton encrusted with gold from acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack. A number of consuls of foreign countries were in attendance at the farewell ceremonies.

This second European tour of the Boston Orchestra is being made in co-operation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy. The latter is the professional agency appointed by the State Department to assist performing artists from this country on tours abroad.

Prior to the opening Cork concert, the orchestra will be entertained on Thursday evening with a buffet at the summer home in Castle Hyde of Henry Laughlin, Boston publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Company. The concert the following evening in the Savoy Theater will be introduced by Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the Boston Orchestra, whose parents emigrated to this country from Cork. Kelleher will thank the people of Eire for their welcome and the musicians will show their appreciation of Irish hospitality by including Leroy Anderson's Irish Suite in this first program.

A work by an American composer will be featured in each of the 27 concerts to be given on the tour. Four of the programmed American works by Piston, Hanson, Copland, and Martinu were commissioned for the current 75th anniversary season of the Boston Orchestra and all of them were heard during the recent Berkshire Music Festival. Another composer to be represented is Isadore Freed, chairman of the composition and theory departments of the Hartt School of Music in Hartford. His Festival Overture, composed in 1944 at West Stockbridge, Mass., near the Berkshire Festival headquarters, will be given two performances abroad.

Concerts to be given in Edinburgh and Paris under the baton of Charles Munch will be dedicated to the memory of the late conductor of the Boston Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. These concerts have been designed to call attention to the International Music Fund, a project inaugurated by Koussevitzky in 1948 which is now receiving new impetus under the chairmanship of his widow. The Fund has as its objective the promotion of interest in contemporary music on an international level, to be effected through live performances as well as an exchange of broadcasts and recordings.

The itinerary of the coming tour includes the following cities following the first concert in Cork: Dublin, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds, and London. Five concerts will be given at the Edinburgh Festival and the orchestra will give more than one concert in such world centers as Paris and London. Incidentally, the orchestra will make its first appearance in Soviet Russia on this second European tour.

Statistics received so far regarding this year's Berkshire Music Festival do not mention the overall attendance figures. From this one may gather that attendance was down this year as compared with last year's Tanglewood events. I have it on good authority that the three regular concerts in one particular weekend at the Festival were off some 10,000 people from the previous year's figures. However, it is reported that the Wednesday evening chamber music programs had the largest total audience to date.

Three students at the Berkshire Music Center from Connecticut were among the winners of prizes at the school this summer. Robert Lombardo, of Hartford, who received both the B. Mus. and the Master of Music degrees from the Hartt College of Music there, was one of the successful aspirants for the Serge Koussevitzky Composition prize. The other two award winners were Richard Donohue, of Middletown, and Thomas Putsche of West Hartford. Donohue, a student at Wesleyan University, won a choral award while Putsche received a scholarship for his work in composition.

Pro Musica Antiqua At Shakespeare Theater

The first of two concerts by the Pro Musica Antiqua of New York at the Shakespeare Theater in Stratford will be given tomorrow evening at 8:40. The great bard was undoubtedly familiar with much of the music to be heard in this concert which will be devoted to "the golden age of English music"—the days of King Henry VIII, Queen Elizabeth I, and King James I.

The accomplished group of singers and instrumentalists gave eight concerts in New York before sold-out houses last season and a number of successful programs elsewhere. The ensemble has also appeared on numerous TV programs such as the Renaissance program put on last October by the television show, Omnibus, for which the group provided authentic music. The vocal ensemble of Pro Musica Antiqua was engaged for the Broadway production of "The Lark." The singers recorded Leonard Bernstein's difficult vocal score on a sound track which was used in this production.

The musicians of the group play such instruments as recorders, viols, and the harpsichord so that their performances have been widely acclaimed as true to the performing styles of early times. Currently the Pro Musica Antiqua is giving a series of concerts in the Berkshires.

Starlight Festival Approaches Final Program

The final program of the Starlight Festival of chamber music will be given in the courtyard of the Yale Art Gallery on Tuesday evening at 8:30. This delightful series, which was inaugurated only last year, has enjoyed another successful season this summer. This is deservedly so for the concerts have been well planned and executed. The high type of artistry displayed by the young performers and the appropriately intimate atmosphere of the locale of the outdoor programs have proved to be a happy combination for devotees of chamber music here.

Violinist Julius Scheir, who founded and still directs these concerts, has Robert Helps, pianist, and John Riley, cellist, with himself as the regular nucleus of the Starlight players. In Tuesday's final concert, the trio will be joined by violists Ann Barak and Fernald Wentworth, and violinist Barbara La Couline. The program is as follows: Trio in B flat major for strings, Schubert; Viola Quintet in C major (K. 515), Mozart; Piano Quintet in F minor, Opus 34, by Brahms.

Tickets for the concert are available at Cutler's Record Shop, Loomis Temple of Music, David Dean Smith, Whitlock's, and the Music Corner, all in downtown New Haven.

Roger Williams Drew Large Pops Audience

The Pops finally broke an attendance jinx which has plagued the Bowl concerts all season. In last Tuesday's fifth concert, the personable and talented young pianist of "Autumn Leaves" recording fame, Roger Williams, performed for an audience of over 11,000 people. This marked the first time in the current series that attendance figures approached those of the "good old days" when many of the programs had capacity audiences of around 15,000 listeners. The previous high for this season was registered at the "Duke" Ellington program with a crowd slightly under 9,000 people. The season's low and in fact, one of the lowest attendances at a Bowl concert in several years, came with the fourth program when less than 4,000 heard soprano Eileen Farrell. This was more the pity because Miss Farrell is among the greatest artists ever to appear in the Bowl concerts since their inception.

Another great singer is to be the guest artist of the sixth and final concert on August 28. Soprano Rise Stevens, who first appeared in a Bowl concert in the Pops series of 1954, should again draw a large audience to the last of this season's Bowl programs. Though she is a serious singer, whose career has been principally associated with opera and the concert stage, Miss Stevens knows how to charm Pops fans. She can "let her hair down" as those who witnessed her "Rock and Roll" shenanigans on a Martha Raye TV show well know. Charming to look at and a pleasure to hear, she has a versatility that makes her an ideal Pops performer.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
12 HERALD-JOURNAL, Friday, August 17, 1956

TALKING IT OVER

The Boston to Play American Works In Each European Tour Concert

By Emma Van Wormer

A symphonic composition by a contemporary American composer will be featured on each of the 27 concerts the Boston Symphony will perform in 19 cities during the August-September tour of 13 European countries.

The composers: Walter Piston, Harvard University Professor of Music; Howard Hanson, Director of Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester and Aaron Copland, faculty composition head of the Boston Symphony's Summer Music school in "Tanglewood" and Bohuslav Martinu, New York City. Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of The Boston, will conduct the Piston Symphony No. 6 in the Edinburgh Festival, in Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow and Dublin.

The Hanson "Elegy" will be performed in Dublin, Edinburgh, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munish and Paris. The Copland "Ode" will be played in Edinburgh. The Martinu work "Fantasies Symphoniques" will be given in concerts in Munich and Paris.

Scheduled for the opening European concert of the Boston Symphony in Cork, Ireland, is the "Erie Suite" by Leroy Anderson: Commissioned by the Eire Society of Boston, the Suite is a long-standing favorite with Boston Pops audiences. Dr. Munch also will conduct a single European performance, in the nave of the XIII Century Gothic Cathedral of Chartres, France, of the Adagio for Strings, a work composed in 1938 by Samuel Barber, widely known American.

Also, on the tour, Pierre Monteux will lead the Orchestra in 8 performances of the Symphony No. 2 written in 1944 by Paul Creston, organist of St. Malachy's Church, New York City. Another American composer represented in the European concert programs is Isadore Freed, chairman of composition and thoery in Hartt School of Music, Hartford, Conn. His "Festival Overture" will be played in Edinburgh and in Paris.

* * *

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

AUG 28 1956

BSO to Play in Four Scandanavian Cities

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give concerts in the capital cities of four Scandinavian countries during its current August-September tour of Europe under the direction of Charles Munch, its Music Director for the past seven years.

When the orchestra made its first visit to Europe, a three-week tour during May, 1952, it toured only as deep into the Continent as Brussels and Amsterdam. Now, with five and a half weeks of twenty-seven concerts in nineteen cities in thirteen European countries on its schedule, the Boston Symphony is performing for the first time in Copenhagen, Friday, in Oslo, Saturday in Stockholm, Monday, September 3; in Helsinki, Tuesday, September 4. Charles Munch will conduct the concerts in Norway, Sweden and Finland. His long-time friend and colleague Pierre Monteux, conductor of the orchestra from 1919-1924 and a frequent guest on its podium in recent years, will lead the ensemble in Denmark.

The Scandinavian portion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour immediately follows the orchestra's five-day appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, August 26-August 30; and will immediately precede a journey into the U. S. S. R., that is unprecedented for any American orchestra.

Extract from
The Irish Press
DUBLIN
Date 21 AUG 1956

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra begins its European tour by visiting Ireland for the first time. Since it was founded in 1881 by the American banker and Civil War veteran, Henry Lee Higginson, the Orchestra under a series of famous directors has become one of the greatest in the world. For Irish music-lovers its visit has additional interest because of the bonds between Ireland and Boston. Five works by Irish composers, selected by an international jury in a competition sponsored by the Cultural Relations Committee, will be presented in Dublin to the Music Director of the Orchestra. They have already been performed abroad and their place on the Orchestra's repertoire will be an honour to Irish music.

The visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a measure of the development in the appreciation of good music in Ireland in the post-war years. The Friday night concerts in the Phoenix Hall, with free admission to the public, the Gaiety Proms, the good music broadcast by Radio Eireann and the visits of the Radio Eireann Symphony Orchestra to provincial centres all met with a most encouraging public reception. We have been too often inclined to pride ourselves on our musical taste and tradition without doing enough to justify that pride. But the developments of the last ten or twelve years show that a widespread public taste for good music exists and that the public appreciates that we have musicians capable of linking the traditions of our own past with great contemporary modern music. The visits from other countries of famous orchestras, artistes or guest conductors help to stimulate and broaden that appreciation.

Good music, too, has been the main component of the festivals that have brought new cultural activity to many European towns. Our own Wexford festival has had a short history, but in six years it has done a great deal for the cultural life of Ireland and there are signs that its reputation abroad is growing. The building of a wide international fame is a slow process and it can only be carried out on the foundation of a well-developed, cultivated taste here at home.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,928

AUG 23 1956

Concert In Cork Opens Symphony's Tour Tomorrow

What is believed to be the first time a purely orchestral concert has ever been performed in the celebrated Gothic Cathedral of Chartres, France, will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, on Friday, Sept. 21, towards the close of the American orchestra's five-and-a-half week tour of thirteen European countries during which it is giving 27 concerts.

Charles Munch, the distinguished music director of the Boston Symphony for the past seven years, has been invited to bring his orchestra of 105 pieces to the cathedral city 60 miles from Paris. The evening concert the orchestra will give within the long nave of the 13th century cathedral will open with the Adagio for Strings, a work of the late 1930's by American composer Samuel Barber; the Symphony No. 3 ("Liturgique") of the late Arthur Honegger; and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica." The Honegger work, dedicated to Dr. Munch, was performed by the Boston Symphony conductor at its world premiere in Zurich in 1946, and Dr. Munch played it as a guest of the New York Philharmonic - Symphony Orchestra in 1947.

The Chartres orchestral program will be preceded by a sacred work sung by Les Chanteurs de St. Eustache of Paris's St. Eustache Church, a choral piece performed under the direction of their leader.

The invitation to the Boston Symphony to perform as part of the fifth season of musical Fridays in Chartres — soloists and chamber music ensembles give intimate concerts in the Italian room of the city Museum, housed in the Episcopal Palace — came through the Syndicat d'Initiative of Chartres, and the orchestral concert will benefit the maintenance fund of the Cathedral. To accommodate the orchestra, special platforms will be erected, in the main part of the cathedral, just inside the 12th century Royal Portal or main entrance, and during the concert special exterior lighting will illuminate the beautiful medieval stained glass windows, which date from the 12th and 13th centuries, and whose surface extends over more than 3,000 square yards.

A second concert in aid of a church fund will be played by the Boston Symphony during its European tour. In the Irish capital city of Dublin, at an afternoon concert on Saturday, Aug. 25, the orchestra will give a concert under the auspices of Our Lady's Choral Society, in aid of the fund for rebuilding the 97-year-old archdiocesan Seminary of the Holy Cross, at Clonliffe. The Dublin concert is under the patronage of Most Rev. Dr. John C. McQuade, C.S. Sp., archbishop of Dublin and primate of Ireland, and will be attended by Sean T. Kelly, President of Ireland, that day observing his birthday.

Charles Munch will conduct a program of works by Haydn, Richard Strauss, Schumann, and one of the works commissioned by the Boston Symphony for its current, 75th anniversary year, the Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky by Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester, N. Y.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of Europe opens in Cork, Ireland, tomorrow, and will conclude in London, England, on Sept. 25. Other cities to be visited, besides Dublin and Chartres, are Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Munich, Stuttgart, Zurich, Berne, and Paris. Upon the tour's completion, the Boston Symphony returns to its home in Symphony Hall, to open its 76th season on Oct. 5.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 99,506

AUG 19 1956

MUSIC

Boston Symphony To Open European Tour In Ireland

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Having just concluded another successful Berkshire Music Festival, the Boston Symphony will spend the next several weeks as a cultural ambassador of this country in a tour of 13 European countries. Part of the orchestra left these shores by plane and ship last week and the remainder will fly from Boston on Wednesday of this week arriving in time for the first concert of the tour in Cork, Ireland, on Friday evening.

Charles Munch and his Boston musicians were honored with an official send-off in Boston last Monday. The orchestra was presented with an official City of Boston flag which will be hung at all of the concerts abroad. Pierre Monteux, who will again act as the orchestra's guest conductor for 10 of the concerts abroad, received an ebony baton encrusted with gold from acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack. A number of consuls of foreign countries were in attendance at the farewell ceremonies.

This second European tour of the Boston Orchestra is being made in co-operation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy. The latter is the professional agency appointed by the State Department to assist performing artists from this country on tours abroad.

Prior to the opening Cork concert, the orchestra will be entertained on Thursday evening with a buffet at the summer home in Castle Hyde of Henry Laughlin, Boston publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Company. The concert the following evening in the Savoy Theater will be introduced by Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the Boston Orchestra, whose parents emigrated to this country from Cork. Kelleher will thank the people of Eire for their welcome and the musicians will show their appreciation of Irish hospitality by including Leroy Anderson's Irish Suite in this first program.

A work by an American composer will be featured in each of the 27 concerts to be given on the tour. Four of the programmed American works by Piston, Hanson, Copland, and Martinu were commissioned for the current 75th anniversary season of the Boston Orchestra and all of them were heard during the recent Berkshire Music Festival. Another composer to be represented is Isadore Freed, chairman of the composition and theory departments of the Hartt School of Music in Hartford. His Festival Overture, composed in 1944 at West Stockbridge, Mass., near the Berkshire Festival headquarters, will be given two performances abroad.

Concerts to be given in Edinburgh and Paris under the baton of Charles Munch will be dedicated to the memory of the late conductor of the Boston Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky. These concerts have been designed to call attention to the International Music Fund, a project inaugurated by Koussevitzky in 1948 which is now receiving new impetus under the chairmanship of his widow. The Fund has as its objective the promotion of interest in contemporary music on an international level, to be effected through live performances as well as an exchange of broadcasts and recordings.

The itinerary of the coming tour includes the following cities following the first concert in Cork: Dublin, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds, and London. Five concerts will be given at the Edinburgh Festival and the orchestra will give more than one concert in each world centers as Paris and London. In

ISTER ROBERTS
IN
THE PICTURE THAT'S ASTOUNDING THE WORLD!
— PLUS —
FRANK SINATRA AS Johnny Concho
Released thru United Artists
THE SCREEN'S HOTTEST STAR TURNS ON THE HEAT IN HIS FIRST WESTERN!
OPEN AT 7 — HU 8-4818 — SHOW TIME 8:10

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

AUG 17 1956

ston Symphony to Feature American Works in Europe

Each of the 27 concerts to be played by the Boston Symphony during its six-weeks European tour will include a symphonic work by a contemporary American composer.

Among them are four works commissioned by the orchestra to commemorate its 75th anniversary.

These are Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6; Howard Hanson's Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, former Boston Symphony conductor; Aaron Copland's Symphonic Ode, and Fanstaisies Symphoniques by Bohuslav Martinu.

Other American works to be played are Bela Bartok's Concerto for orchestra; Leroy Anderson's Eire Suite; Samuel Barber's Adagio for Strings; Paul Creston's Symphony No. 2., and Isadore Freed's Festival Overture.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
12 HERALD-JOURNAL, Friday, August 17, 1956

TALKING IT OVER

The Boston to Play American Works In Each European Tour Concert

By Emma Van Wormer

A symphonic composition by a contemporary American composer will be featured on each of the 27 concerts the Boston Symphony will perform in 19 cities during the August-September tour of 13 European countries.

The composers: Walter Piston, Harvard University Professor of Music; Howard Hanson, Director of Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester and Aaron Copland, faculty composition head of the Boston Symphony's Summer Music school in "Tanglewood" and Bohuslav Martinu, New York City. Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of The Boston, will conduct the Piston Symphony No. 6 in the Edinburgh Festival, in Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow and Dublin.

The Hanson "Elegy" will be performed in Dublin, Edinburgh, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munish and Paris. The Copland "Ode" will be played in Edinburgh. The Martinu work "Fantasies Symphoniques" will be given in concerts in Munich and Paris.

Scheduled for the opening European concert of the Boston Symphony in Cork, Ireland, is the "Erie Suite" by Leroy Anderson: Commissioned by the Eire Society of Boston, the Suite is a long-standing favorite with Boston Pops audiences. Dr. Munch also will conduct a single European performance, in the nave of the XIII Century Gothic Cathedral of Chartres, France, of the Adagio for Strings, a work composed in 1938 by Samuel Barber, widely known American.

Also, on the tour, Pierre Monteux will lead the Orchestra in 8 performances of the Symphony No. 2 written in 1944 by Paul Creston, organist of St. Malachy's Church, New York City. Another American composer represented in the European concert programs is Isadore Freed, chairman of composition and thoery in Hartt School of Music, Hartford, Conn. His "Festival Overture" will be played in Edinburgh and in Paris.

* * *

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

AUG 28 1956

BSO to Play in Four Scandanavian Cities

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give concerts in the capital cities of four Scandinavian countries during its current August-September tour of Europe under the direction of Charles Munch, its Music Director for the past seven years.

When the orchestra made its first visit to Europe, a three-week tour during May, 1952, it toured only as deep into the Continent as Brussels and Amsterdam. Now, with five and a half weeks of twenty-seven concerts in nineteen cities in thirteen European countries on its schedule, the Boston Symphony is performing for the first time in Copenhagen, Friday, in Oslo, Saturday in Stockholm, Monday, September 3; in Helsinki, Tuesday, September 4. Charles Munch will conduct the concerts in Norway, Sweden and Finland. His long-time friend and colleague Pierre Monteux, conductor of the orchestra from 1919-1924 and a frequent guest on its podium in recent years, will lead the ensemble in Denmark.

The Scandinavian portion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour immediately follows the orchestra's five-day appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, August 26-August 30; and will immediately precede a journey into the U. S. S. R., that is unprecedented for any American orchestra.

Extract from
The Irish Press
DUBLIN
Date AUG 1956

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra begins its European tour by visiting Ireland for the first time. Since it was founded in 1881 by the American banker and Civil War veteran, Henry Lee Higginson, the Orchestra under a series of famous directors has become one of the greatest in the world. For Irish music-lovers its visit has additional interest because of the bonds between Ireland and Boston. Five works by Irish composers, selected by an international jury in a competition sponsored by the Cultural Relations Committee, will be presented in Dublin to the Music Director of the Orchestra. They have already been performed abroad and their place on the Orchestra's repertoire will be an honour to Irish music.

The visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a measure of the development in the appreciation of good music in Ireland in the post-war years. The Friday night concerts in the Phoenix Hall, with free admission to the public, the Gaiety Proms, the good music broadcast by Radio Eireann and the visits of the Radio Eireann Symphony Orchestra to provincial centres all met with a most encouraging public reception. We have been too often inclined to pride ourselves on our musical taste and tradition without doing enough to justify that pride. But the developments of the last ten or twelve years show that a widespread public taste for good music exists and that the public appreciates that we have musicians capable of linking the traditions of our own past with great contemporary modern music. The visits from other countries of famous orchestras, artistes or guest conductors help to stimulate and broaden that appreciation.

Good music, too, has been the main component of the festivals that have brought new cultural activity to many European towns. Our own Wexford festival has had a short history, but in six years it has done a great deal for the cultural life of Ireland and there are signs that its reputation abroad is growing. The building of a wide international fame is a slow process and it can only be carried out on the foundation of a well-developed, cultivated taste here at home.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,928

AUG 23 1956

Concert In Cork Opens Symphony's Tour Tomorrow

What is believed to be the first time a purely orchestral concert has ever been performed in the celebrated Gothic Cathedral of Chartres, France, will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, on Friday, Sept. 21, towards the close of the American orchestra's five-and-a-half week tour of thirteen European countries during which it is giving 27 concerts.

Charles Munch, the distinguished music director of the Boston Symphony for the past seven years, has been invited to bring his orchestra of 105 pieces to the cathedral city 60 miles from Paris. The evening concert the orchestra will give within the long nave of the 13th century cathedral will open with the Adagio for Strings, a work of the late 1930's by American composer Samuel Barber; the Symphony No. 3 ("Liturgique") of the late Arthur Honegger; and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica." The Honegger work, dedicated to Dr. Munch, was performed by the Boston Symphony conductor at its world premiere in Zurich in 1946, and Dr. Munch played it as a guest of the New York Philharmonic - Symphony Orchestra in 1947.

The Chartres orchestral program will be preceded by a sacred work sung by Les Chanteurs de St. Eustache of Paris's St. Eustache Church, a choral piece performed under the direction of their leader.

The invitation to the Boston Symphony to perform as part of the fifth season of musical Fridays in Chartres — soloists and chamber music ensembles give intimate concerts in the Italian room of the city Museum, housed in the Episcopal Palace — came through the Syndicat d'Initiative of Chartres, and the orchestral concert will benefit the maintenance fund of the Cathedral. To accommodate the orchestra, special platforms will be erected, in the main part of the cathedral, just inside the 12th century Royal Portal or main entrance, and during the concert special exterior lighting will illuminate the beautiful medieval stained glass windows, which date from the 12th and 13th centuries, and whose surface extends over more than 3,000 square yards.

A second concert in aid of a church fund will be played by the Boston Symphony during its European tour. In the Irish capital city of Dublin, at an afternoon concert on Saturday, Aug. 25, the orchestra will give a concert under the auspices of Our Lady's Choral Society, in aid of the fund for rebuilding the 97-year-old archdiocesan Seminary of the Holy Cross, at Clonliffe. The Dublin concert is under the patronage of Most Rev. Dr. John C. McQuade, C.S. Sp., archbishop of Dublin and primate of Ireland, and will be attended by Sean T. Kelly, President of Ireland, that day observing his birthday.

Charles Munch will conduct a program of works by Haydn, Richard Strauss, Schumann, and one of the works commissioned by the Boston Symphony for its current, 75th anniversary year, the Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky by Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester, N. Y.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of Europe opens in Cork, Ireland, tomorrow, and will conclude in London, England, on Sept. 25. Other cities to be visited, besides Dublin and Chartres, are Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Munich, Stuttgart, Zurich, Berne, and Paris. Upon the tour's completion, the Boston Symphony returns to its home in Symphony Hall, to open its 76th season on Oct. 5.

[20]

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

AUG 26 1956

Foreign-Born Members of Symphony Visit Homelands on European Tour

Twenty-five foreign-born members of the 105-man Boston Symphony Orchestra will be revisiting their homelands during the course of the orchestra's August and September five-and-a-half week tour of Europe.

The largest group of returning natives will be the French-born members of the orchestra, who are looking forward to the concerts in Paris on Sept. 19 and 20, and in the Cathedral at Chartres on Sept. 21. Included in this group are four violinists: Emil Kornsand (born in Colmar), Norbert Lauga (Aix-les-Bains), Pierre Mayer (Paris) and Roger Shermont (Paris).

Albert Bernard (Seine) and Jean Cauhape (Toulouse) are French-born violinists. Leon Merjollet (Chalons-sur-Marne) and Alfred Zighera (Paris) are native French cellists. The bass section includes Georges Moleux, principal bass (Boulogne-sur-Mer), Gaston Dufresne (Lille) and Henri Girard (Montlhery). Other French-born Boston Symphony players are Jean Devergie (Marseille), oboe; Louis Speyer (Paris), English horn; Roger Voisin, principal trumpet (Angers); Marcel Lafoss (Marly-le-Roi), trumpet; and Bernard Zighera (Paris), harp.

FRENCH-BORN CONDUCTORS

Both Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Pierre Monteux, the guest conductor, are French-born. Dr. Munch in Strasbourg and Mr. Monteux in Paris. Each will conduct a concert in Paris, and Dr. Munch will be on the podium in the Cathedral of Chartres.

Three Russian-born violinists have been polishing up their Russian for the orchestra's four concerts in Leningrad on Sept. 6 and 7, and Moscow on Sept. 8. They are Victor Manusevitch (born in Alexandrovsk), Vladimir Resnikoff (Novgorod), and Manuel Zung (Grodno).

Two cellists, Louis Berger (Prague) and Josef Zimbler (Pilsen), have been briefing their colleagues about the best restaurants and hotels in Prague, where the orchestra will play on Sept. 11.

SIGHT-SEERS

The concert in Vienna on Sept. 12 will find Irving Frankel (Lemberg), bass, and Ernst Panenka (Vienna), bassoon, acting as guides for the other men as they go sightseeing in this famous musical capital.

The two remaining foreign-born players whose homelands will be visited are violinists Alfred Krips (Berlin) and Einar Hansen (Copenhagen). The orchestra will play in Copenhagen on Aug. 31, immediately after its final performance at the Edinburgh Festival, and Stuttgart and Munich in Germany will hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sept. 13 and 14. Eleven other members of the orchestra are foreign-born, but their countries are not included on the itinerary for this year's tour.

SAN ANGELO, TEX.,
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 22 1956

Musical World Busy Planning

There'll be no dull spots for the Boston Symphony Orchestra this summer. Now engaged in its annual Tanglewood activities in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts, the 106-man organization will take off immediately on their completion for a European tour extending from Cork in Ireland to Moscow in the U. S. S. R. Along the way the orchestra will take part in the annual Edinburgh festival, and, after it leaves Russia, it will perform in Prague before coming back to France. Appropriately, Charles Munch has invited Pierre Monteux —who was, though it is generally forgotten, principal conductor of the Boston Symphony immediately before Serge Koussevitzky — to share the 27-concert tour with him.

Admirers of the great jazz pianist Art Tatum will be grieved to hear that he has canceled an appearance at the Stratford, Ontario, musical festival in August because of ill-health. The nature of his illness is not mentioned, but it must be incapacitating for Tatum — who has overcome the handicap of being sightless to rise to a place of pre-eminence in the jazz world — to bow out. His place will be taken by another great Negro piano master, Oscar Peterson, who is also a Canadian.

As well as promising unusual quality on the musical side, the forthcoming tour of the NBC Opera Company can be anticipated for unconventional staging of its two-opera repertory: "Madama Butterfly" and "Marriage of Figaro." Responsibility for the scenic work has been entrusted to William and Jean Eckart, who are well known to Broadway for their contributions to "Damn Yankees," "Mister Johnson" and "The Golden Apple." The tour is now scheduled to open in South Bend, Indiana, on October 11. Bookings have been so heavy that the company will be "out," as the theatrical term has it, until December 8. IK.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
Circ. D. 412,167 - S. 808,669

AUG 26 1956

Boston Symphony to Tour Europe

A symphonic work by a contemporary American composer will be presented on each of the 27 concerts the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform in 19 cities during its August-September tour of 13 European countries. Nine United States composers will be represented in the European tour repertory.

The orchestra's European tour, the longest it has ever made, is in co-operation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's music director for seven years, will include on his programs abroad four American works commissioned for the orchestra to commemorate its current, 75th anniversary season.

They are the Symphony No. 6 of Walter Piston, the Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky by Howard Hanson, Symphonic Ode by Aaron Copland, and Fantaisies Symphoniques by Bohuslav Martinu.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

AUG 22 1956

Boston Symphony To Play In Russia

Will Also Give Concert At French Cathedral

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will have two "firsts" to its long list of meritorious performances next month.

The orchestra, currently on a European tour of 13 countries, will be the first American orchestra to play in the famed Chartres Cathedral in France Sept. 21. Charles Munch, director of music of the orchestra, has been invited to bring the 105-piece orchestra to the cathedral city which is situated 60 miles from Paris. The invitation was extended by the Syndicat d'Initiative of Chartres and the concert will benefit the maintenance fund of the cathedral. Special platforms will be erected in the long nave just inside the Royal Portal.

The other "first" will be experienced on Sept. 6 when the orchestra will play the first concert by an American orchestra in the USSR. The group will play in Leningrad on Sept. 6 at the Conservatory under Dr. Munch and on Sept. 7 under Pierre Monteaux. On Sept. 8, Dr. Munch will conduct a concert in the afternoon in the Conservatory in Moscow, and Mr. Monteaux will conduct the evening concert.

The orchestra will give another concert for the benefit of a church fund this Saturday in Dublin, Eire, under the auspices of Our Lady's Choral Society to aid the fund for rebuilding the 97-year-old archdiocesan Seminary of the Holy Cross at Clonliffe.

At all European concerts, a work by an American composer will be included in the program.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
Circ. D. 220,412 - S. 282,550

AUG 26 1956

Boston Ork To Play Soviet With Four Concerts There

BOSTON, Aug. 25 (Special) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra will become the first American orchestra ever to perform in Russia, indeed the first symphony from the Western world to perform in the U.S.S.R. when, during the course of its August-September tour of thirteen countries in Europe, it plays two concerts in Leningrad and two in Moscow during the three days, September 6-8.

★ ★ ★

THE BOSTON Symphony thus becomes the first ensemble of American instrumental artists to visit the Soviet Union. Last January the American folk opera "Porgy and Bess" was performed in Leningrad and Moscow by an American troupe. In May violinist Isaac Stern, a frequent soloist with the Boston Symphony (he will perform the Beethoven Violin Concerto at its Edinburgh Festival concert of August 28) made an extensive tour of Russia. In June the American Metropolitan tenor Jan Peerce sang in concert and opera performances in the Soviet Union. An English orchestra, the London Philharmonic, is scheduled to visit Russia in October.

★ ★ ★

MUCH AS it did in the case of the tour of "Porgy and Bess," the Russian Government will make arrangements for bringing the orchestra, its staff and equipment into its territory from Finland, where the orchestra performs on Tuesday, September 4; will provide accommodations and meals during six days, September 5-10, spent in the U.S.S.R., and will again move the orchestra from Moscow to its next date in Prague, capital of Czechoslovakia, on Tuesday, September 11. It will also pay the orchestra a fee for each concert, and sell tickets at a price it will itself set.

LUBBOCK, TEX.
AVALANCHE JOURNAL

AUG 19 1956

IRELAND HAS FIRST HEARING

Boston Symphony Sets Out On Lengthy European Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which concluded its 1956 Berkshire Festival of 24 concerts during six weeks in July and August at Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12, will commence its tour of Europe immediately, giving 27 concerts during five and one half weeks on the Continent.

The first two concerts will be given in Ireland on Aug. 24-25. The Boston Symphony of 105 players, with Charles Munch, its music director during the past seven years, conducting, will become the first American symphony orchestra to play in Eire when it gives a concert in Cork

(Continued From Page 4)

Edinburgh, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich and Paris.

The complete Boston Symphony programs for Ireland are:

Friday—Savoy Theater, Cork
Anderson ..... Irish Suite (Movements 1, 2 and 4)
Haydn ..... Symphony No. 102
Dukas .... The Sorcerer's Apprentice
Brahms ..... Symphony No. 2
Conductor: Charles Munch
Haydn ..... Symphony No. 102
Hanson ..... Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky
Strauss ..... Don Juan
Schumann ..... Symphony No. 2
Conductor: Charles Munch

Following its afternoon concert in Dublin, the Boston Symphony goes to Edinburgh where it will perform five concerts, Sunday through Thursday, Aug. 30, in Usher Hall, appearing for the first time with the celebrated Edinburgh Festival, now in its 10th year.

Monteux Conducts

Pierre Monteux, the noted leader who was regular conductor of the Boston Symphony from 1919-1924 and who has since made frequent guest appearances with the orchestrat in this country, in Europe, at Tanglewood and in recordings, will join his colleague Dr. Munch, to conduct two of the Edinburgh concerts.

The orchestra will then travel to Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, into the U.S.S.R., to Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris Chartres and London.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of Europe is to be made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

Friday and in Dublin on Saturday.

Because of the large Irish population of Boston, where the orchestra was founded in 1881, it is considered particularly appropriate that the symphony's tour should commence in the land from when the families of so many of its native sons emigrated. The concerts in Ireland are the realization of a particular dream by Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra, who has arranged for their sponsorship. Vice President of Marsh and McClennan, Inc., a national firm of insurance brokers with offices at 140 Federal St., Boston, Kelleher is active in Irish societies and church and fraternal organiaztion in Boston, and his parents came from Cork as immigrants to Boston. Kelleher will give an address to the Irish people preceding the Cork concert in the Savoy Theater, paying tribute to Irish - Americans and thanking the people of Erie for their welcome to one of the world's fine orchestras.

The Cork program Dr. Munch will conduct opens appropriately with the "Irish Suite" by Leroy Anderson, a native of Cambridge, Mass., an A.B. magna cum laude in Music from Harvard, former director of the Harvard Band and tutor in music at Radcliffe College, church organist and choirmaster, who has also played double bass and conducted orchestras in Boston. Since 1935 Anderson has made many appearances as guest conductor with the Boston Pops Orchestra, and has long been associated with it as arranger and orchestrator. Arthur Fiedler, director of the Pops, encouraged Anderson to compose by featuring many of his works on Pops programs, including the popular "Blue Tango," "Fiddle Faddle," "Horse and Buggy," "The Penny Whistle Song," "Plink, Plank, Plunk," "Sleigh Ride," "The Typewriter" and "The Waltzing Cat."

Personnel Arrives This Week

On the eve of the Cork concert, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its conductor and staff will be guests of honor of Henry Laughlin, publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Company, 2 Park St., Boston, in his summer home, Castle Hyde, near Cork. The orchestra will arrive in Ireland, accompanied by the wives of some 35 players, by chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines Super-Constellation, arriving at Shannon Airport Wednesday; at Shannon Thursday, and via the Holland-American Lines' Nieuw Amsterdam, arriving at Cork Monday.

The second concert in Ireland, in Eire's historic capital of Dublin, will be given at the Theater Royal, as a matinee on Saturday. The concert is a benefit for the archdiocesan seminary of the Holy Cross at Clonliffe, and will be under the patronage of the Most Rev. Dr. John C. McQuade, C.S.Sp., Archbishop of Dublin and Primate of Ireland. The concert will be the first event in a program to raise $560,000 to rebuilt the seminary, which is 97 years old. The concert is being presented by Our Lady's Choral Society.

Sean T. Kelly, President of Ireland, that day observing his birthday will be in the audience.

Hanson Work Included

Charles Munch will also conduct the Dublin concert, which as with every concert the Boston Symphony will give during its European tour, will include an American work, in this case Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitsky. The tribute to the conductor of the orchestra for 25 years was composed by the Director of the Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester, N. Y., for the current 75th anniversary of the orchestra, and was played in Boston and other Eastern cities during the past winter, and will also be performed at concerts in

See BOSTON Page 5

Extract from
Egyptian Gazette, Cairo.

20 AUG 1956

Boston orchestra goes to Europe

IN August, the Boston Symphony Orchestra (120 musicians) will fly by K.L.M. (in 2 chartered planes) from the U.S.A. to Europe for a six-week tour of 13 European countries. The orchestra under the well-known conductor Charles Munch, is to perform in 18 cities; the first concert will be given in Cork, Ireland, on August 24. The Orchestra will also perform in Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Munich, Stuttgart, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Leeds and London, where the last concert will be given.

Pierre Monteux, who was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1919 to 1924, will conduct the same orchestra in 10 of its 27 European performances.

The whole orchestra with all the instruments, weighing a total of 8 tons, will fly from London to Boston in three K.L.M. planes (two passenger planes and one freighter) on September 27 and October 1 respectively.

This orchestra is the third big American orchestra to fly by K.L.M. from America to Europe and back. Last year both the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra also chartered three K.L.M. planes for a trip to Europe.

In addition to the two charter flights for the Boston Symphony Orchestra on August 14 and 21 (on the outward journey the instruments will be sent by boat), K.L.M. will carry out another 43 charter flights on the North Atlantic route alone during August.

Bird-watcher is blind

BIRD-watcher in Berkshire is a totally blind man — Mr. V. Pottinger, of Reading. He does his "watching" by ear, spending many hours in the countryside round his home. He identifies the birds solely by the noises they make.

He has accumulated a knowledge that is the envy of many ornithologists.

SAHAFY

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

AUG 23 1956

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604

AUG 12 1956

Boston Symphony Players Will Visit Native Soil

Twenty-five foreign-born members of the 105-man Boston Symphony Orchestra will be revisiting their homelands during the course of the five-week tour of Europe, which will commence immediately at the conclusion, today, of the orchestra's concerts at this summer's Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox.

By far the largest group of returning natives will be the 16 French-born members of the orchestra, who are looking forward to the concerts in Paris on September 19 and 20, and in the Cathedral at Chartres on September 21. Included in this group are Emil Kornsand (born in Colmar), Norbert Lauga (born in Aix-les-Bains), Pierre Mayor (born in Paris) and Roger Shermont (born in Paris), violinists Albert Yves Bernard (born in Seine) and Jean Cauhape (born in Toulouse) are French-born violinists. Leon Marjollet (born in Chalons-sur-Marne) and Alfred Zighera (born in Paris) are native French cellists. The bass section includes Georges Moleux, principal bass (born in Boulogne-sur-Mer), Gaston Dufresne (born in Lille) and Henri Girard (born in Montlhery). Other French-born Boston Symphony players are Jean Devergie (born in Marseille), oboe; Louis Speyer (born in Paris), English horn; Roger Voisin, principal trumpet (born in Angers); Marcel Lafosse (born in Marly-le-Roi), trumpet; and Bernard Zighera (born in Paris), harp.

Both Charles Munch, the orchestra's Music Director, and Pierre Monteux, the guest conductor, are French-born, Dr. Munch in Strasbourgand Mr. Monteux in Paris. Each will conduct a concert in Paris.

Three Russian - born violinists have been polishing up their Russian for the orchestra's concerts in Leningrad on September 5 and 6, and Moscow on September 8 and 9. They are Victor Manusevitch (born in Alexandrovsk), Vladimir Resnikoff (born in Novgorod), and Manuel Zung (born in Grodno).

Two cellists, Louis Berger (born in Prague) and Josef Zimbler (born in Pilsen), have been briefing their colleagues about the best restaurants and hotels in Prague, where the orchestra will play on September 11.

The concert in Vienna on September 12 will find Irving Frankel (born in Lemberg), bass, and Ernst Panenka (born in Vienna), bassoon, acting as guides for the other men as they go sight-seeing in this famous musical capital.

The two remaining foreign-born players whose homelands will be visited are violinists Alfred Krips (born in Berlin) and Einar Hansen (born in Copenhagen). The orchestra will play in Copenhagen on August 31, immediately after its final performance at the Edinburgh Festival, and Stuttgart and Munich in Germany will hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra on September 13 and 14. Eleven other members of the orchestra are foreign-born, but their countries are not included on the itinerary for this year's tour.

Helen Keller Life Inspires Ballet

A major new work, inspired by incidents in the life of Helen Keller, will be introduced by Pauline Koner during the Ninth American Dance Festival at Connecticut College, New London, Conn. next week. Miss Koner and her dance company will open the four-day festival, Aug. 16-19 at Palmer Auditorium.

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,355

AUG 23 1956

Munch, Monteux To Lead BSO In 5 Concerts at Edinburgh

For the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be a part of the annual Edinburgh Festival during its tour of Europe. Five of the 27 concerts the orchestra will give abroad will be played in Usher Hall in the Scottish capital starting Sunday. Dr. Charles Munch will share the podium on two occasions with Pierre Monteux.

Dr. Munch will conduct the first Edinburgh concert Sunday evening as well as concerts on Tuesday and Thursday. Mr. Monteux will lead the orchestra Monday and Saturday.

BBC Broadcasts

On the Aug. 28 program, Isaac Stern, the American violinist, will be the soloist in Beethoven's Violin Concerto. French pianist Robert Casadesus will perform Ravel's Concerto for the left hand and Franck's Symphonic Variations in the concert on Aug. 29. English pianist Clifford Curzon will play the Schumann Piano Concerto in A minor on Aug. 30.

The British Broadcasting Corp. will broadcast live concerts on Aug. 26, 28 and 29, and there are plans to televise the concert by Mr. Stern on Aug. 28.

The final Edinburgh concert will be a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky conductor of the BSO for 25 years.

The Boston Symphony will be formally welcomed to the Edinburgh Festival by the Lord Provost of the city, Sir John G. Banks, and a ceremonial meeting will probably be held between him, Dr. Munch, Mr. Monteux, BSO manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. and two trustees of the orchestra, Henry B. Cabot and Edward A. Taft.

Following its five days in Edinburgh the Boston Symphony makes a swing through the Scandinavian capitals of Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki; then becomes the first American orchestra ever to visit Russia, giving two concerts in Leningrad and two in Moscow. Visits follow ot Prague, Stuttgart, Munch, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London, before the orchestra returns to commence its 76th season in Boston on Oct. 5.

The complete Edinburgh programs are as follows:

SUNDAY EVENING, AUG. 26
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony

Symphony No. 102	Haydn
Symphony No. 6	Piston
Don Juan	Strauss
L'Apprenti Sorcier	Dukas

Conductor: Charles Munch.

MONDAY EVENING, AUG. 27
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony

Symphony No. 2	Creston
Concerto for Orchestra	Bartok
Symphony No. 7	Schubert

Conductor: Pierre Monteux.

TUESDAY MORNING, Aug. 28
Freemason's Hall, Edinburgh
Brass Ensemble

Canzon Septimi Toni	Gabrieli
Toccata	Bonelli
Sonata	Poulenc
Quintet in B flat	Sanders
Brass Suite	Berezowsky

Director: Roger Voisin.

TUESDAY EVENING, Aug. 28
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony

Symphonic Ode	Copland
Violin Concerto	Beethoven

Soloist: Isaac Stern, violin.

Symphony No. 2	Schumann

Conductor: Charles Munch.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, Aug. 29
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony

Festival Overture	Freed
Symphony No 3	Brahms
Symphonic Variations	Franck
Concerto for the left hand	Ravel

Soloist: Robert Casadesus, piano.

Suite from Der Rosenkavalier	Strauss

Conductor: Pierre Monteux.

THURSDAY EVENING, AUG. 30
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony
(Homage to Serge Koussevitzky)

Elegy in memory of Serge Koussevitzky,	Hanson
Piano Concerto	Schumann

Soloist: Clifford Curzon, piano.

Symphony No. 5	Honegger
La Mer	Debussy

Conductor: Charles Munch.

AUG 23 1956

the . . . PRATTLER

Ten a Day

With the big First National supermarket due to be opened in less than a month, it is timely to mention that throughout the United States an average of 10 supermarkets are opened daily.

Back to Homelands

It'll be old home week when the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its tour of Europe next month. Out of the 105 in the group, 25 of them were foreign born, and will have an opportunity to visit their homeland during the tour. Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Pierre Monteux, the guest conductor, were born in France.

Fashion Note

A look around town at the store windows displaying clothing indicates that the predominating color this fall will be brown in various shades. Last year's charcoal, untastefully combined with pink, has evidently died the death in the fashion world it deserved. Another trend this year, in children's clothing, is the swing to styling for comfort rather than fashion. Youngsters' clothing was meant to be played in and the tots make no distinction between "school" clothes and "Sunday" clothes when they play.

Salute to the Women

"Salute the ladies," is the call issued to all men in politics in Massachusetts by Governor's Councilor George A. Wells. The fact that Wells happens to be running for state office is only incidental, of course.

Wells wants the ladies saluted on Aug. 26 because, on that day "the nation marks the anniversary of the momentous day in 1920 when, by passage of the 19th amendment, women were first granted the right to vote in the United States."

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
Circ. D. 150,452 - S. 299,263

SEP 2 1956

In the Realm of Music

European Tour to Take Boston Musicians 'Home'

By KENNETH GILL

ON TOUR—Twenty-five members of the 105-man Boston Symphony Orchestra will be revisiting their homelands during the orchestra's current 5½-week tour of Europe.

By far the largest group of returning natives will be the 16 French-born members of the orchestra, who are looking forward to the concerts in Paris on Sept. 19 and 20, and in the Cathedral of Chartres on Sept. 21.

Included in this group are four violinists: Emil Kornsand (born in Colmar), Norbert Lauga (Aix-les-Bains), Pierre Mayer (Paris) and Roger Shermont (Paris). Albert Yves Bernard (Seine) and Jean Cauhape (Toulouse) are French-born violists. Leon Marjollet (Chalons-sur-Marne) and Alfred Zighera (Paris) are native French cellists.

The bass section includes Georges Moleux, principal bass (Boulogne-sur-Mer), Gaston Dufresne (Lille) and Henri Girard (Montlhery).

Other French-born Boston Symphony players are Jean Devergie (Marseille), oboe; Louis Speyer (Paris), English horn; Roger Voisin (Angers), principal trumpet; Marcel Lafosse (Marly-le-Roi), trumpet; and Bernard Zighera (Paris), harp.

TO CONDUCT IN PARIS—Both Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Pierre Monteux, the guest conductor, are French-born, Dr. Munch in Strasbourg and Mr. Monteux in Paris. Each will conduct a concert in Paris, and Dr. Munch also will conduct in the Cathedral of Chartres.

Three Russian-born violinists have been polishing up their Russian for the orchestra's four concerts in Leningrad on Sept. 6 and 7, and Moscow on Sept. 8. They are Victor Manusevitch (born in Alexandrovsk), Vladimir Resnikoff (Novgorod), and Manuel Zung (Grodno).

Two cellists, Louis Berger (born in Prague) and Josef Zimbler (Pilsen), have been briefing their colleagues about the best restaurants and hotels in Prague, where the orchestra will play on Sept. 11.

The concert in Vienna on Sept. 12 will find Irving Frankel (born in Lemberg), bass, and Ernst Panenka (Vienna), bassoon, acting as guides for the other men as they go sight-seeing in this famous musical capital.

HONORS—Symphony of the Air includes Josef Krips as one of its guest conductors for the winter season. Ralph Black, former Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra Manager and now Manager of the National Symphony of Washington, has been elected first vice president of the American Symphony Orchestra League for the coming year.

CHOIR REHEARSALS — The Senior Choir & Polyphonic Chorale of St. Mary of Sorrows Church resumes rehearsals on Wednesday. Applicants for either choir or chorale should contact the director, Robert Schulz, or come directly to rehearsal at 7:30 p.m.

REOPENING—The Community Music School will reopen on Tuesday for registration of students. Lessons resume on Monday, Sept. 10.

PARK CONCERT — Carroll C. Geiger will conduct the 20th Century Symphony Band in a concert tomorrow at Sheridan Park. The concert is a joint sponsorship of the Township of Tonawanda Parks and Recreation Division and the Buffalo Musicians Assn., through a grant from the Music Performance Trust Fund of the Recording Industry.

C. C. Geiger

The band will play works by Bizet, Lavalle, King and Grofe. Assisting artists in the concert are Franklin Dow, trumpeter; the "K" Trio of Betty Gibson; Nancy Reid and Gayel Panke, and Raymond Fiutak, clarinetist.

ON EDUCATION — Michael Aaron, author, lecturer and well-known piano teacher circles, will hold a clinic at Denton, Cottier & Daniels, 32 Court St., on Wednesday, Sept. 12, morning and afternoon. Currently on a nation wide tour, Aaron will lecture on the latest trend in piano teaching and basic principles of piano technique.

Michael Aaron

ON VACATION — With this edition, "In the Realm of Music" departs for three weeks of vacation. It will be a pleasure to return on Sunday, Sept. 30.

[22]

Extract from
Egyptian Gazette, Cairo.

20 AUG 1956

Boston orchestra goes to Europe

IN August, the Boston Symphony Orchestra (120 musicians) will fly by K.L.M. (in 2 chartered planes) from the U.S.A. to Europe for a six-week tour of 13 European countries. The orchestra under the well-known conductor Charles Munch, is to perform in 18 cities; the first concert will be given in Cork, Ireland, on August 24. The Orchestra will also perform in Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Munich, Stuttgart, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Leeds and London, where the last concert will be given.

Pierre Monteux, who was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1919 to 1924, will conduct the same orchestra in 10 of its 27 European performances.

The whole orchestra with all the instruments, weighing a total of 8 tons, will fly from London to Boston in three K.L.M. planes (two passenger planes and one freighter) on September 27 and October 1 respectively.

This orchestra is the third big American orchestra to fly by K.L.M. from America to Europe and back. Last year both the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra also chartered three K.L.M. planes for a trip to Europe.

In addition to the two charter flights for the Boston Symphony Orchestra on August 14 and 21 (on the outward journey the instruments will be sent by boat), K.L.M. will carry out another 43 charter flights on the North Atlantic route alone during August.

Bird-watcher is blind

BIRD-watcher in Berkshire is a totally blind man — Mr. V. Pottinger, of Reading. He does his "watching" by ear, spending many hours in the countryside round his home. He identifies the birds solely by the noises they make.

He has accumulated a knowledge that is the envy of many ornithologists.

SAHAFY

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

AUG 23 1956

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Indep. Republican
Circ. 253,604

AUG 12 1956

Boston Symphony Players Will Visit Native Soil

Twenty-five foreign-born members of the 105-man Boston Symphony Orchestra will be revisiting their homelands during the course of the five-week tour of Europe, which will commence immediately at the conclusion, today, of the orchestra's concerts at this summer's Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox.

By far the largest group of returning natives will be the 16 French-born members of the orchestra, who are looking forward to the concerts in Paris on September 19 and 20, and in the Cathedral at Chartres on September 21. Included in this group are Emil Kornsand (born in Colmar), Norbert Lauga (born in Aix-les-Bains), Pierre Mayor (born in Paris) and Roger Shermont (born in Paris), violinists Albert Yves Bernard (born in Seine) and Jean Cauhape (born in Toulouse) are French-born violinists. Leon Marjollet (born in Chalons-sur-Marne) and Alfred Zighera (born in Paris) are native French cellists. The bass section includes Georges Moleux, principal bass (born in Boulogne-sur-Mer), Gaston Dufresne (born in Lille) and Henri Girard (born in Montlhery). Other French-born Boston Symphony players are Jean Devergie (born in Marseille), oboe; Louis Speyer (born in Paris), English horn; Roger Voisin, principal trumpet (born in Angers); Marcel Lafosse (born in Marly-le-Roi), trumpet; and Bernard Zighera (born in Paris), harp.

Both Charles Munch, the orchestra's Music Director, and Pierre Monteux, the guest conductor, are French-born, Dr. Munch in Strasbourgand Mr. Monteux in Paris. Each will conduct a concert in Paris.

Three Russian - born violinists have been polishing up their Russian for the orchestra's concerts in Leningrad on September 5 and 6, and Moscow on September 8 and 9. They are Victor Manusevitch (born in Alexandrovsk), Vladimir Resnikoff (born in Novgorod), and Manuel Zung (born in Grodno).

Two cellists, Louis Berger (born in Prague) and Josef Zimbler (born in Pilsen), have been briefing their colleagues about the best restaurants and hotels in Prague, where the orchestra will play on September 11.

The concert in Vienna on September 12 will find Irving Frankel (born in Lemberg), bass, and Ernst Panenka (born in Vienna), bassoon, acting as guides for the other men as they go sight-seeing in this famous musical capital.

The two remaining foreign-born players whose homelands will be visited are violinists Alfred Krips (born in Berlin) and Einar Hansen (born in Copenhagen). The orchestra will play in Copenhagen on August 31, immediately after its final performance at the Edinburgh Festival, and Stuttgart and Munich in Germany will hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra on September 13 and 14. Eleven other members of the orchestra are foreign-born, but their countries are not included on the itinerary for this year's tour.

Helen Keller Life Inspires Ballet

A major new work, inspired by incidents in the life of Helen Keller, will be introduced by Pauline Koner during the Ninth American Dance Festival at Connecticut College, New London, Conn. next week. Miss Koner and her dance company will open the four-day festival, Aug. 16-19 at Palmer Auditorium.

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 6,355

AUG 23 1956

Munch, Monteux To Lead BSO In 5 Concerts at Edinburgh

For the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be a part of the annual Edinburgh Festival during its tour of Europe. Five of the 27 concerts the orchestra will give abroad will be played in Usher Hall in the Scottish capital starting Sunday. Dr. Charles Munch will share the podium on two occasions with Pierre Monteux.

Dr. Munch will conduct the first Edinburgh concert Sunday evening as well as concerts on Tuesday and Thursday. Mr. Monteux will lead the orchestra Monday and Saturday.

BBC Broadcasts

On the Aug. 28 program, Isaac Stern, the American violinist, will be the soloist in Beethoven's Violin Concerto. French pianist Robert Casadesus will perform Ravel's Concerto for the left hand and Franck's Symphonic Variations in the concert on Aug. 29. English pianist Clifford Curzon will play the Schumann Piano Concerto in A minor on Aug. 30.

The British Broadcasting Corp. will broadcast live concerts on Aug. 26, 28 and 29, and there are plans to televise the concert by Mr. Stern on Aug. 28.

The final Edinburgh concert will be a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky conductor of the BSO for 25 years.

The Boston Symphony will be formally welcomed to the Edinburgh Festival by the Lord Provost of the city, Sir John G. Banks, and a ceremonial meeting will probably be held between him, Dr. Munch, Mr. Monteux, BSO manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. and two trustees of the orchestra, Henry B. Cabot and Edward A. Taft.

Following its five days in Edinburgh the Boston Symphony makes a swing through the Scandinavian capitals of Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki; then becomes the first American orchestra ever to visit Russia, giving two concerts in Leningrad and two in Moscow. Visits follow ot Prague, Stuttgart, Munch, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London, before the orchestra returns to commence its 76th season in Boston on Oct. 5.

The complete Edinburgh programs are as follows:

SUNDAY EVENING, AUG. 26
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony

Symphony No. 102	Haydn
Symphony No. 6	Piston
Don Juan	Strauss
L'Apprenti Sorcier	Dukas

Conductor: Charles Munch.

MONDAY EVENING, AUG. 27
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony

Symphony No. 2	Creston
Concerto for Orchestra	Bartok
Symphony No. 7	Schubert

Conductor: Pierre Monteux.

TUESDAY MORNING, Aug. 28
Freemason's Hall, Edinburgh
Brass Ensemble

Canzon Septimi Toni	Gabrieli
Toccata	Bonelli
Sonata	Poulenc
Quintet in B flat	Sanders
Brass Suite	Berezowsky

Director: Roger Voisin.

TUESDAY EVENING, Aug. 28
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony

Symphonic Ode	Copland
Violin Concerto	Beethoven

Soloist: Isaac Stern, violin.

Symphony No. 2	Schumann

Conductor: Charles Munch.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, Aug. 29
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony

Festival Overture	Freed
Symphony No 3	Brahms
Symphonic Variations	Franck
Concerto for the left hand	Ravel

Soloist: Robert Casadesus, piano.

Suite from Der Rosenkavalier	Strauss

Conductor: Pierre Monteux.

THURSDAY EVENING, AUG. 30
Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Boston Symphony
(Homage to Serge Koussevitzky)

Elegy in memory of Serge Koussevitzky,	Hanson
Piano Concerto	Schumann

Soloist: Clifford Curzon, piano.

Symphony No. 5	Honegger
La Mer	Debussy

Conductor: Charles Munch.

AUG 23 1956

the . . . PRATTLER

Ten a Day

With the big First National supermarket due to be opened in less than a month, it is timely to mention that throughout the United States an average of 10 supermarkets are opened daily.

Back to Homelands

It'll be old home week when the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its tour of Europe next month. Out of the 105 in the group, 25 of them were foreign born, and will have an opportunity to visit their homeland during the tour. Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Pierre Monteux, the guest conductor, were born in France.

Fashion Note

A look around town at the store windows displaying clothing indicates that the predominating color this fall will be brown in various shades. Last year's charcoal, untastefully [illegible]

A Salute to Clarence

A well known Newburyporter reached another milestone Wednesday. We refer to Clarence Davis.

Clarence is a young 83 and we emphasize the "young." There are few men half or a third his age who are such willing workers, who work so hard or well, or are so willing to give full value for their pay.

Clarence, who does the janitorial work here in the Daily News, leases land where he operates parking lots, he does gardening work at several properties and owns a sidewalk and driveway snow plowing service.

He has a young outlook on life, with progressive ideas. Strongly independent, Clarence insists he doesn't want any government handouts or care of any kind. He has true Yankee independence.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
Circ. D. 150,452 - S. 299,263

SEP 2 1956

In the Realm of Music

European Tour to Take Boston Musicians 'Home'

By KENNETH GILL

ON TOUR—Twenty-five members of the 105-man Boston Symphony Orchestra will be revisiting their homelands during the orchestra's current 5½-week tour of Europe.

By far the largest group of returning natives will be the 16 French-born members of the orchestra, who are looking forward to the concerts in Paris on Sept. 19 and 20, and in the Cathedral of Chartres on Sept. 21.

Included in this group are four violinists: Emil Kornsand (born in Colmar), Norbert Lauga (Aix-les-Bains), Pierre Mayer (Paris) and Roger Shermont (Paris). Albert Yves Bernard (Seine) and Jean Cauhape (Toulouse) are French-born violists. Leon Marjollet (Chalons-sur-Marne) and Alfred Zighera (Paris) are native French cellists.

The bass section includes Georges Moleux, principal bass (Boulogne-sur-Mer), Gaston Dufresne (Lille) and Henri Girard (Montlhery).

Other French-born Boston Symphony players are Jean Devergie (Marseille), oboe; Louis Speyer (Paris), English horn; Roger Voisin (Angers), principal trumpet; Marcel Lafosse (Marly-le-Roi), trumpet; and Bernard Zighera (Paris), harp.

TO CONDUCT IN PARIS—Both Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Pierre Monteux, the guest conductor, are French-born, Dr. Munch in Strasbourg and Mr. Monteux in Paris. Each will conduct a concert in Paris, and Dr. Munch also will conduct in the Cathedral of Chartres.

Three Russian-born violinists have been polishing up their Russian for the orchestra's four concerts in Leningrad on Sept. 6 and 7, and Moscow on Sept. 8. They are Victor Manusevitch (born in Alexandrovsk), Vladimir Resnikoff (Novgorod), and Manuel Zung (Grodno).

Two cellists, Louis Berger (born in Prague) and Josef Zimbler (Pilsen), have been briefing their colleagues about the best restaurants and hotels in Prague, where the orchestra will play on Sept. 11.

The concert in Vienna on Sept. 12 will find Irving Frankel (born in Lemberg), bass, and Ernst Panenka (Vienna), bassoon, acting as guides for the other men as they go sight-seeing in this famous musical capital.

HONORS—Symphony of the Air includes Josef Krips as one of its guest conductors for the winter season. Ralph Black, former Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra Manager and now Manager of the National Symphony of Washington, has been elected first vice president of the American Symphony Orchestra League for the coming year.

CHOIR REHEARSALS — The Senior Choir & Polyphonic Chorale of St. Mary of Sorrows Church resumes rehearsals on Wednesday. Applicants for either choir or chorale should contact the director, Robert Schulz, or come directly to rehearsal at 7:30 p.m.

REOPENING—The Community Music School will reopen on Tuesday for registration of students. Lessons resume on Monday, Sept. 10.

PARK CONCERT — Carroll C. Geiger will conduct the 20th Century Symphony Band in a concert tomorrow at Sheridan Park. The concert is a joint sponsorship of the Township of Tonawanda Parks and Recreation Division and the Buffalo Musicians Assn., through a grant from the Music Performance Trust Fund of the Recording Industry.

C. C. Geiger

The band will play works by Bizet, Lavalle, King and Grofe. Assisting artists in the concert are Franklin Dow, trumpeter; the "K" Trio of Betty Gibson; Nancy Reid and Gayel Panke, and Raymond Fiutak, clarinetist.

ON EDUCATION — Michael Aaron, author, lecturer and well-known piano teacher circles, will hold a clinic at Denton, Cottier & Daniels, 32 Court St., on Wednesday, Sept. 12, morning and afternoon. Currently on a nation wide tour, Aaron will lecture on the latest trend in piano teaching and basic principles of piano technique.

Michael Aaron

ON VACATION — With this edition, "In the Realm of Music" departs for three weeks of vacation. It will be a pleasure to return on Sunday, Sept. 30.

[22]

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

JUL 7 1956

The Symphony Abroad

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra ought to be able to do the United States a lot of good during its visit to Soviet Russia.

On its last trip to Europe, the famous musical organization was acclaimed in a dozen capitals—in fact, everywhere it played.

It would be surprising if the people of Leningrad and Moscow did not display the same enthusiasm.

There is magic in music, and power beyond comprehension. It speaks to every mind and heart. It vaults the barriers of politics, suspicion and bitterness. It is fundamental, elemental and everlasting.

We're betting on our Symphony to be a truly forceful ambassador of good will behind the Iron Curtain.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

JUL 14 1956

Let Visiting Orchestra or Local Band Prolong Esplanade Concert Season

To the Editor—It is truly a pity that after only two short weeks our beautiful esplanade concerts should come to an end, because the Boston Symphony Orchestra is going on a tour of Europe.

Why isn't it possible to have a visiting orchestra or local band perform for the rest of the Summer, so that more people can have the pleasure of enjoying the cool breezes from the Charles River during the hot Summer nights and at the same time listen to beautiful music emanating from the Hatch Memorial Shell?

To quote from Longfellow:

And the night shall be filled with music,
And the cares, that infest the day,
Shall fold their tents, like the Arabs,
And as silently steal away.

I know that I speak for countless other people in the Boston area, who would enjoy continued Summer concerts, even though they aren't of the same caliber as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

JOEL C. GLASER.

Brookline.

AKRON, OHIO
BEACON JOURNAL
Circ. D. 154,840 - S. 161,172
AUG 19 1956

Music Notes

By OSCAR SMITH

This will be the next to the last week of the "pops" season in Cleveland Public Auditorium and musical comedy and classical programs are scheduled for Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Works of Victor Herbert, Sigmund Romberg and Kurt Weill will be grouped in one program of musical comedy and light opera for the Wednesday evening concert.

Vocal soloists include Saramae Endich, soprano; Norman Atkins, baritone and Robert Nagy, tenor.

Miss Endich and Atkins are well known to "pops" audiences. Nagy, making his "pops" debut, was judged the best male singer of the 1955 Chicagoland Music Festival.

He has appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show. This Spring he was a winner of the Cleveland Metropolitan Opera auditions and of a $2,000 scholarship in the New York Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air.

Another Wednesday night soloist will be Ernst Silberstein, solo 'cellist of the Cleveland Orchestra, who will be heard with the Cleveland Summer Orchestra conducted by Louis Lane in Herbert's Concerto for Violoncello No. 2 in E Minor.

The "Pops" Chorus will sing at the midweek concert.

★

A TCHAIKOVSKY night is planned for Saturday.

Vera Franceschi, young American pianist, will make her Cleveland debut in a first Cleveland performance of Tchaikovsky's Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra.

Anshel Brusilow, assistant concertmaster of the orchestra, also will take part in this program, playing Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto in D Major.

The orchestra will play Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin," "Italian Caprice," "March Miniature" and the finale from the Fifth Symphony.

★

A SYMPHONIC work by a contemporary American composer will be on each of the 27 concerts the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform in 19 cities during its August-September tour of 13 European countries.

Comedy, Light Opera Scheduled For 'Pops'

Nine United States composers will be represented in the European tour repertory.

The orchestra's European tour, the longest it has ever made, is in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the U. S. State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

U. S. compositions have been included on each program in order to demonstrate America's stature in the field of music.

★

CHARLES MUNCH, the Boston Symphony's music director for the last seven years, will include on his programs abroad four American works commissioned for the orchestra to commemorate its current, 75th anniversary season.

Commissioned works include "Fantaisies Symphoniques," by Bohuslav Martinu, which won the New York Music Critics' Circle award for the best new orchestral work played in that city in 1955.

Others are Symphony No. 6 by Walter Piston; Elegy in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, former Boston Symphony conductor, by Howard Hanson, and "Symphonic Ode" by Aaron Copland.

Also to be played on the tour are works of Bela Bartok, Leroy Anderson, Samuel Barber, Paul Creston and Isadore Freed.

★

OF THE CLASSICS in the Boston Symphony's repertory for Europe, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony will receive eight performances; Ravel's "Daphnis and Chole," Suite No. 2, seven, and the Second Symphony of Brahams, six.

Bach, Haydn, Schumann, Franck, Debussy, Richard Strauss, Rossini, Honegger, Dukas and Enesco are among other composers with works on the programs.

Cities to be visited by the Bostonians include Edinburgh, Oslo, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, London, Dublin, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich and Paris. The first concert is to be in Cork, Ireland.

Americans and Russians

Independent
Circ. 111,[illegible]

JUL 1 - 19[illegible]

Editorial Comment

Lenox and Lenin

Although the big pa[illegible] Tanglewood known as [illegible] Shed was dedicated in [illegible] year's festival marks [illegible] time that the grounds [illegible] mer Brooks Estate [illegible] been open as the summ[illegible] mecca in the Berkshires [illegible] the first concerts there [illegible] in a big pumpkin-colo[illegible] same one that had be[illegible] year before at the [illegible] tate, Holmwood.

It was not until the [illegible] 1936 that the Berks[illegible] Center came into being [illegible] Theatre-concert Hall [illegible] in 1941. Since then [illegible] the war years when [illegible] pleasure driving ma[illegible] hard to find the fuel [illegible] her music programs. [illegible] has not much to ad[illegible] all beginning this week [illegible] the Berkshires can [illegible] choral works and [illegible] activities as are [illegible] by the Boston Sym[illegible] with numerous [illegible] soloists.

What all is said on [illegible] this great orchestra [illegible] the keystone of the [illegible] world culture. [illegible] Society is now in its [illegible] concert season, and there is [illegible] musical renaissance [illegible] year is but a prelude and [illegible] world-wide impact [illegible] Charles Munch and [illegible] conductors, it will be [illegible] the compositions of [illegible] composers, and it will [illegible] there.

There, at least as [illegible] for a tour of America [illegible] become the first American [illegible] to perform in Russia [illegible] having to apply [illegible] invitation to play [illegible] there. [illegible] anticipated tour [illegible] in the [illegible] to [illegible] Symphony in its [illegible] New England [illegible] our [illegible] numbers [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

AUG 14 1956

Farewell and Good Luck

WE'RE PLEASED to bid a hearty "bon voyage" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is departing for a concert tour of Europe.

This musical organization, certainly one of the very best in the world, should prove a most effective ambassador of good will.

There is little doubt about its being enthusiastically received in Ireland, Scotland, Sweden, Germany, Austria and England.

It will be a great relief to thousands in these countries to find that Americans are not wholly dedicated to rock 'n' roll and similar perversions of traditional music.

It is an equally safe bet that the orchestra will enjoy comparable hospitality in Soviet Russia, where it is scheduled for four performances.

Two generations of oppression have not obliterated the Russian people's in-born love of music and hearing it again should inspire and enliven them.

This Symphony Orchestra trip is eminently worth while—so much so that it should be repeated annually.

[23]

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

JUL 7 1956

The Symphony Abroad

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra ought to be able to do the United States a lot of good during its visit to Soviet Russia.

On its last trip to Europe, the famous musical organization was acclaimed in a dozen capitals—in fact, everywhere it played.

It would be surprising if the people of Leningrad and Moscow did not display the same enthusiasm.

There is magic in music, and power beyond comprehension. It speaks to every mind and heart. It vaults the barriers of politics, suspicion and bitterness. It is fundamental, elemental and everlasting.

We're betting on our Symphony to be a truly forceful ambassador of good will behind the Iron Curtain.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

JUL 14 1956

Let Visiting Orchestra or Local Band Prolong Esplanade Concert Season

To the Editor—It is truly a pity that after only two short weeks our beautiful esplanade concerts should come to an end, because the Boston Symphony Orchestra is going on a tour of Europe.

Why isn't it possible to have a visiting orchestra or local band perform for the rest of the Summer, so that more people can have the pleasure of enjoying the cool breezes from the Charles River during the hot Summer nights and at the same time listen to beautiful music emanating from the Hatch Memorial Shell?

To quote from Longfellow:

And the night shall be filled with music,
And the cares, that infest the
day,
Shall fold their tents, like the Arabs,
And as silently steal away.

I know that I speak for countless other people in the Boston area, who would enjoy continued Summer concerts, even though they aren't of the same caliber as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

JOEL C. GLASER.

Brookline.

AKRON, OHIO
BEACON JOURNAL
Circ. D. 154,840 - S. 161,172

AUG 19 1956

Music Notes

By OSCAR SMITH

This will be the next to the last week of the "pops" season in Cleveland Public Auditorium and musical, comedy and classical programs are scheduled for Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Works of Victor Herbert, Sigmund Romberg and Kurt Weill will be grouped in one program of musical comedy and light opera for the Wednesday evening concert.

Vocal soloists include Saramae Endich, soprano; Norman Atkins, baritone and Robert Nagy, tenor.

Miss Endich and Atkins are well known to "pops" audiences. Nagy, making his "pops" debut, was judged the best male singer of the 1955 Chicagoland Music Festival.

He has appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show. This Spring he was a winner of the Cleveland Metropolitan Opera auditions and of a $2,000 scholarship in the New York Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air.

Another Wednesday night soloist will be Ernst Silberstein, solo 'cellist of the Cleveland Orchestra, who will be heard with the Cleveland Summer Orchestra conducted by Louis Lane in Herbert's Concerto for Violoncello No. 2 in E Minor.

The "Pops" Chorus will sing at the midweek concert.

★

A TCHAIKOVSKY night is planned for Saturday.

Vera Franceschi, young American pianist, will make her Cleveland debut in a first Cleveland performance of Tchaikovsky's Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra.

Anshel Brusilow, assistant concertmaster of the orchestra, also will take part in this program, playing Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto in D Major.

The orchestra will play Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin," "Italian Caprice," "March Miniature" and the finale from the Fifth Symphony.

★

A SYMPHONIC work by a contemporary American composer will be on each of the 27 concerts the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform in 19 cities during its August-September tour of 13 European countries.

Comedy, Light Opera Scheduled For 'Pops'

Nine United States composers will be represented in the European tour repertory.

The orchestra's European tour, the longest it has ever made, is in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theater and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the U. S. State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

U. S. compositions have been included on each program in order to demonstrate America's stature in the field of music.

★

CHARLES MUNCH, the Boston Symphony's music director for the last seven years, will include on his programs abroad four American works commissioned for the orchestra to commemorate its current, 75th anniversary season.

Commissioned works include "Fantaisies Symphoniques," by Bohuslav Martinu, which won the New York Music Critics' Circle award for the best new orchestral work played in that city in 1955.

Others are Symphony No. 6 by Walter Piston; Elegy in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, former Boston Symphony conductor, by Howard Hanson, and "Symphonic Ode" by Aaron Copland.

Also to be played on the tour are works of Bela Bartok, Leroy Anderson, Samuel Barber, Paul Creston and Isadore Freed.

★

OF THE CLASSICS in the Boston Symphony's repertory for Europe, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony will receive eight performances; Ravel's "Daphnis and Chole," Suite No. 2, seven, and the Second Symphony of Brahams, six.

Bach, Haydn, Schumann, Franck, Debussy, Richard Strauss, Rossini, Honegger, Dukas and Enesco are among other composers with works on the programs.

Cities to be visited by the Bostonians include Edinburgh, Oslo, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, London, Dublin, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich and Paris. The first concert is to be in Cork, Ireland.

Comment

Americans and Russians

(George Kennan, writing in the New Republic. Mr. Kennan was the U.S. ambassador to Russia in 1952, climaxing long tenure in the State Department where he was considered one of America's foremost Russian experts.)

No one is more pleased and encouraged than I am about the changes that have recently occurred in Russia. They have unquestionably helped to reduce world tension. They represent, I think, the beginning of that mellowing process which overtakes sooner or later all military movements and which has been the source of hope for many of us who refused, in the darker moments, to take a despairing view of the Soviet problem. These changes point the way to a lifting, in considerable degree, of the Iron Curtain, to the restoration of a more normal and hopeful relationship of the Russian people to their world environment, and to us in particular. I think all this has important and even, in some respects, exciting possibilities. But we should not exaggerate them. We would be ill advised to ignore the very real differences of historical experience and tradition and outlook that still divide us from the Russian people and would continue to divide us even under the most liberal conceivable Russian regime. We Americans have a tendency to hazy and exalted dreams of intimacy with other peoples; and the farther away those people are from us both in physical distance and in historical tradition the more we like to picture ourselves as associated with them in some sort of rosy nirvana of intimacy and comradeship. This has applied particularly, over the past hundred years, to our feelings about the Russians and Chinese.

I sometimes wonder whether these dreams of intimacy with what we regard as the humble and oppressed peoples of the earth do not represent a form of rebellion against the older European peoples who were, in a sense, the parents of this country. Perhaps we Americans, having once been the child of older nations, have a subconscious yearning, now, to play the father to someone else, in order to prove to ourselves the reality of our maturity and the finality of our liberation from the apron strings of old Europe. However this may be, our dreams of possible association with the Russian and Chinese peoples have been unrealistic and a little silly: unjust to those peoples because we attributed to them by implication a helplessness and weakness and dependence that really did not exist.

Great damage can be done in international life, as in personal life, by the attempt to push intimacy beyond the point warranted by the real prerequisites of taste and outlook and experience. There are ways of looking at things and reacting to things about the Russian people which will always be strange to Americans and will always tend to arouse our resentment if we become too closely involved in their affairs. The same is no less true conversely. If, on the other hand, we keep our distance and concede to them the privilege of their privacy and their differentness, as we would like to have it conceded to us, being prepared to reserve judgment on that which we cannot understand and which need not concern us, I can see no reason why a satisfactory and hopeful relationship should not be established between the United States and Russia, even though the respective social systems and political philosophies remain theoretically in conflict.

But then we must both take care to be modest in the demands we place on each other. If we can move in this direction, I am of good heart about the possibilities for the remote future in our relations with Russia.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 111,372

JUL 1 - 1956

Editorial Comment

Lenox and Leningrad

Although the big pavilion at Tanglewood known as the Music Shed was dedicated in 1936, this year's festival marks the 20th time that the grounds of the former Brooks-Tappan estate have been open as the summer music mecca in the Berkshires. In 1937 the first concerts there were held in a big pumpkin-colored tent, the same one that had been used the year before at the Emerson estate, Holmwood.

It was not until the summer of 1940 that the Berkshire Music Center came into being, with the Theater-Concert Hall being built in 1941. Since then, except for the war years when the ban on pleasure driving made it necessary to limit the festival to chamber music programs, Tanglewood has continued to expand. As usual, beginning this week, there will be Bach-Mozart concerts, operas, choral works, and various student activities, as well as performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with numerous outstanding soloists.

When all is said and done, it is this great orchestra that forms the keystone of the whole Tanglewood edifice. The Boston Symphony is now in its 75th anniversary season, and there is no finer musical ensemble. Through the years it has attained and maintained rank among the three or four best anywhere. For the next few weeks at Lenox, under Charles Munch and several guest conductors, it will be heard again in the compositions of the old masters, and of some more modern.

Then, as soon as Tanglewood closes, the orchestra is to leave for its tour of Europe, and will become the first American symphony to perform in Soviet Russia, having recently accepted a formal invitation to spend six days there. Concerts are planned in Moscow and Leningrad, where this [illegible] visit will be a long-anticipated treat. Relatively few in the Russian audiences are likely ever to hear the Boston Symphony in its native heath, like for[illegible] New Englanders, but in th[illegible] our music[illegible] will f[illegible] as ambass[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628

AUG 14 1956

Farewell and Good Luck

WE'RE PLEASED to bid a hearty "bon voyage" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is departing for a concert tour of Europe.

This musical organization, certainly one of the very best in the world, should prove a most effective ambassador of good will.

There is little doubt about its being enthusiastically received in Ireland, Scotland, Sweden, Germany, Austria and England.

It will be a great relief to thousands in these countries to find that Americans are not wholly dedicated to rock 'n' roll and similar perversions of traditional music.

It is an equally safe bet that the orchestra will enjoy comparable hospitality in Soviet Russia, where it is scheduled for four performances.

Two generations of oppression have not obliterated the Russian people's in-born love of music and hearing it again should inspire and enliven them.

This Symphony Orchestra trip is eminently worth while—so much so that it should be repeated annually.

Record (m)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 16,196

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra Sails

BOSTON, Aug. 12, (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in city hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad, and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for August 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,928

AUG 13 1956

Festival Over, Orchestra Ready For Europe

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's internationally famous Berkshire Festival concluded its 1956 season yesterday afternoon with a concert conducted by Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, in the great Music Shed at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts. An overflow audience heard the concert which was devoted to two monuments in the symphonic and operatic repertoires: Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the opening and final scenes from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." Assisting in the Wagner work were the Festival Chorus of the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its concerts of the Berkshire Festival, and the following vocal soloists: James Pease, bass, as Hans Sachs; Albert Da Costa, tenor, as Walther von Stolzing; Marguerite Willauer, soprano, as Eva; Rosalind Hupp, soprano, as Magdalene; Robert Nagy, tenor, as David, and John McCurdy, bass, as Pogner.

The Festival concluded, the next item of business on the Boston Symphony Orchestra's agenda is its five-week tour of 13 European countries, which will begin in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 24, and which will be highlighted by five appearances at the Edinburgh Festival from August 26-30 and four concerts within the Soviet Union between Sept. 5 and 10. Tomorrow afternoon a KLM Royal Dutch Airlines chartered Super-Constellation will transport 79 persons from Logan Airport, Boston, to Shannon Airport, Ireland. Some 40 persons will sail also tomorrow (Aug. 14), along with the orchestra's 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage, aboard the Nieuw Amsterdam of the Holland-American line from Boston to Cobh, Ireland. A 59-passenger KLM Constellation will bring the rearguard of the orchestra to Ireland on August 22. Included in the total part will be a staff of 10, some wives of orchestra members, and newspaper critics.

Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 13,468

AUG 13 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY SET FOR EUROPE TOUR

BOSTON, Aug. 12—(AP) The Boston Symphony orchestra prepared tonight to embark on a six-week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad, and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's home port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Sentinel (m)
WATERVILLE, Me.
Independent
Circ. 17,611

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Starts 6-Week European Tour

BOSTON, Aug. 12—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City Hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 216,173

AUG 12 1956

Bon Voyage, B.S.O.

Today at Tanglewood the Boston Symphony Orchestra concludes its regular summer season. On Tuesday, most of the members will leave Boston, by boat and plane, for Ireland. The rest of the musicians will catch up with them next week, to begin an extensive and unusual European tour.

On Friday, Aug. 24, they will give their first concert at Cork, Ireland. Dublin will hear our musicians the next day. From Aug. 26-30, their music will please and stir lucky listeners at the Edinburgh Festival.

Before they get back here late in September for the regular fall and winter season, the 102 Bostonians who make up this greatest of orchestras will have played in 13 countries, including Soviet Russia—which invited them somewhat reluctantly.

On both the artistic and the human level, these 100 men and two women are ambassadors of good will for Boston and for the nation. We wish them a happy and successful tour.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 56,950

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Prepares for European Tour

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night prepared to embark on a six week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, today will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in city hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad, and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for August 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Prepares To Embark On European Tour

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six week Eurporean tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City Hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad, and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Herald (m)
RUTLAND, Vt.
Independent
Circ. 20,790

AUG 13 1956

Orchestra Set For European, Russian Tour

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six-week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City Hall. Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for August 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Free Press (m)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Independent Republican
Circ. 29,537

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leaving On Europe Tour

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City Hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port." to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 8,809

AUG 13 1956

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 130,826

AUG 12 1956

Boston Symphony Leaves Soon For Tour Of Europe

Leaving in a short time for a history-making tour of Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a longtime favorite with Hartford music-lovers, will open its series abroad with a concert Aug. 24 in Cork, Ireland. A concert will be played in Dublin the following day, according to a detailed description of the forthcoming tour sent to Managing Director William H. Mortensen of the Bushnell Memorial by the Boston manager.

The Boston Symphony has played 40 concerts on the Bushnell stage since the first one in 1930, and will return during the coming season as one of the major orchestras in the 1956-1957 Bushnell Symphony Series.

After its Ireland concerts, the 106-piece ensemble with Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux sharing conducting duties, will play in the following cities: Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Munich, Vienna, Stuttgart, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London. The tour is historical in the fact that its concerts in Russia will be the first performed by an American symphony orchestra behind the Iron Curtain. The return trip to this country will be made late in September and the Bostonians will open their 76th home season October 5.

In addition to the Boston, the following other orchestras will make up the Bushnell Symphony Series, for which applications are now being accepted: New York Philharmonic - Symphony with Dimitri Mitropoulos; Cleveland with George Szell; Minneapolis Symphony with Antal Dorati; Philadelphia with Eugene Ormandy.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 20,613

AUG 13 1956

PREPARE TO EMBARK

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow. City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City Hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad, and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

World News Briefs

By UNITED PRESS

BOSTON—Fourteen prospective jurors were eliminated today as a trial of eight Brink's robbery defendants ground into its second week with a still-empty jury box.

* * *

CHICAGO—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt said Sunday that Adlai E. Stevenson is "better qualified" to take over the presidency than former President Harry S. Truman was when her husband died.

* * *

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State John Foster Dulles will go to the 22-nation London conference on the Suez crisis Thursday with solid bi-partisan support, administration sources said today.

* * *

CHICAGO—Supporters of Adlai E. Stevenson claimed today they were holding their own in the fight to keep the lion's share of New England's 104 votes for the Democratic presidential nomination.

* * *

LONDON—British has begun to pull its troops and equipment out of West Germany to replenish strategic reserves during the Suez Canal crisis, a German government spokesman announced today in Bonn.

* * *

BOSTON—Official "bon voyage" ceremonies were scheduled today for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which starts its second European tour this month.

* * *

NEW BEDFORD—House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr., (R) Mass said Sunday the United States intends "to see that the Suez Canal is for the use of all nations."

* * *

DALLAS, Tex.—Vice President Richard M. Nixon said today "we are sure to win" the struggle between Democracy and Communism and achieve peace.

[24]

Tribune (e)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 35,376

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Europe-Bound

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City Hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad, and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for August 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Sun (m)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Independent
Circ. 31,208

AUG 13 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY LEAVES FOR EUROPE

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (P)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City Hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for August 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 12,986

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Bound for Europe

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City Hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of an illustrated book "Boston, America's Home Port." to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for August 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,048

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Europe-Bound

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra tonight prepared to embark on a six week European tour during which it will entertain in 19 cities, including Moscow.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston, tomorrow will fete orchestra officials at ceremonies in City Hall.

Orchestra officials will be presented an ebony baton encrusted in gold, the official city flag, to be displayed at all concerts abroad, and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail on Tuesday. The remainder will fly. The first concert is scheduled for August 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 264,020

AUG 13 1956

Boston Orchestra Off Tomorrow on Six-Week Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is leaving tomorrow on a six-week concert tour of Europe, during which it will perform in 19 cities, including five performances behind the iron curtain.

Orchestra officials today will be presented with an ebony baton and the official city flag, to be flown at all concerts abroad, by City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, acting mayor of Boston.

Most of the orchestra's 104 members will fly from Logan Airport, but 40 people will sail from Boston to care for the eight tons of baggage and equipment.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973

AUG 13 1956

Symphony Bid Bon Voyage At City Hall

The City of Boston today bids an official "Bon Voyage" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the famed musical group prepares to leave tomorrow on a series of concerts abroad, including the first appearance of an American orchestra in Soviet Russia since before World War II.

City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, Jr., acting for Mayor Hynes at City Hall ceremonies at 3 p. m., presents a municipal flag to the orchestra to be flown at all the concerts, in addition to an ebony baton encrusted with gold to the present conductor Pierre Monteux. He conducted the orchestra from 1919 to 1924 and will assist the regular conductor Charles Munch, now in Paris.

Monteux and Henry R. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, will accompany about half the members of the band and their wives when they leave Boston tomorrow at 11 abroad the Netherlands liner Nieuw Amsterdam. The first concert will be in Cork, Ireland.

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Honored by City

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 25,623

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Honored Before European Tour

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 11,628

AUG 13 1956

HUB HONORS ORCHESTRA

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,035

AUG 13 1956

Hub Symphony Given Sendoff

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Item (e)
CLINTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,274

AUG 13 1956

ORCHESTRA OFF ON TOUR

BOSTON (INS) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the world's great musical organizations was given its official sendoff today at city hall for a European tour, including Russia.

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 42,005

AUG 13 1956

ORCHESTRA FAREWELL

BOSTON. — (UP) — Official "bon voyage" ceremonies were scheduled today for the Bostn Symphony orchestra, which starts its second European tour this month. Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack, Jr., presented Asst. Conductor Pierre Monteux with an ebony baton encrusted with gold and the city flag for display at concerts, including engagements in Russia.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

AUG 13 1956

CITY HALL IN SENDOFF FOR SYMPHONY TODAY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given its official sendoff on its European tour by the City of Boston in special ceremonies in City Hall at 3 p. m. today.

Acting for Mayor Hynes, City Councilman Edward J. McCormack, Jr., will present conductor Pierre Monteux an ebony baton encrusted with gold for use abroad. Monteux, conductor of the orchestra from 1919 to 1924 will assist conductor Charles Munch, now resting in Paris, during concerts on the tour.

McCormack will also present Monteux the city flag for display at each concert and copies for each orchestra member of the book, "Boston, America's Home Port," illustrated by Herald artist Jack Frost.

Led by Monteux and Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, 45 members of the band and their wives will leave the city from Commonwealth Pier aboard the Netherlands' ilner Nieuw Amsterdam at 11 a.m. Tuesday.

With them will go 16,000 pounds of instruments and baggage.

The remainder of the orchestra, 59 members, will leave from Boston Airport aboard a KLM Super-Constellation Wednesday at 4 p.m.

Appropriately enough, for a Boston orchestra, the first concert will be held in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23 in the Savoy Theater. On the program will be the Irish Suite by Leroy Anderson.

The tour will take the orchestra through most of Europe and into the Soviet Union, the first American orchestra to perform in Russia since before World War II.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony To Tour Europe

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the City of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the city hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

AUG 13 1956

Symphony Gets Official Sendoff Today From City

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will depart by ship and plane this week for a European tour that includes a visit to the Soviet Union.

It will be the first American symphony orchestra to visit Russia since before World War II.

Today the City of Boston is giving the orchestra an official sendoff at City Hall.

City Councilman Edward J. McCormack Jr. will present associate conductor Pierre Montenx an ebony baton encrusted with gold. Conductor Charles Munch will join the orchestra abroad.

A city flag, to be displayed at each concert, also is being presented to the symphony.

At 11 a.m. tomorrow 45 members of the orchestra and their wives will sail from Commonwealth Pier on the liner Nieuw Amsterdam.

They will take along 16,000 pounds of instruments and baggage.

The other 59 members of the orchestra will leave by plane from Boston Airport at 4 p.m. Wednesday.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

AUG 13 1956

City of Boston Honors Orchestra

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

[25]

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 21,915

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Honored By City

BOSTON — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the City of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

News (e)
ATHOL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 4,556

AUG 13 1956

Boston Honors Departing Orchestra

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 6,892

AUG 13 1956

SYMPHONY GETS SEND-OFF

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the world's great musical organizations, was given its official send-off today at City hall for an European tour, including Russia.

Boston Herald Aug 13 '56

CITY HALL IN SENDOFF FOR SYMPHONY TODAY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given its official sendoff on its European tour by the City of Boston in special ceremonies in City Hall at 3 p. m. today.

Acting for Mayor Hynes, City Councilman Edward J. McCormack, Jr., will present conductor Pierre Monteux an ebony baton encrusted with gold for use abroad. Monteux, conductor of the orchestra from 1919 to 1924 will assist conductor Charles Munch, now resting in Paris, during concerts on the tour.

McCormack will also present Monteux the city flag for display at each concert and copies for each orchestra member of the book, "Boston, America's Home Port," illustrated by Herald artist Jack Frost.

Led by Monteux and Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, 45 members of the band and their wives will leave the city from Commonwealth Pier aboard the Netherlands' ilner Nieuw Amsterdam at 11 a.m. Tuesday.

With them will go 16,000 pounds of instruments and baggage.

The remainder of the orchestra, 59 members, will leave from Boston Airport aboard a KLM Super-Constellation Wednesday at 4 p.m.

Appropriately enough, for a Boston orchestra, the first concert will be held in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23 in the Savoy Theater. On the program will be the Irish Suite by Leroy Anderson.

The tour will take the orchestra through most of Europe and into the Soviet Union, the first American orchestra to perform in Russia since before World War II.

Boston Daily Globe Aug 14 '56

(Globe Photo by Paul Connell)

EBONY AND GOLD BATON is presented to Pierre Monteux who will conduct some of the European performances of the Boston Symphony, by City Council Pres. Edward J. McCormack Jr. Looking on are Oliver Wolcott and Justice Raymond Wilkins, trustees of the orchestra.

Symphony Off to Europe; City Bids "Bon Voyage"

By CYRUS DURGIN

The City of Boston said an official goodbye to the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, and wished it well on its forthcoming tour of Europe.

The city was represented by Edward J. McCormack, president of the City Council and Acting Mayor while Mayor John B. Hynes attends the Democratic National Convention in Chicago. The orchestra was represented by Pierre Monteux, who will share the conducting during the tour, and by trustees Oliver Wolcott and Mass. Supreme Court Justice Raymond S. Wilkins. (Charles Munch, the Symphony's music director, is now in Paris, having flown there after the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.)

Acting Mayor McCormack presented to Mr. Monteux, for the orchestra, a silver-mounted baton of ebony, a Boston flag to be displayed at all the concerts in Europe, and copies of the book, "Boston, America's Home Port." A small engraved plate on the baton identifies it as a gift from Mayor Hynes to the Boston Symphony. Copies of the book, which was illustrated by Jack Frost, will be given to the mayor of each city visited and to Queen Elizabeth II of England, who is expected to be present when the orchestra plays at Festival Hall in London Sept. 24.

By Ship and by Air

The first contingent to leave will depart at 11 this morning aboard the Holland-American Line's Nieuw Amsterdam from Commonwealth Pier. On the ship will be Mr. and Mrs. Monteux; Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, and Mrs. Cabot; 45 members of the Symphony, and eight tons of instruments, scores and baggage.

At 6:15 tonight, a second group will take off from Logan Airport aboard a chartered K.L.M. Royal Dutch Airlines Super-Constellation. This party of 79, due to arrive at Shannon Airport, Ireland, at 10:30 tomorrow morning, will include manager Thomas D. Perry Jr.; Gail W. Rector, assistant manager, and others of a staff of 10; an official photographer and newspapermen, including the Globe's Cyrus Durgin.

The remainder of the orchestra, numbering 59, will leave Logan for Shannon at 4 Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 22.

Thursday, Aug. 23, all will be guests of Henry Laughlin, head of the Boston publishing firm of Houghton, Mifflin Co., at a buffet at his Summer home, Castle Hyde.

Open in Cork

The first concert will be Aug. 24 in the Savoy Theatre, Cork, Ireland. Charles Munch will conduct portions of the Irish Suite by Leroy Anderson; the Symphony No. 102, by Haydn; The Apprentice Sorcerer, by Dukas, and Brahms' Second Symphony. Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, Boston insurance man and former fire commissioner, will in an address, thank the people of Eire for their welcome. Mr. Kelleher's parents emigrated from Cork to the United States.

After Cork, the Symphony will go to Dublin, then to the Edinburgh, Scotland, Festival for five days, and to Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London. The Orchestra will return to Boston for the opening of the 76th season at Symphony Hall, Oct. 5.

The European tour is being made in cooperation with the International Exchange program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States Department of State to help American performing artists tour abroad. This tour will be the second in Europe for the Boston Symphony, and its longest there.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300

AUG 13 1956

Famed Boston Symphony Feted

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the City of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councillor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's home port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony To Get Send-Off

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (UP)—Official "bon voyage" ceremonies were scheduled today for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which starts its second European tour this month.

Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack Jr. will present assistant Conductor Pierre Monteux with an ebony baton encrusted with gold and the city flag for display at concerts, including engagements in Russia.

Monteaux, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, and 45 orchestra members will leave aboard the liner Nieuw Amsterdam from here tomorrow.

The remaining 59 members leave by plane from Logan Airport Wednesday.

The symphony's first concert is scheduled for Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland. The Russian visit will be the first by an American orchestra since before World War II.

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 19,039

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Europe-Bound

BOSTON (UP) — Official "bon voyage" ceremonies were scheduled today for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which starts its second European tour this month.

Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack Jr. will present Asst. Conductor Pierre Monteux with an ebony baton encrusted with gold and the city flag for display at concerts, including engagements in Russia.

* * * *

Monteaux, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, and 45 orchestra members will leave aboard the liner Nieuw Amsterdam from here Tuesday.

The remaining 59 members leave by plane from Logan Airport Wednesday.

The symphony's first concert is scheduled for Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland. The Russian vist will be the first by an American orchestra since before World War II.

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,640

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Wins Tribute From City

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,118

AUG 13 1956

Boston Orchestra Off For Europe

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

MUSIC TRADE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 1956

NAMM Pres. Attends Send-Off For Boston Symphony

The city of Boston recently gave an official send-off to the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its grandest of grand tours to Europe and the British Isles under the auspices of the Department of State. Among those present for the occasion were Paul Murphy, president of the National Association of Music Merchants and treasurer of Mr. Steinert & Sons; Edward J. McCormack, Jr., acting mayor of Boston; Oliver Walcott, trustee, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, Boston Symphony Orchestra; and Justice Raymond Wilkins, Massachusetts Supreme Court, and trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MUSIC TRADE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 1956

AT BOSTON SYMPHONY OFFICIAL SEND-OFF: (left to right) Paul Murphy, president, National Association of Music Merchants, and treasurer of M. Steinert & Sons; Acting Mayor of Boston Edward J. McCormack, Jr.; Oliver Walcott, trustee, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Justice Raymond Wilkins, Massachusetts Supreme Court, and trustee of Boston Symphony.

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 21,915

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Honored By City

BOSTON — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the City of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

News (e)
ATHOL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 4,556

AUG 13 1956

Boston Honors Departing Orchestra

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 6,892

AUG 13 1956

SYMPHONY GETS SEND-OFF

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the world's great musical organizations, was given its official send-off today at City hall for an European tour, including Russia.

Boston Herald Aug 13 '56

CITY HALL IN SENDOFF FOR SYMPHONY TODAY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given its official sendoff on its European tour by the City of Boston in special ceremonies in City Hall at 3 p. m. today.

Acting for Mayor Hynes, City Councilman Edward J. McCormack, Jr., will present conductor Pierre Monteux an ebony baton encrusted with gold for use abroad. Monteux, conductor of the orchestra from 1919 to 1924 will assist conductor Charles Munch, now resting in Paris, during concerts on the tour.

McCormack will also present Monteux the city flag for display at each concert and copies for each orchestra member of the book, "Boston, America's Home Port," illustrated by Herald artist Jack Frost.

Led by Monteux and Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, 45 members of the band and their wives will leave the city from Commonwealth Pier aboard the Netherlands' liner Nieuw Amsterdam at 11 a.m. Tuesday.

With them will go 16,000 pounds of instruments and baggage.

The remainder of the orchestra, 59 members, will leave from Boston Airport aboard a KLM Super-Constellation Wednesday at 4 p.m.

Appropriately enough, for a Boston orchestra, the first concert will be held in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23 in the Savoy Theater. On the program will be the Irish Suite by Leroy Anderson.

The tour will take the orchestra through most of Europe and into the Soviet Union, the first American orchestra to perform in Russia since before World War II.

Boston Daily Globe Aug 14 '56

(Globe Photo by Paul Connell)

EBONY AND GOLD BATON is presented to Pierre Monteux who will conduct some of the European performances of the Boston Symphony, by City Council Pres. Edward J. McCormack Jr. Looking on are Oliver Wolcott and Justice Raymond Wilkins, trustees of the orchestra.

Symphony Off to Europe; City Bids "Bon Voyage"

By CYRUS DURGIN

The City of Boston said an official goodbye to the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, and wished it well on its forthcoming tour of Europe.

The city was represented by Edward J. McCormack, president of the City Council and Acting Mayor while Mayor John B. Hynes attends the Democratic National Convention in Chicago. The orchestra was represented by Pierre Monteux, who will share the conducting during the tour, and by trustees Oliver Wolcott and Mass. Supreme Court Justice Raymond S. Wilkins. (Charles Munch, the Symphony's music director, is now in Paris having flown there after the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.)

Acting Mayor McCormack presented to Mr. Monteux, for the orchestra, a silver-mounted baton of ebony, a Boston flag to be displayed at all the concerts in Europe, and copies of the book, "Boston, America's Home Port." A small engraved plate on the baton identifies it as a gift from Mayor Hynes to the Boston Symphony. Copies of the book, which was illustrated by Jack Frost, will be given to the mayor of each city visited and to Queen Elizabeth II of England, who is expected to be present when the orchestra plays at Festival Hall in London Sept. 24.

By Ship and by Air

The first contingent to leave will depart at 11 this morning aboard the Holland-American Line's Nieuw Amsterdam from Commonwealth Pier. On the ship will be Mr. and Mrs. Monteux; Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, and Mrs. Cabot; 45 members of the Symphony, and eight tons of instruments, scores and baggage.

At 6:15 tonight, a second group will take off from Logan Airport aboard a chartered K.L.M. Royal Dutch Airlines Super-Constellation. This party of 79, due to arrive at Shannon Airport, Ireland, at 10:30 tomorrow morning, will include manager Thomas D. Perry Jr.; Gail W. Rector, assistant manager, and others of a staff of 10; an official photographer and newspapermen, including the Globe's Cyrus Durgin.

The remainder of the orchestra, numbering 59, will leave Logan for Shannon at 4 Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 22.

Thursday, Aug. 23, all will be guests of Henry Laughlin, head of the Boston publishing firm of Houghton, Mifflin Co., at a buffet at his Summer home, Castle Hyde.

Open in Cork

The first concert will be Aug. 24 in the Savoy Theatre, Cork, Ireland. Charles Munch will conduct portions of the Irish Suite by Leroy Anderson; the Symphony No. 102, by Haydn; The Apprentice Sorcerer, by Dukas, and Brahms' Second Symphony. Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, Boston insurance man and former fire commissioner, will in an address, thank the people of Eire for their welcome. Mr. Kelleher's parents emigrated from Cork to the United States.

After Cork, the Symphony will go to Dublin, then to the Edinburgh, Scotland, Festival for five days, and to Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London. The Orchestra will return to Boston for the opening of the 76th season at Symphony Hall, Oct. 5.

The European tour is being made in cooperation with the International Exchange program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States Department of State to help American performing artists tour abroad. This tour will be the second in Europe for the Boston Symphony, and its longest there.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,300

AUG 13 1956

Famed Boston Symphony Feted

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the City of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councillor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's home port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 19,039

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Europe-Bound

BOSTON (UP) — Official "bon voyage" ceremonies were scheduled today for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which starts its second European tour this month.

Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack Jr. will present Asst. Conductor Pierre Monteux with an ebony baton encrusted with gold and the city flag for display at concerts, including engagements in Russia.

* * * *

Monteaux, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, and 45 orchestra members will leave aboard the liner Nieuw Amsterdam from here Tuesday.

The remaining 59 members leave by plane from Logan Airport Wednesday.

The symphony's first concert is scheduled for Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland. The Russian vist will be the first by an American orchestra since before World War II.

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,259

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony To Get Send-Off

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (UP)—Official "bon voyage" ceremonies were scheduled today for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which starts its second European tour this month.

Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack Jr. will present assistant Conductor Pierre Monteux with an ebony baton encrusted with gold and the city flag for display at concerts, including engagements in Russia.

Monteaux, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, and 45 orchestra members will leave aboard the liner Nieuw Amsterdam from here tomorrow.

The remaining 59 members leave by plane from Logan Airport Wednesday.

The symphony's first concert is scheduled for Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland. The Russian visit will be the first by an American orchestra since before World War II.

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,640

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Wins Tribute From City

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,118

AUG 13 1956

Boston Orchestra Off For Europe

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

MUSIC TRADE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 1956

NAMM Pres. Attends Send-Off For Boston Symphony

The city of Boston recently gave an official send-off to the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its grandest of grand tours to Europe and the British Isles under the auspices of the Department of State. Among those present for the occasion were Paul Murphy, president of the National Association of Music Merchants and treasurer of Mr. Steinert & Sons; Edward J. McCormack, Jr., acting mayor of Boston; Oliver Walcott, trustee, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, Boston Symphony Orchestra; and Justice Raymond Wilkins, Massachusetts Supreme Court, and trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MUSIC TRADE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 1956

AT BOSTON SYMPHONY OFFICIAL SEND-OFF: (left to right) Paul Murphy, president, National Association of Music Merchants, and treasurer of M. Steinert & Sons; Acting Mayor of Boston Edward J. McCormack, Jr.; Oliver Walcott, trustee, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Justice Raymond Wilkins, Massachusetts Supreme Court, and trustee of Boston Symphony.

News (e)
SALEM, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 23,865

AUG 13 1956

Boston Honors Its Orchestra, Europe-Bound

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councillor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland.

MILLERTON, N. Y.
NEWS-REPUBLICAN
Circ. W. 3,617

AUG 16 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO COMMENCE EUROPEAN TOUR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which concluded its 1956 Berkshire Festival of 24 concerts during six weeks in July and August at Lenox, Massachusetts, Sunday, August 12, will commence its tour of Europe immediately, giving 27 concerts during five-and-one-half weeks on the Continent, the first two in Ireland on August 24 and 25. The Boston Symphony of 105 players with Charles Munch, its Music Director during the past seven years, conducting, will become the first American symphony orchestra to play in Eire when it gives a concert in Cork on Friday evening, August 24, and in Dublin on Saturday afternoon, August 25.

Because of the large Irish population of Boston, where the orchestra was founded in 1881, it is considered particularly appropriate that the symphony's tour should commence in the land from whence the families of so many of its native sons emigrated. The concerts in Ireland are the realization of a particular dream by Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra, who has arranged for their sponsorship. Vice President of Marsh and McClennan, Inc., a national firm of insurance brokers with offices at 140 Federal Street, Boston, Mr. Kelleher is active in Irish societies and church and fraternal organizations in Boston, and his parents came from Cork as immigrants to Boston. Mr. Kelleher will give an address to the Irish people preceding the Cork concert in the Savoy Theatre, paying tribute to the Irish-Americans and thanking the people of Eire for their welcome to one of the world's fine orchestras.

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,811

AUG 14 1956

ORCHESTRA DEPARTS

BOSTON, (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today for a six-week concert tour of Europe. Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, musical scores and baggage, will leave aboard the vessel Nieuw Amsterdam.

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 9,986

AUG 13 1956

Boston Symphony Leaves for Europe

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra today was honored by the city of Boston as the orchestra prepared to embark on a six-week European tour of 19 cities, including Moscow.

The program at the City Hall ceremonies with City Councilor Edward J. McCormack, the acting mayor, presiding, included the presentation of an ebony baton, the official city flag and copies of an illustrated book, "Boston, America's Home Port," to orchestra officials.

Spokesmen for the orchestra said the flag will be displayed at all concerts abroad and copies of the book would be given to foreign mayors.

Many of the orchestra's 104 members will sail tomorrow. Others will fly. The first concert is scheduled for Aug. 24 at Cork Ireland.

News (e)
ATHOL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 4,556

AUG 14 1956

Symphony Leaves Today For Europe

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today for a 6-weeks concert tour of Europe.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, musical scores and baggage, will leave aboard the vessel "Nieuw Amsterdam."

Later, a party of 79 will leave on a chartered plane. A final plane load with 59 passengers will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble on Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland, on the eve of its first concert.

The tour includes four concerts in Russia between Sept. 5 and 10.

The orchestra is scheduled to return to Boston in two groups from London by Oct. 1, less than a week before the opening of the Boston Symphony's 76th season in Symphony Hall.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 56,950

AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Leaves for Europe

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today by air and sea, for a six-weeks concert tour in 13 European countries.

The orchestra will give 27 performances during the tour, longest in its 75-year history. Seventeen concerts will be directed by Charles Munch, music director for the past seven years. The others will be under Pierre Monteux, conductor of the symphony for five years following World War I.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores baggage, leave Boston this morning on the "New Amsterdam" for the six-day trip to England.

Later a party of 79 will leave Logan Airport aboard a chartered plane. A final plane load, with 59 passengers, will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23, the eve of its first foreign concert.

Then, on succeeding nights, concerts are scheduled for Dublin, and Edinburgh, Scotland, hrough Aug. 30.

The orchestra will play in Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland before traveling to Russia for four concerts between Sept. 5 and 10.

Concerts in Czechoslovakia, Germany and France will be given before the orchestra returns to London for two final performances and the trip home.

Only five days in the orchestra's packed schedule of Travel, rehearsal and concerts have been designated as "rest" days.

And, when the group returns to Boston, there will be little more than a week off before the opening of the Symphony's 76th season at Symphony Hall.

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Non-Partisan
Circ. 42,005

AUG 14 1956

BOSTON. — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra departed today for a 6-week concert tour of Europe. Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, musical scores and baggage left aboard the vessel "Nieuw Amsterdam." Later, a party of 79 will leave on a chartered plane. A final plane load of 59 passengers will leave Aug. 22.

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 40,485

AUG 13 1956

Symphony To Play In Cork Aug. 23

Boston, Aug. 13—(UP)—Official "bon voyage" ceremonies were scheduled today for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which starts its second European tour this month.

Acting-Mayor Edward J. McCormack, Jr. will present Asst. Conductor Pierre Monteux with an ebony baton encrusted with gold and the city flag for display at concerts, including engagements in Russia.

Monteux, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, and 45 orchestra members will leave aboard the liner Nieuw Amsterdam from here tomorgw.

The remaining 59 members leave by plane from Logan Airport Wednesday.

The symphony's first concert is scheduled for Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland. The Russian visit will be the first by an American orchestra since before World War II.

Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,445

AUG 15 1956

18.

ORCHESTRA HEAD LEAVING FOR TOUR ON FOREIGN SOIL

Boston, Aug. 15—Conductor Pierre Monteux and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra have left for a six weeks' European tour, including a series of performances in Russia and behind the iron curtain.

Monteux, his wife, Symphony President Henry B. Cabot, and 45 orchestra musicians and their wives sailed on the Nieuw Amsterdam for Ireland. Two other contingents of the symphony were scheduled to leave by airliner tonight and Wednesday.

The orchestra, the first American symphony to play in Russia, will open its tour of 13 countries with a performance Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland. Four concerts will be given in Russia Sept. 5-10.

Chronicle (e)
NORTH ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,800

AUG 13 1956

OFF FOR EUROPE

BOSTON (INS) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the world's great musical organizations was given its official send-off today at City Hall for a European tour, including Russia.

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS-LEADER
Circ. D. 99,100

AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Begins Six-Week European Tour

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today for a 6-week concert tour of Europe.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, musical scores and baggage, will leave aboard the vessel "Nieuw Amsterdam."

Later, a party of 79 will leave on a chartered plane. A final plane load with 59 passengers will leave August 22.

The orchestra will assemble on August 23 in Cork, Ireland, on the eve of its first concert.

The tour includes four concerts in Russia between September 5 and 10.

The orchestra is scheduled to return to Boston in two groups from London by October 1, less than a week before the opening of the Boston Symphony's 76th season in Symphony Hall.

MILLBROOK, N. Y.
ROUND TABLE
Circ. W. 673

AUG 30 1956

Boston Symphony Begins Extended European Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which concluded its 1956 Berkshire Festival of 25 concerts during six weeks in July and August at Lenox, Massachusetts, on Sunday, August 12, will commence its tour of Europe immediately, giving 27 concerts during five-and-one-half weeks on the Continent, the first two in Ireland on August 24 and 25. The Boston Symphony of 105 players, with Charles Munch, its music director during the past seven years, conducting, will become the first American symphony orchestra to play in Eire when it gives a concert in Cork on Friday evening, August 24, and in Dublin on Saturday afternoon, August 25.

Following its afternoon concert in Dublin the Boston Symphony goes to Edinburgh, where it will perform five concerts, Sunday, August 26, through Thursday, August 30, in Usher Hall, appearing for the first time with the celebrated Edinburgh Festival, now in its tenth year. Pierre Monteux, the noted leader who was regular conductor of the Boston Symphony from 1919-1924 and who has since made frequent guest appearances with the orchestra in this country, in Europe, at Tanglewood and in recordings, will join his colleague Dr. Munch to conduct two of the Edinburgh concerts.

The orchestra will then travel to Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, into the U.S.S.R., to Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of Europe is to be made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

Sun (m)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Independent
Circ. 31,208

AUG 14 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY LEAVES FOR EUROPE

Cork, Ireland Hosts First Of 27 Concerts

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs tomorrow, by air and sea, for a six-weeks concert tour in 13 European countries.

The orchestra will give 27 performances during the tour, longest in its 75-year history. Seventeen concerts will be directed by Charles Munch, music director for the past seven years. The others will be under Pierre Monteux, conductor of the symphony for five years following World War I.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage, leave Boston tomorrow morning on the "Nieuw Amsterdam" for the six-day trip to England.

Later a party of 79 will leave Logan Airport aboard a chartered plane. A final plane load, with 59 pasengers, will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23, the eve of its first foreign concert.

Then, on succeeding nights, concerts are scheduled for Dublin, and Edinburgh, Scotland, through Aug. 30.

The orchestra will play in Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland before traveling to Russia for four concerts between Sept. 5 and 10.

Concerts in Czechoslovakia, Germany and France will be given before the orchestra returns to London for two final performances and the trip home.

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 49,758

AUG 14 1956

Hub Symphony Leaves Today On Foreign Tour

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs tomorrow, by air and sea, for a six-weeks concert tour in 13 European countries.

The orchestra will give 27 performances during the tour, longest in its 75-year history. Seventeen concerts will be directed by Charles Munch, music director for the past seven years. The others will be under Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Symphony for five years following World War I.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage, leave Boston tomorrow morning on the "Nieuw Amsterdam" for the six-day trip to England.

Later a party of 79 will leave Logan Airport aboard a chartered plane. A final plane load, with 59 passengers, will leave Aug. 22.

The rochestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23, the eve of its first foreign concert.

Then, on succeeding nights, concerts are scheduled for Dublin, and Edinburgh, Scotland, through Aug. 30.

The orchestra will play in Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland before travelnig to Russia for four concerts between Sept. 5 and 10.

Concerts in Czechoslovakia, Germany and France will be given before the orchestra returns to London for two final performances and the trip home.

When the guest in a medieval French chateau overstayed his welcome he was given a "cold shoulder" of beef or mutton — hence the phrase—"giving him the cold shoulder.

[27]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 216,173
AUG 12 1956 (Sun.)

To Visit 13 Countries

Boston Symphony Off For European Tour

Normally at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra take a well-deserved rest after the most strenuous concert schedule of any orchestra in the country. This year, instead of taking a vacation, the orchestra undertakes its second European tour, playing 27 concerts in 13 countries during its five-and-a-half-week jaunt.

Two features which set this tour apart are the appearance at the Edinburgh Festival and the five performances behind the Iron Curtain.

Moving such an organization over so much territory is a major problem in logistics. The final concert at Tanglewood is next Sunday afternoon; on Tuesday, Aug. 14, a K. L. M. Royal Dutch Airlines chartered Super-Constellation will transport 79 persons from Logan Airport to Shannon, Ireland. Simultaneously, some 40 persons will sail along with the orchestra's eight tons of instruments and scores and baggage, aboard the Nieuw Amsterdam, of the Holland-American Line, from Boston to Cobh, Ireland.

A 59-passenger K.L.M. Constellation will bring the rearguard of the orchestra to Ireland on Aug. 22. The earlier plane offers some members of the orchestra a week in Europe before the concert gets under way. Similarly, at the conclusion of the tour, one plane leaves a week later than the other, giving others a chance for sight-seeing before resuming the regular season.

As an example of the close timing which has been worked out by T. D. Perry, the manager of the B. S. O., this final plane gets into Boston on a Friday and the fall season commences the following Monday.

One Sunday afternoon, just before a Tanglewood performance, Mr. Perry was discussing the tour in some details with me. He looked like a very relieved young man. The previous week he had flown back from London after completing final arrangements.

"We engaged Ian Hunter to plan all the details. He knows all the local managers, the halls we play in, the currency problems, and the visa difficulties we might encounter. Since he retired from the stage and the movies, he has built up the largest management bureau in Europe. We are leaving details up to him," Mr. Perry happily confided.

"As of the moment we know nothing definite about the Russian arrangements except that we are going and the dates we are playing. The Ministry of Culture will take care of everything else. We have received no passports, no schedules, and no replies concerning programs we have submitted. We present ourselves at the Finnish border and say 'What'll we do now?'

"Mr. Munch has invited Gilels and Oistrakh to play a concerto with the orchestra but we have heard nothing so far. We have also submitted several programs we are prepared to play but no preference has been shown.

"However, I think that this is a magnificent opportunity not only for the Boston Symphony but Americans in general to show that we too have artistic organizations and a musical heritage of our own. Europeans often think of us as re-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
AUG 14 1956

TIME'S LITTLE IRONIES

The price of survival is nonconformity, for nonconformity is the soil of origination. If you are going to do something brand new, it follows that you cannot be like everybody else.

This interesting scientific-humanistic fact is being discovered by the United States Government. Now, at the expiry of its present season at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra goes on a tour of Europe, to be back in October. The government pays part of the freight, but our own orchestra is by no means the sole beneficiary of this enlightened beneficence; it is shared with other orchestras, theatrical companies and individual performers.

Armies are sent to inforce, diplomatists to negotiate and bargain; but when force has become too dangerous, and we want to make a favorable impression, want to prove that we are human beings after all, can do something besides grow wheat, invent mechanical gadgets and H-bombs; that we can produce men and women with genuine power of origination, whom do we call in? The artists.

* * *

Odd, isn't it? But not new. This has been going on, haltingly, for thousands of years. Nations are as mortal as men; our earth is strewn with their corpses, and, when they die, as die they must, the world does not care what they owned; all it cares is what they created. It was complained in ancient times that the Athenians spent in a single year more on their drama than on their navy. Who cares where their navy is now? Their drama after twenty-five centuries is still going strong. Probably the most indestructible achievement of the English-speaking peoples are the plays of an obscure Elizabethan poet, so obscure in his own lifetime that his very authorship is now in dispute. And what of it? We have "Shakespeare's plays," haven't we?

It is quite simple. The arts unite mankind; property divides us. If there is only one loaf of bread, the more you have, the less for me. But we can both enjoy a work of art to the full without interfering with each other. Thus it is that the possessive instincts set us quarreling over property, but the faculty which unites us into one great—and temporarily—happy family is the will and power to create.

* * *

We have now produced weapons which are mutually exterminatory. So where do we go from here?

In the history of the world, the prize has not gone to those species which specialized in methods of violence, or even in defensive armor. In fact, Nature began with producing animals encased in hard shells for defense against the ills of life. It also experimented in size. But smaller animals, without external armor, warm-blooded (and warmer-hearted), sensitive, and alert, have cleared these monsters off the face of the earth. Also, the lions and tigers are not the successful species. Nature, too, makes mistakes; learns by experiment, by trial and error, and try again.

There is something in the ready use of force which defeats its own object. Its main defect is that it bars cooperation, for it is by cooperation that we live and survive. Every organism requires an environment of friends, partly to shield it from violent change, and partly to supply it with its wants.

The Gospel of Force is incompatible with a social life.

UNCLE DUDLEY.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
AUG 14 1956

Boston C.S. Monitor Aug. 14 '56

Lyman W. Fisher, Staff Photographer

Symphony Guest Conductor Sails

Pierre Monteux, a guest conductor and leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for five years following World War I, sailed with Mrs. Monteux and their French poodle Fifi on the Holland-America liner Nieuw Amsterdam today. The orchestra will make a six-week concert tour in 13 European countries, including the Soviet Union, performing 27 concerts under the baton of Charles Munch, its music director for the past seven years. Ten of the concerts in the British Isles and on the Continent will be conducted by Dr. Munch's long-time friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
AUG 14 1956

Abp. Cushing, Bp. Wright Lead 231 Pilgrims on Europe Tours

Some 300 "goodwill ambassadors" including 231 Catholic pilgrims and a vanguard of 45 Boston Symphony Orchestra members, left Boston today, aboard the S. S. Nieuw Amsterdam, for extended European tours.

The pilgrims, led by Archbishop Cushing and Bishop Wright, will have varied religious, cultural and social experiences.

Upon invitation of Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, 150 travelers will be conducted by Abp. Cushing through West Germany. The group, including at least eight clergymen, will also visit Holland, Switzerland and France during the month-long trip.

Abp. Cushing will celebrate his 61st birthday Aug. 24, when he will be a guest of the Cardinal Archbishop of Cologne.

The 81 pilgrims accompanying Bp. Wright will tour Catholic shrines in conjunction with the 500th anniversary of the recognition of St. Joan of Arc. Before returning Sept. 22, the group will also visit religious and cultural shrines of Italy.

Pilgrims accompanying Bp. Wright have been invited by Maurice Cardinal Feltin, Archbishop of Paris, to attend a special mass in historic Notre Dame cathedral.

Among those accompanying the archbishop will be Dr. and Mrs. Richard Wright. The doctor is the archbishop's personal physician and brother of Bp. Wright.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wright of Mattapan, parents of the bishop, will also be in his party.

The 45 Boston Symphony Orchestra players, accompanied by their wives and eight tons of musical instruments, set sail on the most extensive trip in the orchestra's 75-year history.

Another party of 79 musicians leaves Boston airport at 6:15 p. m. today aboard a chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines plane, and 59 others enplane a week from tomorrow.

They will play in 13 European countries and Russia during their six-week tour. First concert will be in Cork, Ireland, Aug. 23.

Eighty-one pilgrims will accompany Bishop Wright on a tour of Catholic shrines in France in conjunction with the 500th anniversary of the recognition of St. Joan of Arc. Before returning Sept. 22, the group will also visit Italy.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the role of cultural ambassador, will perform 27 concerts in 13 countries, including Russia, during a six-week tour. It will be the longest and most complex undertaking in the orchestra's 75-year history.

Forty-five musicians and their wives will leave today aboard the flagship of the Holland-America Line. It will sail from Commonwealth Pier at 11 a. m.

A party of 79 will leave Boston Airport at 6:15 p. m. aboard a chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines Constellation and 59 others will depart by plane a week from tomorrow.

The invitation to Archbishop Cushing was extended by Chancellor Adenauer during his visit to Boston last year.

BISHOP'S PARENTS

Among those accompanying the archbishop will be Dr. and Mrs. Richard Wright. The doctor is the archbishop's personal physician and brother of Bishop Wright.

In the latter's group will be his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Wright of Mattapan.

Clergymen on tour of Germany will include the Very Rev. Msgr. Francis J. Lally, editor of The Pilot; the Rt. Rev. Mhgr. Christopher P. Griffin, chaplain of the Knights of Columbus and administrator of Our Lady of the Railways Chapel in South Station, and the Rev. Joseph T. Brennan of Watertown.

Also the Rev. Joseph P. Christopher of Catholic University in Washington, the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Hargendon of Marblehead the Rev. John F. X. Harney of Newton, the Rev. John Sullivan, pastor of St. Camillus Church in Arlington, and the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Joseph E. Schieder, head of the youth department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference in Washington.

It will be Archbishop Cushing's first goodwill pilgrimage to Germany. Th itinerary includes an audience with Pope Pius. The two groups will be reunited in Rome.

NOTRE DAME RITES

The pilgrims accompanying Bishop Wright have been invited by Maurice Cardinal Feltin, archbishop of Paris, to attend a special mass in the historic Notre Dame Cathedral.

Bishop Wright will celebrate mass in the Cathedral of Rouen. St. Joan of Arc was burned at the stake in Rouen.

Seventeen of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be under the direction of Charles Munch and the remainder under the baton of Pierre Monteux, a former conductor of the orchestra.

Members of the orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, Aug. 23 and will be honored at a buffet supper at the summer home of Henry Laughlin, Boston publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Co.

CORK CONCERT

The first concert will be held in Cork the following night. Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra, whose parents came to this country from Cork, will deliver an address.

Other concerts will be at Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London.

Four concerts will be given in Russia.

The Nieuw Amsterdam will arrive in Cobh, Ireland, from Boston next Monday.

On the eve of their departure yesterday, members of the orchestra were honored by the City of Boston during ceremonies at City Hall. Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack presented an ebony baton to Monteux and the orchestra was given a City of Boston flag to be displayed during concerts.

ALD, TUESDAY, AUG. 14, 1956

Abp. Cushing, Bishop Wright Leaders

Symphony Group, 231 Pilgrims Sail for Europe Tours Today

Two groups of Catholic pilgrims, led by Archbishop Cushing and Bishop Wright, and part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will depart from Boston today aboard the S.S. Nieuw Amsterdam

BON VOYAGE TO THE SYMPHONY—Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1919 to 1924, was presented with a baton yesterday, a gift of the city during sendoff ceremonies for the orchestra which sails for Europe today. Left to right are, Councilman Edward J. McCormack, Trustee Oliver Wolcott, Monteux, and Trustee Judge Raymond Wilkins.

[28]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Post
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 216,173
AUG 12 1956 (Sun.)

To Visit 13 Countries

Boston Symphony Off For European Tour

Normally at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra take a well-deserved rest after the most strenuous concert schedule of any orchestra in the country. This year, instead of taking a vacation, the orchestra undertakes its second European tour, playing 27 concerts in 13 countries during its five-and-a-half-week jaunt.

Two features which set this tour apart are the appearance at the Edinburgh Festival and the five performances behind the Iron Curtain.

Moving such an organization over so much territory is a major problem in logistics. The final concert at Tanglewood is next Sunday afternoon, on Tuesday, Aug. 14, a K. L. M. Royal Dutch Airlines chartered Super-Constellation will transport 79 persons from Logan Airport to Shannon, Ireland. Simultaneously, some 40 persons will sail along with the orchestra's eight tons of instruments and scores and baggage, aboard the Nieuw Amsterdam, of the Holland-American Line, from Boston to Cobh, Ireland.

A 59-passenger K.L.M. Constellation will bring the rearguard of the orchestra to Ireland on Aug. 22. The earlier plane offers some members of the orchestra a week in Europe before the concert gets under way. Similarly, at the conclusion of the tour, one plane leaves a week later than the other, giving others a chance for sight-seeing before resuming the regular season.

As an example of the close timing which has been worked out by T. D. Perry, the manager of the B. S. O., this final plane gets into Boston on a Friday and the fall season commences the following Monday.

One Sunday afternoon, just before a Tanglewood performance, Mr. Perry was discussing the tour in some details with me. He looked like a very relieved young man. The previous week he had flown back from London after completing final arrangements.

"We engaged Ian Hunter to plan all the details. He knows all the local managers, the halls we play in, the currency problems, and the visa difficulties we might encounter. Since he retired from the stage and the movies, he has built up the largest management bureau in Europe. We are leaving details up to him," Mr. Perry happily confided.

"As of the moment we know nothing definite about the Russian arrangements except that we are going and the dates we are playing. The Ministry of Culture will take care of everything else. We have received no passports, no schedules, and no replies concerning programs we have submitted. We present ourselves at the Finnish border and say 'What'll we do now?'

"Mr. Munch has invited Gilels and Oistrakh to play a concerto with the orchestra but we have heard nothing so far. We have also submitted several programs we are prepared to play but no preference has been shown.

"However, I think that this is a magnificent opportunity not only for the Boston Symphony but Americans in general to show that we too have artistic organizations and a musical heritage of our own. Europeans often think of us as re-

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
AUG 14 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485
AUG 14 1956

TIME'S LITTLE IRONIES

The price of survival is nonconformity, for nonconformity is the soil of origination. If you are going to do something brand new, it follows that you cannot be like everybody else.

This interesting scientific-humanistic fact is being discovered by the United States Government. Now, at the expiry of its present season at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra goes on a tour of Europe, to be back in October. The government pays part of the freight, but our own orchestra is by no means the sole beneficiary of this enlightened beneficence; it is shared with other orchestras, theatrical companies and individual performers.

Armies are sent to inforce, diplomatists to negotiate and bargain; but when force has become too dangerous, and we want to make a favorable impression, want to prove that we are human beings after all, can do something besides grow wheat, invent mechanical gadgets and H-bombs; that we can produce men and women with genuine power of origination, whom do we call in? The artists.

* * *

Odd, isn't it? But not new. This has been going on, haltingly, for thousands of years. Nations are as mortal as men; our earth is strewn with their corpses, and, when they die, as die they must, the world does not care what they owned; all it cares is what they created. It was complained in ancient times that the Athenians spent in a single year more on their drama than on their navy. Who cares where their navy is now? Their drama after twenty-five centuries is still going strong. Probably the most indestructible achievement of the English-speaking peoples are the plays of an obscure Elizabethan poet, so obscure in his own lifetime that his very authorship is now in dispute. And what of it? We have "Shakespeare's plays," haven't we?

It is quite simple. The arts unite mankind; property divides us. If there is only one loaf of bread, the more you have, the less for me. But we can both enjoy a work of art to the full without interfering with each other. Thus it is that the possessive instincts set us quarreling over property, but the faculty which unites us into one great—and temporarily—happy family is the will and power to create.

* * *

We have now produced weapons which are mutually exterminatory. So where do we go from here?

In the history of the world, the prize has not gone to those species which specialized in methods of violence, or even in defensive armor. In fact, Nature began with producing animals encased in hard shells for defense against the ills of life. It also experimented in size. But smaller animals, without external armor, warm-blooded (and warmer-hearted), sensitive, and alert, have cleared these monsters off the face of the earth. Also, the lions and tigers are not the successful species. Nature, too, makes mistakes; learns by experiment, by trial and error, and try again.

There is something in the ready use of force which defeats its own object. Its main defect is that it bars cooperation, for it is by cooperation that we live and survive. Every organism requires an environment of friends, partly to shield it from violent change, and partly to supply it with its wants.

The Gospel of Force is incompatible with a social life.

UNCLE DUDLEY.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
AUG 14 1956

Boston C.S. Monitor Aug. 14 '56

Lyman W. Fisher, Staff Photographer

Symphony Guest Conductor Sails

Pierre Monteux, a guest conductor and leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for five years following World War I, sailed with Mrs. Monteux and their French poodle Fifi on the Holland-America liner Nieuw Amsterdam today. The orchestra will make a six-week concert tour in 13 European countries, including the Soviet Union, performing 27 concerts under the baton of Charles Munch, its music director for the past seven years. Ten of the concerts in the British Isles and on the Continent will be conducted by Dr. Munch's long-time friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux.

ALD, TUESDAY, AUG. 14, 1956

Abp. Cushing, Bishop Wright Leaders

Symphony Group, 231 Pilgrims Sail for Europe Tours Today

Two groups of Catholic pilgrims, led by Archbishop Cushing and Bishop Wright, and part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will depart from Boston today aboard the S.S. Nieuw Amsterdam bound for goodwill tours of Europe.

At the invitation of Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, Archbishop Cushing will lead 150 travelers, including at least eight clergymen, on a visit to West Germany. They will also travel to Holland, Switzerland and France during the month-long trip.

ST. JOAN ANNIVERSARY

Eighty-one pilgrims will accompany Bishop Wright on a tour of Catholic shrines in France in conjunction with the 500th anniversary of the recognition of St. Joan of Arc. Before returning Sept. 22, the group will also visit Italy.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the role of cultural ambassador, will perform 27 concerts in 13 countries, including Russia, during a six-week tour. It will be the longest and most complex undertaking in the orchestra's 75-year history.

Forty-five musicians and their wives will leave today aboard the flagship of the Holland-America Line. It will sail from Commonwealth Pier at 11 a. m.

A party of 79 will leave Boston Airport at 6:15 p. m. aboard a chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines Constellation and 59 others will depart by plane a week from tomorrow.

The invitation to Archbishop Cushing was extended by Chancellor Adenauer during his visit to Boston last year.

BISHOP'S PARENTS

Among those accompanying the archbishop will be Dr. and Mrs. Richard Wright. The doctor is the archbishop's personal physician and brother of Bishop Wright.

In the latter's group will be his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Wright of Mattapan.

Clergymen on tour of Germany will include the Very Rev. Msgr. Francis J. Lally, editor of The Pilot; the Rt. Rev. Mngr. Christopher P. Griffin, chaplain of the Knights of Columbus and administrator of Our Lady of the Railways Chapel in South Station, and the Rev. Joseph T. Brennan of Watertown.

Also the Rev. Joseph P. Christopher of Catholic University in Washington, the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Hargendon of Marblehead the Rev. John F. X. Harney of Newton, the Rev. John Sullivan, pastor of St. Camillus Church in Arlington, and the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Joseph E. Schieder, head of the youth department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference in Washington.

It will be Archbishop Cushing's first goodwill pilgrimage to Germany. Th itinerary includes an audience with Pope Pius. The two groups will be reunited in Rome.

NOTRE DAME RITES

The pilgrims accompanying Bishop Wright have been invited by Maurice Cardinal Feltin, archbishop of Paris, to attend a special mass in the historic Notre Dame Cathedral.

Bishop Wright will celebrate mass in the Cathedral of Rouen. St. Joan of Arc was burned at the stake in Rouen.

Seventeen of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be under the direction of Charles Munch and the remainder under the baton of Pierre Monteux, a former conductor of the orchestra.

Members of the orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, Aug. 23 and will be honored at a buffet supper at the summer home of Henry Laughlin, Boston publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Co.

CORK CONCERT

The first concert will be held in Cork the following night. Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra, whose parents came to this country from Cork, will deliver an address.

Other concerts will be at Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London.

Four concerts will be given in Russia.

The Nieuw Amsterdam will arrive in Cobh, Ireland, from Boston next Monday.

On the eve of their departure yesterday, members of the orchestra were honored by the City of Boston during ceremonies at City Hall. Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack presented an ebony baton to Monteux and the orchestra was given a City of Boston flag to be displayed during concerts.

BON VOYAGE TO THE SYMPHONY—Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1919 to 1924, was presented with a baton yesterday, a gift of the city during sendoff ceremonies for the orchestra which sails for Europe today. Left to right are, Councilman Edward J. McCormack, Trustee Oliver Wolcott, Monteux, and Trustee Judge Raymond Wilkins.

Crossword Puzzle

ACROSS
1—Quote
5—Fruit of dogrose
8—Counterfeit
12—Single individuals
13—Peruvian plant
14—Comfort
15—Forebodings
17—Away from the weather
18—Aggregates

[28]

CIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, TUESDAY, AUGUST 14, 1956

Joe Petrovec

Pierre Monteux, who will conduct some of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during its European tour, receives his tickets from T. K. Hebert, district passenger manager of the Holland-America Line, with Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony. Forty-five orchestra members and their wives sailed on the Nieuw Amsterdam this morning.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

AUG 14 1956

Symphony Members Leave Hub Today For Europe

The Boston Symphony's sea-air move to Europe for a six-weeks tour began today with departure of the first contingent on the Nieu Amsterdam.

The sea-borne party consisted of 45 members of the orchestra and their wives. The ship is carrying eight tons of instruments, scores and baggage.

TOUR STARTS IN CORK

At 6:15 p.m. a party of 79 will leave on a chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines plane for Shannon, Ireland.

Another chartered KLM Constllation will take off with the final group of 59 at 4 p.m. Aug. 22, arriving in Shannon the next day.

The tour starts Aug. 24 in Cork. Conductor Charles Munch left by plane for France yesterday for a wek of rest prior to the tour.

Among those sailing from Commonwealth Pier on the Nieuw Amsterdam were Pierre Monteux, associate conductor, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees. They were accompanied by their wives.

FOUR CONCERTS IN RUSSIA

The tour, longest in the orchestras 75 years, will include four concerts in Russia, Sept. 5-10.

This will be the first American symphonic orchestra to appear in the Soviet Union since before the war. Appearances will be made in Leningrad and Moscow.

Other cities to be visited are Dublin, Edinburgh (five concerts at the festival, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London.

Chartered planes and an air freighter will return members of the orchestra and their instruments from London Sept. 27 and Oct. 1.

BOSTON POST, AUGUST 14, 1956

MAESTRO RECEIVES A BATON—Conductor Pierre Monteux, right, receives an ebony baton from Boston City Councillor and Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack, Jr., left, before Monteux's departure for European tour with Boston Symphony Orchestra. Monteux will assist Conductor Charles Munch, now in Paris, on the tour. Oliver Wolcott, trustee of the orchestra, looks on.

Hub Symphony Orchestra Leaves for Europe Today

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will leave by air and sea today for a six-weeks concert tour in 13 European countries including Russia. It will be the most extensive trip in the 75-year history of the orchestra.

As a prelude to its European journey, Pierre Monteux, a guest conductor and the symphony's leader for five years following World war II, was presented an engraved baton yesterday by acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack, Jr. in City Hall ceremonies.

A vanguard of 45 members of the orchestra and their wives will leave Boston today aboard the liner, S. S. Nieuw Amsterdam, with eight tons of instruments, for a six-day voyage to England.

Later today, another party of 79 members will leave Logan airport aboard a chartered plane for Europe. On August 22, the remaining members of the symphony will leave the Hub.

To Assemble in Cork

A spokesman said the orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, for its first concert on August 23. Other concerts are scheduled in Dublin and Edinburgh, Scotland, before the orchestra embarks for the continent.

The orchestra is scheduled to play in Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Finland, Russia, Czechoslovakia, Germany, and France before returning to London for two final performances and the return trip to the United States.

Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,048

AUG 14 1956

Hub Symphony Leaves For Tour Of Europe Today

BOSTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs tomorrow, by air and sea, for a six-weeks concert tour in 13 European countries.

The orchestra will give 27 performances during the tour, longest in its 75-year history. Seventeen concerts will be directed by Charles Munch, music director for the past seven years. The others will be under Pierre Monteux, conductor of the symphony for five years following World War I.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage, leave Boston tomorrow morning on the "Nieuw Amsterdam" for the six-day trip to England.

Later a party of 79 will leave Logan Airport aboard a chartered plane. A final plane load, with 59 passengers, will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23, the eve of its first foreign concert.

Then, on succeeding nights, concerts are scheduled for Dublin, and Edinburgh, Scotland, through Aug. 30.

The orchestra will play in Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland before traveling to Russia for four concerts between Sept. 5 and 10.

Concerts in Czechoslovakia, Germany and France will be given before the orchestra returns to London for two final performances and the trip home.

Only five days in the orchestra's packed schedule of travel, rehearsal and concerts have been designated as "rest" days.

And, when the group returns to Boston, there will be little more than a week off before the opening of the symphony's 76th season at Symphony Hall.

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 41,625

AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tour

BOSTON, Aug. 14 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra departs today for a six-week concert tour of Europe.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, musical scores and baggage, will leave aboard the vessel "Nieuw Amsterdam."

Later, a party of 79 will leave on a chartered plane. A final plane load with 59 passengers will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble on Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland, on the eve of its first concert.

The tour includes four concerts in Russia between Sept. 5 and 10.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Leaves for Europe

Boston — (UP) — Conductor Pierre Monteux and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left today for a six-week European tour, including a series of performances in Russia and behind the Iron Curtain.

Mr. Monteux, his wife, symphony president Henry B. Cabot, and 45 orchestra musicians and their wives sailed on the Nieuw Amsterdam for Ireland. Two other contingents of the symphony were scheduled to leave by airliner tonight and tomorrow.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,928

AUG 14 1956

SYMPHONY OFF FOR EUROPE

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today for a 6-weeks concert tour of Europe.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, musical scores and baggage, wil leave aboard the vessel "Nieuw Amsterdam."

Later, a party of 79 will leave on a chartered plane. A final plane load with 59 passengers will leave Aug 22.

The orchestra will assemble on Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland, on the eve of its first concert.

The tour includes four concerts in Russia between Sept. 5 and 10.

The orchestra is scheduled to return to Boston in two groups from London by Oct. 1, less than a week before the opening of the Boston Symphony's 76th season in Symphony Hall.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 101,564

AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Leaves Today for Europe Tour

BOSTON, Aug. 14 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today for a 6-week concert tour of Europe.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, musical scores and baggage, will leave aboard the vessel "Nieuw Amsterdam."

Later, a party of 79 will leave on a chartered plane. A final plane load with 59 passengers will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble on Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland, on the eve of its first concert.

The tour includes four concerts in Russia

The orchestra is scheduled to return to Boston in two groups from London by Oct. 1, less than a week before the opening of the Boston Symphony's 76th season in Symphony Hall.

Chronicle (e)
NORTH ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,800

AUG 14 1956

SAIL TODAY

BOSTON (INS) — Boston Symphony Orchestra and 231 Catholic pilgrims left today for European tours. The pilgrims aboard the SS Niew Amsterdam were led by Archbishop Cushing and will tour West Germany, Holland, Switzerland and France. The 45 orchestra players, their wives and eight tons of instruments were enroute to 13 countries including Russia on a six weeks tour.

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 19,039

AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Leaves For Europe

BOSTON (UP) — Conductor Pierre Monteux and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left today for a six week European tour, including a series of performances in Russia and behind the Iron Curtain.

Monteux, his wife, symphony President Henry B. Cabot, and 45 orchestra musicians and their wives sailed on the Nieuw Amsterdam for Ireland. Two other contingents of the symphony were scheduled to leave by airliner tonight and Wednesday.

The orchestra, the first American symphony to play in Russia, will open its tour of 13 countries with a performance Aug. 24 at Cork, Ireland. Four concerts will be given in Russia Sept. 5-10.

[29]

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Starts Trip To Europe

BOSTON, Aug. 14—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left this morning for Europe by chartered plane and by ship on the longest tour and one of the most complex undertakings in its 75-year history.

Cultural Ambassador

In the next six weeks the orchestra will be a cultural ambassador to 13 countries abroad, performing 27 concerts under the baton of Charles Munch, its music director for the past seven years. Ten of the concerts in the British Isles and on the Continent will be conducted by Dr. Munch's long-time friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, who was conductor of the symphony for five years following World War I and who has been a frequent guest on its podium in recent years.

This morning, the Nieuw Amsterdam sailed from Commonwealth Pier, with Mr. and Mrs. Monteux; Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the orchestra, and his wife; 45 members of the orchestra and their wives; and 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage. The Nieuw Amsterdam will arrive in Cobh, Ireland, on Aug. 20.

Early this evening a party of 79 will depart from Logan Airport, arriving tomorrow at Shannon Airport, Ireland. In the party will be the orchestra's manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., Gail W. Rector, assistant manager and others of the staff of 10 which will accompany the orchestra abroad, newspaper critics and a photographer.

A final planeload will bring the rear guard of the orchestra, numbering 59, leaving Logan Airport Aug. 22, and arriving at Shannon Aug. 23.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's conductor, flew yesterday afternoon from New York directly to his home in Paris, for a week of rest before the start of the European tour.

All the orchestra's personnel will assemble in Cork, Ireland, Aug 23, on the eve of the first concert abroad, to be honored at a buffet at his summer home in Castle Hyde by Henry Laughlin, Boston publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Company.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 80,746
AUG 14 1956

HUB ORCHESTRA OFF TODAY ON TOUR OF EUROPE

Boston Symphony to Give 27 Concerts in 13 Countries

Boston, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs tomorrow, by air and sea, for a six-weeks concert tour in 13 European countries.

Record Length Tour

The orchestra will give 27 performances during the tour, longest in its 75-year history. Seventeen concerts will be directed by Charles Munch, music director for the past seven years. The others will be under Pierre Monteux, conductor of the symphony for five years following World War I.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage, leave Boston tomorrow morning on the "Nieuw Amsterdam" for the six-day trip to England.

Later a party of 79 will leave Logan Airport aboard a chartered plane. A final plane load, with 59 passengers, will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23, the eve of its first foreign concert.

Then, on succeeding nights, concerts are scheduled for Dublin, and Edinburgh, Scotland, through Aug. 30.

To Play in Russia

The orchestra will play in Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland before traveling to Russia for four concerts between Sept. 5 and 10.

Concerts in Czecholovakia, Germany and France will be given before the orchestra returns to London for two final performances and the trip home.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
AUG 14 1956

...p. 12:55, 4:20, 7:55.

SYMPHONY TAKES OFF FOR EUROPE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today by chartered plane and by ship for the most complex undertaking in its 75-year history.

In the next six weeks the proud American orchestra will be a cultural ambassador to thirteen countries abroad, performing twenty-seven concerts under the baton of Charles Munch, its music director.

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 8,809
AUG 14 1956

World News Briefs

By UNITED PRESS

CHICAGO—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt told the Democratic Party Monday night to put Franklin D. Roosevelt's "New Deal" into the past and find a young leader with a bold new program of his own.

* * *

LONDON—Labor Party Leader Hugh Gaitskell demanded a showdown conference with Prime Minister Anthony Eden today on British plans to use force in the Suez Canal dispute.

* * *

BOSTON—The nation's largest robbery (Brink's) trial slogged into the seventh day with the jury box still empty.

* * *

CHICAGO—Supporters of Gov. Averell Harriman today claimed that "less than 75 votes" now separate their man and front running Adlai Stevenson.

* * *

BROCKTON, Mass.—The Massachusetts Supreme Court may hear an appeal in October by Domenick L. Bonomi, sentenced to die in the electric chair for the murder of his wife.

* * *

CHICAGO—Rep. John. W. McCormack of Massachusetts said today he may stay through the second ballot as "favorite son" candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination.

* * *

WASHINGTON — Military men today expected a new clamp-down on release of defense information to halt leaks of military secrets—particularly regarding new weapons.

* * *

BOSTON — Conductor Pierre Monteux and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left today for a six-week European tour, including a series of performances in Russia behind the Iron Curtain.
tain.

* * *

MIAMI—Hurricane Betsy pounded the Bahamas with 120-mile-an-hour winds today and thundered toward the heavily populated Florida east coast less than 300 miles away.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 264,020
AUG 15 1956

1000 Give Farewell To Pilgrims

More than 1000 assembled on Commonwealth Pier yesterday to wave farewell to Archbishop Cushing and Bishop John J. Wright of Worcester who left aboard the flagship, S.S. Nieuw Amsterdam, with two pilgrimage parties to visit religious shrines in Europe.

The archbishop will lead 150 travelers, including eight clergymen, to shrines in West Germany, Holland, Switzerland and France. The invitation to West Germany came from Chancellor Konrad Adenauer during his visit to Boston last year.

In a farewell message, the archbishop said that many had been concerned about his health and had urged him to rest and relax.

"At long last I have decided to go away for a month. For that reason I decided on a boat trip. Once you are on the boat, you must stay there," he said.

Eighty-One With Bishop

Eighty-one pilgrims will accompany Bishop Wright on a tour of Catholic shrines in France and Italy. The tour in France will be conducted in conjunction with the 500th anniversary of the recognition of St. Joan of Arc.

Also leaving were 45 musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their wives. The orchestra will perform 27 concerts in 13 countries, including Russia, during a six-week tour. It will be under the direction of Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, a former conductor.

Another pilgrimage party of 79 left Logan airport last night aboard a chartered KLM Royal Dutch Airlines Constellation. A fourth party of 59 will depart by plane a week from today.

Archbishop Cushing's party will disembark at Rotterdam, Aug. 22. The itinerary includes an audience with Pope Pius. The two groups will be reunited in Rome.

Among those accompaning the archbishop were Dr. and Mrs Richard Wright. The doctor is his personal physician and brother of Bishop Wright. In the latter group were the bishop's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Wright of Mattapan.

Clergymen on the tour to Germany included the Right Rev. Francis J. Lally, editor of the Pilot, and the Right Rev. Christopher P. Griffin, State K. of C. chaplain.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
AUG 15 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY OFF FOR E

(Picture Page 34)

The Boston Symphony Orchestra left yesterday by sea and air for a European concert tour which will include four concerts in Russia.

Herald Columnist Rudolph Elie joined a group of 45 players and their wives who embarked on the Nieuw Amsterdam and he will chronicle the tour for Herald readers. His columns will appear on The Herald editorial page beginning next week.

The Dutch liner carried not only the players but eight tons of instruments, musical scores and baggage.

At 6:15 p. m. a second party of 79 players and orchestra officials took off from Logan airport aboard a chartered KLM, Royal Dutch ariliner.

Conductor Charles Munch was a day ahead of both groups. He flew to France Monday for a rest before the start of the tour on Aug. 24 in Cork, Ireland.

Sailing yesterday were Associate Conductor iPerre Monteux and Henry B. (of the symphor their wives.

The concerts and Moscow wil appearance of symphoney orche Iron Curtain sin War II.

A third group will fly from Bo an dall are sche from London o Oct. 1.

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,640
AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Off For Tour Of Europe

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today for a 6-weeks concert tour of Europe.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, musical scores and baggage, will leave aboard the vessel "Nieuw Amsterdam."

Later, a party of 79 will leave on a chartered plane. A final plane load with 59 passengers will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble on Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland, on the eve of its first concert.

The tour includes four concerts in Russia between Sept. 5 and 10.

The orchestra is scheduled to return to Boston in two groups from London by Oct. 1, less than a week before the opening of the Boston Symphony's 76th season in Symphony Hall.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259
AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Off for Europe

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today, by air and sea, for a six-week concert tour in 13 European countries.

The orchestra will give 27 performances during the tour, longest in its 75-year history. Seventeen concerts will be directed by Charles Munch, music director for the past seven years. The others will be under Pierre Monteux, conductor of the symphony for five years after World War I.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage, leave Boston today on the Nieuw Amsterdam for England.

Later a party of 79 will leave Logan Airport aboard a chartered plane. A final planeload, with 59 passengers, will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23, the eve of its first foreign concert.

Then, on succeeding nights, concerts are scheduled for Dublin, and Edinburgh, Scotland, through Aug. 30.

The orchestra will play in Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland before traveling to Russia for four concerts between Sept. 5 and 10. Concerts in Czechoslovakia, Germany and France will be given later.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300
AUG 15 1956

OFF TO RUSSIA—Following the tour of the Boston Symphony through Europe and into the Soviet Union are Cyrus Durgin, Globe music critic; Rosario Mazzeo, personal manager for the orchestra; Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr.

[30]

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,259
AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Starts Trip To Europe

BOSTON, Aug. 14—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left this morning for Europe by chartered plane and by ship on the longest tour and one of the most complex undertakings in its 75-year history.

Cultural Ambassador

In the next six weeks the orchestra will be a cultural ambassador to 13 countries abroad, performing 27 concerts under the baton of Charles Munch, its music director for the past seven years. Ten of the concerts in the British Isles and on the Continent will be conducted by Dr. Munch's longtime friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, who was conductor of the symphony for five years following World War I and who has been a frequent guest on its podium in recent years.

This morning, the Nieuw Amsterdam sailed from Commonwealth Pier, with Mr. and Mrs. Monteux; Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the orchestra, and his wife; 45 members of the orchestra and their wives; and 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage. The Nieuw Amsterdam will arrive in Cobh, Ireland, on Aug. 20.

Early this evening a party of 79 will depart from Logan Airport, arriving tomorrow at Shannon Airport, Ireland. In the party will be the orchestra's manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., Gail W. Rector, assistant manager and others of the staff of 10 which will accompany the orchestra abroad, newspaper critics and a photographer.

A final planeload will bring the rear guard of the orchestra, numbering 59, leaving Logan Airport Aug. 22, and arriving at Shannon Aug. 23.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's conductor, flew yesterday afternoon from New York directly to his home in Paris, for a week of rest before the start of the European tour.

All the orchestra's personnel will assemble in Cork, Ireland Aug 23, on the eve of the first concert abroad, to be honored at a buffet at his summer home in Castle Hyde by Henry Laughlin, Boston publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Company.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 80,746
AUG 14 1956

HUB ORCHESTRA OFF TODAY ON TOUR OF EUROPE

Boston Symphony to Give 27 Concerts in 13 Countries

Boston, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs tomorrow, by air and sea, for a six-weeks concert tour in 13 European countries.

Record Length Tour

The orchestra will give 27 performances during the tour, longest in its 75-year history. Seventeen concerts will be directed by Charles Munch, music director for the past seven years. The others will be under Pierre Monteux, conductor of the symphony for five years following World War I.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage, leave Boston tomorrow morning on the "Nieuw Amsterdam" for the six-day trip to England.

Later a party of 79 will leave Logan Airport aboard a chartered plane. A final plane load, with 59 passengers, will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23, the eve of its first foreign concert.

Then, on succeeding nights, concerts are scheduled for Dublin, and Edinburgh, Scotland, through Aug. 30.

To Play in Russia

The orchestra will play in Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland before traveling to Russia for four concerts between Sept. 5 and 10.

Concerts in Czecholovakia, Germany and France will be given before the orchestra returns to London for two final performances and the trip home.

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
AUG 14 1956

SYMPHONY TAKES OFF FOR EUROPE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today by chartered plane and by ship for the most complex undertaking in its 75-year history.

In the next six weeks the proud American orchestra will be a cultural ambassador to thirteen countries abroad, performing twenty-seven concerts under the baton of Charles Munch, its music director.

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 8,809
AUG 14 1956

World News Briefs

By UNITED PRESS

CHICAGO—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt told the Democratic Party Monday night to put Franklin D. Roosevelt's "New Deal" into the past and find a young leader with a bold new program of his own.

* * *

LONDON—Labor Party Leader Hugh Gaitskell demanded a showdown conference with Prime Minister Anthony Eden today on British plans to use force in the Suez Canal dispute.

* * *

BOSTON—The nation's largest robbery (Brink's) trial slogged into the seventh day with the jury box still empty.

* * *

CHICAGO—Supporters of Gov. Averell Harriman today claimed that "less than 75 votes" now separate their man and front running Adlai Stevenson.

* * *

BROCKTON, Mass.—The Massachusetts Supreme Court may hear an appeal in October by Domenick L. Bonomi, sentenced to die in the electric chair for the murder of his wife.

* * *

CHICAGO—Rep. John W. McCormack of Massachusetts said today he may stay through the second ballot as "favorite son" candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination.

* * *

WASHINGTON — Military men today expected a new clamp-down on release of defense information to halt leaks of military secrets—particularly regarding new weapons.

* * *

BOSTON — Conductor Pierre Monteux and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left today for a six-week European tour, including a series of performances in Russia behind the Iron Curtain.

* * *

MIAMI—Hurricane Betsy pounded the Bahamas with 120-mile-an-hour winds today and thundered toward the heavily populated Florida east coast less than 300 miles away.

Post (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 264,020
AUG 15 1956

1000 Give Farewell To Pilgrims

More than 1000 assembled on Commonwealth Pier yesterday to wave farewell to Archbishop Cushing and Bishop John J. Wright of Worcester who left aboard the flagship, S.S. Nieuw Amsterdam, with two pilgrimage parties to visit religious shrines in Europe.

The archbishop will lead 150 travelers, including eight clergymen, to shrines in West Germany, Holland, Switzerland and France. The invitation to West Germany came from Chancellor Konrad Adenauer during his visit to Boston last year.

In a farewell message, the archbishop said that many had been concerned about his health and had urged him to rest and relax.

"At long last I have decided to go away for a month. For that reason I decided on a boat trip. Once you are on the boat, you must stay there," he said.

Night-Cap With Bishop

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
AUG 15 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY OFF FOR EUROPE

(Picture Page 34)

The Boston Symphony Orchestra left yesterday by sea and air for a European concert tour which will include four concerts in Russia.

Herald Columnist Rudolph Elie joined a group of 45 players and their wives who embarked on the Nieuw Amsterdam and he will chronicle the tour for Herald readers. His columns will appear on The Herald editorial page beginning next week.

The Dutch liner carried not only the players but eight tons of instruments, musical scores and baggage.

At 6:15 p. m. a second party of 79 players and orchestra officials took off from Logan airport aboard a chartered KLM, Royal Dutch ariliner.

Conductor Charles Munch was a day ahead of both groups. He flew to France Monday for a rest before the start of the tour on Aug. 24 in Cork, Ireland.

Sailing yesterday were Associate Conductor iPerre Monteux and Henry B. Cabot, president of the symphony trustees, and their wives.

The concerts in Leningrad and Moscow will mark the first appearance of an American syhphoney orchestra behind the Iron Curtain since before World War II.

A third group of 59 musicians will fly from Boston on Aug. 22 an dall are scheduled to return from London on Sept. 27 and Oct. 1.

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,640
AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Off For Tour Of Europe

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today for a 6-weeks concert tour of Europe.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, musical scores and baggage, will leave aboard the vessel "Nieuw Amsterdam."

Later, a party of 79 will leave on a chartered plane. A final plane load with 59 passengers will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble on Aug. 23 in Cork, Ireland, on the eve of its first concert.

The tour includes four concerts in Russia between Sept. 5 and 10.

The orchestra is scheduled to return to Boston in two groups from London by Oct. 1, less than a week before the opening of the Boston Symphony's 76th season in Symphony Hall.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259
AUG 14 1956

Boston Symphony Off for Europe

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra departs today, by air and sea, for a six-week concert tour in 13 European countries.

The orchestra will give 27 performances during the tour, longest in its 75-year history. Seventeen concerts will be directed by Charles Munch, music director for the past seven years. The others will be under Pierre Monteux, conductor of the symphony for five years after World War I.

Forty-five members of the orchestra and their wives, with 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage, leave Boston today on the Nieuw Amsterdam for England.

Later a party of 79 will leave Logan Airport aboard a chartered plane. A final planeload, with 59 passengers, will leave Aug. 22.

The orchestra will assemble in Cork, Ireland, on Aug. 23, the eve of its first foreign concert.

Then, on succeeding nights, concerts are scheduled for Dublin, and Edinburgh, Scotland, through Aug. 30.

The orchestra will play in Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland before traveling to Russia for four concerts between Sept. 5 and 10. Concerts in Czechoslovakia, Germany and France will be given later.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300
AUG 15 1956

OFF TO RUSSIA—Following the tour of the Boston Symphony through Europe and into the Soviet Union are Cyrus Durgin, Globe music critic; Rosario Mazzeo, personal manager for the orchestra; Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr.

[30]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

South End Citizen
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 14,000

AUG 16 1956

MAESTRO RECEIVES BATON—Conductor Pierre Monteux, right, receives an ebony baton from Boston City Councillor and Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack, Jr., left, before Monteux's departure for European tour with Boston Symphony Orchestra. Monteux will assist Conductor Charles Munch, now in Paris, on the tour. Oliver Wolcott, trustee of the orchestra, looks on.

STAY-AT-HOMER . . .

M'Cormack Acting Mayor For Democrats Conclave

Boston City Council President Edward J. McCormack, Jr., who has been campaigning for the Democratic nomination for Attorney General stayed home from the Democratic National Convention in Chicago in order to attend to his "official duties". With Mayor Hynes attending the conclave in the "windy city" as a delegate-at-large, the responsibility for directing Boston municipal government falls on McCormack.

Should any emergency arise in the city from an August hurricane or any other unexpected development, it would be Acting Mayor McCormack who would marshal the municipal facilities for the protection of the city's 780,000 residents.

One of the acting Mayor's chores was to sign a $5,000,000 short term loan this week in order to provide the Hub with the necessary funds to meet payrolls and expenses pending the collection of taxes.

Acting Mayor McCormack also issued a reminder to persons not yet enrolled as voters that Friday is the last day on which they may qualify themselves to cast ballots in the September primary. He declared that the election offices on the ground floor of City Hall Annex will be open from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Friday and that an outside office for the registration of voters will be operated from 6 to 10 p.m. in each ward of the city.

"I sincerely hope that those persons who haven't as yet registered will do so before Friday's deadline," McCormack stated.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Mattapan Tribune
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 8,000

AUG 16 1956

M'Cormack Acting Mayor For Democrats Conclave

MAESTRO RECEIVES BATON—Conductor Pierre Monteux, right, receives an ebony baton from Boston City Councillor and Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack, Jr., left, before Monteux's departure for European tour with Boston Symphony Orchestra. Monteux will assist Conductor Charles Munch, now in Paris, on the tour. Oliver Wolcott, trustee of the orchestra, looks on.

Boston City Council President Edward J. McCormack, Jr., who has been campaigning for the Democratic nomination for Attorney General stayed home from the Democratic National Convention in Chicago in order to attend to his "official duties". With Mayor Hynes attending the conclave in the "windy city" as a delegate-at-large, the responsibility for directing Boston municipal government falls on McCormack.

Should any emergency arise in the city from an August hurricane or any other unexpected development, it would be Acting Mayor McCormack who would marshal the municipal facilities for the protection of the city's 780,000 residents.

One of the acting Mayor's chores was to sign a $5,000,000 short term loan this week in order to provide the Hub with the necessary funds to meet payrolls and expenses pending the collection of taxes.

Acting Mayor McCormack also issued a reminder to persons not yet enrolled as voters that Friday is the last day on which they may qualify themselves to cast ballots in the September primary. He declared that the election offices on the ground floor of City Hall Annex will be open from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Friday and that an outside office for the registration of voters will be operated from 6 to 10 p.m. in each ward of the city.

"I sincerely hope that those persons who haven't as yet registered will do so before Friday's deadline," McCormack stated.

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 538,979
AUG 19 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

AUG 19 1956

Pilgrims Hear Concert Under Monteux Baton

By WILLIAM H. WALDRON

ABOARD THE SS NIEUW AMSTERDAM, Aug. 18—A group of 18 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a ship concert this afternoon after somewhat ruffled feelings had been smoothed by the diplomacy of the ship's captain.

Seems there had been an announcement on leaving Boston that the orchestra would give concerts aboard.

Only trouble was nobody had asked the orchestra first. So the players balked.

But they said they would be glad to play if asked in the right way.

So the captain sent a diplomatic invitation, the players responded graciously and the concert was posted for this afternoon.

Pierre Monteux, former Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor who will conduct during part of the orchestra's European tour, wielded the baton.

Proceeds went to the Seamen's Fund, with a second concert devoted solely to the ship's crew.

Again today it was perfect sailing weather.

This morning, Archbishop Cushing toured the liner, visiting the kitchen, laundry and the ship's bridge, etc.

He chatted with a goodly number of the 730 who keep the ship running. He was especially interested in the Dutch university students who are crew members. They told him they work on board during their Summer holidays to make money for tuition expenses.

'TED' CABLES ABP. CUSHING

ABOARD THE NIEUW AMSTERDAM—A cablegram from Ted Williams reached Archbishop Cushing yesterday on his Good-Will Pilgrimage to holy places in Europe.

The prelate, heading a group of pilgrims on this Dutch liner, reported Williams wired him. "Best wishes for your trip and regards to all."

The archbishop said he hoped Williams would keep swinging and win the batting title.

A member of the pilgrimage, Mrs. M. C. Priest of Brookline, suffered a leg fracture in a fall and was treated by the ship's doctor. She was said to be resting comfortably.

Also aboard the vessel is the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gave an afternoon concert under the direction of Pierre Monteux. The orchestra will give a series of concerts in Europe.

In his cablegram, the archbishop said perfect sailing weather was continuing and he toured the entire ship, pausing to talk with Dutch university students who serve as crew members during their summer vacations.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
CONCORD, Mass.
Weekly Non-Partisan
Circ. 1,800

AUG 16 1956

BRIEFS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is off on its European tour. The members will assemble in Cork, Ireland for their first concert on August 24 and will be entertained at a buffet supper at the summer home nearby of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Laughlin of Monument street. Other concerts are scheduled at Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS-HERALD
Circ. D. 48,118

AUG 18 1956

Off To Convince Europe Of America's Cultural Claims

Arrival of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra to play 27 concerts in nine European nations — and Russia — is certain to revive the debate argued on the one hand by those who claim a European monopoly of culture and on the other by those who insist that America has taken over in most fields.

We predict with certainty that Europe will like the Boston Symphony, acclaim it is one of the best in the world. But when the disputants look at the names of the players, including those of directors Munch and Monteux, they will gleefully gloat: "Aha, all those families came from Europe. American musical culture would be nothing without us."

And all we could say would be, "Touche."

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
Circ. D. 344,297 - S. 361,728

AUG 19 1956

THE Boston Symphony orchestra embarked last week on its most elaborate European tour yet. The orchestra will play 27 concerts in 13 countries in the next six weeks. The cities to be visited are Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London.

The Nieuw Amsterdam, which is due in Cobb, Ireland, tomorrow, carries 16,000 pounds of the orchestra's instruments, scores and baggage and Pierre Monteux, who will assist Charles Munch as conductor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courier-Gazette
ROCKLAND, Maine
Tri-Wkly. Ind. Rep.
Circ. 6,547

AUG 23 1956

Realm OF music

By GLADYS HEISTAD

The chamber music season in Blue Hill came to a close on Wednesday, Aug. 22, when Artur Balsam presented a recital of piano music. This also marked the end of the two series of summer concerts presented this year in support of Kneisel Hall's Scholarship Fund. At these concerts have appeared members of the music school staff as well as visiting artists who have given generously of their time and talent from the violin and piano ensemble training that Kneisel Hall is able to offer each July and August.

A final student recital of the season is announced by Marianne Kneisel, director, to take place Saturday evening, Aug. 25 at 8 o'clock; also one for Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26 at 3.30. These student recitals are open to the public—in fact, music lovers are urged to attend so they may hear the various ensemble groups in works they have studied during the eight weeks' summer course just ending.

* * *

Apropos of the above it is of interest to refer to a letter just at hand from Edith Besse Greene of Augusta who attended Colby College's Summer Open House on Aug. 9 which featured Kneisel Hall String Ensemble from the Summer Music School at Blue Hill, with Gerald Warburg conducting. I will show the program presented and then speak of Mrs. Greene's letter.

Sonata for Solo Cello and String Orchestra, Benedetto Marcello (1686-1739)
Largo-Allegro-Largo-Allegro
Gerald Warburg, cello
Marianne Kneisel, conducting
Cencerto in B minor, Op 3, No. 10 Antonio Vivaldi (1675-1743)
Allegro-Largo-Larghetto-Allegro
For four violins with string Orchestra
Solo violins: Martha Marshall Yolande Wynn, Carol Stein, Clarice Gostinsky
(edited by Franz Kneisel)
Introduction from Bachianas Braslieiras No. 1, Kector Villa-Lobos 1930-)
For Nine Violoncelli
Ted Brys, Alden Ring, Harold Zilch, Judith Davidoff, Barbara Stein, Joan Brockway, Damaris Smith, Sandy Spencer, Martha Bridge.
Concerto Grosso, No. 2, Ernest Bloch
Maestoso-Allegro-Andante
Allegro-Variations

*

Mrs. Greene writes: "I am enclosing this very outstanding program given at Colby's Open House last Thursday. I have never heard such an interesting, talented group of young musicians—all equally gifted. Marianne (Miss Kneisel) told me afterward they had too many students this year, but could not turn any of them away, they were all so unusual.

"Mr. Warbury was a very fine soloist and conductor."

A part of Colby's Open House was an exhibition of "Art in Maine — 1956" and glancing through the folder, also sent me by Mrs. Greene, I note the names of several who have become familiar to us through our own Farnsworth Art Museum—for example—Stephen Etnier, Dahlov Ipear, Waldo Peirce, William Thon, Andrew Wyeth, William Zorach.

* * *

I deeply regretted that I had to miss the Warren Concert of Aug. 16—Chester Wyllie's 25th. I always feel sorry when unable to attend any one of Chester's concerts, but this one in particular, for it was an anniversary occasion and a gala event for Chester and those who have gone along with him over the period of 25 years. It came back to me so strongly how the first concert was incepted. The then Universalist Church Quartet — consisting of Chester Wyllie, tenor; Katherine Veazie, soprano; Gladys Jones, contralto, and John Robinson, bass, with Margie Stahl as the accompanist. From then on each year brought out additional singers for chorus work as well as solo work, both vocal and instrumental, and gradually this summer concert became so firmly established that it was looked forward to with eagerness by music lovers in all this area.

Chester has infused something into this annual event that sets it apart from all other musical activities. Into it he has poured his own warmth and friendliness and affection, his loyality and integrity. The response given by both participants and those attending is tribute to Chester himself, and the great affection and esteem held for him. We all hope that he will go on with these concerts. The summer would seem incomplete without Chester Wyllie's concert.

* * *

In a recent issue of the Saturday Review, my pet magazine, appears an article written by Cedric Larson, entitled "In and Out of 'Who's Who'" which tells the history of the Big Red Book, Volume 29 recently off the press—the most name-laden and copious edition yet to appear in the 58-year-life of this publication. In this new edition more than 54,800 biographical listings appear, against 48,716 in the previous edition. Mr. Larson tells us that (believe-it-or-not) approximately 45 persons from Volume 1 are still listed in Volume 29. One of these is Josef Hofmann, the pianist, born in Crawcow, Poland, January 29, 1876. We all know that at the age of seven Hofmann attracted the attention of Anton Rubinstein, and that at the age of 11 he was going on concert tours, launched on a career that has stamped him as one of the greatest pianists of our times — some even state that he is the greatest, his equal not yet met. Today Hofmann at the age of 80 lives on the West Coast, busy and active, and still with music as his first love.

* * *

George Carr, formerly of Warren, now of Clearwater, Florida, has announced his concert season for 1957, and it is a good one. Here it is: January 4, The Chanticleers, Male Quartet. January 18, Brian Sullivan, Tenor. February 8, The Festival Symponette, Robert Rudie, conductor. February 26, Blanche Thebom, Metropolitan mezzo-soprano. March 8, The American Piano Trio (Stephen Kovacs, Esther Fernandez, and Naomi Weiss). March 26, Mimi Benzell, Metropolitan lyric coloratura soprano. The announcement is made on an attractive folder—anyone interested in receiving a copy may obtain one by writing the George Carr New York Concerts, Inc., Ogg Studio, 417 Cleveland Street, Clearwater, Florida. It may be that some of the Florida sojourners from Maine may have a chance to attend one or more of these concerts.

* * *

The Boston Symphony is off on its European tour, having left on August 14—that is the greater part of the personnel—79 persons left on a KLM Royal Dutch Airlines chartered Super-Constellation from Logan Airport for Shannon, Ireland. Simultaneously some 40 persons sailed along with the orchestra's eight tons of instruments and scores and baggage, aboard the Nieuw-Amsterdam of the Holland-American Line, from Boston to Cobb, Ireland. A 59-passenger KLM Constellation will bring the rearguard of the orchestra to Ireland on August 22.

* * *

I have just learned through letters from Rolf and Lilly Heistad that Milton Katims is to stay on as conductor of the Seattle Symphony for another year which gives joy all around since he has done a wonderful piece of work with the orchestra and also has established himself and lovely family in the hearts of Seattle citizens.

In the August issue of Musical America, in Mephisto's Musings, appears this about the Seattle Symphony and Mr. Katims:

"The Family Neighborhood Concerts of the Seattle Symphony began this season in one of the Seattle suburbs, Mercer Island, located on Lake Washington. An audience of 1,000 islanders packed the community's one large recreation hall to hear Milton Katims conduct the orchestra in an hour-long program of familiar classics and then stayed on to dance to music provided by a dozen symphony players who also happened to be Seattle's top dance musicians.

"During the concert several preschool children listened while perched on kindergarten chairs almost in the laps of the first-chair players. So close were the moppets that one observant four year old raised her hand just as the perspiring conductor was to introduce a work and informed him in tones loud enough for the entire audience to hear: "You're wet!" As the laughter subsided, Mr. Katims neatly replied: "I'm glad you didn't say I'm all wet!"

* * *

It was such a joy to have Harris Shaw stop by to see me on a recent afternoon. We had not met for a long time and naturally had much to say—most of the time devoted to "questions and answers". Harris is still organist at Grace (Episcopal) Church, Salem, Mass., teaches (he is an expert in the teaching of harmony), and is active in the American Guild of Organists, holding a position he has had for 15 years on the official board. He looks extremely well, the years have given him dignity and poise, and he still has that wonderful sense of humor which was decidedly individuals, back in the old days. And still is!

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
Circ. D. 150,452 - S. 299,263

AUG 19 1956

In the Realm of Music—By Kenneth Gill

Boston Symphony Orchestra Members Leave on Longest European Tour

BOSTON TRAVELS—The Boston Sympathy Orchestra departed last week by chartered plane and ship for the longest tour and one of the most complex undertakings in its 75-year history. In the next six weeks the orchestra will be a cultural ambassador to 13 countries, performing 27 concerts under the baton of Charles Munch, its music director for the last seven years.

P. Monteux

Ten of the concerts in the British Isles and on the continent will be conducted by Dr. Munch's long-time friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, who was conductor of the symphony for five years after World War I. He has been a frequent guest on its podium in recent years.

Last Tuesday, the Holland-American Line's "Nieuw Amsterdam" sailed from Boston, with Mr. and Mrs. Monteux; Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his wife; 45 members of the orchestra and their wives; and 16,000 pounds of instruments, scores and baggage. The ship will arrive at Cobh, Ireland, tomorrow.

OTHERS FLY — Later last Tuesday a party of 79 departed from Logan Airport, Boston, aboard a chartered plane arriving the next morning at Shannon Airport, Ireland. In the party were the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr.; assistant manager Gail W. Rector; and others of the staff of 10 which will accompany the orchestra abroad, newspaper critics and a photographer.

A final plane will bring the rear guard of the orchestra, numbering 59, leaving Logan Airport Wednesday and arriving at Shannon Thursday morning.

Charles Munch flew from New York directly to his home in Paris for a week of rest before the start of the European tour.

CONCERT IN CORK—The orchestra's personnel will assemble in Cork, Ireland, Thursday evening on the eve of the first concert abroad, to be honored at a buffet at the summer home of Henry Laughlin, a Boston book publisher.

The Cork concert in the Savoy Theater will find Charles Munch conducting the "Irish Suite" of Leroy Anderson (movements 1, II and IV), Haydn's "Symphony No. 102," Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" and Brahms' "Symphony No. 2." Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra, whose parents emigrated to the United States from Cork, will give an address thanking the people of Ireland for their welcome.

The City of Boston gave the symphony an official send-off at City Hall. Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack presented Pierre Monteux with an ebony baton encrusted with gold. It will be kept in the orchestra's museum as a memento of the tour.

The orchestra was also presented with an official City of Boston flag to be hung at all concerts abroad, and with autographed copies of "Boston, America's Home Port," to be presented to mayors of the 19 cities the orchestra will visit.

ITINERARY—After its opening concert in Cork, the symphony will play in Dublin, at the Edinburgh Festival, in Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres, Leeds and London.

The European tour is being made in cooperation with the international exchange program of the American National Theater and Academy, the agency appointed by the State Department to assist American performing artists tour abroad.

Three chartered planes will return the orchestra and its equipment from London, Sept. 27 and Oct. 1, for the opening of the Boston Symphony's 76th season in Symphony Hall on Friday, Oct. 5.

CHAUTAUQUA CONCLUDES — Rise Stevens, Metropolitan Opera mezzo-soprano, singing in recital in the Chautauqua Amphitheater on Saturday evening, will climax the eighth week of program activities at Chautauqua Institution.

Rise Stevens

Other attractions scheduled for the final week include a performance of the opera, "Rigoletto," and three Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra concerts.

The Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Walter Hendl, will play at 3 this afternoon featuring Almeta Hyman, violinist, Chautauqua Music Award winner, as soloist. An orchestral pops concert will be presented at 8:30 Tuesday evening. The final symphony concert of the season will be given Wednesday evening.

A concert of Chautauqua artists will be offered Thursday evening. The final opera of the season will be presented at 8:30 tomorrow when Verdi's "Rigoletto" will be staged in Norton Memorial Hall.

STAGE AND SCREEN—Music of the theater and the film world will have a featured place at the weekly pop concert at Kleinhans Music Hall Tuesday night. Conductor Willis Page and the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra will give Buffalo a first performance of Robert Russell Bennett's symphonic picture of "My Fair Lady." They will also play medleys excerpted from Cole Porter's "Can-Can" and the Rodgers and Hammerstein "Carousel."

With the guest ensemble, the Angelus Singers, the orchestra will perform a symphonic treatment of the Tennessee Ernie Ford recording hit, "Sixteen Tons." This will feature the arranging talents of Livingston Gearhart, former Fred Waring aide and a present faculty member at the University of Buffalo.

The Angelus Singers will be heard in a 10-minute "Choral Showcase" of music from the film versions of "The Student Prince," "Words and Music" and "Three for Tonight."

An added feature will be the appearance of 12-year-old Glenn Derringer, organ virtuoso. The Philadelphia-born youth will play familiar show tunes.

FAIR GROUNDS OPENING—The Erie County Fair Grounds at Hamburg will be opened this afternoon. Musical feature of the day will take place at 3 before the grandstand with a concert by the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, Willis Page conducting.

The Angelus Singers, chorus and orchestra will be heard in a variety of light symphonic works.

The orchestra will feature Offenbach's "Ballet Parisienne," selections from "South Pacific" and "Carousel." The Angelus Singers will provide American and European folk songs.

CIVIC ORCHESTRA — In announcing this week's schedule of concerts, the Buffalo Civic Orchestra also included the list of soloists to be presented in the three programs.

Bob Wells

This afternoon at 3 at the Delaware Park Zoo, Suzanne Conboy, soprano, and James Davis, tenor, will share guest solo spots.

This evening at 9 as the orchestra appears on the steps of the Museum of Science, Joan Kelm, coloratura, will join Miss Conboy and Davis.

On Wednesday evening at the Albright Art Gallery in Delaware Park, the soloists will be Bob Wells, flutist, playing the Mozart "Concerto for Flute and Orchestra," and Glenna McClusky, soprano, and Robert Caple, baritone, singing duets from "Don Giovanni." Jan Wolanek conducts the Buffalo Civic Orchestra in these open-air concerts, sponsored by the City Parks Department.

IN STUDY — Robert Schulz, organist-choirmaster of St. Mary of Sorrows Catholic Church, will attend the National Liturgical Conference in London, Ont. He will study along with priests, sisters and organists from all over the country the general theme of active participation in Catholic services by the congregation. St. Mary of Sorrows Church introduced congregational singing of the High Mass in the Buffalo diocese last October.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
AUG 23 1956

My Boston

By ALAN FRAZER

"I'VE a song on my lips and a pain in my heart,
And a fanciful longing, a grief, and a smart.
I've a beautiful picture that lives in my eye,
And it lures me to follow a dream till I die."
—HOMER C. HOUSE

IF RED KING, public relations man for Cinerama, is using the back alleys as he goes around town, it's because he's dodging people who wanted free invitations to the pre-opening of "Seven Wonders of the World" next Sunday. With the Cinerama setup, the three projection booths, etc., the Boston Theater seats only 1354. Divided by two, that meant Red could give out only 677 pairs of tickets, a figure that was diminished by large orders from Cinerama VIP's who must fly in for the preview and bring company . . . "Red" figures he has cemented relations with a few hundred friends and incurred the everlasting enmity of a few thousand sharpshooters, who might find him a target on the main streets.

Actor in a Picture Window

PASSERS-BY in Winter pl. have been finding themselves staring at KENT SMITH, the Earl of Warwick of "Saint Joan," as he dines in Locke Ober's—which, after all, is like a goldfish bowl to passers-by in Winter pl. . . . Under an awning on Tremont st., during Tuesday night's heavy drizzle, a young lady who knows her Ireland told me that she didn't think it anything extraordinary that SIOBHAN McKENNA is so great in "Saint Joan"—because Siobhan in Gaelic means Joan . . . At this writing, somewhere between 30 and 40 women are running for the Massachusetts state legislature. Among them may be the future first woman Governor of Massachusetts.

Fox & Hounds Souvenir

DOUG FLYNN read mention in this column, the other day, of LAWRENCE (Theater Guild) LANGNER'S "The Magic Curtain." Doug got a copy of the book in the library and, while looking through it, discovered a picture of himself opposite page 419—where he was waiting on Langner, THERESA HELBURN, ROUBEN MAMOULIAN and others at the old Fox & Hounds Club, during rehearsals of "Carousel" in 1945.

A Paramount executive has climbed out on a limb with a prediction that the new version of "The Ten Commandments" will gross 100 million dollars, which is more than twice the amount grossed so far by "Gone With the Wind" . . . CECIL B. DeMILLE is said to have spent $13,000,000 on the new picture—or 1.3 De Millions per Commandment.

Smith

De Mille

Lewis

Diener

DOLF BULTERMAN, agent here for KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, which flew 70 or more Boston Symphony musicians to Europe, rises to report that KLM stands for Koninklyke Luchtvaart Maatschappij—and the musicians' plane, named "The Flying Dutchman," is known in its home country as "De Vliegende Hollander" . . . A Boston lady, just returned from a vacation in the Middle West, tells of fighting insects smaller than mosquitoes—so small the screens couldn't keep 'em out. While doing so, she dreamed up a parody to that great song from "My Fair Lady." Her parody is entitled: "I Could Have Scratched All Night."

A BOSTON delegate to the San Francisco convention writes me that a friend of his, who lives in that fair city, bought a new motorcycle, only to have it stolen from a parking lot while he was getting a license plate. The next day, across the bay in Oakland, he saw a young chap riding the motorcycle up the street. He called a policeman, who pulled out a pad and asked for the license number. "But there isn't any yet," explained the San Francisco man . . . "Sorry," said the officer, "I can't chase it without a license number."

Actress' New Role

JOAN DIENER, the exceedingly shapely actress seen here in "Season in the Sun," "Kismet" and "The Ziegfeld Follies," has been in Cambridge in a very unusual role—that of secretary to a well known man about the theater . . . Little, Brown & Co. of Boston, is about to publish KATHRYN HULME'S "The Nun's Story" which, it is reported, has already been selected by the Book of the Month Club, Catholic Book Club and Reader's Digest Book Club . . . SABBY LEWIS has gone into the booking agency business with DAN (Doc) AVERY. Later, an all-Negro musical will be built around Sabby and his band.

Gogi Stands Pat

GOGI GRANT has declined bids from RCA-Victor to return and record under that label, on the ground that, while she was under contract with Victor, she was assigned only to "cover" work—that is, to record songs which other singers had already disked. After her manager, JACK MORTON, obtained her release from Victor, she joined ERA. She put this new label over with "The Wayward Wind" . . . The words of "Wayward Wind," incidentally, were designed for a male and had to be rewritten for Gogi, the current Salisbury Beach Frolics star.

Bureau's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MILLBROOK, N. Y.
ROUND TABLE
Circ. W. 673
AUG 23 1956

Boston Symphony Begins Extensive European Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has begun its August-September tour of thirteen European countries under the musical direction of Charles Munch, with Pierre Monteux as guest conductor at ten of the twenty-seven concerts which are scheduled for nineteen cities in the British Isles and on the Continent.

The orchestra's home city of Boston gave an official send-off on August 13 the eve of departure by chartered plane and by ship for the first concerts in Ireland on August 24 and 25. The day following the completion of the orchestra's busy summer schedule at its annual Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, a City Hall reception, presided over by Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack, witnessed the presentation to Pierre Monteux of an ebony baton encrusted with gold, the flag of the city, and autographed copies of an official book about Boston to be presented to mayors of cities abroad.

When the orchestra assembles in Cork on the eve of its first concert in that Eire city, a buffet supper will be tendered its conductor, managers, trustees, personnel and wives by Henry Laughlin, Boston publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Company at Castle Hyde, his summer home in nearby Fermoy, County Cork.

The orchestra will give concerts also in Stockholm, Berne and in Moscow, marking the first time an American orchestra has ever performed in the Russian capital. London will be the scene of the finale of the Boston Symphony's tour. Receptions will be held in their honor and they will be welcomed by the United States Ambassador as they perform in the various cities.

The Boston Symphony's Europe tour is made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the agency appointed by the United States Department to facilitate travel abroad by American performing artists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
AUG 19 1956

Culture One of

By EDWARD J. DRISCOLL

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra sailed ou of Boston this past week amid the not too musicall demanding strains of "Auld Lang Syne it pointed up a most happy fact:

Culture's getting to be one of th hottest commodities the United Stat is shipping abroad these days.

Time was, when this was strictl a one-way shipping lane. Talent aplen was imported. Little, if any, went ou

P. T. Barnum, for example, shell out a small fortune to lure Jenny Lin the Swedish nightingale, to the "cu tural wasteland" that was America.

The same held true of the less purely vocal arts—the theatre, painting or sculpture. To really become an artist you donned a beret in Paris (certainly not around here). As far as the arts were concerned, everything pointed "that-a-way."

Now much of that has chan Americans not only realize w they have at home, but much the rest of the world is curre having its eyes opened to though there are billions who probably go on believing until day they die that Columbus

Aug 23 1956

Group land

ingent of Boston
estra players ard today to pre-rchestra's Euro-

e members and
eft on the S.S. am last week.
up that left Bosyesterday was Kelleher, an or-

d States' Exports

otel, food, and other essential xpenses which keep mounting up he further from home an orchesra goes. A trip to the Far East ould take you into the $300,000 lass.

★ ★ ★

"Any trip of this sort calls for certain amount of financial assistance," Batson explained. "And we usually require some sort of inancial backing in this country. What we do is guarantee he rest so that the Boston Symphony, for example, won't take ny losses and will be sure to reak even after the tour.

★ ★ ★

"If an outfit should make profits n a tour, it has to pay us back or as much as we gave in loans. So far this hasn't happened."

Why? Simply because the American orchestra or other large nusical dance or theater group erforming abroad does so at great isadvantages.

For example, travel expense is igh and against th group from the start. There are oceans that have to be crossed. Another item is the high salaries which American performers are paid—higher than any place else in the world. They have to be maintained.

Since the program's budget is small, naturally every American who would like to toot a flute in Hyderabad doesn't get to go.

In fact, all applicants (and there are many when a government offers to make up the loss) are carefully screened by the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA) before they ever get to Washington for an interview. What's more, only professionals are considered. Amateur groups are not.

This may seem unfair when Dad's a mean man on the keyboard, Mom warbles the ditties like mad and junior marks time with the drums—especially if all three have een dying to go abroad. That's the way it goes . . .

So far, the accent has been on music and the dance, primarily because they speak a universal language without any language barriers.

"We'd like to do more with drama, but our theatre today is terribly expensive anw, of course we have no repertory companies," Batson explained.

★ ★ ★

"Last year we sponsored Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth," in Paris, with Mary Martin and Helen Hayes, and this winter we sponsored "Tea House of the August Moon," in Latin America, with a Spanish speaking cast. We're very interested in expanding this side of the program. We certainly hope to do more."

★ ★ ★

One of the program's best-known cultural ambassadors abroad was Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" with an American Negro cast. In addition, during its brief life span it has sponsored the New York Philharmonic and Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra in tours of Europe, the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra in South America, and the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra in the Far East. Just back from a concert trip through the Middle East and Europe is the famed Robert Shaw Choral Group, while Dizzy Gillespie and a jazz band toured the Middle East and India this Spring. Due to ship out the end of the month or first of September is the New York City Ballet headed for Europe, and the Ballet Theatre, which goes to the Middle East.

But it is to the Boston Symphoney Orchestra that the State Department currently looks with prode. For the B.S.O. will chalk up several firsts for its cultural program and its aims. Porgy and Bess did hit in Russia, but it made that off-shoot under its own steam.

This will be the first time that the State Department has actually been in on the sponsorship of a major cultural event behind the apparently rusting, if not cracking Iron Curtain. What's more, it will be the first time that an American orchestra (to say nothing of the prestige and world fame of the B.S.O.) has played in Russia since its epoch-making Revolution.

★ ★ ★

So you can be sure every note it makes in the U.S.S.R. will be heard as attentively in far-away Washington as by the most enraptured audience to ever sit in the sweet inclosure of Symphony Hall.

★ ★ ★

"Music," they say, "hath charms to soothe the savage beast."

(Next: But is it all worth it? What does it prove?)

[32]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
AUG 23 1956

My Boston

the future of the GOP.

Liberal enough to startle some members of the party's right wing, the President's address will be beamed particularly at the great mass of independent voters. Eisenhower feels must be lured to the Republican banner.

It will espouse the middle-of-the-road philosophy which was the mainstream of Eisenhower's 1952 campaign but with new liberal overtones aimed at building the GOP into a true majority party.

MEETS CANDIDATES

Before going to the Cow Palace for the speech climaxing the Republican convention Eisenhower will meet with a parade of GOP candidates in his hotel suite.

His busy day was to begin with a 9 a. m. (PDT) picture-taking session with 27 congressional contestants, each anxious for a campaign photograph shaking hands with the President.

A group of 13 Senatorial candidates was calling later in the morning on the same mission, and several GOP Gubernatorial nominees were also dropping by.

IN BUOYANT MOOD

Eisenhower was in a buoyant mood last night as he and the First Lady dropped by the centennial ball, where the exhuberant delegates cheered to celebrate his nomination.

Speaking briefly to the assemblage after it finally stopped chanting "We Like Ike," he said with a grin: "we were first met with an apology that the crowd was quite small—that there had been a very hot sort of contest down at the Cow Palace this afternoon that couldn't be decided until the last vote was counted."

Touring serious, he said that just before he left his hotel he had a telephone call from Richard M. Nixon, whose own renomination had been thundered

Convention Schedule

6:30 P.M. (EDT)
Call to order—Permanent Chairman Joseph W. Martin, Jr.
National Anthem.
Invocation.
Introduction of Representatives and Senators.
Address—former Gov. Thornton of Colorado.
Address by Vice Presidential Nominee Richard M. Nixon.
Address by President and Presidential Nominee Dwight D. Eisenhower.
Benediction.

through almost as joyously by the convention as his own. The President said Nixon reported his father was "much better" and that the doctors expected him to be all right.

Eisenhower will take off on a brief rolling holiday on the Monterey peninsula south of San Francisco immediately after his acceptance speech. Traveling by special train, he will be accompanied by the First Lady, a small corps of White House aides and a small army of newsmen.

He plans to remain until Sunday or Monday at the plush Cypress Point Club, which has an ocean front golf course considered one of the nation's finest.

Convention Features

Battelle, Phyllis	43
Bishop, Jim	46
Brown, George Rothwell	16
Connell, Frank	22
Dixon, George	43
Montgomery, Ruth	17
Roper, Woolcroch	43

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MILLBROOK, N. Y.
ROUND TABLE
Circ. W. 673
AUG 23 1956

Boston Symphony Begins Extensive European Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has begun its August-September tour of thirteen European countries under the musical direction of Charles Munch, with Pierre Monteux as guest conductor at ten of the twenty-seven concerts which are scheduled for nineteen cities in the British Isles and on the Continent.

The orchestra's home city of Boston gave an official send-off on August 13 the eve of departure by chartered plane and by ship for the first concerts in Ireland on August 24 and 25. The day following the completion of the orchestra's busy summer schedule at its annual Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, a City Hall reception, presided over by Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack, witnessed the presentation to Pierre Monteux of an ebony baton encrusted with gold, the flag of the city, and autographed copies of an official book about Boston to be presented to mayors of cities abroad.

When the orchestra assembles in Cork on the eve of its first concert in that Eire city, a buffet supper will be tendered its conductor, managers, trustees, personnel and wives by Henry Laughlin, Boston publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Company at Castle Hyde, his summer home in nearby Fermoy, County Cork.

The orchestra will give concerts also in Stockholm, Berne and in Moscow, marking the first time an American orchestra has ever performed in the Russian capital. London will be the scene of the finale of the Boston Symphony's tour. Receptions will be held in their honor and they will be welcomed by the United States Ambassador as they perform in the various cities.

The Boston Symphony's Europe tour is made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the agency appointed by the United States Department to facilitate travel abroad by American performing artists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
AUG 19 1956

Traveler Aug 23 '56

Symphony Group Flies to Ireland

A second contingent of Boston Symphony Orchestra players arrived in Ireland today to prepare for the orchestra's European tour.

Some of the members and their wives left on the S.S. Nieuw Amsterdam last week.

With the group that left Boston Airport yesterday was Michael T. Kelleher, an or-

Culture One of Hottest of United States' Exports

By EDWARD J. DRISCOLL

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra sailed out of Boston this past week amid the not too musically demanding strains of "Auld Lang Syne," it pointed up a most happy fact:

Culture's getting to be one of the hottest commodities the United States is shipping abroad these days.

Time was, when this was strictly a one-way shipping lane. Talent aplenty was imported. Little, if any, went out.

P. T. Barnum, for example, shelled out a small fortune to lure Jenny Lind, the Swedish nightingale, to the "cultural wasteland" that was America.

The same held true of the less purely vocal arts—the theatre, painting or sculpture. To really become an artist you donned a beret in Paris (certainly not around here). As far as the arts were concerned, everything pointed "that-a-way."

Now much of that has changed. Americans not only realize what they have at home, but much of the rest of the world is currently having its eyes opened too—though there are billions who will probably go on believing until the day they die that Columbus' discovery of America marked the world's biggest cultural mistake.

★ ★ ★

The fact that Americans, no less than their contemporaries to East or West, do not live by bread alone (calory-less or vitaminized to be sure) seems to be taking the world by storm.

★ ★ ★

So much so, in fact, that even the government has belatedly gotten hep to the fact.

Two years ago, the President's Special International Program for cultural exchanges got underway with a $2,250,000 budget under auspices of the State Department. The first day of this month—as one of the last acts of the 84th Congress—it was written into law as the U.S. Cultural Presentation Program. The budget remains the same.

And it is under this program that the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra is making its current tour.

This isn't the first time the B.S.O. has gone abroad. It made a highly successful swing around Europe in 1952, winning standing ovations wherever it played.

But that trip was underwritten by private funds. This time the government makes up the deficit any such tour is bound to incur.

How much? Neither the State Department nor the orchestra itself yet knows. There's time enough when the orchestra gets back to Boston, all the bills are in and the receipts for paid concerts are checked off against them.

But Douglas Batson, director of the State Department's Cultural Presentation Program, says the deficits for large orchestras on tour overseas can run from $50,000 to $300,000, depending, naturally enough, on where the orchestra goes, how much it makes in gate receipts, etc. Salaries, remain the same. It is the transportation, hotel, food, and other essential expenses which keep mounting up the further from home an orchestra goes. A trip to the Far East could take you into the $300,000 class.

★ ★ ★

"Any trip of this sort calls for a certain amount of financial assistance," Batson explained. "And we usually reguire some sort of financial backing in this country. What we do is guarantee the rest so that the Boston Symphony, for example, won't take any losses and will be sure to break even after the tour.

★ ★ ★

"If an outfit should make profits on a tour, it has to pay us back for as much as we gave in loans. So far this hasn't happened."

Why? Simply because the American orchestra or other large musical dance or theater group performing abroad does so at great disadvantages.

For example, travel expense is high and against th group from the start. There are oceans that have to be crossed. Another item is the high salaries which American performers are paid—higher than any place else in the world. They have to be maintained.

Since the program's budget is small, naturally every American who would like to toot a flute in Hyderabad doesn't get to go.

In fact, all applicants (and there are many when a government offers to make up the loss) are carefully screened by the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA) before they ever get to Washington for an interview. What's more, only professionals are considered. Amateur groups are not.

This may seem unfair when Dad's a mean man on the keyboard, Mom warbles the ditties like mad and junior marks time with the drums—especially if all three have een dying to go abroad. That's the way it goes . . .

So far, the accent has been on music and the dance, primarily because they speak a universal language without any language barriers.

"We'd like to do more with drama, but our theatre today is terribly expensive anw, of course we have no repertory companies," Batson explained.

★ ★ ★

"Last year we sponsored Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth," in Paris, with Mary Martin and Helen Hayes, and this winter we sponsored "Tea House of the August Moon," in Latin America, with a Spanish speaking cast. We're very interested in expanding this side of the program. We certainly hope to do more."

★ ★ ★

One of the program's best-known cultural ambassadors abroad was Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" with an American Negro cast. In addition, during its brief life span it has sponsored the New York Philharmonic and Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra in tours of Europe, the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra in South America, and the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra in the Far East. Just back from a concert trip through the Middle East and Europe is the famed Robert Shaw Choral Group, while Dizzy Gillespie and a jazz band toured the Middle East and India this Spring. Due to ship out the end of the month or first of September is the New York City Ballet headed for Europe, and the Ballet Theatre, which goes to the Middle East.

But it is to the Boston Symphoney Orchestra that the State Department currently looks with prode. For the B.S.O. will chalk up several firsts for its cultural program and its aims. Porgy and Bess did hit in Russia, but it made that off-shoot under its own steam.

This will be the first time that the State Department has actually been in on the sponsorship of a major cultural event behind the apparently rusting, if not cracking Iron Curtain. What's more, it will be the first time that an American orchestra (to say nothing of the prestige and world fame of the B.S.O.) has played in Russia since its epoch-making Revolution.

★ ★ ★

So you can be sure every note it makes in the U.S.S.R. will be heard as attentively in far-away Washington as by the most enraptured audience to ever sit in the sweet inclosure of Symphony Hall.

★ ★ ★

"Music," they say, "hath charms to soothe the savage beast."

(Next: But is it all worth it? What does it prove?)

[32]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973
AUG 23 1956

My Boston

Convention Schedule

6:30 P.M. (EDT)
Call to order—Permanent Chairman Joseph W. Martin, Jr.
National Anthem.
Invocation.
Introduction of Representatives and Senators.
Address—former Gov. Thornton of Colorado.
Address by Vice Presidential Nominee Richard M. Nixon.
Address by President and Presidential Nominee Dwight D. Eisenhower.
Benediction.

through almost as joyously by the convention as his own. The President said Nixon reported his father was "much better" and that the doctors expected him to be all right.

Eisenhower will take off on a brief rolling holiday on the Monterey peninsula south of San Francisco immediately after his acceptance speech. Traveling by special train, he will be accompanied by the First Lady, a small corps of White House aides and a small army of newsmen.

He plans to remain until Sunday or Monday at the plush Cypress Point Club, which has an ocean front golf course considered one of the nation's finest.

Convention Features

Battelle, Phyllis 43
Bishop, Jim 48
Brown, George Rothwell 16
Connilff, Frank 22
Dixon, George 43
Montgomery, Ruth 17
Fetter, Weatherson 43

the future of the GOP.

Liberal enough to startle some members of the party's right wing, the President's address will be beamed particularly at the great mass of independent voters. Eisenhower feels must be lured to the Republican banner.

It will espouse the middle-of-the-road philosophy which was the mainstream of Eisenhower's 1952 campaign but with new liberal overtones aimed at building the GOP into a true majority party.

MEETS CANDIDATES

Before going to the Cow Palace for the speech climaxing the Republican convention Eisenhower will meet with a parade of GOP candidates in his hotel suite.

His busy day was to begin with a 9 a. m. (PDT) picture-taking session with 27 congressional contestants, each anxious for a campaign photograph shaking hands with the President.

A group of 13 Senatorial candidates was calling later in the morning on the same mission, and several GOP Gubernatorial nominees were also dropping by.

IN BUOYANT MOOD

Eisenhower was in a buoyant mood last night as he and the First Lady dropped by the centennial ball, where the exhuberant delegates cheered to celebrate his nomination.

Speaking briefly to the assemblage after it finally stopped chanting "We Like Ike," he said with a grin: "we were first met with an apology that the crowd was quite small—that there had been a very hot sort of contest down at the Cow Palace this afternoon that couldn't be decided until the last vote was counted."

Turning serious, he said that just before he left his hotel he had a telephone call from Richard M. Nixon, whose own renomination had been thundered

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MILLBROOK, N. Y.
ROUND TABLE
Circ. W. 673
AUG 23 1956

Boston Symphony Begins Extensive European Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has begun its August-September tour of thirteen European countries under the musical direction of Charles Munch, with Pierre Monteux as guest conductor at ten of the twenty-seven concerts which are scheduled for nineteen cities in the British Isles and on the Continent.

The orchestra's home city of Boston gave an official send-off on August 13 the eve of departure by chartered plane and by ship for the first concerts in Ireland on August 24 and 25. The day following the completion of the orchestra's busy summer schedule at its annual Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, a City Hall reception, presided over by Acting Mayor Edward J. McCormack, witnessed the presentation to Pierre Monteux of an ebony baton encrusted with gold, the flag of the city, and autographed copies of an official book about Boston to be presented to mayors of cities abroad.

When the orchestra assembles in Cork on the eve of its first concert in that Eire city, a buffet supper will be tendered its conductor, managers, trustees, personnel and wives by Henry Laughlin, Boston publisher of Houghton, Mifflin Company at Castle Hyde, his summer home in nearby Fermoy, County Cork.

The orchestra will give concerts also in Stockholm, Berne and in Moscow, marking the first time an American orchestra has ever performed in the Russian capital. London will be the scene of the finale of the Boston Symphony's tour. Receptions will be held in their honor and they will be welcomed by the United States Ambassador as they perform in the various cities.

The Boston Symphony's Europe tour is made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the agency appointed by the United States Department to facilitate travel abroad by American performing artists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
AUG 19 1956

Traveler Aug 23 '56

Symphony Group Flies to Ireland

A second contingent of Boston Symphony Orchestra players arrived in Ireland today to prepare for the orchestra's European tour.

Some of the members and their wives left on the S.S. Nieuw Amsterdam last week.

With the group that left Boston Airport yesterday was Michael T. Kelleher, an orchestra trustee. He will address the audience tomorrow evening when the first concert is given in Cork.

Anderson's "Eire Suite" will be a feature of the program.

The orchestra will give several concerts in Russia, starting in Leningrad Sept. 6.

Cult

Cabrillo Monument at San Diego Mecca for Tourists

When th of Boston th

The same hel purely vocal painting or scu become an arti
beret in Paris around here).
were concerned,
ed "that-a-way."

Cabrillo National Monument, ituated on the tip of Point Loma verlooking the City of San Diego, s visited by more persons each ear than any other of the 83 national monuments in the United States.

Designated a national monument in 1913 by Presidential proclamation, the Cabriello National Monument commemorates the discovery of the coast of California by Juan Rodriquez Cabrillo on Sept. 28, 1542.

Cabrillo's landfall at Point Loma, on which the national monument is located, and his entrance and landing in San Diego Bay, presumably at what is now Ballast Point, mark the first contact of Europeans with this part of the world.

The monument grounds, located 400 feet high on a steep and rugged bluff at the entrance to San Diego's famed harbor, affords a majestic view of the ocean, bays, islands, mountains, foothills, valleys and plains which surround the city.

Attendance at the monument reached a new high in 1954 of over 803,000 persons surpassing that of its closest contender, New York's Statue of Liberty.

In addition to the marvelous view, acknowledged by many as one of the three finest in the world, the grounds contain the Old Spanish Lighthouse, built in 1885; a memorial plaque, and, a statue of Juan Rodriquez Cabrillo. The statue, presented to this country by Portugal, was first dedicated in San Diego in 1942. It was rededicated at its present site on Sept. 28, 1949.

Just 10 miles from downtown San Diego, the monument can be reached by following Chatsworth Boulevard from its junction with Rosecrans st. to Catalina Boulevard and south to the monument site.

Weirs Beach Presents Exciting Events This Week

WEIRS BEACH, N. H.—Ed Hoagland and Al Favreau, co-directors of the Weirs Beach Publicity Bureau, announce that today at 4 p.m., the 133d Fighter Interceptor Squadron will put on a jet air show over the beach. At 6 p.m. a barbershop quartet will be featured at the new Weirs Beach bandstand.

Other events include the Capitol Band from Concord, Monday at 8 p.m.; the 100-piece U.S. Army Band, Wednesday, Aug. 22; Bob Hall's orchestra, Sunday, Aug. 26; aerial fireworks Sunday, Sept. 2 at 10 p.m.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

E at it's BEST ampshire
VACATION GUIDE

Book

Best Sellers

FICTION

"Don't Go Near the
by William Brinkley.
"The Last Hurrah," by O'Connor.
"A Thing of Beauty," b
Cronin.
"The Mandarins," by de Beauvoir.
"A Single Pebble," by Hersey.

NONFICTION

"Eisenhower The Story," by Robert J. Don
"Profiles in Courage," b
F. Kennedy.
"The Birth of Britain," Winston S. Churchill.
"Arthritis and Co
Sense," by D. D. Alexand

[32]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 9,000

AUG 23 1956

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371

Around the Town WITH BABS

The last lovely summer days seem to be speeding by, and judging by the fabulous fall fashions displayed in the stores, the time for indoor fun is just around the corner.

Gorgeous gowns and happy smiles shared the spotlight at the Sidney Hill Country Club last Saturday night when the Philip Colemans of Chestnut Hill entertained at a soiree and 'souper de minuit'. . . . some of the couples seen raising their rosebud-wreathed champagne glasses in midnight toasts were Newtonites Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Greenbaum, the Alexander Tangers, the Herb Sterns, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Karofsky, the Sidney Turins, and the Samuel Myers . . . Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shulman and the Norman Rogers both came in from Swampscott, the Edward McCormacks from Boston, and Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Shapiro of Brookline.

* * *

Mid-August merry-making was at its height last week-end when Mr. and Mrs. Hyman Sherman held a garden barbecue at their home in Chestnut Hill . . . the gathering was a farewell party in honor of Mrs. Sherman's nephew and his wife, the David Brody's of Boston, who are moving to Florida, and the sweet sixteenth birthday of Vivian Jaffee, the Sherman's niece, who is visiting them from Philadelphia . . . among those relaxing on the lawn and enjoying the special flavor of food spiced with laughter were the David Shifmans, Mrs. Lillian Goldstein, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Willis, and Mrs. Jean Brody, all of Brookline, the Arthur Geromes of Brighton and Mr. and Mrs. Hyman Gordon of Milton. . . . the Misses Sarah and Ellen Sherman were captivating hostesses . . . The cha-cha is really the rage these days, and some of the rhythm-conscious couples at the Blue Hills Country Club are the Irving Hellers of Brookline, Dr. and Mrs. Edward Frye of Boston and Mr. and Mrs. William Barenberg of Newton.

* * *

Wedding bells rang sweetly last week when Leona Feldman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George I. Feldman of Newton, exchanged vows with Gerald Curhan, son of the Edward Curhans of Gloucester . . . the scene at Temple Emanuel was a symphony of pink, with the bride's sister Dorothy a beautiful maid of honor and Ronald Curhan, brother of the groom, a handsome best man . . . among the guests wishing the couple joy as they left for their honeymoon in the Catskills were Mr. and Mrs. Max Epstein of Brighton and Brooklineites Mr. and Mrs. Milton Stromberg, the Benjamin Rubins, the Frank Kozols, Mr. and Mrs. David Silver, the Samuel Levitts and Mr. and Mrs. Morris Schultz. . . . Edward Blinder, son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Blinder of Brookline was greeted with happy hellos when he came home last week after attending summer school at the Bordentown Military Institute in New Jersey . . . the end of August really spells special vacation time for Ed.

* * *

Co-hosts at a colorful cocktail par- Paul . . . were Mr. and Mrs. My- . . . weiss and the Noel Espars, both of Newton . . . Muriel King of Brookline and Dr. Sidney Wilker, also of Brookline, were guests of honor and the toast of the day was to their engagement . . . some of the couples gathered to give them best wishes were the Mark Slessingers of Chestnut Hill, the Calvin Steinbergs, Dr. and Mrs. Harold Karlin, Dr. and Mrs. Waldo Fielding and Dr. and Mrs. Elliot Sagall, all of Newton, and Mr. and Mrs. Chester Fales of Norwood . . . Home one day and back the next was close to the truth for Ensign Richard Holzman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Holzman of Newton . . . he and his wife have gone to California after his one week's leave and visit with his family . . . he's just returned from a tour of duty with the Navy in Korea and Japan.

* * *

Informality is the fashion these lazy August days, and those present at the delightful cook-out given by Mr. and Mrs. John Fink of Chestnut Hill were certainly a relaxed and happy group . . . among the Newtonites were Mr. and Mrs. Sam Gilman and the Barney Kanes . . . the Edward Goodmans, Harry Claymans and Hank Barbers were all from Chestnut Hill, and the Matthew Krassners were present from Brookline . . . Anniversary congratulations are in order this week, and two celebrations share Babs' spotlight . . . Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Small of Brookline toasted thirty-five years of nuptial bliss, and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Paul of Springfield, son and daughter-in-law of Mrs. Bess Paul of Brookline, passed their paper anniversary (one year of happiness) last Monday.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra left yesterday on its much-heralded tour of Europe and the Soviet Union, and Samuel Diamond of Brookline was really looking forward to the trip . . . he is planning to meet Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lerner at their home in Paris . . . the Lerners have been visiting Boston as guests of the Diamonds and the

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

DEPARTURE

Chronicle
NEEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,915

AUG 30 1956

—o—

Mr. and Mrs. Jean Cauhap of Main Street flew to Europ Mr. Cauhape is a member of the Boston Symphony Orche tra and was in Lenox, Mass for six weeks with the Bosto Symphony before going to Eu rope.

—o—

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

AUG 23 1956

MUSIC IN THE AIR—The last group of Boston Symphony Orchestra members left Logan Airport yesterday for Ireland, where they will rejoin associates for European tour. Dolph C. Bulterman (left), district manager of Royal Dutch Airlines, wishes Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, bon voyage. Also in picture are Richard Burgin, associate conductor, and Theodore K. Herbert, Dutch consul (right).

Last Contingent Of Symphony Flies To Europe for Tour

The final contingent of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left Logan Airport yesterday afternoon on its second European tour which includes concerts in Russia.

Fifty-nine persons, headed by associate conductor Richard Burgin, boarded the chartered, four-engine Royal Dutch Airline Constellation bound for Shannon, Ireland.

The group included members of the orchestra, their wives and orchestra staff members.

The assembled 120-piece Boston Symphony orchestra will make their debut in Cork, Ireland. Former Fire Commissioner Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, will make the opening address.

They then will journey to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris and Chartres.

The group will recross the English Channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
Women's Wear Daily
Circ. D. 46,618

AUG 21 1956

3 GROUPS LEAVING THIS WEEK UNDER ANTA EXCHANGE

The New York City Ballet Com- f the and leave tour ex- Rob- the ional

Newsy Notes Rounded Up for Your Week-End Study

State Board of Accountancy, believes his lucky number is three. His certificate was No. 2733. His father's CPA certificate, won 33 years ago, was No. 333 (that was in 1923). Papa Martin and Donald have offices in the Standard Bldg.

TICKET REPORT: This department's efforts to get baseball tickets for hospitalized veterans at Crile and Brecksville hit the jackpot this week.

The Cleveland Assn. of Plymouth Dealers, headed by Walter Stearns, provided 100 tickets to be used at any Indian game (day or night) the season closes.

he lawyer, for the fifth con- providing 45 youngsters with the Aug. 16th Detroit-Indians dium. Besides reserved seats providing 50 cents each for s year the children are from Home for Boys, the Good- ment, and the Jewish Com-long, is tur rgently need Abraham Posners of Malden . . . A vacation week at The Concord in the Catskills added a happy note to lovely summer for Brooklineites Mr and Mrs. Albert Resnick and the Harold Warrens . . . Mr. and Mrs. Al Baker of Brookline proved their prowess by winning a dance contest while they were there.

'enzler, C. Wil nd lawyer, took ent show meet Ohio. Krenzler n the film to vision viewers postcards from n her European Mother of Eng dsor Castle.

now third oboe rrently playing a Tanglewood) for its Russian with the Cleve- estra from 1933 olks on Ardoon w. . . . Singer Hospital after

McQuilkin, who week from the

WRONG TURN: Mrs. Barney (Janet) Killian of 4772 W. 20th St. broke in her new car early this week, took it to Detroit. On her way back to Cleveland day before yesterday she turned right instead of left, ended up in Chicago. She got home okay yesterday, though.

The HALO OF THE WEEK goes to Architect George Baker Mayer, long active in civic and architectural affairs in Greater Cleveland. When the American Institute of Architects this summer bestowed on Mayer a fellowship for public service, they picked the right Clevelander for the honor. Not only has he been a distinguished practioner of his profession, but he has consistently worked for public and civic betterment. He is a member of the City Plan Commission, the Mental Hospital Commission, was veep of the City Club and a trustee of Goodrich Settlement House.

make its debut in Cork, Ireland.

It then will journey to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris and Chartres.

The group will recross the English channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

h Symphony

(Photo)

NT ROLE in the European pony Orchestra is Michael T. e famed musical group. He is shown above as he left Boston Airport aboard a Royal Dutch Airplines plane. From left to right, Dolf C. Bulterman, manager of Royal Dutch Airlines; Theodore K. Hebert, Dutch consul; Miss Mary Smith, secretary to the orchestra; Kelleher, Roger Voison, first trumpet, and Irmgard Richter, airline hostess.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

AUG 23 1956

Second Symphony Group Takes Off For European Tour

(Picture Page 34)

A second group of 57 Boston Symphony players and their wives, and Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee, took off for Ireland yesterday and Kelleher said he's looking forward to hearing the "Eire Suite" at the first concert in Cork.

Today the symphony will be guests of Henry Loughlin of Houghton Mifflin Company at an evening reception at his summer residence, Castle Hyde. Tomorrow evening they give the first concert of their European tour at the Savoy Theater in Cork.

Kelleher will address the audience at the concert. The orchestra's first concert in Russia will be Sept. 6 in Leningrad.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 9,000

AUG 23 1956

Arou the T

The last lovely summer days seem to be speeding by, shions displayed in the stores, the time for indoor fun is ju

Gorgeous gowns and happy smiles shared the spotlight at the Sidney Hill Country Club last urday night when the Philip C mans of Chestnut Hill enterta at a soiree and 'souper de min . . . some of the couples seen ing their rosebud-wreathed ch pagne glasses in midnight to were Newtonites Mr. and Mrs. seph Greenbaum, the Alexa Tangers, the Herb Sterns, Mr. Mrs. Mark Karofsky, the Sid Turins, and the Samuel Myers Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shulman the Norman Rogers both cam from Swampscott, the Edward Cormacks from Boston, and and Mrs. Harvey Shapiro of Br line.

* * *

Mid-August merry-making wa its height last week-end when and Mrs. Hyman Sherman he garden barbecue at their hom Chestnut Hill . . . the gathering a farewell party in honor of Sherman's nephew and his wife David Brody's of Boston, who moving to Florida, and the swee teenth birthday of Vivian Jaffee Sherman's niece, who is vis them from Philadelphia . . . a those relaxing on the lawn an joying the special flavor of spiced with laughter were the I Shifmans, Mrs. Lillian Goldstein

Co-hosts were Mr. and Mrs. Myerss and the Noel Espars, both of Newton . . . Muriel King of Brookline and Dr. Sidney Wilker, also of Brookline, were guests of honor and the toast of the day was to their engagement . . . some of the couples gathered to give them best wishes were the Mark Slessingers of Chest-

DEPARTURE
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
NEEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,915

AUG 30 1956

—o—

Mr. and Mrs. Jean Cauhap of Main Street flew to Europ Mr. Cauhape is a member o the Boston Symphony Orche tra and was in Lenox, Mass for six weeks with the Bosto Symphony before going to Eu rope.

—o—

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
Circ. D. 314,247

AUG 4 1956

Sights and Sounds—
Milt Widder

CLEANING PROBLEM: George J. Schmidtunser of 2314 Althen Ave., 74-year-old retired road builder, called to say he is impressed with this corner's drive to get the Cleveland Trust's downtown office building cleaned. But, he asks, "how about the Gold Star Mothers' granite boulder on Public Square in front of Hotel Cleveland?"

The boulder, about six feet long, is turning green, he reports, and urgently needs cleaning, too.

Schmidtunser has a special interest in the granite because it was he with the help of the late Fred G. Robinson of the city's engineering department who was responsible for hauling the stone to the square. It was done during WPA days, when he was foreman on the East Shoreway job. The boulder was excavated from that roadway.

SHORTIES: Alvin (Bud) Krenzler, C. William O'Neill's campaign chief and lawyer, took 1500 feet of movies of the 10 tent show meetings O'Neil held throughout Ohio. Krenzler (an amateur) is cutting down the film to 400 feet to be shown for television viewers. . . . Alberta Clarke Woolhouse postcards from Paris that her greatest thrill on her European jaunt was to meet the Queen Mother of England at the Rose Show in Windsor Castle.

John Holmes, ex-Clevelander now third oboe with the Boston Symphony (currently playing at the Berkshire Festivals in Tanglewood) leaves with that band Aug. 22 for its Russian tour. John was oboe soloist with the Cleveland Heights High champ orchestra from 1933 through 1936. He'll visit his folks on Ardoon Rd. before leaving for Moscow. . . . Singer Paul Bruno out of St. Luke's Hospital after a minor operation.

LUCKY THREES: Donald McQuilkin, who got his CPA certificate this week from the State Board of Accountancy, believes his lucky number is three. His certificate was No. 2733. His father's CPA certificate, won 33 years ago, was No. 333 (that was in 1923). Papa Martin and Donald have offices in the Standard Bldg.

TICKET REPORT: This department's efforts to get baseball tickets for hospitalized veterans at Crile and Brecksville hit the jackpot this week.

The Cleveland Assn. of Plymouth Dealers, headed by Walter Stearns, provided 100 tickets to be used at any Indian game (day or night) from now until the season closes.

Abe Dudnik, the lawyer, for the fifth consecutive year, is providing 45 youngsters with tickets to attend the Aug. 16th Detroit-Indians game at the Stadium. Besides reserved seats Dudnik is also providing 50 cents each for refreshments. This year the children are from the St. Anthony Home for Boys, the Goodrich Social Settlement, and the Jewish Community Centers.

WRONG TURN: Mrs. Barney (Janet) Killian of 4772 W. 20th St. broke in her new car early this week, took it to Detroit. On her way back to Cleveland day before yesterday she turned right instead of left, ended up in Chicago. She got home okay yesterday, though.

The HALO OF THE WEEK goes to Architect George Baker Mayer, long active in civic and architectural affairs in Greater Cleveland. When the American Institute of Architects this summer bestowed on Mayer a fellowship for public service, they picked the right Clevelander for the honor. Not only has he been a distinguished practioner of his profession, but he has consistently worked for public and civic betterment. He is a member of the City Plan Commission, the Mental Hospital Commission, was veep of the City Club and a trustee of Goodrich Settlement House.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
Women's Wear Daily
Circ. D. 46,618

AUG 21 1956

Newsy Notes Rounded Up for Your Week-End Study

3 GROUPS LEAVING THIS WEEK UNDER ANTA EXCHANGE

The New York City Ballet Com- the and leave tour ex- tob- the nal day ro- m- a on- ri- to of

make its debut in Cork, Ireland.

It then will journey to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris and Chartres.

The group will recross the English channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

AUG 23 1956

MUSIC IN THE AIR—The last group of Boston Symphony Orchestra members left Logan Airport yesterday for Ireland, where they will rejoin associates for European tour. Dolph C. Bulterman (left), district manager of Royal Dutch Airlines, wishes Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, bon voyage. Also in picture are Richard Burgin, associate conductor, and Theodore K. Herbert, Dutch consul (right).

Last Contingent Of Symphony Flies To Europe for Tour

The final contingent of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left Logan Airport yesterday afternoon on its second European tour which includes concerts in Russia.

Fifty-nine persons, headed by associate conductor Richard Burgin, boarded the chartered, four-engine Royal Dutch Airline Constellation bound for Shannon, Ireland.

The group included members of the orchestra, their wives and orchestra staff members.

The assembled 120-piece Boston Symphony orchestra will make their debut in Cork, Ireland. Former Fire Commissioner Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, will make the opening address.

They then will journey to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris and Chartres.

The group will recross the English Channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

AUG 28 1956

On Tour with Symphony

(UP Photo)

PLAYING A PROMINENT ROLE in the European tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Michael T. Kelleher, a trustees of the famed musical group. He is shown above as he left Boston Airport aboard a Royal Dutch Airplines plane. From left to right, Dolf C. Bulterman, manager of Royal Dutch Airlines; Theodore K. Hebert, Dutch consul; Miss Mary Smith, secretary to the orchestra; Kelleher, Roger Voison, first trumpet, and Irmgard Richter, airline hostess.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

AUG 23 1956

Second Symphony Group Takes Off For European Tour

(Picture Page 34)

A second group of 57 Boston Symphony players and their wives, and Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee, took off for Ireland yesterday and Kelleher said he's looking forward to hearing the "Eire Suite" at the first concert in Cork.

Today the symphony will be guests of Henry Loughlin of Houghton Mifflin Company at an evening reception at his summer residence, Castle Hyde. Tomorrow evening they give the first concert of their European tour at the Savoy Theater in Cork.

Kelleher will address the audience at the concert. The orchestra's first concert in Russia will be Sept. 6 in Leningrad.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 9,000

AUG 23 1956

Arou[illegible] the T[illegible]

The last lovely summer days seem to be speeding by, [illegible] shions displayed in the stores, the time for indoor fun is ju[illegible]

Gorgeous gowns and happy smiles shared the spotlight at the Sidney Hill Country Club last [illegible] urday night when the Philip C[illegible] mans of Chestnut Hill entertai[illegible] at a soiree and 'souper de min[illegible] . . . some of the couples seen [illegible] ing their rosebud-wreathed ch[illegible] pagne glasses in midnight to[illegible] were Newtonites Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] seph Greenbaum, the Alexan[illegible] Tangers, the Herb Sterns, Mr. [illegible] Mrs. Mark Karofsky, the Sid[illegible] Turins, and the Samuel Myers [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shulman [illegible] the Norman Rogers both came [illegible] from Swampscott, the Edward [illegible] Cormacks from Boston, and [illegible] and Mrs. Harvey Shapiro of Br[illegible] line.

* * *

Mid-August merry-making wa[illegible] its height last week-end when [illegible] and Mrs. Hyman Sherman he[illegible] garden barbecue at their hom[illegible] Chestnut Hill . . . the gathering [illegible] a farewell party in honor of [illegible] Sherman's nephew and his wife [illegible] David Brody's of Boston, who [illegible] moving to Florida, and the swee[illegible] teenth birthday of Vivian Jaffee [illegible] Sherman's niece, who is vis[illegible] them from Philadelphia . . . a[illegible] those relaxing on the lawn and [illegible] joying the special flavor of [illegible] spiced with laughter were the I[illegible] Shifmans, Mrs. Lillian Goldstein [illegible]

Co-hosts [illegible] were Mr. and Mrs. My-[illegible] weiss and the Noel Espars, both of Newton . . . Muriel King of Brook-line and Dr. Sidney Wilker, also of Brookline, were guests of honor and the toast of the day was to their engagement . . . some of the couples gathered to give them best wishes were the Mark Sleesinegers of Chest-[illegible]

DEPARTURE
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
NEEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,915

AUG 30 1956

—o—

Mr. and Mrs. Jean Cauhap[illegible] of Main Street flew to Europ[illegible] Mr. Cauhape is a member [illegible] the Boston Symphony Orche[illegible] tra and was in Lenox, Mass [illegible] for six weeks with the Bosto[illegible] Symphony before going to Eu[illegible] rope.

—o—

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
Circ. D. 314,247

AUG 4 1956

Sights and S[illegible]

Milt Wid[illegible]

CLEANING PR[illegible] George J. Schmi[illegible] 2314 Althen Ave., [illegible] retired road build[illegible] say he is impress[illegible] corner's drive [illegible] Cleveland Trust[illegible] office building [illegible] he asks, "how a[illegible] Star Mothers' gr[illegible] on Public Squa[illegible] Hotel Cleveland [illegible]

The boulder, [illegible] ing green, he[illegible] cleaning, too.

Schmidtunse[illegible] granite becau[illegible] the late Fred[illegible] neering depa[illegible] hauling the [illegible] during WPA [illegible] the East Sh[illegible] cavated fro[illegible]

SHORTI[illegible] liam O'Neil[illegible] 1500 feet o[illegible] ings O'Ne[illegible] (an amat[illegible] 400 feet [illegible] . . . Alber[illegible] Paris tha[illegible] jaunt wa[illegible] land at [illegible]

John [illegible] with the [illegible] at the [illegible] leaves [illegible] tour. J[illegible] land H[illegible] throug[illegible] Rd. b[illegible] Paul [illegible] a mi[illegible]

LU[illegible] got [illegible]

Newsy [illegible]p for You[illegible]

State Board o[illegible] lucky number [illegible] No. 2733. His f[illegible] 33 years ago, wa[illegible] Papa Martin an[illegible] Standard Bldg.

TICKET REP[illegible] forts to get ba[illegible] veterans at Cri[illegible] pot this week.

The Cleveland [illegible] headed by Walte[illegible] to be used at an[illegible] from now until [illegible]

Abe Dudnik, [illegible] secutive year, is [illegible] tickets to attend [illegible] game at the St[illegible] Dudnik is also [illegible] refreshments. T[illegible] the St. Anthon[illegible] rich Social Set[illegible] munity Centers [illegible]

WRONG TU[illegible] lian of 4772 W. [illegible] early this wee[illegible] way back to C[illegible] she turned rig[illegible] Chicago. She go[illegible]

The HALO [illegible] tect George Ba[illegible] and architectur[illegible] When the Am[illegible] and civic bett[illegible] City Plan Co[illegible] Commission, w[illegible] trustee of Go[illegible]

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
Women's Wear Daily
Circ. D. 46,618

AUG 21 1956

3 GROUPS LEAVING THIS WEEK UNDER ANTA EXCHANGE

The New York City Ballet Company, the final segment of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and cellist Gregor Piatigorsky leave this week on a world-wide tour under ANTA's international exchange program, according to Robert W. Dowling, chairman of the board of the American National Theatre and Academy.

The ballet group leaves today for a 14-week tour of eight European countries; the Boston symphony group leaves tomorrow on a similar tour that will include concerts in the U. S. S. R., and on Friday, Mr. Piatigorsky will travel to the Far East to give a series of cello recitals.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 13,357

AUG 23 1956

Last Hub Symphony Unit Off to Europe

BOSTON — The final contingent of the Boston Symphony orchestra left Logan airport yesterday afternoon on its second European tour which includes concerts in Russia.

Fifty-nine persons, headed by associate conductor Richard Burgin, boarded the chartered, four-engine Royal Dutch Airline Constellation, bound for Shannon, Ireland.

The group included members of the orchestra, their wives and orchestra staff members.

The assembled 120-piece Boston Symphony orchestra will make its debut in Cork, Ireland.

It then will journey to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris and Chartres.

The group will recross the English channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

AUG 23 1956

MUSIC IN THE AIR—The last group of Boston Symphony Orchestra members left Logan Airport yesterday for Ireland, where they will rejoin associates for European tour. Dolph C. Bulterman (left), district manager of Royal Dutch Airlines, wishes Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, bon voyage. Also in picture are Richard Burgin, associate conductor, and Theodore K. Herbert, Dutch consul (right).

Last Contingent Of Symphony Flies To Europe for Tour

The final contingent of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left Logan Airport yesterday afternoon on its second European tour which includes concerts in Russia.

Fifty-nine persons, headed by associate conductor Richard Burgin, boarded the chartered, four-engine Royal Dutch Airline Constellation bound for Shannon, Ireland.

The group included members of the orchestra, their wives and orchestra staff members.

The assembled 120-piece Boston Symphony orchestra will make their debut in Cork, Ireland. Former Fire Commissioner Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, will make the opening address.

They then will journey to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris and Chartres.

The group will recross the English Channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

AUG 28 1956

On Tour with Symphony

(UP Photo)

PLAYING A PROMINENT ROLE in the European tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Michael T. Kelleher, a trustees of the famed musical group. He is shown above as he left Boston Airport aboard a Royal Dutch Airplines plane. From left to right, Dolf C. Bulterman, manager of Royal Dutch Airlines; Theodore K. Hebert, Dutch consul; Miss Mary Smith, secretary to the orchestra; Kelleher, Roger Voison, first trumpet, and Irmgard Richter, airline hostess.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

AUG 23 1956

Second Symphony Group Takes Off For European Tour

(Picture Page 34)

A second group of 57 Boston Symphony players and their wives, and Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee, took off for Ireland yesterday and Kelleher said he's looking forward to hearing the "Eire Suite" at the first concert in Cork.

Today the symphony will be guests of Henry Loughlin of Houghton Mifflin Company at an evening reception at his summer residence, Castle Hyde. Tomorrow evening they give the first concert of their European tour at the Savoy Theater in Cork.

Kelleher will address the audience at the concert. The orchestra's first concert in Russia will be Sept. 6 in Leningrad.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

AUG 23 1956

SYMPHONY, SECOND SECTION—A second group of 57 Boston Symphony players and their wives took off yesterday for Shannon. Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concert master, third from right, poses t to right, Ralph Gomberg, l Mayes, Mrs. Stagliano, d Roger Voisin. They will l for European concerts.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

CLEVELAND- OHIO PRESS

AUG 29 1956

Winsor French

SS NIEUW AMSTERDAM: Bright and early on the first morning out we were at Boston, an unlikely call this ship makes once a year.

Coming aboard were Archbishop Richard Cushing, some 270 people making a pilgrimage with this tall and dynamic man, and 40 members of the Boston Symphony with no less than 80 tons of musical instruments. The confusion, I might add, was considerable.

FRENCH

On one side of us was our pier, alive with people and stacked with mountains of luggage. If you walked around the deck to the other side you looked down at a fish dock, with smug little cod boats riding the swells.

The harbor itself was dotted with everything from puttering outboards and speed boats to sleek yachts, all swarming with people shouting last messages and waving farewell.

None of these frantic phrases were heard, surely, but merely blended into a great din and somehow you had the sensation of being in a curiously excited foreign port.

Even a fire boat followed us down stream, its jets sending up factory plumes that were barely distinguishable in the gray light.

But at last we were on our way, Boston disappeared into the soft mists and a trim black sailing boat that looked as if if would be far more at home in Newport, came alongside to pick up the pilot. Trust Boston to discharge this duty with a yacht!

Suspended in Space

Half an hour later we might well have been suspended in space. The ship had settled down into its lazy, rhythmic creaking. The decks were all but deserted and only a few people lingered over cocktails in the smoking room.

Already the young crossing had assumed the tempo it was to maintain for the rest of the voyage, forgetting possible changes in the weather and moods of the sea.

Uneventful and well behaved, in other words, with no ostentation. No ball gowns and lavish sprays of orchids go down to dinner in the evening, neither has there been any determined drinking in the Ritz Carlton room, where there is dancing after the movies.

It is a pipe-smoking, tweedy, vocally lower-register crowd. They look as if they had spent large portions of their summers at such resorts as Bar Harbor, Newport or Watch Hill, patiently waiting for most of the tourists to get out of Europe before they made the break themselves.

Air of Back Bay

Even the passenger list has a faint something or other of Back Bay about it, what with such names as Atwell, Baker, Hazard, Lydecker, Monteaux, Rutherford and Oliver Scaife III.

But you can never tell about these things. I, for instance, am listed under W as Mr. R. Winsor-French, if you please, a hyphenated distinction that must be causing some of my tobacco-chewing antecedents to wonder what I am trying to get away with!

he last group of Boston Sym- left Logan Airport yesterday rejoin associates for European n (left), district manager of s Michael T. Kelleher, orches- Also in picture are Richard r, and Theodore K. Herbert, Kelleher, orchestra trustee, will make the opening address.

They then will journey to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris and Chartres.

The group will recross the English Channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 29 1956

Boston Symph Leaves For Tour of Continent

Boston, Aug. 28.

Final contingent, 59 tooters, wives and staff members, of the Boston Symphony orch left Logan Airport (22) for its second European tour, which includes concerts in Russia.

The assembled 120-piece orch makes its debut in Cork, Ireland. Former Fire Commissioner Michael T. Kelleher, orch trustee, will make the opening address. The orch then treks to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurick, Berne, Paris and Chartres. The group will recross the English Channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

Traveler
Tuesday, Aug. 28, 1956

On Tour with Symphony

(UP Photo)

PLAYING A PROMINENT ROLE in the European tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Michael T. Kelleher, a trustees of the famed musical group. He is shown above as he left Boston Airport aboard a Royal Dutch Airplines plane. From left to right, Dolf C. Bulterman, manager of Royal Dutch Airlines; Theodore K. Hebert, Dutch consul; Miss Mary Smith, secretary to the orchestra; Kelleher, Roger Voison, first trumpet, and Irmgard Richter, airline hostess.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

SEP 17 1956

Transatlantic Travelers

QUINCY RESIDENTS ON CRUISE—Mr. and Mrs. Jerome J. Lipson of Norton Rd., Quincy are shown during their recent crossing on the Holland American's Nieuw Amsterdam. The Lipsons visited 13 European countries on their tour. Lipson is a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Lipson is the daughter of Anne Starr and associated with shops bearing her name.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WAYLAND, Mass.
Monthly Independent

SEP 13 1956

Bernard Parronchi, cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, went on the orchestra's trip to Europe this Summer. He is the father of Mrs. Robert J. Schultz of Melville Place, Cochituate.

land Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
STON, Mass.
ndent Republican
irc. 134,866
23 1956

SYMPHONY, SECOND SECTION—A second group of 57 Boston Symphony players and their wives took off yesterday for Shannon. Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concert master, third from right, poses with first desk players, left to right, Ralph Gomberg, Joseph Stagliano, Samuel Mayes, Mrs. Stagliano, Burgin, Sherman Walt and Roger Voisin. They will join others already abroad for European concerts.

Traveler
, Tuesday, Aug. 28, 1956

On Tour with Symphony

(UP Photo)

PLAYING A PROMINENT ROLE in the European tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Michael T. Kelleher, a trustees of the famed musical group. He is shown above as he left Boston Airport aboard a Royal Dutch Airplines plane. From left to right, Dolf C. Bulterman, manager of Royal Dutch Airlines; Theodore K. Hebert, Dutch consul; Miss Mary Smith, secretary to the orchestra; Kelleher, Roger Voison, first trumpet, and Irmgard Richter, airline hostess.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
SEP 17 1956

Transatlantic Travelers

QUINCY RESIDENTS ON CRUISE—Mr. and Mrs. Jerome J. Lipson of Norton Rd., Quincy are shown during their recent crossing on the Holland American's Nieuw Amsterdam. The Lipsons visited 13 European countries on their tour. Lipson is a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Lipson is the daughter of Anne Starr and associated with shops bearing her name.

MUSIC IN THE AIR—The last group of Boston Symphony Orchestra members left Logan Airport yesterday for Ireland, where they will rejoin associates for European tour. Dolph C. Bulterman (left), district manager of Royal Dutch Airlines, wishes Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, bon voyage. Also in picture are Richard Burgin, associate conductor, and Theodore K. Herbert, Dutch consul (right).

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 29 1956

Boston Symph Leaves For Tour of Continent

Boston, Aug. 28.

Final contingent, 59 tooters, wives and staff members, of the Boston Symphony orch left Logan Airport (22) for its second European tour, which includes concerts in Russia.

The assembled 120-piece orch makes its debut in Cork, Ireland. Former Fire Commissioner Michael T. Kelleher, orch trustee, will make the opening address. The orch then treks to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris and Chartres. The group will recross the English Channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

Last Contingent Of Symphony Flies To Europe for Tour

The final contingent of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left Logan Airport yesterday afternoon on its second European tour which includes concerts in Russia.

Fifty-nine persons, headed by associate conductor Richard Burgin, boarded the chartered, four-engine Royal Dutch Airline Constellation bound for Shannon, Ireland.

The group included members of the orchestra, their wives and orchestra staff members.

The assembled 120-piece Boston Symphony orchestra will make their debut in Cork, Ireland. Former Fire Commissioner Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, will make the opening address.

They then will journey to Dublin, Edinburgh, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris and Chartres.

The group will recross the English Channel to Leeds and London, returning to Boston Oct. 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WAYLAND, Mass.
Monthly Independent
SEP 13 1956

Bernard Parronchi, cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, went on the orchestra's trip to Europe this Summer. He is the father of Mrs. Robert J. Schultz of Melville Place, Cochituate.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Cork Examiner

21 AUG 1956

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Cork Evening Echo.

Members Of Boston Symphony Orchestra Arrive In Cork

EUROPEAN TOUR BEGINS WITH CONCERTS IN IRELAND

MUSICAL instruments "worth their weight in gold" and musicians starting a month's tour of Europe landed at Cobh yesterday morning from the flagship of the Holland-America Line, T S S Nieum Amsterdam.

The musicians were members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its European tour with a concert in Cork (Savoy Cinema) on Friday night and which will play in Dublin on the following day.

There were 29 players in this party, some accompanied by their wives, but some of the ladies were omitting the Irish call and going on to Southampton or Le Havre.

The Lord Mayor of Cork, Ald. Sean Casey, T.D. and Mrs. Casey, and Mr. Carroll MacEntri. Manager of the Savoy Cinema in Cork, went to the liner to greet them. They met also Mr. Henry B. Cabot, the Boston millionaire President of the Trustees of the Symphony Orchestra who, with his wife, is accompanying the orchestra on part of its tour.

A very unassuming man, Mr. Cabot who is a member of one of the oldest and most distinguished Boston families told our reporter that the nearest he had ever been to Ireland before was when he was in the U.S. Army in 1917 and his ship skirted the Irish coast on its way to Liverpool. He and Mrs. Cabot looked forward very much to their brief stay in Ireland.

COST OF TOUR.

Mr. Cabot has been President of the Trustees of the Orchestra for twelve or thirteen years. He estimates that the present concert tour will cost about 300,000 dollars for the 105 instrumentalists and the dozen or so others such as stage directors, librarians, etc

"Each year, the Orchestra earns about 85 per cent of its cost and we have to send around the hat for the rest of it," said Mr. Cabot who laughingly took off his hat to show it had some slight signs of wear.

No less than eleven members of this Orchestra were born in countries behind the Iron Curtain and are excited by the prospect of going back. The Orchestra is giving concerts in Moscow and Leningrad in Russia, and in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Rudolph Elie, the music critic of the "Boston Herald" told our reporter that before the Orchestra left the States an official of the State Department had a talk with them and the advice he gave included a special word to the Russian-born musicians not to wander far on their own "as it might be embarrassing."

Most of those born in countries now behind the Iron Curtain emigrated to America in the early 'thirties or even earlier.

FIRST TIME.

Mr. Harry Ellis Dickson who is in the first violin section of the Orchestra and an assistant conductor of the "Pops Concerts" in Boston, chimed in here that this, as far as he knew, was the first time a foreign orchestra had been permitted to enter Russia—even pre-Soviet Russia.

"We musicians like to feel we can do what diplomats cannot do, and that there is nothing but friendship between musicians."

When our reporter asked what music would be heard in the Eire Suite by the American composer, Le Roy Anderson, at Friday night's concert in Cork, the orchestra's librarian Mr. Leslie J. Rogers who has served the orchestra in this capacity for more than half of its 75 years' existence, was called in to name the melodies Mr. Anderson used.

Cork audiences it seems may not get the full version on Friday night because, with the rest of the programme, it would make the concert unduly long, but they will certainly hear Anderson's arrangement of "The Irish Washerwoman" "The Rakes of Mallow" and "The Minstrel Boy."

"POP" EXPLANATION.

Asked how this Suite had come into being, Mr. Dickson explained that the Orchestra had embarked some years back on a movement to bring music to the masses by giving popular concerts. He, Mr. Elie and Mr. Rogers agreed that no one was quite sure how the concerts came to be known as "Pop." Some thought it was a contraction of "popular," others a corruption of 'Promenade" from the London Proms, but they thought the most romantic explanation was that the name derived from the popping of corks for it was customary for refreshments to be served at these concerts.

Continuing the explanation of the Suite after this deviation, Mr. Dickson said it was felt that the Orchestra should have Irish music in its repertoire especially as it played for the large Irish Society in Boston.

Mr Anderson who composed a great deal of popular light music in the classical vein was engaged to produce a Suite of five or six movements based on Irish music and scored for a full symphony orchestra.

VALUE OF INSTRUMENTS

Looking at the huge musical instrument cases carefully deposited on the deck of the tender going ashore, our reporter asked what was the value of the instruments. This caused much head scratching.

Mr. Dickson began by saying that he had a Guadagnini violin worth 8,000 dollars and he estimated there were more violins by this famed mid-18th century Italian maker in this Orchestra than in any other.

The small wind instruments were probably the cheapest and none cost less than a couple of hundred dollars

The two harps were worth about 5,000 dollars each, so a quarter of a million dollars would not be too high an estimate of the total

"We insure them ourselves through our own body but the cost is not high as insurance companies realise that musicians put a higher regard on their instruments than their wives."

FERMOY PARTY.

Some members of the Orchestra flew to Ireland some days ago, others are already in Britain or on the Continent on vacation, and the last section will fly into Shannon Airport on Thursday. On Thursday night they will be the guests of the Boston publisher, Mr Laughlin, at a party at Castlehyde, Fermoy, and on Friday will have a rehearsal at the Savoy Cinema

The conductor and music director, Charles Munch, is at present in France where his wife resides. He is a native of Strasbourg and was a well-known European conductor before going to Boston seven years ago. He spends a portion of each year in Paris. The Orchestra's guest conductor, 80 year old Pierre Monteux, was on the liner this morning but did not disembark.

Among those still to come is Mr. Ml. T. Kelleher, who is one of the Trustees of the Orchestra. His father was born in Kilmichael, Co. Cork, a century ago and Mr. Kelleher rose from a lowly beginning to become Fire Commissioner in Boston.

Charles Munch, the conductor of the ...tra, which is to perform at the Savoy

THIS PAINTING OF OUR LADY OF KNOCK by Irish artist Richard King was specially done for the Marian Research Center in New York.

Mrs. Riley, at 87, is a song writer's vision of "That Old Irish Mother of Mine." She served us tea and bastable bread, baked between sods of turf in the open fireplace where she does all her cooking, and kept up a running commentary on all the Boston Yanks with Cork origins who have been to visit her.

Then she took us into the yard to observe an operation known as "clipping the hooves" of a donkey. It hadn't ever occurred to me that animals had to have their toenails cut, but that is roughly what it corresponded to. She thought my ignorance a huge joke and was only sorry there wasn't time to show me a few more eye-openers. We went our way but I left a bit of my heart behind.

New England Newsclip Age
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmon

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass
Independent
Circ. 154,300

AUG 21 1956

Notes of Iris

Hub La

One-Irel

By BERNARDINE T

The Mass. Federation has once more gone on opposing the partition c

At its al con meet month field, tion passed ing th tary-tr request ecutive of the to notif egate United the United Nations to a and support the delega Ireland when the matte partition of Ireland shall fore the United Nations f

The resolution was subr Kenneth J. Kelley of th Central Labor Union and P. Morrissey and James Carthy of the Teamster of Boston.

HEART AS STURDY AS AN IRISH OAK

Who was the delegate nounced the West Virgi for Stevenson with "a sturdy as an Irish oak and as the waters of Killarney

★ ★ ★

For those who have falle the spell of Siobhan Mc magical voice, and that mus include all those who have the Cambridge Drama production of "St. Joan" ders Theatre, there is news. Spoken Arts, Inc., sued a long-play record of Irish poetry read by Miss McKenna.

One side is devoted entirely to the poems of William Butler Yeats, including such well-known ones as "The Stolen Child," "The Song of Wandering Angus" and "The Wild Swans at Coole." On the reverse side is a collection of ballads, folksongs and lyrics. Two, "I Am Raftery" and "The County of Mayo," Miss McKenna reads in the original Irish and in the translation by James Stephens. There are also three poems by James Joyce, Padraic Colum's beautiful "Cradle Song," John Boyle O'Reilly's "White Rose" and some

LADY OF KNOCK MURAL AT MARIAN CENTER

On Aug. 21, 1879, a group of villagers saw Our Lady, St. Joseph and St. John standing outside the church at Knock, County Mayo. Near the three figures there was an altar on which a lamb was standing. Behind the lamb there was a cross.

Irish artist Richard King has commemorated the apparition in a mural for the Marian Research Center in New York.

Rev. Donal O'Callaghan, O. Carm., director of the center, in describing the mural, said, "King tries to show what went through the minds of the people as they looked at Our Lady of Knock. They thought of the evictions, the hanging of the priests, the manufactured famine, the mass on the rock and the ruined monasteries. All of these things he has brought into the painting, which is most magnificently done."

A colored reproduction of the mural may be had by writing to Fr. O'Callaghan at 339 East 28th st., New York 16.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians honored two local residents

at the recent national convention in New York. P. Frank Kean of Brighton was elected national president of the order and Mary E. Hurley of Belmont was elected national president of the Ladies Auxiliary.

SEA-GOING SYMPHONY ARRIVES AT COBH

The sea-going members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived at Cobh yesterday and the air-borne section is due at Shannon tomorrow morning, to start their European tour with a concert Friday night at the Savoy Theatre in Cork.

Thursday night conductor Charles Munch, the orchestra and the staff will be guests of Henry Laughlin, of Houghton Mifflin Co.,

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL
AUG 19 1956

U. S. Orchestra To Open Tour In Cork, Dublin

The Boston Symphony orchestra will commence its tour of Europe Aug. 24-25 with two concerts in Ireland. The 105 players with Charles Munch, directing, comprise the first American symphony to perform in Cork and Dublin.

Because of the large Irish population of Boston where the orchestra was founded in 1881, the opening concerts in Ireland will have special accessory events related to both countries. Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, Boston executive and son of immigrants from Cork, will address the Cork audience preceding the concert.

Later the musicians and administrators for the ensemble will be entertained in the city at Castle Hyde, near Cork, summer home of Henry Laughlin, publisher of Houghton, Mifflin, in Boston. "Irish Suite" by Leroy Anderson, native of Cambridge, Mass., will open the program abroad.

In Dublin the concert is to be a benefit for the archdiocesan seminary of the Holy Cross at Clonliffe. It is the first event to raise $560,000 to rebuild the 97-year-old seminary. Sean T. Kelly, Ireland's president, is to be in the audience.

The Boston ensemble will appear on the Edinburgh Festival program when Pierre Monteux will conduct two concerts. It will later be heard in Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, the U. S. S. R., Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London. American work will appear on every program.

The tour is in co-operation with the international exchange program of the American National Theater and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States state department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

AUG 22 1956

'Eire Suite' to Open Hub Symphony Tour

CORK, Ireland (UP)—A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy Theater here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the board of trustees of the orchestra, will make a short speech. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

On Saturday afternoon the orchestra will play in Dublin's Theater Royal before a distinguished audience. It will include President Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, opposition parliamentary leader Eamon DeValera and American Ambassador William Howard Taft III.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Aug 19, 1956 Cork Evening Echo

Next Week's Concerts

Seventy-nine members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are on a world tour and who will give two recitals in Ireland next week, arrived at Shannon Airport this morning by K.L.M. Super Constellation.

Thirty of the members will remain on in Ireland and the remaining 39 will spend a week touring Europe.

Mr. Walter Alford. Press agent for the Orchestra, said that all members of the group looked forward to their recitals in Cork and Dublin.

In many ways the Boston Symphony Orchestra have affectionate connections with Ireland, he said, although he was not aware that any of the musicians on the present tour had Irish connections.

There are only two women musicians with the present Symphony. Flautist Mrs. Doriot Dwyer arrived, accompanied by her husband, with this morning's group. They looked forward to sailing in Co. Galway, and will spend the remaining time touring the West.

WEEK AT ARAN

Rossario Mazzeo, bass clarinet, will spend a week in the Aran Islands studying bird life and Mr. Cyrus Durgin, music critic of the Boston Globe will tour Ireland in search of material for travel articles for his newspaper

Also with to-day's group was Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was leader of the Symphony for 25 years.

This is the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in Ireland.

CORK RECITAL

In all there will be 125 musicians and the first recital will be in Cork on August 24th. On Saturday the President will attend the recital in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, and the opening piece is an Irish suite.

They were met on arrival by the Mayor of Limerick, Ald. G. Russell, Mr. Aidan O'Hanlon, Bord Failte and Mr. S. Sullivan, K.L.M. Irish Manager, Dublin.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Cork Evening Echo.

An interesting study of Charles Munch, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is to perform at the Savoy on Friday next.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

AUG 21 1956

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL
AUG 19 1956

U. S. Orchestra To Open Tour In Cork, Dublin

The Boston Symphony orchestra will commence its tour of Europe Aug. 24-25 with two concerts in Ireland. The 105 players with Charles Munch, directing, comprise the first American symphony to perform in Cork and Dublin.

Because of the large Irish population of Boston where the orchestra was founded in 1881, the opening concerts in Ireland will have special accessory events related to both countries. Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, Boston executive and son of immigrants from Cork, will address the Cork audience preceding the concert.

Later the musicians and administrators for the ensemble will be entertained in the city at Castle Hyde, near Cork, summer home of Henry Laughlin, publisher of Houghton, Mifflin, in Boston. "Irish Suite" by Leroy Anderson, native of Cambridge, Mass., will open the program abroad.

In Dublin the concert is to be a benefit for the archdiocesan seminary of the Holy Cross at Clonliffe. It is the first event to raise $560,000 to rebuild the 97-year-old seminary. Sean T. Kelly, Ireland's president, is to be in the audience.

The Boston ensemble will appear on the Edinburgh Festival program when Pierre Monteux will conduct two concerts. It will later be heard in Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm, Helsinki, the U. S. S. R., Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London. American work will appear on every program.

The tour is in co-operation with the international exchange program of the American National Theater and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States state department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad.

Notes of Irish Interest

Hub Labor Men Spark One-Ireland Resolve

By BERNARDINE TRUDEN

The Mass. Federation of Labor has once more gone on record as opposing the partition of Ireland.

At its 70th annual convention, meeting this month in Springfield, a resolution has been passed instructing the secretary-treasurer to request the executive council of the AFL-CIO to notify the delegate of the United States to the United Nations to aid, assist and support the delegates from Ireland when the matter of the partition of Ireland shall come before the United Nations for action.

The resolution was submitted by Kenneth J. Kelley of the Quincy Central Labor Union and Nicholas P. Morrissey and James J. McCarthy of the Teamsters' Union of Boston.

HEART AS STURDY AS AN IRISH OAK

Who was the delegate who announced the West Virginia vote for Stevenson with "a heart as sturdy as an Irish oak and as pure as the waters of Killarney?"

★ ★ ★

For those who have fallen under the spell of Siobhan McKenna's magical voice, and that must surely include all those who have been to the Cambridge Drama Festival production of "St. Joan" at Sanders Theatre, there is welcome news. Spoken Arts, Inc., has issued a long-play record of Irish poetry read by Miss McKenna.

One side is devoted entirely to the poems of William Butler Yeats, including such well-known ones as "The Stolen Child," "The Song of Wandering Angus" and "The Wild Swans at Coole." On the reverse side is a collection of ballads, folksongs and lyrics. Two, "I Am Raftery" and "The County of Mayo," Miss McKenna reads in the original Irish and in the translation by James Stephens. There are also three poems by James Joyce, Padraic Colum's beautiful "Cradle Song," John Boyle O'Reilly's "White Rose" and some

LADY OF KNOCK MURAL AT MARIAN CENTER

On Aug. 21, 1879, a group of villagers saw Our Lady, St. Joseph and St. John standing outside the church at Knock, County Mayo. Near the three figures there was an altar on which a lamb was standing. Behind the lamb there was a cross.

Irish artist Richard King has commemorated the apparition in a mural for the Marian Research Center in New York.

Rev. Donal O'Callaghan, O. Carm., director of the center, in describing the mural, said, "King tries to show what went through the minds of the people as they looked at Our Lady of Knock. They thought of the evictions, the hanging of the priests, the manufactured famine, the mass on the rock and the ruined monasteries. All of these things he has brought into the painting, which is most magnificently done."

A colored reproduction of the mural may be had by writing to Fr. O'Callaghan at 339 East 28th st., New York 16.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians honored two local residents

at the recent national convention in New York. P. Frank Kean of Brighton was elected national president of the order and Mary E. Hurley of Belmont was elected national president of the Ladies Auxiliary.

SEA-GOING SYMPHONY ARRIVES AT COBH

The sea-going members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived at Cobh yesterday and the air-borne section is due at Shannon tomorrow morning, to start their European tour with a concert Friday night at the Savoy Theatre in Cork.

Thursday night conductor Charles Munch, the orchestra and the staff will be guests of Henry Laughlin, of Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston, at a reception at his Summer home, Castlehyde, near Cork.

Saturday afternoon, the orchestra will present a concert at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, for the benefit of the archdiocesan seminary at Clonliffe, under the patronage of Most Rev. Dr. John C. McQuade, Archbishop of Dublin. Honored guest at the concert will be the President of Ireland, Sean T. O'Kelly, who is that day observing his birthday.

* * *

The Boston Gaelic Society will hold its annual outing at Angle Pond, N. H., on Sunday. Buses will leave Hibernian Hall, Roxbury, at 11 a.m.

IRELAND VACATIONS NOT LONG ENOUGH

The trouble with the average vacation in Ireland is that it's just not long enough. Every year the list of places where I'd like to stay for a week or two increases. One such is Inchadoney in County Cork.

From Kinsdale, we headed west, intending to reach Killarney. We passed Coolmain Castle, once the home of Donn Byrne, the writer, and circled Courtmacsherry Bay. The idea of lunch by the seaside appealed to us, so when we reached Clonakilty at noontime, we turned off to the narrow promontory that leads to Inchadoney.

Inchadoney is encompassed by narrow inlets that run in off Clonakilty Bay. At its tip is a small hotel with intriguing rock formations for a front yard and a beautiful strand stretching off on either side. Given a sunny day, such as we had, the sand is sparkling white, the water heavenly blue, and the urge to settle in almost irresistible. We didn't, but some day I will.

However, we were compensated for keeping on our way. Three miles beyond Ballineen, in the Bandon valley, we stopped at Ivy Cottage, Manch Bridge, to call on the mother of Jerry Riley of Cambridge.

THIS PAINTING OF OUR LADY OF KNOCK by Irish artist Richard King was specially done for the Marian Research Center in New York.

Mrs. Riley, at 87, is a song writer's vision of "That Old Irish Mother of Mine." She served us tea and bastable bread, baked between sods of turf in the open fireplace where she does all her cooking, and kept up a running commentary on all the Boston Yanks with Cork origins who have been to visit her.

Then she took us into the yard to observe an operation known as "clipping the hooves" of a donkey. It hadn't ever occurred to me that animals had to have their toenails cut, but that is roughly what it corresponded to. She thought my ignorance a huge joke and was only sorry there wasn't time to show me a few more eye-openers. We went our way but I left a bit of my heart behind.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

AUG 22 1956

'Eire Suite' to Open Hub Symphony Tour

CORK, Ireland (UP)—A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy Theater here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the board of trustees of the orchestra, will make a short speech. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

On Saturday afternoon the orchestra will play in Dublin's Theater Royal before a distinguished audience. It will include President Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, opposition parliamentary leader Eamon DeValera and American Ambassador William Howard Taft III.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Cork Examiner

VIEW OF ORCHESTRA DURING RECITAL

4767

Looking down on the stage of the Savoy Cinema last night during the recital by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. —("Examiner").

Boston Orchestra Opens Tour With Cork Visit

Fresh And Vivacious Approach To Playing Of Irish Melodies

TO Cork, a city not without justifiable claim to being the home of many music lovers, fell the honour last night of being the first place visited by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its European tour of 1956. If the Orchestra plays as well and is received as well as at the Savoy Cinema last night, during its hustling tour of 26 other concert centres, then it can return to America confident that it has cemented new bonds of friendship between Europe and America.

There was a tinge of sadness mingled in the joys of this concert. The distinguished conductor and music director, Charles Munch, flew to Ireland literally from the grave of his wife in Paris. The lady, who had been seriously ill for some time, died on Tuesday and was buried on Thursday, yet M. Munch took the orchestra in its rehearsal in Cork yesterday morning and faced the vast audience last night with a smile tinged with sadness. One does not have to be much of a mind-reader; one merely has to have a little knowledge of the Irish people and their warm-heartedness to feel sure that the prolonged waves of applause at the finale were backed with sympathy for this grand musician, and a real appreciation of his presence in these difficult circumstances.

This is one of the largest, if not the largest, orchestras to play in Cork, and undoubtedly one of the best. On the matter of numbers, for those who care for statistics, it contains one lady and 103 men, the distaff side being in the wind section. The Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, which graced Cork and Limerick with its presence last May, was about 85 strong. After that bald comparison of sizes, no further comparisons shall be drawn between West and East!

VARYING TASTES

The programme showed ingenuity and an appreciation of varying tastes, but with a fairly lengthy tradition of the giving of "popular" concerts as distinct from the purely classical ones, it was to be expected that the Boston would not adhere rigidly to the highest flights of symphony music. Side by side with Haydn and Brahms were the Parisian composer Dukas, who flourished in originality and versatility until two decades ago, and Leroy Anderson, a contemporary American composer who is not lacking in ingenuity either.

For more than a few in last night's audience, chief interest lay in Anderson's "Eire Suite" which was commissioned by the Irish Society in Boston, which has a strong Irish contingent in its population.

To charm the ears of the good Gaels overseas, Anderson took typical traditional Irish melodies and arranged them for full orchestra that they might bring, perhaps, a tear to an Irish eye or, equally likely, set a foot a-tapping to a rhythm strangely familiar to a first-generation American. In the suite are seven movements three of which were performed last night. The programme mentioned a

QUIET AND RESTFUL

From Ireland-America, the scene shifted to London-Austria for Haydn's Symphony in B-flat Major, composed for Haydn's second visit to London. After the vigour of the Anderson work, it was quiet and restful, and beautifully interpreted by M. Munch.

This symphony is a short one, and the orchestra followed with another short composition, but in a totally different style: Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer," surely as vivid a picture as can be painted in music. Musically, it is a showpiece, but it takes brilliant executives to play it as the musicians from Boston did last night. The higher strings built up the atmosphere steadily stealthily entered the harp and soon the whole orchestra was in to create a vision of the young sorcerer who went a little too far and created a bedlam that took the master hand to subdue. It was a most interesting study for those relishing orchestral music, and not the least telling were the awesome silences preceding some new fiendishness

The orchestra ended in triumph Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D Major. This composition, massive in its tones and beautiful, too, in its intricate weavings of melodies, was for the serious musician the work worth all the others put together, and it brought

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 40,485
AUG 22 1956

Ireland To Greet Boston Symphony

Cork, Ireland, Aug. 22 —(UP)— A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy Theater here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the Board of Trustees of the orchestra, will make a short speech. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

Saturday afternoon the orchestra will play in Dublin's Theater Royal before a distinguished audience including President Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, opposition parliamentary leader Eamon DeValera and American Ambassador William Howard Taft III.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
AUG 24 1956

VERHILL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 19,039
AUG 22 1956

ton Symphony Play In Cork

K, Ireland (UP)—A special ng of Leroy Anderson's Suite" will open the Bos- mphony Orchestra's 28-con- rt of Europe program here riday.

re the program starts at the Theater here Michael T. er, a member of the board itees of the orchestra, will a short speech. Kelleher's emigrated from Ireland. orchestra will roam Eu- s far as Moscow.

Saturday afternoon the or- will play in Dublin's Thea- yal before a distinguished ce including President Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, opposition parliamentary leader Eamon Devalera and American Ambassador William Howard Taft III.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 41,625
AUG 22 1956

"Eire Suite" Opens Symphony Tour

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 22 (UP)—A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy theatre here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the board of trustees of orchestra, will make a short speech. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
AUG 22 1956

'Eire Suite' to Open Hub Symphony Tour

Cork, Ireland—(UP)—A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy Theater here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the board of trustees of the orchestra, will make a short speech. Mr. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

On Saturday afternoon the orchestra will play in Dublin's Theater Royal before a distinguished audience including President Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, Opposition Parliamentary Leader Eamon DeValera and American Ambassador William Howard Taft III.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259
AUG 25 1956

1st Symphony Salutes Eire

With a program aimed for the delight of Irish music lovers, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present its first European concert tonight in Cork, Ireland, at the Savoy Theater. The orchestra is scheduled for 27 concerts in 5 and a half weeks, from Ireland to Russia.

Included on the program, conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, will be Irish tunes from the "Eire Suite," a symphonic arrangement by Leroy Anderson; "The Irish Washerwoman;" the ballard, "The Minstrel Boy," and "The Rakes of Mallow," a rollicking tune about gay eighteenth century blades who dash around Ireland seeking excitement.

Boston Symphony Starts Concert Tour in Ireland

Cork, Ireland—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra began a European concert tour here yesterday before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The orchestra, conducted by its musical director, Charles Munch, opened with three selections from the "Eire Suite" by Leroy Anderson. The main work was Brahms' Second Symphony.

The music critic for the Irish Independent said the Brahms Symphony showed the orchestra to best advantage.

"The balance was excellent, and the interpretation sunny and vigorous," he said.

He added that the orchestra "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality to speed, and though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music."

Ireland's President Sean O'Kelly will receive the orchestra's special 75th anniversary gold medal after a concert today in Dublin.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

ston Orchestra pens Tour With Cork Visit

And Vivacious Approach To Playing Of Irish Melodies

city not without justifiable claim to being the home of many lovers, fell the honour last night of being the first place Boston Symphony Orchestra in its European tour of 1956. ra plays as well and is received as well as at the Savoy Cinema ring its hustling tour of 26 other concert centres, then it can erica confident that it has cemented new bonds of friendship pe and America.

a tinge of sadness e joys of this concert. ished conductor and r. Charles Munch, flew rally from the grave of Paris. The lady, who ously ill for some time, ay and was buried on M. Munch took the its rehearsal in Cork ning and faced the vast night with a smile adness. One does not uch of a mind-reader; has to have a little the Irish people and artedness to feel sure nged waves of applause were backed with this grand musician. appreciation of his hese difficult circum-

of the largest, if not rchestras to play in doubtedly one of the matter of numbers, care for statistics, it ady and 103 men, the ng in the wind section. nilharmonic Orchestra, Cork and Limerick ence last May, was ng. After that bald sizes, no further com- be drawn between me showed ingenuity eciation of varying th a fairly lengthy e giving of "popular" tinct from the purely it was to be expected n would not adhere highest flights of ic. Side by side with Brahms were the poser Dukas, who riginality and versa- o decades ago, and on, a contemporary American composer who is not lacking in ingenuity either.

STES

For more than a few in last night's audience, chief interest lay in Anderson's "Eire Suite" which was commissioned by the Irish Society in Boston, which has a strong Irish contingent in its population.

To charm the ears of the good Gaels overseas, Anderson took typical traditional Irish melodies and arranged them for full orchestra that they might bring, perhaps, a tear to an Irish eye or, equally likely, set a foot a-tapping to a rhythm strangely familiar to a first-generation American. In the suite are seven movements three of which were performed last night. The programme mentioned a

clubs in Ireland fill up ering which opened yes

Mas

Seen On Tel

Clip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 40,485
AUG 22 1956

Boston Orchestra's Cork Visit

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE SEVEN)

fourth: "The Last Rose of Summer," but this fragrant piece must have faded like her lovely companions before reaching our shores.

Hearing what Mr. Anderson could do with "The Irish Washerwoman," "The Minstrel Boy" and "The Rakes of Mallow" made one regretful that the suite was not extended. Could it have been that the orchestra was timorous about playing Irish melodies on their own ground?

FRESH AND VIVACIOUS APPROACH

Whatever the reason, the approach was fresh and vivacious. "The Washerwoman" opened in a very effective staccato fashion and the wood wind, an excellent section incidentally, was very prominent. Gaily then the lively melody was tossed from one section to another until there came a passage towards the end when it seemed that the trombones and trumpets were inclined to jazz-up the "Washerwoman" in a not altogether traditional style, yet it was a fresh and acceptable approach.

"The Minstrel Boy" was the next Irish melody re-imported from the States. Here Anderson again used his trumpets unconventionally. While the strings and the rest of the wind played the air in plaintive style, muted trumpets broke through ever so often, first slightly sardonically, then with something like a hunting call and, finally and significantly, with the Last Post. One might not quite fall in with Mr. Anderson's treatment here but, again, it revealed his imagination in arrangement. With a further stretch of imagination, he might have put in the Reveille call as well on sending back to Ireland this lovely air.

Last in the suite came "The Rakes of Mallow." Rakes that went galloping and chasing brassily and cheerfully, giving the brass instruments a thorough work-out.

QUIET AND RESTFUL

From Ireland-America, the scene shifted to London-Austria for Haydn's Symphony in B-flat Major, composed for Haydn's second visit to London. After the vigour of the Anderson work, it was quiet and restful, and beautifully interpreted by M. Munch.

This symphony is a short one, and the orchestra followed with another short composition, but in a totally different style: Dukas' "The Apprentice Sorcerer," surely as vivid a picture as can be painted in music. Musically, it is a showpiece, but it takes brilliant executives to play it as the musicians from Boston did last night. The higher strings built up the atmosphere steadily stealthily entered the harp and soon the whole orchestra was in to create a vision of the young sorcerer who went a little too far and created a bedlam that took the master hand to subdue. It was a most interesting study for those relishing orchestral music, and not the least telling were the awesome silences preceding some new fiendishness.

The orchestra ended in triumph. Brahms Symphony No. 2 in D Major. This composition, massive in its tones and beautiful, too, in its intricate weavings of melodies, was for the serious musician the work worth all the others put together, and it brought out the best in the orchestra. The fourth movement revealed orchestral playing at its finest.

Finally, a word about the conductor. Cork has had the good fortune to see quite a few top-flight conductors in recent years. M. Munch, in the precision of his control, in the confidence he inspired, and the ease of his movements, ranks with the best.

At 9 a.m. this morning, the orchestra leaves for Dublin in a special train. Arriving at the metropolis about noon, it goes straight to a rehearsal and performs to a capacity audience at 3 p.m. In the evening, planes will take the party of 120 and three American music critics who are accompanying it through its month-long hustle around Europe, to Edinburgh, where it plays in the Festival.

Last night's concert was hardly over before the Cork furniture removing firm, Nat Ross, got to work shifting the instruments in readiness for the morning departure.

TRUSTEE'S ADDRESS.

Before the concert began, one of the Trustees of the Orchestra, Mr. Ml. T. Kelleher, whose father emigrated from Kilmichael, Co. Cork, to Boston, a century ago, addressed the audience. He told them he was the first of his race and faith to serve as a trustee and in speaking for the Orchestra, he bore witness to the union in American society of diverse elements, which a century ago seemed so far apart. His relationship with the orchestra symbolised the spirit of goodwill which had developed over a hundred years between Ireland and the United States.

The presence of the orchestra in Cork was a tribute of gratitude from the nation beyond the seas to the land of saints and scholars, which had contributed so abundantly of its spiritual blessing to America's present greatness.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (m)
NORWICH, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 23,358
AUG 25 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCH. ON EUROPEAN TOUR

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 24— (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra began a European concert tour here today before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, opened with three selections from the "Eire Suite" by Leroy Anderson. The main work was Brahms' Second Symphony.

The music critic for the Irish Independent said the Brahms symphony showed the orchestra to best advantage.

"The balance was excellent, and the interpretation sunny and vigorous," he said.

He added that the orchestra "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality to speed. And though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music."

Ireland's President Sean O'Kelly will receive the orchestra's special 75th anniversary gold medal after a concert tomorrow in Dublin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 19,039
AUG 22 1956

Boston Symphony To Play In Cork

CORK, Ireland (UP)—A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy Theater here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the board of trustees of the orchestra, will make a short speech. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

On Saturday afternoon the orchestra will play in Dublin's Theater Royal before a distinguished audience including President Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, opposition parliamentary leader Eamon Devalera and American Ambassador William Howard Taft III.

Ireland To Greet Boston Symphony

Cork, Ireland, Aug. 22 —(UP)— A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy Theater here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the Board of Trustees of the orchestra, will make a short speech. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

Saturday afternoon the orchestra will play in Dublin's Theater Royal before a distinguished audience including President Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, opposition parliamentary leader Eamon DeValera and American Ambassador William Howard Taft III.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
AUG 24 1956

1st Symphony Salutes Eire

With a program aimed for the delight of Irish music lovers, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present its first European concert tonight in Cork, Ireland, at the Savoy Theater. The orchestra is scheduled for 27 concerts in 5 and a half weeks, from Ireland to Russia.

Included on the program, conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, will be Irish tunes from the "Eire Suite," a symphonic arrangement by Leroy Anderson; "The Irish Washerwoman;" the ballard, "The Minstrel Boy," and "The Rakes of Mallow," a rollicking tune about gay eighteenth century blades who dash around Ireland seeking excitement.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 41,625
AUG 22 1956

"Eire Suite" Opens Symphony Tour

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 22 (UP)—A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy theatre here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the board of trustees of orchestra, will make a short speech. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
AUG 22 1956

'Eire Suite' to Open Hub Symphony Tour

Cork, Ireland—(UP)—A special rendering of Leroy Anderson's "Eire Suite" will open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 28-concert tour of Europe program here next Friday.

Before the program starts at the Savoy Theater here Michael T. Kelleher, a member of the board of trustees of the orchestra, will make a short speech. Mr. Kelleher's father emigrated from Ireland.

The orchestra will roam Europe as far as Moscow.

On Saturday afternoon the orchestra will play in Dublin's Theater Royal before a distinguished audience including President Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, Opposition Parliamentary Leader Eamon DeValera and American Ambassador William Howard Taft III.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 53,259
AUG 25 1956

Boston Symphony Starts Concert Tour in Ireland

Cork, Ireland—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra began a European concert tour here yesterday before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The orchestra, conducted by its musical director, Charles Munch, opened with three selections from the "Eire Suite" by Leroy Anderson. The main work was Brahms' Second Symphony.

The music critic for the Irish Independent said the Brahms Symphony showed the orchestra to best advantage.

"The balance was excellent, and the interpretation sunny and vigorous," he said.

He added that the orchestra "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality to speed, and though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music."

Ireland's President Sean O'Kelly will receive the orchestra's special 75th anniversary gold medal after a concert today in Dublin.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 24 AUG 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN CORK

Perhaps it was that, coming so soon after Beecham's exquisite Beethoven on Sunday last, broadcast from the Edinburgh Festival, a contrast was pointed, or it may have been that the prologue spoken by a nostalgic Irish-American created a wrong atmosphere, but—whatever the cause—the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening in the Savoy Cinema, Cork, was not completely satisfying. The orchestra is very accomplished. It plays with precision, and a fine, sensitive response to the conductor's expressive beat. The accomplishment, however, is mainly technical with a surface approach, sentimental but rarely deeply felt.

One sat unmoved through the loveliest passages in a programme full of lovely things: the delicate richness of the Haydn Adagio (which has a depth of feeling in the lovely woodwind passages unusual in Haydn); the magical change from the Allegretto Grazioso to presto in the first movement of the Brahms—one of the most sublime things in all musical literature—and the rare beauty of the second movement.

The Haydn Minuet came off well, presumably because of the direct simplicity of rhythm and orchestration. "The Sorceror's Apprentice" promised well, but soon fell into machined position, like those great American cars which speed along comfortably. There were moments in the Brahms, which was easily the best performance of the evening, that glimpsed subtlety. The climatic surges were relentlessly built up, but, in general, detail was over-elaborated. The Irish Suite, as is to be expected from Leroy Anderson, who has written much attractive light music, was completely scored, and just as completely played.

The most vivid impression remaining after this concert is the superb bâton technique of the conductor, Charles Munch. The programme was: Eire Suite (Anderson); the London Symphony No. 102 (Haydn); L'Apprenti Sorcier (Dukas), and Symphony No. 2, in D Major (Brahms).

G.

1956. L+ 7

Aug 25/Times

BOSTON SYMPHONY OPENS IN IRELAND

Orchestra Warmly Greeted by Large Audience in Cork as European Tour Starts

By HUGH SMITH
Special to The New York Times.

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 24—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its European tour here tonight before a warmly appreciative, large audience at the Savoy Motion Picture Theatre.

Every notable in this capital of Munster, largest province of Ireland, including Lord Mayor Sean Casey and persons prominent in professional, cultural and university life of Cork, attended the concert.

The orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, were introduced by Michael T. Kelleher, a leading Boston business man and a trustee of the orchestra organization. He was cheered when he mentioned that his father had been born at Kilmichael, County Cork, a century ago and had emigrated to the United States as a boy.

The well-balanced program opened appropriately with the first European performance of the "Eire Suite," by the American composer Leroy Anderson. Feet went tapping to the rollicking music of the Irish Washerwoman's jig, followed by an original and delightfully orchestrated version of "The Minstrel Boy" that charmed Irish ears. Mr. Anderson's setting of the lovely aria, "The Last Rose of Summer," with the jolly "Rakes of Mallow" as the last number of this suite, showed an American's appreciation of Irish music and pleased the audience immensely.

The classical part of the program opened with a sparkling and gay performance of a Haydn symphony in which the superb quality of the first violin in the dainty minuet was particularly striking.

But the fine quality of the playing and the brilliance of the conductor became impressively evident in Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Here was exotic, weird music full of strange and captivating rhythms that revealed the full timbre and color of the orchestra. It is a dynamic and coruscating composition, and drew great applause.

Brahms' Second Symphony, as the final offering, received a scholarly and impressive performance. The lovely quality of the woodwinds was well displayed in the adagio and an exhilarating and spirited final movement earned a great ovation.

The audience compared the Boston Symphony favorably with the Vienna Philharmonic, which played here last May.

"A BRILLIANT, ABSORB
...not since 'Gone With The Wind' has
"SUPERB...CONSTANTL
PARAMOUNT PRESENTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,048
AUG 25 1956

Symphony Opens European Tour

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 24 (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra began a European concert tour here today before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, opened with three selections from the "Eire Suite" by Leroy Anderson. The main work was Brahms' second Symphony.

The music critic for the Irish Independent said the Brahms Symphony showed the orchestra to best advantage.

"The balance was excellent, and the interpretation sunny and vigorous," he said.

He added that the orchestra "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality to speed. And though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music."

Ireland's President Sean O'Kelly will receive the orchestra's special 75th anniversary gold medal after a concert tomorrow in Dublin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
AUG 25 1956

Warmly Appreciative Audience

'Eire Suite,' Played in Cork, Opens Boston Symphony Tour

By HUGH SMITH
[Boston Herald-N. Y. Times Dispatch]

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 24—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its European tour here tonight before a warmly appreciative, full audience at the Savoy motion picture theater.

Every notable in this capital of Munster, largest province of Ireland, including Lord Mayor Scan Casey and persons prominent in professional, cultural and university life of Cork, attended the concert.

The orchestra, with its conductor, Charles Munch, were introduced by Michael T. Kelleher, Boston business man and a trustee of the orchestra organization. He was cheered when he mentioned that his father had been born in Kilmichael, County Cork, a century ago and had emigrated to the United States as a boy. Kelleher disclosed that Munch's wife had died in Paris last Tuesday.

The well-balanced program opened appropriately with the first European performance of the "Eire Suite," by the American composer Leroy Anderson.

Feet went tapping to the rol-

(Continued on Page Twelve)

The classical part of the program opened, with a sparkling and gay performance of a Haydn symphony in which he superb quality of the first violin in the dainty minuet was particularly striking.

But the fine quality of the playing and the brilliance of the conductor become impressively evident in the Scherzo from Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Here was exotic, weird music full of strange and captivating rhythms that revealed the full timber and color of the orchestra. It is a dynamic and corruscating compsition, and it drew great applause.

FINAL OFFERING

Brahms' Second Symphony, as the final offering, received a scholarly and impressive performance. The lovely quality of the woodwinds was well displayed in the adagio and an exhilarating and spirited final movement earned a great ovation.

The audience compared the Boston Symphony favorably with the Vienna Philharmonic, which played here last May.

Kelleher in his talk said that "the presence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this hall tonight is a tribute of gratitude from the nation beyond the seas of which I am a loyal citizen to the land of saints and scholars which has contributed so abundantly of its spiritual blessings to America's present greatness."

The orchestra will give a concert in Dublin tomorrow. Following the concert the orchestra will present its special 75th anniversary medal to President Sean O'Kelly of Ireland.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 80,746
AUG 25 1956

CORK CONCERT OPENS TOUR OF HUB SYMPHONY

Large and Enthusiastic Audience Greets Boston Orchestra

Cork, Ireland, Aug. 24 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra began a European concert tour here today before a large and enthusiastic audience.

Brahms' Second Featured

The orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, opened with three selections from the "Eire Suite" by Leroy Anderson. The main work was Brahms' Second Symphony.

The music critic for the Irish Independent said the Brahms' Symphony showed the orchestra to best advantage.

"The balance was excellent, and the interpretation sunny and vigorous," he said.

He added that the orchestra "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality to speed. And though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music."

Ireland's President Sean O'Kelly will receive the orchestra's special 75th anniversary gold medal after a concert tomorrow in Dublin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
AUG 25 1956

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Irish Independent
DUBLIN
Date 25 AUG 1956

Cork Hears Boston Symphony Orchestra

MARY MacGORIS
"Irish Independent" Music Critic

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch opened its European tour in the Savoy Cinema Cork with a rather short programme of which the main item was the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

The first half of the concert was dissappointing offering playing of great proficiency and precision but not of any deeper or more exciting quality.

It opened with three pieces from the Eire Suite by Leroy Anderson, a popular type of work based on Irish tunes which, though completely metamorphosed in spirit from the familiar melodies as we know them here, were highly coloured wtth orchestral effects and made an acceptable, if lightweight, opening piece.

SMOOTH PLAYING

The symphony No. 102 by Haydn, one of the great final symphonies, was [illegible] for smooth playing especially from the strings. The conductor seems to regard Haydn as a strictly technical composer, and his attention to detail was so meticulous that at times it was difficult to see the music for the notes and constant over-pronounced dynamic contrasts impeded the shaping of this elegantly formed work

This orchestra seems inclined to sacrifice vitality to speed and though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music.

Dukas' "Sorcerer's Apprentice" was not perhaps the happiest choice in this programme. Here again the players displayed technical skill but a preponderance of brass with Dixieland overtones and in particular of edgy trumpet tone made the performance of this admittedly comical piece tremble at times on the edge of cariacature

It was the Brahms symphony which showed the orchestra to best advantage. The balance was excellent and the interpretation sunny and vigorous.

The tone of the orchestra, while apparently backing in richness or lustrous tonal beauty, is notably clear and beautifully leavened. Brahms, sometimes thick scoring wihle slightly more deliberate tempi especially in the adagio, might have given a more spacious effect the conassured control and the relentless impulsion which was sustained from the beginning to the brilliant finale resulted in a finely unfied and satisfying performance.

BIRTHDAY HONOUR FOR PRESIDENT

President O'Kelly will be presented with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's special 75th anniversary Gold Medal after the Orchestra's recital this afternoon in the Theatre Royal, Dublin.

The presentation, which will honour to-day, the President's 74th birthday, will be made by Dr. Charles Munch, the Orchestra's French conductor

The recital will be attended by members of the Government.

Hub Symphony Opens Tour in Cork

CORK, Ireland (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra began a European concert tour here before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, opened with three selections from the "Eire Suite," by Leroy Anderson. The main work was Brahms' Second Symphony.

The music critic for the Irish Independent said the Brahms Symphony showed the orchestra to best advantage.

"The balance was excellent, and the interpretation sunny and vigorous," he said.

He added that the orchestra "seems inclined to sacrifice vitally to speed. And though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music."

Ireland's president Sean O'Kelly will receive the orchestra"s special 75th anniversary gold medal after a concert in Dublin.

[41]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 25 AUG 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN CORK

4767

Perhaps it was that, coming so soon after Beecham's exquisite Beethoven on Sunday last, broadcast from the Edinburgh Festival, a contrast was pointed, or it may have been that the prologue spoken by a nostalgic Irish-American created a wrong atmosphere, but—whatever the cause—the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening in the Savoy Cinema, Cork, was not completely satisfying. The orchestra is very accomplished. It plays with precision, and a fine, sensitive response to the conductor's expressive beat. The accomplishment, however, is mainly technical with a surface approach, sentimental but rarely deeply felt.

One sat unmoved through the loveliest passages in a programme full of lovely things: the delicate richness of the Haydn Adagio (which has a depth of feeling in the lovely woodwind passages unusual in Haydn); the magical change from the Allegretto Grazioso to presto in the first movement of the Brahms—one of the most sublime things in all musical literature—and the rare beauty of the second movement.

The Haydn Minuet came off well, presumably because of the direct simplicity of rhythm and orchestration. "The Sorceror's Apprentice" promised well, but soon fell into machined position, like those great American cars which speed along comfortably. There were moments in the Brahms, which was easily the best performance of the evening, that glimpsed subtlety. The climatic surges were relentlessly built up, but, in general, detail was over-elaborated. The Irish Suite, as is to be expected from Leroy Anderson, who has written much attractive light music, was completely scored, and just as completely played.

The most vivid impression remaining after this concert is the superb bâton technique of the conductor, Charles Munch. The programme was: Eire Suite (Anderson); the London Symphony No. 102 (Haydn); L'Apprenti Sorcier (Dukas), and Symphony No. 2, in D Major (Brahms).

G.

Aug 25/Times

BOSTON SYMPHONY OPENS IN IRELAND

Orchestra Warmly Greeted by Large Audience in Cork as European Tour Starts

By HUGH SMITH
Special to The New York Times.

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 24—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its European tour here tonight before a warmly appreciative, large audience at the Savoy Motion Picture Theatre.

Every notable in this capital of Munster, largest province of Ireland, including Lord Mayor Sean Casey and persons prominent in professional, cultural and university life of Cork, attended the concert.

The orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, were introduced by Michael T. Kelleher, a leading Boston business man and a trustee of the orchestra organization. He was cheered when he mentioned that his father had been born at Kilmichael, County Cork, a century ago and had emigrated to the United States as a boy.

The well-balanced program opened appropriately with the first European performance of the "Eire Suite," by the American composer Leroy Anderson. Feet went tapping to the rollicking music of the Irish Washerwoman's jig, followed by an original and delightfully orchestrated version of "The Minstrel Boy" that charmed Irish ears. Mr. Anderson's setting of the lovely aria, "The Last Rose of Summer," with the jolly "Rakes of Mallow" as the last number of this suite, showed an American's appreciation of Irish music and pleased the audience immensely.

The classical part of the program opened with a sparkling and gay performance of a Haydn symphony in which the superb quality of the first violin in the dainty minuet was particularly striking.

But the fine quality of the playing and the brilliance of the conductor became impressively evident in Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Here was exotic, weird music full of strange and captivating rhythms that revealed the full timbre and color of the orchestra. It is a dynamic and coruscating composition, and drew great applause.

Brahms' Second Symphony, as the final offering, received a scholarly and impressive performance. The lovely quality of the woodwinds was well displayed in the adagio and an exhilarating and spirited final movement earned a great ovation.

The audience compared the Boston Symphony favorably with the Vienna Philharmonic, which played here last May.

"A BRILLIANT, ABSORB
...not since 'Gone With The Wind' has
"SUPERB...CONSTANTL
PARAMOUNT PRESENTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Eagle (m)
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 3,048
AUG 25 1956

Symphony Opens European Tour

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 24 (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra began a European concert tour here today before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, opened with three selections from the "Eire Suite" by Leroy Anderson. The main work was Brahms' second Symphony.

The music critic for the Irish Independent said the Brahms Symphony showed the orchestra to best advantage.

"The balance was excellent, and the interpretation sunny and vigorous," he said.

He added that the orchestra "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality to speed. And though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music."

Ireland's President Sean O'Kelly will receive the orchestra's special 75th anniversary gold medal after a concert tomorrow in Dublin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866
AUG 25 1956

... Appreciative Audience

Sym... Played in Cork, Opens ... Tour

(Continued from F...

licking music of the Iri... ...by Orchestra erwoman's Jig, followed ...mly appreciaoriginal and delightfully o... ...ater. trated version of "The Mins... Boy" that charmed Irish ears.

Anderson's setting of the lovely aria, "The Last Rose of Summer," with the jolly "Rakes of Mallow" as the last number of this suite, showed an American's appreciation of Irish music and pleased the audience immensely.

The classical part of the program opened with a sparkling and gay performance of a Haydn symphony in which he superb quality of the first violin in the dainty minuet was particularly striking.

But the fine quality of the playing and the brilliance of the conductor become impressively evident in the Scherzo from Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Here was exotic, weird music full of strange and captivating rhythms that revealed the full timber and color of the orchestra. It is a dynamic and corruscating compsition, and it drew great applause.

FINAL OFFERING

Brahms' Second Symphony, as the final offering, received a scholarly and impressive performance. The lovely quality of the woodwinds was well displayed in the adagio and an exhilarating and spirited final movement earned a great ovation.

The audience compared the Boston Symphony favorably with the Vienna Philharmonic, which played here last May.

Kelleher in his talk said that "the presence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this hall tonight is a tribute of gratitude from the nation beyond the seas of which I am a loyal citizen to the land of saints and scholars which has contributed so abundantly of its spiritual blessings to America's present greatness."

The orchestra will give a concert in Dublin tomorrow. Following the concert the orchestra will present its special 75th anniversary medal to President Sean O'Kelly of Ireland.

...ys color-
...u most.
...cuddle-
...es ... all in
...belts ... all
...ng you greater
USE OUR CON-
CHARGE AND PAY-
PLANS. Free storage
November. Free glazing life of garment.
Plus tax
show co...
NEN

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 405,628
AUG 25 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 80,746
AUG 25 1956

CORK CONCERT OPENS TOUR OF HUB SYMPHONY

Large and Enthusiastic Audience Greets Boston Orchestra

Cork, Ireland, Aug. 24 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra began a European concert tour here today before a large and enthusiastic audience.

Brahms' Second Featured

The orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, opened with three selections from the "Eire Suite" by Leroy Anderson. The main work was Brahms' Second Symphony.

The music critic for the Irish Independent said the Brahms' Symphony showed the orchestra to best advantage.

"The balance was excellent, and the interpretation sunny and vigorous," he said.

He added that the orchestra "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality to speed. And though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music."

Ireland's President Sean O'Kelly will receive the orchestra's special 75th anniversary gold medal after a concert tomorrow in Dublin.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Irish Independent
DUBLIN
Date 25 AUG 1956

Cork Hears Boston Symphony Orchestra

4767

MARY MacGORIS
"Irish Independent" Music Critic

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch opened its European tour in the Savoy Cinema Cork with a rather short programme of which the main item was the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

The first half of the concert was dissappointing offering playing of great proficiency and precision but not of any deeper or more exciting quality.

It opened with three pieces from the Eire Suite by Leroy Anderson, a popular type of work based on Irish tunes which, though completely metamorphosed in spirit from the familiar melodies as we know them here, were highly coloured wtth orchestral effects and made an acceptable, if lightweight, opening piece.

SMOOTH PLAYING

The symphony No. 102 by Haydn, one of the great final symphonies, was ... for smooth playing especially from the strings. The conductor seems to regard Haydn as a strictly technical composer, and his attention to detail was so meticulous that at times it was difficult to see the music for the notes and constant over-pronounced dynamic contrasts impeded the shaping of this elegantly formed work

This orchestra seems inclined to sacrifice vitality to speed and though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music.

Dukas' "Sorcerer's Apprentice" was not perhaps the happiest choice in this programme. Here again the players displayed technical skill but a preponderance of brass with Dixieland overtones and in particular of edgy trumpet tone made the performance of this admittedly comical piece tremble at times on the edge of cariacature

It was the Brahms symphony which showed the orchestra to best advantage. The balance was excellent and the interpretation sunny and vigorous.

The tone of the orchestra, while apparently backing in richness or lustrous tonal beauty, is notably clear and beautifully leavened. Brahms, sometimes thick scoring wihle slightly more deliberate tempi especially in the adagio, might have given a more spacious effect the conassured control and the relentless impulsion which was sustained from the beginning to the brilliant finale resulted in a finely unfied and satisfying performance.

BIRTHDAY HON... FOR PRESIDE...

President O'Kelly will ... sented with the Boston ... Orchestra's special 75th ... sary Gold Medal a... Orchestra's recital this ... in the Theatre Royal, D...

The presentation, which ... honour to-day, the P... 74th birthday, will be ... Dr. Charles Munch, the O... French conductor

The recital will be atte... members of the Govern...

Hub Symphony Opens Tour in Cork

CORK, Ireland (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra began a European concert tour here before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, opened with three selections from the "Eire Suite," by Leroy Anderson. The main work was Brahms' Second Symphony.

The music critic for the Irish Independent said the Brahms Symphony showed the orchestra to best advantage.

"The balance was excellent, and the interpretation sunny and vigorous," he said.

He added that the orchestra "seems inclined to sacrifice vitally to speed. And though the clarity of its presto playing is remarkable, it fails to achieve atmosphere or to bring out any underlying meaning in the music."

Ireland's president Sean O'Kelly will receive the orchestra"s special 75th anniversary gold medal after a concert in Dublin.

[41]

1956. C 7

BOSTON SYMPHONY OPENS IN IRELAND

Orchestra Warmly Greeted by Large Audience in Cork as European Tour Starts

By HUGH SMITH

Special to The New York Times.

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 24—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its European tour here tonight before a warmly appreciative, full audience at the Savoy Motion Picture Theatre.

Every notable in this capital of Munster, largest province of Ireland, including Lord Mayor Sean Casey and persons prominent in professional, cultural and university life of Cork, attended the concert.

The orchestra with its conductor, Charles Munch, were introduced by Michael T. Kelleher, a leading Boston business man and a trustee of the orchestra organization. He was cheered when he mentioned that his father had been born at Kilmichael, County Cork, a century ago and had emigrated to the United States as a boy. Mr. Kelleher disclosed that Mr. Munch's wife had died in Paris last Tuesday.

The well-balanced program opened appropriately with the first European performance of the "Eire Suite," by the American composer Leroy Anderson. Feet went tapping to the rollicking music of the Irish Washerwoman's jig, followed by an original and delightfully orchestrated version of "The Minstrel Boy" that charmed Irish ears. Mr. Anderson's setting of the lovely aria, "The Last Rose of Summer," with the jolly "Rakes of Mallow" as the last number of this suite, showed an American's appreciation of Irish music and pleased the audience immensely.

The classical part of the program opened with a sparkling and gay performance of a Haydn symphony in which the superb quality of the first violin in the dainty minuet was particularly striking.

But the fine quality of the playing and the brilliance of the conductor become impressively evident in the scherzo from Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Here was exotic, weird music full of strange and captivating rhythms that revealed the full timber and color of the orchestra. It is a dynamic and corruscating composition, and it drew great applause.

Brahms' Second Symphony, as the final offering, received a scholarly and impressive performance. The lovely quality of the woodwinds was well displayed in the adagio and an exhilarating and spirited final movement earned a great ovation.

The audience compared the Boston Symphony favorably with the Vienna Philharmonic, which played here last May.

Mrs. Munch, the former Genevieve Maury, was a granddaughter of one of the founders of the Nestlé Chocolate Company. She was a Parisian and was married to Mr. Munch in 1933.

Her interests were literary. She was the author of "Nouvelles de Limousin" and translated into French Thomas Mann's "Toni Kroeger."

She had been ill for some time and did not go to Boston for the symphony season this year. She remained in Paris and her husband flew there to see her during his winter vacation and again after the Berkshire Festival.

During the symphony season, the Munches lived in Milton, Mass. On Several occasions, Mrs. Munch gave lectures in Boston (in French and English) on Albert Schweitzer, who is related by marriage to the Munch family.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
The Irish Press
DUBLIN 25 AUG 1956
Date.....

Boston orchestra gets big Cork welcome

IRISH PRESS Reporter

FIVE thousand hands thundered applause after the Boston Symphony Orchestra had played the first concert of their European tour in the Savoy Cinema, Cork, last night.

Behind Mr. Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra, whose father was born in Kilmichael, County Cork, 100 years ago, stood Dr. Charles Munch and 105 musicians, including one woman.

During his speech, Mr. Kelleher paused involuntarily on a few occasions because, as he explained, of the emotional effect of standing before an Irish audience.

Dr. Munch stood with bowed head as Mr. Kelleher broke the news to the audience that Mrs. Munch, who had died earlier in the week, had been buried only a few hours before the concert was due to begin.

Thunderous applause

When the orchestra had finished playing Leroy Anderson's Irish Suite, the audience burst into thunderous applause.

Mr. Kelleher said if the Americans of Irish descent had attained positions of prominence and influence it was because America had accepted them for what their fathers hoped they would be and for what their fathers had made it possible for them to be by their labours and sacrifices.

"Let this relationship with the Boston Symphony Orchestra," he added, "symbolise for us the spirit of goodwill which has developed over these hundred years between Ireland and the United States."

Special suite

That the orchestra might fittingly honour the occasion they had prepared a special suite.

The suite includes special arrangements of "The Irish Washerwoman", "The Minstrel Boy' and "The Rakes of Mallow".

After the concert the orchestra members were entertained at a function organised by the Cork Orchestral Society. The Lord Mayor of Cork, Ald. Sean Casey, T.D., and the Lady Mayoress attended. Dr. Munch was made a presentation.

Removal vans transported the orchestra's instruments to Dublin, for which the members will leave this morning.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
Circ. D. 166,814
AUG 25 1956

Faultless Performance

Munch Conducts After Wife's Death

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 25 (AP)—Conductor Charles Munch, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a stirring performance here last night.

The performance brought tears to the eyes of thousands afte rthey were told that the conductor's wife, Genevieve, died in Paris three days earlier. Orchestra trustee Michael Kelleher broke down in sobs as he announced the death of Mrs. Munch.

SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR CHARLES MUNCH whose wife died earlier this week.

Kelleher cast aside a prepared speech. "I am sorry, my friends; I am overcome," he said, and groped his way off the stage with tears rolling down his cheeks.

Munch stood erect, with head and eyes cast downward. Then he led the 106-piece orchestra through a faultless performance of Anderson's Eire Suite, Haydn's London Symphony, the Sorcerer's Apprentice and Brahms' Second Symphony.

A compassionate Savoy Theatre audience stood and gave the conductor round after round of deafening applause.

"It was the act of a great conductor, a great man," Kelleher said later.

The program was the first of 28 in a European tour that will take the famed Boston orchestra behind the Iron Curtain. The orchestra plays in Dublin today before a distinguished audience, headed by Irish President Sean T. O'Kelly.

MUNCH

Page Two

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
JAMAICA, N. Y.
Long Island Press
Circ. D. 241,168 - S. 286,771
AUG 25 1956

IRISH CRITICS ARE 'UNMOVED'

Conductor Goes on, Despite Wife's Death

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 25 (UP)—Conductor Charles Muench, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra thru a stirring performance here last night.

Audience was told that the conductor's wife, Genevieve, died in Paris three days earlier. Orchestra trustee Michael Kelleher broke down in sobs before the concert as he announced the death of Mrs. Muench.

Mr. Kelleher cast aside a prepared speech. "I am sorry, my friends; I am overcome," he said, and groped his way off the stage with tears rolling down his cheeks.

Dr. Muench stood erect, with head and eyes cast downward. Then he led the 106-piece orchestra thru a faultless performance of Anderson's Eire Suite, Haydn's London Symphony, The Sorcerer's Apprentice and Brahms' Symphony.

LONG APPLAUSE

A compassionate Savoy Theater audience stood and gave the conductor round after round of deafening applause.

"It was the act of a great conductor, a great man," Mr. Kelleher said later.

The program was the first of 28 in a European tour that will take the Boston Symphony behind the Iron Curtain. The orchestra plays in Dublin today before a distinguished audience headed by Irish President Sean T. O'Kelly.

MIXED CRITICISM

But Irish critics held mixed opinions about the Cork program. The Irish Times said the performance left it "unmoved," and complained about the "prologue of a nostalgic Irish-American" (Mr. Kelleher) who "created the wrong atmosphere."

The paper said the orchestra was superficial and sentimental, altho it played "with great precision and a fine, sensitive response to the conductor's expressive beat."

It said Dr. Muench has "superb baton technique."

The Irish Independent said the orchestra was "notably clear and beautifully leavened," but added that it "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality for speed."

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
WASHINGTON D. C.
STAR
AUG 25 1956

Mrs. Charles Munch, Wife of Conductor

PARIS, Aug. 25 (AP).—Mrs. Charles Munch, wife of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, died Wednesday in Paris after a long illness. She was buried at a private service Thursday.

Mrs. Munch's death was announced last night in Cork, Ireland, at the orchestra's first concert on a European tour. Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, made the announcement to the audience while Mr. Munch stood with head bowed.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
JAMAICA, N. Y.
Long Island Press
Circ. D. 241,168 - S. 286,771
AUG 25 1956

Conductor's Wife Dies, He Goes On

CORK, Ireland (UP) — Conductor Charles Muench, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a stirring performance here last night.

The performance brought tears to the eyes of thousands after they were told the conductor's wife, Genevieve, died in Paris three days earlier. Orchestra trustee Michael Kelleher broke down in sobs as he announced the death of Mrs. Muench.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
YONKERS, N. Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
Circ. D. 36,669
AUG 25 1956

EMANUELE RONZONI, eighty-six, founder and president of the Ronzoni Macaroni Co. Inc., at New York City.

MRS. CHARLES MUNCH, wife of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, at Paris, France.

Aug 25

BOSTON SYMPHONY OPENS IN IRELAND

Orchestra Warmly Greeted by Large Audience in Cork as European Tour Starts

By HUGH SMITH

Special to The New York Times.

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 24—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its European tour here tonight before a warmly appreciative, full audience at the Savoy Motion Picture Theatre.

Every notable in this capital of Munster, largest province of Ireland, including Lord Mayor Sean Casey and persons prominent in professional, cultural and university life of Cork, attended the concert.

The orchestra with its conductor, Charles Munch, were introduced by Michael T. Kelleher, a leading Boston business man and a trustee of the orchestra organization. He was cheered when he mentioned that his father had been born at Kilmichael, County Cork, a century ago and had emigrated to the United States as a boy. Mr. Kelleher disclosed that Mr. Munch's wife had died in Paris last Tuesday.

The well-balanced program opened appropriately with the first European performance of the "Eire Suite," by the American composer Leroy Anderson. Feet went tapping to the rollicking music of the Irish Washerwoman's jig, followed by an original and delightfully orchestrated version of "The Minstrel Boy" that charmed Irish ears. Mr. Anderson's setting of the lovely aria, "The Last Rose of Summer," with the jolly "Rakes of Mallow" as the last number of this suite, showed an American's appreciation of Irish music and pleased the audience immensely.

The classical part of the program opened with a sparkling and gay performance of a Haydn symphony in which the superb quality of the first violin in the dainty minuet was particularly striking.

But the fine quality of the playing and the brilliance of the conductor become impressively evident in the scherzo from Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Here was exotic, weird music full of strange and captivating rhythms that revealed the full timber and color of the orchestra. It is a dynamic and corruscating composition, and it drew great applause.

Brahms' Second Symphony, as the final offering, received a scholarly and impressive performance. The lovely quality of the woodwinds was well displayed in the adagio and an exhilarating and spirited final movement earned a great ovation.

The audience compared the Boston Symphony favorably with the Vienna Philharmonic, which played here last May.

Mrs. Munch, the former Genevieve Maury, was a granddaughter of one of the founders of the Nestlé Chocolate Company. She was a Parisian and was married to Mr. Munch in 1933.

Her interests were literary. She was the author of "Nouvelles de Limousin" and translated into French Thomas Mann's "Toni Kroeger."

She had been ill for some time and did not go to Boston for the symphony season this year. She remained in Paris and her husband flew there to see her during his winter vacation and again after the Berkshire Festival.

During the symphony season, the Munches lived in Milton, Mass. On Several occasions, Mrs. Munch gave lectures in Boston (in French and English) on Albert Schweitzer, who is related by marriage to the Munch family.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
The Irish Press
DUBLIN 25 AUG 1956
Date.....

Boston orchestra gets big Cork welcome

4767

IRISH PRESS Reporter

FIVE thousand hands thundered applause after the Boston Symphony Orchestra had played the first concert of their European tour in the Savoy Cinema, Cork, last night.

Behind Mr. Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra, whose father was born in Kilmichael, County Cork, 100 years ago, stood Dr. Charles Munch and 105 musicians, including one woman.

During his speech, Mr. Kelleher paused involuntarily on a few occasions because, as he explained, of the emotional effect of standing before an Irish audience.

Dr. Munch stood with bowed head as Mr. Kelleher broke the news to the audience that Mrs Munch, who had died earlier in the week, had been buried only a few hours before the concert was due to begin.

Thunderous applause

When the orchestra had finished playing Leroy Anderson's Irish Suite, the audience burst into thunderous applause.

Mr. Kelleher said if the Americans of Irish descent had attained positions of prominence and influence it was because America had accepted them for what their fathers hoped they would be and for what their fathers had made it possible for them to be by their labours and sacrifices.

"Let this relationship with the Boston Symphony Orchestra," he added, "symbolise for us the spirit of goodwill which has developed over these hundred years between Ireland and the United States."

Special suite

That the orchestra might fittingly honour the occasion they had prepared a special suite.

The suite includes special arrangements of "The Irish Washerwoman", "The Minstrel Boy' and "The Rakes of Mallow".

After the concert the orchestra members were entertained at a function organised by the Cork Orchestral Society. The Lord Mayor of Cork, Ald. Sean Casey, T.D., and the Lady Mayoress attended. Dr. Munch was made a presentation.

Removal vans transported the orchestra's instruments to Dublin, for which the members will leave this morning.

Faultless Performance

Munch Conducts After Wife's Death

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 25 (AP)—Conductor Charles Munch, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a stirring performance here last night.

The performance brought tears to the eyes of thousands afte rthey were told that the conductor's wife, Genevieve, died in Paris three days earlier. Orchestra trustee Michael Kelleher broke down in sobs as he announced the death of Mrs. Munch.

SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR CHARLES MUNCH whose wife died earlier this week.

Kelleher cast aside a prepared speech. "I am sorry, my friends; I am overcome," he said, and groped his way off the stage with tears rolling down his cheeks.

Munch stood erect, with head and eyes cast downward. Then he led the 106-piece orchestra through a faultless performance of Anderson's Eire Suite, Haydn's London Symphony, the Sorcerer's Apprentice and Brahms' Second Symphony.

A compassionate Savoy Theatre audience stood and gave the conductor round after round of deafening applause.

"It was the act of a great conductor, a great man," Kelleher said later.

The program was the first of 28 in a European tour that will take the famed Boston orchestra behind the Iron Curtain. The orchestra plays in Dublin today before a distinguished audience, headed by Irish President Sean T. O'Kelly.

MUNCH

Page Two

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

WASHINGTON, D. C.

ductor, a great man," Mr. Kelleher said later.

The program was the first of 28 in a European tour that will take the Boston Symphony behind the Iron Curtain. The orchestra plays in Dublin today before a distinguished audience headed by Irish President Sean T. O'Kelly.

MIXED CRITICISM

But Irish critics held mixed opinions about the Cork program. The Irish Times said the performance left it "unmoved," and complained about the "prologue of a nostalgic Irish-American" (Mr. Kelleher) who "created the wrong atmosphere."

The paper said the orchestra was superficial and sentimental, altho it played "with great precision and a fine, sensitive response to the conductor's expressive beat."

It said Dr. Muench has "superb baton technique."

The Irish Independent said the orchestra was "notably clear and beautifully leavened," but added that it "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality for speed."

IMOVED'

Goes on, Wife's Death

Conductor Charles Muench, bereaved the Boston Symphony Orchestra here last night.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

JAMAICA, N. Y.
Long Island Press
Circ. D. 241,168 - S. 286,771

AUG 25 1956

Conductor's Wife Dies, He Goes On

CORK, Ireland (UP) — Conductor Charles Muench, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a stirring performance here last night.

The performance brought tears to the eyes of thousands after they were told the conductor's wife, Genevieve, died in Paris three days earlier. Orchestra trustee Michael Kelleher broke down in sobs as he announced the death of Mrs. Muench.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
Circ. D. 204,260 - S. 237,502

AUG 25 1956

Munch Conducts 3 Days After Death of Wife

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 25.—(UP)—Conductor Charles Munch, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a stirring performance here last

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

WASHINGTON D. C.
STAR

AUG 25 1956

Mrs. Charles Munch, Wife of Conductor

PARIS, Aug. 25 (AP).—Mrs. Charles Munch, wife of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, died Wednesday in Paris after a long illness. She was buried at a private service Thursday.

Mrs. Munch's death was announced last night in Cork, Ireland, at the orchestra's first concert on a European tour. Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, made the announcement to the audience while Mr. Munch stood with head bowed.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

YONKERS, N. Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
Circ. D. 36,669

AUG 25 1956

EMANUELE RONZONI, eighty-six, founder and president of the Ronzoni Macaroni Co. Inc., at New York City.

MRS. CHARLES MUNCH, wife of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, at Paris, France.

[42]

Aug 25

BOSTON SYMPHONY OPENS IN IRELAND

Orchestra Warmly Greeted by Large Audience in Cork as European Tour Starts

By HUGH SMITH

Special to The New York Times.

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 24—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its European tour here tonight before a warmly appreciative, full audience at the Savoy Motion Picture Theatre.

Every notable in this capital of Munster, largest province of Ireland, including Lord Mayor Sean Casey and persons prominent in professional, cultural and university life of Cork, attended the concert.

The orchestra with its conductor, Charles Munch, were introduced by Michael T. Kelleher, a leading Boston business man and a trustee of the orchestra organization. He was cheered when he mentioned that his father had been born at Kilmichael, County Cork, a century ago and had emigrated to the United States as a boy. Mr. Kelleher disclosed that Mr. Munch's wife had died in Paris last Tuesday.

The well-balanced program opened appropriately with the first European performance of the "Eire Suite," by the American composer Leroy Anderson. Feet went tapping to the rollicking music of the Irish Washerwoman's jig, followed by an original and delightfully orchestrated version of "The Minstrel Boy" that charmed Irish ears. Mr. Anderson's setting of the lovely aria, "The Last Rose of Summer," with the jolly "Rakes of Mallow" as the last number of this suite, showed an American's appreciation of Irish music and pleased the audience immensely.

The classical part of the program opened with a sparkling and gay performance of a Haydn symphony in which the superb quality of the first violin in the dainty minuet was particularly striking.

But the fine quality of the playing and the brilliance of the conductor become impressively evident in the scherzo from Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Here was exotic, weird music full of strange and captivating rhythms that revealed the full timber and color of the orchestra. It is a dynamic and corruscating composition, and it drew great applause.

Brahms' Second Symphony, as the final offering, received a scholarly and impressive performance. The lovely quality of the woodwinds was well displayed in the adagio and an exhilarating and spirited final movement earned a great ovation.

The audience compared the Boston Symphony favorably with the Vienna Philharmonic, which played here last May.

Mrs. Munch, the former Genevieve Maury, was a granddaughter of one of the founders of the Nestlé Chocolate Company. She was a Parisian and was married to Mr. Munch in 1933.

Her interests were literary. She was the author of "Nouvelles de Limousin" and translated into French Thomas Mann's "Toni Kroeger."

She had been ill for some time and did not go to Boston for the symphony season this year. She remained in Paris and her husband flew there to see her during his winter vacation and again after the Berkshire Festival.

During the symphony season, the Munches lived in Milton, Mass. On Several occasions, Mrs. Munch gave lectures in Boston (in French and English) on Albert Schweitzer, who is related by marriage to the Munch family.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
The Irish Press
DUBLIN 25 AUG 1956
Date.....

Boston orchestra gets big Cork welcome

4767

IRISH PRESS Reporter

FIVE thousand hands thundered applause after the Boston Symphony Orchestra had played the first concert of their European tour in the Savoy Cinema, Cork, last night.

Behind Mr. Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the orchestra, whose father was born in Kilmichael, County Cork, 100 years ago, stood Dr. Charles Munch and 105 musicians, including one woman.

During his speech, Mr. Kelleher paused involuntarily on a few occasions because, as he explained, of the emotional effect of standing before an Irish audience.

Dr. Munch stood with bowed head as Mr. Kelleher broke the news to the audience that Mrs Munch, who had died earlier in the week, had been buried only a few hours before the concert was due to begin.

Thunderous applause

When the orchestra had finished playing Leroy Anderson's Irish Suite, the audience burst into thunderous applause.

Mr. Kelleher said if the Americans of Irish descent had attained positions of prominence and influence it was because America had accepted them for what their fathers hoped they would be and for what their fathers had made it possible for them to be by their labours and sacrifices.

"Let this relationship with the Boston Symphony Orchestra," he added, "symbolise for us the spirit of goodwill which has developed over these hundred years between Ireland and the United States."

Special suite

That the orchestra might fittingly honour the occasion they had prepared a special suite.

The suite includes special arrangements of "The Irish Washerwoman", "The Minstrel Boy' and "The Rakes of Mallow".

After the concert the orchestra members were entertained at a function organised by the Cork Orchestral Society. The Lord Mayor of Cork, Ald. Sean Casey, T.D., and the Lady Mayoress attended. Dr. Munch was made a presentation.

Removal vans transported the orchestra's instruments to Dublin, for which the members will leave this morning.

Faultless Performance

Munch Conducts After Wife's Death

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 25 (AP)—Conductor Charles Munch, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a stirring performance here last night.

The performance brought tears to the eyes of thousands afte rthey were told that the conductor's wife, Genevieve, died in Paris three days earlier. Orchestra trustee Michael Kelleher broke down in sobs as he announced the death of Mrs. Munch.

SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR CHARLES MUNCH whose wife died earlier th week.,

Kelleher cast aside a prepared speech. "I am sorry, my friends; I am overcome," he said, and groped his way off the stage with tears rolling down his cheeks.

Munch stood erect, with head and eyes cast downward. Then he led the 106-piece orchestra through a faultless performance of Anderson's Eire Suite, Haydn's London Symphony, the Sorcerer's Apprentice and Brahms' Second Symphony.

A compassionate Savoy Theatre audience stood and gave the conductor round after round of deafening applause.

"It was the act of a great conductor, a great man," Kelleher said later.

The program was the first of 28 in a European tour that will take the famed Boston orchestra behind the Iron Curtain. The orchestra plays in Dublin today before a distinguished audience, headed by Irish President Sean T. O'Kelly.

MUNCH

Page Two

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

WASHINGTON, D. C.

ductor, a great man," Mr. Kelleher said later.

The program was the first of 28 in a European tour that will take the Boston Symphony behind the Iron Curtain. The orchestra plays in Dublin today before a distinguished audience headed by Irish President Sean T. O'Kelly.

MIXED CRITICISM

But Irish critics held mixed opinions about the Cork program. The Irish Times said the performance left it "unmoved," and complained about the "prologue of a nostalgic Irish-American" (Mr. Kelleher) who "created the wrong atmosphere."

The paper said the orchestra was superficial and sentimental, altho it played "with great precision and a fine, sensitive response to the conductor's expressive beat."

It said Dr. Muench has "superb baton technique."

The Irish Independent said the orchestra was "notably clear and beautifully leavened," but added that it "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality for speed."

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

JAMAICA, N. Y.
Long Island Press
Circ.-D. 241,168 - S. 286,771
AUG 25 1956

Conductor's Wife Dies, He Goes On

CORK, Ireland (UP) — Conductor Charles Muench, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a stirring performance here last night.

The performance brought tears to the eyes of thousands after they were told the conductor's wife, Genevieve, died in Paris three days earlier. Orchestra trustee Michael Kelleher broke down in sobs as he announced the death of Mrs. Muench.

'MOVED'

Goes on, Wife's Death

Conductor Charles Muench, bereaved the Boston Symphony Orchestra here last night.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
Circ. D. 204,260 - S. 237,502
AUG 25 1956

Munch Conducts 3 Days After Death of Wife

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 25.—(UP)—Conductor Charles Munch, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a stirring performance here last night.

The performance brought tears to the eyes of thousands after they were told that the conductor's wife, Genevieve, died in Paris three days earlier. Michael Kelleher, orchestra trustee, broke down in sobs as he announced the death of Mrs. Munch.

Munch stood erect, with head and eyes cast downward. Then he led the 106-piece orchestra through a faultless performance of Anderson's "Eire Suite," Haydn's "London Symphony," Dukas' "The Scorcerer's Apprentice" and Brahms' "Second Symphony."

A compassionate Savoy Theater audience stood and gave the conductor round after round of deafening applause.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

WASHINGTON D. C.
STAR
AUG 25 1956

Mrs. Charles Munch, Wife of Conductor

PARIS, Aug. 25 (AP).—Mrs. Charles Munch, wife of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, died Wednesday in Paris after a long illness. She was buried at a private service Thursday.

Mrs. Munch's death was announced last night in Cork, Ireland, at the orchestra's first concert on a European tour. Michael T. Kelleher, orchestra trustee, made the announcement to the audience while Mr. Munch stood with head bowed.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

YONKERS, N. Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
Circ. D. 36,669
AUG 25 1956

EMANUELE RONZONI, eighty-six, founder and president of the Ronzoni Macaroni Co. Inc., at New York City.

MRS. CHARLES MUNCH, wife of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, at Paris, France.

[42]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Republican
Circ. 135,309
AUG 26 1956

Boston Symphony Wins Applause In Ireland

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 25 (UP) — Irish critics agreed today that conductor Charles Muench did a magnificent job in conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra through its first European performance just three days after the death of his wife.

Muench and the orchestra got a standing ovation last night at the end of the performance.

Just before it started, orchestra trustee Michael Kelleher announced Meunch's wife had died three days ago in Paris. Then Kelleher broke down and groped his way off the stage weeping. The audience wept with him.

"It was the act of a great conductor, a great man," said Kelleher of Muench after the performance.

Muench led the 106-piece orchestra through flawless performances of Anderson's Wire Suite, Haydn's London Symphony, the Sorcerer's Apprentice and Brahms' Second Symphony. He accepted the ovation with head and eyes cast down.

The Irish times said the orchestra was superficial and sentimental but played with "great precision and a fine sensitive response to the conductor's . . . superb baton technique."

The Irish independent said the symphony was "notably clear and beautifully leavened" but said it "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality for speed."

Greece, Romania Keep Diplomatic Accord

ATHENS, Greece, Aug. 25 (AP)—Greece and Romania, World War II foes, agreed today to resume diplomatic relations.

The Greek Foreign Office announced signing of the accord, together with an economic agreement between this Balkan nation and the Communist Romanian government. Without detail, it said the question of war reparations to Greek nationals had also been settled.

Mexico To Speed Up Train Schedules

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 25 (AP)—The Mexican National Railways is streamlining schedules and hopes to cut travel time as much as 30 per cent. Officials said one example will be the reducing of travel time from Tijuana on the U. .S border to Merida, Yucatan, from 152 hours to 92 hours.

Cambodia has established diplomatic relations with Russia, Pnom Penh reports.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
WASHINGTON D. C.
POST & TIMES HERALD
AUG 26 1956

Deaths Elsewhere

Mrs. Charles Munch, wife of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor; in Paris.

Emanuele Ronzoni, 86, founder and head of one of the biggest macaroni firms in the Nation; in New York.

Anderson W. Weaver, 76, founder and chairman of the board of the Weaver Fertilizer Co. at South Money Point, Va.; at Farmville, Va.

Charles J. Margiotti, 65, widely known criminal attorney and twice Attorney General of Pennsylvania; in Pittsburgh.

George A. McLachlan, 76, one of the Nation's leading hat manufacturers; at Danbury, Conn.

Odone Belluzzi, 64, internationally known expert in construction; in Bologna, Italy.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
JAMAICA, N. Y.
Long Island Press
Circ. D. 241,168 - S. 286,771
AUG 26 1956

Irish Hail U.S. Maestro

CORK, Ireland (UP)—Irish critics agreed today that conductor Charles Meunch did a magnificent job in conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra through its first European performance just three days after the death of his wife.

Meunch and the orchestra got a standing ovation last night at the end of the performance.

Just before it started, Orchestra Trustee Michael Kelleher announced Meunch's wife had died three days ago in Paris. Then Kelleher broke down ad groped his way off the stage weeping. The audience wept with him.

It was the act of a great conductor, a great man, said Kelleher of Meunch after the performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 94,348
AUG 26 1956

Irish Critics Put OK On Muench's Baton Technique

CORK, Ireland, Aug. 25 (UP) —Irish critics agreed today that conductor Charles Muench did a magnificent job in conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra through its first European performance just three days after the death of his wife.

Muench and the orchestra got a standing ovation last night at the end of the performance.

Just before it started, orchestra trustee Michael Kelleher announced Muench's wife had died three days ago in Paris. Then Kelleher broke down and groped hih way off the stage weeping. The audience wept with him.

"It was the act of a great conductor, a great man," said Kelleher of Muench after the performance.

Muench led the 106-piece orchestra through flawless performances of Anderson's "Fire Suite," Haydn's "London Symphony," the "Sorcerer's Apprentice" and Brahms' "Second Symphony." He accepted the ovation with head and eyes cast down.

The Irish Times said the orchestra was superficial and sentimental but played with "great precision and a fine sensitive response to the conductor's . . . superb baton technique."

The Irish Independent said the symphony was "notably clear and beautifully leavened" but it "seems inclined to sacrifice vitality for speed."

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
TIME
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 3 1956

Boston to Cork

When American musicians fly to Europe, they usually touch down in Ireland as many tourists do, take on a few drams of Paddy's at Shannon and travel on. But when the Boston Symphony set up its five-week tour, it scheduled its first foreign concert in Cork (pop. 75,595).

The orchestra brought along one of its trustees, Boston Insurance Broker Michael T. Kelleher. Before the concert began last week in the 1,500-seat Savoy Theater, Mike Kelleher drew cheers when he spoke of his father who had emigrated to the U.S. from County Cork. Then the orchestra set its gesture to music, opened its program with U.S. Composer Leroy Anderson's Irish Suite, a collection of slick arrangements of Irish tunes.

The audience received this morsel with mixed feelings. Said one listener: "I would have preferred any overture to a selection of Irish airs which I already know by heart." Other program items: Dukas' The Sorcerer's Apprentice, Brahms's Second Symphony. At the end, the orchestra and Conductor Charles Munch (whose wife had died in Paris three days before) received a ten-minute ovation. Next day, before a top-drawer audience in Dublin, the ovation was repeated. But the Irish Times critic was totally unmoved by the sentimentality of the occasion. "The orchestra is very accomplished," he wrote, after the Cork concert. "It plays with great precision and a fine, sensitive response to the conductor's expressive beat. The accomplishment, however, is mainly technical . . . The Sorcerer's Apprentice promised well, but soon fell into machined precision, like those great American cars which speed along comfortably."

This week the orchestra plays at the Edinburgh Festival, then moves toward Soviet territory for concerts in Czechoslovakia and Russia.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
Circ. D. 111,942 - S. 113,799
AUG 26 1956

Conductor Keeps Going

CORK, Ireland, (UP) — Conductor Charles Munch, bereaved by the death of his wife, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a stirring performance here Friday night.

The conductor's wife, Genevieve, died in Paris three days ago. She was buried Thursday.

The program was the first of 28 in a European tour that will take the famed Boston orchestra behind the Iron Curtain.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
Circ. D. 183,271 - S. 429,495
AUG 26 1956

Conductor's Wife Dies

PARIS, Aug. 25.—(AP.)—Mrs. Charles Munch, wife of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, died Wednesday in Paris after a long illness and was buried at a private service Thursday.

TIME Mag. - Sept. 3/56

MUSIC

New Pop Crop on Top

Pop singers are usually singers before they know it, but they do not become pop without effort. Among the newest names close to the top are three who got there through extraordinary efforts.

Pat Boone, 22, was just another hillbilly singer from Nashville 18 months ago. Today, nobody who hears him in person ever hears the first or last few robust notes—they are always drowned in squeals of bobby-sox delight. Boone simply opened his mouth and sang when he was ten. "People just got to asking me to sing, and I sang," he says. Pat studied dramatics and speech at North Texas State College, finally landed a few TV spots, then got the call from Dot records. Such tunes as Two Hearts, Ain't That a Shame and, most recently, I Almost Lost My Mind, became smash hits, thanks largely to Boone's hearty, warm voice and mountain-style sentiment.

Today, as a regular on Arthur Godfrey Time and a practically permanent fixture on bestseller charts, Pat Boone is still not convinced that his success is real or permanent. He is a high-mark senior at Columbia University, is still planning to become a teacher. Last week, on a swing through the Midwest, he wound up eleven shows in 14 days. A Baton Rouge disk jockey, determined to get Boone to town by some means or other, climbed a pole and announced his determination to sit there until the hero arrived. "He's gonna sit there until I come down," sighs Pat, "so I suppose I'll have to go."

Tommy Weber

SINGER GORMÉ
Out on a limb.

Eydie (pronounced Ee-dee) Gormé, 25, had a solid record hit in Too Close for Comfort (ABC-Paramount), and another is coming up strong in one of those too-innocent-for-comfort ditties called Mama, Teach Me to Dance. She has also accumulated three years of experience on Steve Allen's Tonight. As she sings, her rather long face looks vaguely troubled, and a slight, pathetic wave ruffles her smooth voice. In sweet songs, she sounds reedy and controlled. When she lets go, she squeezes her eyes in a kind of happy passion, and bounces discreetly, until the crowd thinks it knows just what she means.

Six years ago, Bronx-born Songstress Gormé had reached the eminent position of export manager for a theatrical-equipment company, reached TV via dance-band and nightclub jobs. On TV she has sung while sitting on a bough overhanging the Niagara River hard by the falls, and with a high wind snatching the notes from her throat atop the RCA Building. Last winter, just before an 8 o'clock TV rehearsal, a call came: Would she appear on the 9:30 show at the Copacabana that night? The regular star, Billy Daniels, had been accused of shooting somebody in a saloon row, and couldn't get sprung in time. "When I got to the club, they didn't want to let me in. I had on a leather jacket and black wool slacks. I looked like a motorcycle kid. I had eight minutes to dress and get on the floor. It wasn't until I'd finished that I realized what had happened. Then I started to shake, and I passed out and started to cry." Last month Eydie was back at the Copa as a headliner.

Al Hibbler, 41, has been a professional singer for 20 years, including an eight-year stretch as vocalist with Duke Ellington, but it is only in the past year that he has caused mass ecstasy. He has a thick, almost syrupy voice with both a hint of maudlin sentimentality and a dash of satirical humor. He is a Negro and has been blind from birth. Al's blacksmith father sent him to the Arkansas School for the Blind in Little Rock, where he sang soprano until he was 17. Long before he graduated, in 1936, he had memorized every nuance of all the pop singers of the day. One fellow named Pha Terrell, who was featured with Andy Kirk's Twelve Clouds of Joy, used to let Al sing with the band sometimes when it hit Little Rock. In 1943 Al made the Ellington band, but "I was in the band for two weeks before I knew it." He kept singing as a guest, night after night, until he finally complained that he had to earn a living. "Why," drawled Duke casually, "you can pick up your pay any time."

Even then, Hibbler used to panic the teen-agers by his sudden, disconcerting swoops from a high note to a sub-basement tone. His second big break came a year and a half ago, when Decca signed him up and he recorded a song called Unchained Melody. It became a No. 1 hit. Now he asks $3,000 and up a week for appearances, plays the gaudiest spots in the biggest towns. Between dates he stays at home in Teaneck, N.J. with his wife, listening to the radio. "They tell good stories, those soap operas," he says. "Songs have good plots too, sometimes. If they do, that's when I like them. When I sing, I like to tell the plot."

Dick Hanley

SINGER BOONE
Up on a pole.

Boston to Cork

When American musicians fly to Europe, they usually touch down in Ireland as many tourists do, take on a few drams of Paddy's at Shannon and travel on. But when the Boston Symphony set up its five-week tour, it scheduled its first foreign concert in Cork (pop. 75,595).

The orchestra brought along one of its trustees, Boston Insurance Broker Michael T. Kelleher. Before the concert began last week in the 1,500-seat Savoy Theater, Mike Kelleher drew cheers when he spoke of his father who had emigrated to the U.S. from County Cork. Then the orchestra set its gesture to music, opened its program with U.S. Composer Leroy Anderson's Irish Suite, a collection of slick arrangements of Irish tunes.

The audience received this morsel with mixed feelings. Said one listener: "I would have preferred any overture to a selection of Irish airs which I already know by heart." Other program items: Dukas' The Sorcerer's Apprentice, Brahms's Second Symphony. At the end, the orchestra and Conductor Charles Munch (whose wife had died in Paris three days before) received a ten-minute ovation. Next day, before a top-drawer audience in Dublin, the ovation was repeated. But the Irish Times critic was totally unmoved by the sentimentality of the occasion. "The orchestra is very accomplished," he wrote, after the Cork concert. "It plays with great precision and a fine, sensitive response to the conductor's expressive beat. The accomplishment, however, is mainly technical . . . The Sorcerer's Apprentice promised well, but soon fell into machined precision, like those great American cars which speed along comfortably."

TIME

This week the orchestra plays at the Edinburgh Festival, then moves toward Soviet territory for concerts in Czechoslovakia and Russia.

Victory for Moderns

In music, as in politics, yesterday's revolutionary is today's conservative. Listeners' ears have become accustomed to hearing once scandalous sounds in the backgrounds of film, radio and TV productions, and the mellowing years caused many of the composers themselves to compose less aggressively. Today the record industry—perhaps the most conservative part of the generally conservative music business—seems to have decided that 20th century music is here to stay.

Last week the weekly trade magazine The Billboard front-paged some corroborating statistics. Three major labels, Columbia, Mercury and M-G-M, devoted the largest part of their summer releases to modern works, e.g., Aaron Copland's Twelve Poems of Emily Dickinson, Elliott Carter's The Minotaur. With several other companies contributing, 50 contemporary compositions were released this summer. This brings the impressive total of 20th century compositions on records to some 1,500, with about 240 composers represented. By comparison, there are only 776 works represented by 48 composers of the first half of the 19th century.

This does not yet mean that contemporary composers are necessarily eating better than they were before the boom. Record royalties seldom come to more than 3¢ a composition. In the modern-music field, 10,000 copies mean a rare bestseller, bring only $300. But the mere fact that a work is put on permanent vinyl plastic makes its composer seem more substantial. One of today's most popular contemporary LPs, Colin McPhee's Tabuh-Tabuhan, had a grand total of three performances between its creation, 20 years ago, and the time it came out on records (Mercury) this summer. Since then, at least half a dozen groups have made plans to perform it. Most popular modern composers on disks: Bartok, Prokofiev, Stravinsky.

Record companies are today practically forced into the arms of the modernists. They have exhausted the "standard" repertory of late 18th century and 19th century music and even the cool counterpoint of the preclassical masters. Some of the moderns prove to be profitable indeed. The reason: contemporary composers favor brilliant or unusual orchestral effects, and such effects are just dandy for showing off hi-fi phonograph equipment. Thus the battle of modern music appears to have reached its turning point, and the composers who pioneered during the '20s and '30s and their followers are about to enjoy victory.

technic

Linguist, bookkeeper, diplomat and cook, this lady's Gallic graces nourish, comfort and divert her guests during serene hours that seem to pass with breathless speed.

Intrigued with her smiling dexterity, Alleghany Airlines recently engaged fifteen of her colleagues to bewitch Americans at home with the Air France version of luxury in the air.

THE WORLD'S LARGEST AIRLINE

AIR FRANCE

FLIES IN THE FOREFRONT OF PROGRESS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 181,704
NOV 18 1956

Cork was where tour opened. Dr. Munch takes bow. Concert was warmly applauded by Irish who boast no major orchestra.

Dublin The next night, a host of Irish government leaders attended to hear program featuring Schumann, Haydn.

...and so back to Providence

The halls were of many shapes and sizes but the audiences were all alike: they liked the Boston Symphony in Europe

WHEN the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays Tuesday night at Veterans Memorial Auditorium, it will be the orchestra's first Providence appearance since its European tour. The tour, a triumph by any modest standard one cares to use in measuring response, was also unprecedented. Its route passed in and out of the Iron Curtain.

Among the 19 cities in which the orchestra played between Aug. 23 and Oct. 1 were Leningrad, Moscow and Prague. In all three cities, amity of a sort prevailed, and the orchestra was warmly received and highly praised.

British audiences in London and Edinburgh seemed astonished by the Boston Symphony's capacity and versatility, according to the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr. "In fact," he said, "British critics complained that we were too perfect. I guess they → Edinburgh concert was held in Usher Hall fitted with tiered seats behind orchestra for choral works.

Copenhagen The new Tivoli Hall is equipped with royal box, left, occupied by King and Queen.

Stockholm Lovely ornate-modern Concert Hall was scene of Swedish appearance. Glass baffles help the acoustics.

Oslo ↑

concert was given on Sept. 1 and featured Beethoven's Eroica. It was presented in the Folketeatret, a theater used a lot for ballet.

Helsinki →

President and Mrs. Kekonnen of Finland sat at center in front of audience when the Boston Symphony played at cavernous Fair Trade Hall.

Moscow ↓

concerts (there were three) were held in Great Hall of Moscow Conservatory. Roses on organ pipes fete orchestra on its 75th birthday.

Prague Orchestra played Honneger and Hanson to a full house at Smetana Hall, ornate and named for the Bohemian composer.

V-M 'Celeste' and 'Fidelis' Together.. STEREOPHONIC!

SHE: "A 'Celeste' tape recorder for you!"

HE: "A 'Fidelis' Hi-Fi Phono for you!"

Give the year's most unique, exciting and thoughtful gift . . . these V-M Stereomates! They combine to give you stereophonic sound at home . . . the sound that thrills you in theaters.

V-M Stereomates do much more than play stereophonic tapes! 'Celeste' is a complete, professional-quality, high-fidelity tape recorder; 'Fidelis'® a swank high-fidelity phonograph with all the famous V-M features. Separately and together, they're a gift of pleasure for the whole family for the years to come. Hear stereo now . . . give these Stereomates this Christmas.

V-M Model 750, 'Celeste' in Blonde or Mahogany fine-furniture finish, $259.95. V-M Model 560, 'Fidelis' in Blonde or Mahogany, $149.50. Walnut or Ebony a bit more. Optional Legs available for both units.

V-M has portable Stereomates, too . . . tape-o-matic® portable tape recorder and the V-M hi-fi portable phonograph.

V-M Automatic 4-speed portable. Here's a light and lyric gift for teenagers and people on-the-go. It has terrific tonal qualities, a V-M four-speed changer with Siesta-Matic that automatically shuts off everything after last record plays. V-M Model 1260, $54.95

24 V-M Models to Choose From

Ask your V-M Dealer about the diamond needle offer available with some V-M models.

Purely for Pleasure

the Voice of Music®

V-M CORPORATION • BENTON HARBOR, MICHIGAN

WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF PHONOGRAPHS AND RECORD CHANGERS

Gift-Shop at Your Neighborhood V-M Dealer Listed Below!

PROVIDENCE
Adler's Inc.
Anderson & Wood
Boston Store
Les Browns'
Meiklejohn Co.
Rhody TV
Shawmut TV & Furniture

ATTLEBORO, MASS.
H. Arthur Hall Co.
Johnny Siddals
Tremblay Refrigeration

BARRINGTON
Barrington Radio & Electric

CENTRAL FALLS
Rowan Bros. Radio

COVENTRY
S.J.M. Electric Co.

CRANSTON
Hovey's Radio
State Furniture
A. F. Wilbur

DANIELSON, CONN.
Hurme Radio
Phil's Radio

EAST GREENWICH
Kent Electric

EAST PROVIDENCE
Barnett Electronics

FALL RIVER, MASS.
Borges Furniture Co.

FALL RIVER, MASS.
Feldman Bros. Furniture
G & O Music Box
Gendreau Furniture Co.
Modern Furniture Co.
Robert's TV & Appliance Co.
Stafford Showrooms
Travis Furniture

GARDEN CITY
United Television

HOXIE
Bellevue Camer Co.

LONSDALE
Ben's Radio

MIDDLEBORO, MASS.
Leo Kahian Furniture

MIDDLETOWN
Sullivans Hardware & Appliance

NEW LONDON, CONN.
American Television
Center TV
Kenn Radio
Modern Electric
Pat's TV

NEWPORT
Bens Furniture
Broadway Radio Shop
Jordan Jewelers
Walsh Bros. Furniture
C. John Wright

NORWICH, CONN.
Adam's Wayside
Dino's Music Shop
W. Gaffney
Kay's TV

OLD SAYBROOK, CONN.
Fred Beebe

PAWTUCKET
A & B Radio
Apex Tire & Appliance
Boyd Powers
Stadium Electric
Supreme Record & Radio

PUTNAM, CONN.
Weiss Appliance

SOUTH WOODSTOCK
Ferns Radio

TAUTON, MASS.
Bristol County Radio & Furniture

WAKEFIELD
Alrick Appliance Co.
Wakerfield Electronics

WARREN
DaPonte Bros. Furniture
Marcello's Radio

WARWICK
Electronics, Inc.
Monahan's TV
Wilbar Rogers

WEST BARRINGTON
Bob LaRue

WESTERLY Frederick's

WEST WARWICK
Capwell Engineering

WOONSOCKET
Ed's Radio & TV
Modern Music Co.

Vienna By Sept. 12, orchestra was in Vienna's Grosser Konzerthaus, where visiting orchestras usually appear.

SYMPHONY ON TOUR continued

Brought 'Cultural Gift'

meant something like what men say about a very beautiful woman—that she is too beautiful to stand."

The tour opened in a movie house in Cork, where Mr. Michael T. Kelleher, a Boston insurance man and a trustee of the orchestra, made a little speech in which he expressed his pleasure as the son of an immigrant in making a cultural gift from one celebrated Irish center to another.

In Dublin, the concert was attended by former Prime Minister De Valera as well as Sean O'Kelly, president of Eire, and the mayor of Dublin who happened to be celebrating his 75th birthday. This year is also the orchestra's 75th anniversary. The Dublin concert was in a converted movie house.

The most beautiful concert hall used by the orchestra, in Man- →

Stuttgart The Liederhalle at Stuttgart was opened last spring and is asymmetrical. The orchestra played Brahms 2nd.

Munich In Munich Dr. Munch conducted in stately Kongressaal of the Deutchesmuseum, featuring elegant chandeliers.

Zurich Pierre Monteux, who alternated with Dr. Munch, wields baton at Tonhalle, big auditorium in Zurich cultural center.

Open
Mondays
10:15-9:00

Gladding's
SINCE 1788

Shopping Service
Jackson 1-9800

"Casual Maker" In 100% Nylon Jersey
Sizes 12-20 and women's 12½-22½

Gladding's, Providence, R. I.
Please charge my account .... send C.O.D.
..... (add 25c) find remittance enclosed
..... for 12.98 "Casual Maker" Dress

Size	Color

Name .....
Address .....

Beautiful Persian print, cuffs and collar lined with Pellon to retain their shape after washing. Wash . . . no-iron . . . won't wrinkle . . . no care. Teal, blue and wine. By Sy Frankl 12.98

Budget Dresses, Fourth Floor
And Wayland Square

Paris concerts were at Champs Elysees Theatre where Stravinsky Sacre de Printemps premiere years ago caused a near riot.

Hall of Czarist Nobles

ager Perry's estimation, was Hall of the Philharmonic in Leningrad. "It was built before the Revolution," he said, "and was called the Great Hall of the Nobles in czarist days. Nowadays, it is used by the Leningrad orchestra. It is painted in an off-white color and the seat upholstery is finished in red. The place is kept in tiptop condition."

One concert hall, the Tivoli, is placed right in an amusement park in the center of Copenhagen. "It is a very beautiful building," Mr. Perry said, "and quite new. The amusement park—not gaudy like ours—is in the center of the city and has walks and restaurants and so on. A delightful and entertaining place."

End

Leningrad

Today's cover shows concert-going Russians at the first of two Boston Symphony concerts in Leningrad. The scene is Philharmonic Hall at Leningrad, the home of the Leningrad orchestra, and the former Grand Hall of the Nobles of czarist days. It was called "the most beautiful concert hall I was ever in" by Thomas D. Perry Jr., Boston Symphony's manager. Program included symphony by Walter Piston, American.

Leeds concert was presented in the Town Hall. Leeds was chosen to bring music to an area outside a metropolitan center.

London Royal Festival Hall, built for the Festival of Britain, was scene of the last concerts, Sept. 24-25.

Providence Dr. Munch leads orchestra at our own Veterans Memorial Auditorium, scene of Tuesday concert.

[44]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

SEP 8 1956

BSO Tour Members Receive Irish Hospitality

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra staff who are accompanying the orchestra on its European tour are introduced to Irish coffee at Shannon's international airport by Miss Paddy Murphy, airport hostess. Seated left to right are Gail Rector, assistant BSO manager; Thomas D. Perry Jr., BSO manager; Miss Mary Smith, Mr. Perry's secretary; and Mrs. Perry.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

PHILA., PA. CATHOLIC
STANDARD & TIMES

SEP 7 1956

Boston Symphony Plays in Ireland

CORK, Ireland (NC).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra paid a musical tribute here "to the land of saints and scholars which has contributed so abundantly to America's present greatness."

The orchestra and its conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, were introduced to the Irish audience by Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the Boston Symphony, who said his father was born in County Cork 100 years ago. Mr. Kelleher, who is chairman of the executive committee of the National Catholic Community Service in Washington, noted that he is "the first of my race and faith" to serve in the capacity of trustee of the Boston Symphony.

In his brief introduction, Mr. Kelleher said:

"As spokesman for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I bear witness to the union in our American society of diverse elements which a century ago seemed so far apart.

"Our fathers who were nurtured on this hallowed soil came to America with little more than their faith, their natural honesty and decency and their willingness to respond with tireless energy to the opportunities afforded them in the land of their adoption. . . . If we Americans of Irish descent

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
CATHOLIC NEWS
Circ. W. 52,538

SEP 8 1956

Boston Symphony Offers Musical Tribute to Irish

CORK, Ireland (NC)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra paid a musical tribute here "to the land of saints and scholars which has contributed so abundantly to America's present greatness."

The orchestra and its conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, were introduced to the Irish audience by Michael T. Kelleher, a trustee of the Boston Symphony, who said his father was born in County Cork 100 years ago. Mr. Kelleher, who is chairman of the executive committee of the National Catholic Community Service in Washington, noted that he is "the first of my race and faith" to serve in the capacity of trustee of the Boston Symphony.

In his brief introduction, Mr. Kelleher said:

"As spokesman for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I bear witness to the union in our American society of diverse elements which a century ago seemed so far apart.

"Our fathers who were nurtured on this hallowed soil came to America with little more than their faith, their natural honesty and decency and their willingness to respond with tireless energy to the opportunities afforded them in the land of their adoption . . . If we Americans of Irish descent

58 A THE BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

BOSTONIANS ABROAD—Members of the Boston Symphony, now touring Europe, were entertained recently by Henry Laughlin, president of Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston, at his Castle Hyde, 25 miles from Cork, Ireland. From left, Henry B. Cabot, president of the Symphony board of trustees, Michael T. Kelleher, trustee, Roger Voisin, first trumpeter, and Laughlin.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 13 1956

Boston Orchestra Irish Concerts

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Aug. 12.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its European tour with two concerts in Ireland, at Cork Friday night, Aug. 24, and in Dublin the following afternoon. Michael T. Kelleher, a Boston insurance broker and trustee of the orchestra who arranged for the sponsorship of the two concerts, will give an address to the Irish people before the concert at the Savoy Theater in Cork.

The concert in Dublin's Theater Royal will be under the patronage of the Most Rev. Dr. John C. McQuade, Archbishop of Dublin and Primate of Ireland, and will be the first event in a drive to raise funds to rebuild the ninety-seven year old Archdiocesan Seminary of the Holy Cross at Clonliffe.

Charles Munch will conduct both concerts.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Dublin Evening Press.

24 AUG 1956

GOLD MEDAL FOR THE PRESIDENT

AFTER the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Theatre Royal tomorrow afternoon, which will be attended by the President and members of the Government, Mr. O'Kelly will be presented with the Orchestra's special 75th Anniversary Gold Medal.

The presentation is being made as a graceful gesture in recognition of the fact that tomorrow is the President's 74th birthday—he is one year younger than the famous Orchestra.

The presentation will be made by Dr. Charles Munch, the Orchestra's 65 year-old French conductor, in a short ceremony after the concert.

Immediately afterwards conductor and orchestra will be hurrying to Dublin Airport to catch a plane for Edinburgh, where they are booked to play during the International Festival.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 184,973

AUG 24 1956

Hub Symphony in Dublin

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presents its first European concert tonight in Dublin with a program designed to delight Irish music lovers.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Dublin Sunday Independent

MUSIC-MAKING WITH A DIFFERENCE

Brilliant men from Boston

By James Delany

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, which played its final concert in Ireland at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, yesterday, has a proud record of seventy-five years of achievement.

That this reputation is well founded was evident at once. A flood of magnificent tone from all sections of this large orchestra made the rendering of our own and the American National Anthems a thrilling experience.

SHEER DELIGHT

The lovely Haydn Symphony which opened the programme was sheer delight. Performances of these classic works tend to become a little precious and "arty" in some centres. This was a virile, manly performance, yet impeccable in the clarity of its exposition and wonderful rhythmic urge infused by the brilliant conductor —Charles Munch.

This work was followed by an Elegy by Howard Hanson dedicated to Serge Koussevitzky, who was the inspiring conductor of the orchestra for twenty-five years. It is a finely conceived and moving work which fully exploits the resources of the modern orchestra and showed unmistakably the excellence of the Boston players.

BREATH-TAKING

The performance of Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" was breathtaking in the virtuosity of the playing and the sure mastery of Charles Munch. We have heard orchestras in recent years, but none equalled the brilliance of this.

The concert concluded with Schumann's 2nd Symphony, in which the conductor's impelling rhythmic urge compensated for any tendency towards dullness in the work.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Cork Examiner

Dublin Letter

74 Grafton Street,
Friday Night.

MEDAL FOR PRESIDENT

AT the conclusion of the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Theatre Royal to-morrow, the President, Mr. O'Kelly, will be presented with a medal. It is the medal which was struck to commemorate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the orchestra. Mr. O'Kelly, as it happens, will be 74 to-morrow—a year younger than the orchestra—and the presentation is, therefore, in the nature of a birthday present. Dr. Charles Munch, the 65-year-old French conductor of the orchestra, will hand the medal to the President during a short ceremony after the concert. There will not be a great deal of time available, and it will be a weary group of musicians who will hurry to Dublin Airport to fly to Edinburgh, where they will give performances during the international festival there. The orchestra is sure of a good reception here as the Theatre Royal is booked out, with the exception of some two-guinea and one-guinea seats.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Dublin Sunday Independent

U.S. orchestra honours President O'Kelly

THE Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly on his 74th birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work which was specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the famous orchestra.

The presentation took place in the Theatre Royal after the concert given by the orchestra in aid of Holy Cross College, Clonliffe.

Returning thanks to Mr. Henry B. Cabot, Chairman of the Trustees of the Orchestra, who made the presentation, the President spoke of the "most friendly and cordial relations" existing between Irish people and the people of Boston.

An Irish city

"There is no place outside Ireland where there are more Irish people to the square mile than there are in the city of Boston. I have been there before and, if God spares me, I hope to visit the city again," Mr. O'Kelly said.

Following the presentation, Miss Kitty O'Callaghan presented Dr. Munch with scores of a number of works by Irish composers on behalf of the Cultural Relations Committee.

Mayor's greetings

Mr. M. Kelleher, a prominent Boston businessman and one of the trustees of the orchestra, extended an invitation to Mr. R. Briscoe, T.D., Lord Mayor of Dublin, to visit Boston in March.

Mr. Kelleher also brought birthday wishes from the Mayor of Boston, Mr. Hynes, to the President.

Present at the reception were Mrs. O'Kelly; the Papal Nuncio, Most Rev. Dr. Levame; the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. Dr. McQuaid; An Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Cosgrave; the American Ambassador and Mrs. Taft; and Mr. de Valera, T.D.

On arrival at the theatre for the concert, the guests were met by Mr. Louis Elliman, Managing Director, Odeon (Ireland) Ltd.

★ President S. T. O'Kelly views a music score presented to him after the performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Theatre Royal, yesterday. From left: Dr. Munch (Conductor of the orchestra); the American Ambassador, Mr. Taft, and Mr. H. B. Cabot (Chairman, Trustees of the Orchestra.

Left by plane

Two chartered Aer Lingus planes left Dublin last evening for Edinburgh carrying members of the orchestra.

The orchestra is to play at the Edinburgh Festival before continuing its European tour.

The other members of the orchestra travelled by boat to Glasgow.

Bereavement

It was announced at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Cork on Friday night that Mrs. Charles Munch, wife of the conductor of the orchestra, had died in Paris after a long illness.

Following the close of the orchestra's season in Massachusetts on Sunday week last, Dr. Munch flew to France to see his wife. She died on Tuesday last and was buried there on Thursday.

Afterwards Dr. Munch flew to Cork for the orchestra's engagement there.

MUSIC-MAKING WITH A DIFFERENCE

Brilliant men from Boston

By James Delany

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, which played its final concert in Ireland at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, yesterday, has a proud record of seventy-five years of achievement.

That this reputation is well founded was evident at once. A flood of magnificent tone from all sections of this large orchestra made the rendering of our own and the American National Anthems a thrilling experience.

SHEER DELIGHT

The lovely Haydn Symphony which opened the programme was sheer delight. Performances of these classic works tend to become a little precious and "arty" in some centres. This was a virile, manly performance, yet impeccable in the clarity of its exposition and wonderful rhythmic urge infused by the brilliant conductor —Charles Munch.

This work was followed by an Elegy by Howard Hanson dedicated to Serge Koussevitzky, who was the inspiring conductor of the orchestra for twenty-five years. It is a finely conceived and moving work which fully exploits the resources of the modern orchestra and showed unmistakably the excellence of the Boston players.

BREATH-TAKING

The performance of Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" was breathtaking in the virtuosity of the playing and the sure mastery of Charles Munch. We have heard orchestras in recent years, but none equalled the brilliance of this.

The concert concluded with Schumann's 2nd Symphony, in which the conductor's impelling rhythmic urge compensated for any tendency towards dullness in the work.

The dredger that

Irish Exhibition

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Dublin Sunday Press

26 AUG 1956

President was 74 yesterday

UACHTARÁIN na hEireann, Sean T. O Ceallaigh quietly celebrated his 74th birthday yesterday at Arus an Uachtarain to where he returned after spending a fortnight's holiday at his country residence in Roundwood Park, Wicklow.

A Shoillse Bean Ui Ceallaigh was the first to offer her congratulations. After attending an early Mass, His Excellency read a number of congratulatory telegrams.

Until it was time for his only formal engagement of the day—a visit to the Theatre Royal to attend the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — the President was kept busy answering telephone calls of congratulation.

Very happy

In a brief birthday statement to the SUNDAY PRESS he said:

"I am very happy to have reached 74 years and to have completed one term of office. I hope God will spare me to complete my second term."

Following the symphony concert, the President returned again to Arus an Uachtaráin, where he spent the remainder of the day quietly reading the Irish, American, German, French and Italian papers which he reads every day.

[Photo: Colman Doyle

medal, struck for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, and the score of a work written for the anniversary by Howard Hanson.

In Cork on Friday, Senator Mrs. Dowdall, on behalf of the Cork Orchestral Society, presented a silver dish to Dr. Munch, the conductor, and Mr. Cabot, the chairman of the orchestra's trustees.

At the concert

Among the audience in the Theatre Royal were the President, the Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Cosgrave; Mr. de Valera; Most Rev. Dr. Levame, Apostolic Nuncio; Most Rev. J. C. McQuaid, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin; Mr. W. H. Taft, American Ambassador; and the Lord Mayor of Dublin, Colr. R. Briscoe, T.D.

Footnote: Dr. Munch's wife died in Paris last Tuesday, after a long illness. He flew over from France to conduct here.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHEERED IN DUBLIN

Special to The New York Times.

DUBLIN, Aug. 25—The large audience that filled the Theatre Royal here today marked its appreciation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's final concert in Ireland by repeated ovations for its conductor, Charles Munch.

This was a bigger occasion than the concert the orchestra gave in Cork last night, for the heads of state and church were present. Occupying boxes were President and Mrs. Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, United States Ambassador William H. Taft and Mrs. Taft, the Papal Nuncio, Archbishop Albert Levame, the Most Rev. John C. McQuaide, Archbishop of Dublin, and Robert Briscoe, the Lord Mayor of Dublin, and Mrs. Briscoe.

The program included Schumann's Symphony No. 2, Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Juan," the Elegy written by Howard Hanson to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky and a Haydn symphony.

The orchestra left tonight for Edinburgh, Scotland, to take part in the festival there.

N Y Times
Sunday
Sun. Aug 26.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ.: D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860

AUG 26 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHEERED IN DUBLIN

Special to The New York Times.

DUBLIN, Aug. 25—The large audience that filled the Theatre Royal here today marked its appreciation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's final concert in Ireland by repeated ovations for its conductor, Charles Munch.

This was a bigger occasion than the concert the orchestra gave in Cork last night, for the heads of state and church were present. Occupying boxes were President and Mrs. Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, United States Ambassador William H. Taft and Mrs. Taft, the Papal Nuncio, Archbishop Albert Levame, the Most Rev. John C. McQuaide, Archbishop of Dublin, and Robert Briscoe, the Lord Mayor of Dublin, and Mrs. Briscoe.

The program included Schumann's Symphony No. 2, Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Juan," the Elegy written by Howard Hanson to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky and a Haydn symphony.

The orchestra left tonight for Edinburgh, Scotland, to take part in the festival there.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
IRISH PRESS, Dublin.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Dublin Evening Press.

27 AUG 1956

Boston Orchestra's concert at Royal

DUBLIN gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Royal a most hospitable reception on Saturday afternoon, leaving it to the poor critics to see justice was done.

In my own case judgment is delivered more in sorrow than in anger, for the Orchestra is obviously a splendid one. It is a real orchestra a perfectly integrated whole, not a mere casual assemblage of players.

After half a dozen bars we knew that here was a group capable of giving a conductor all that can be yielded by mortal musicians. Tone was firm, voluminous, and in most cases fine. (I had doubts about the trumpeter, but the lady flautist was good and the oboist splendid). The attack was instantaneous, the ensemble perfect, the clarity admirable, but the performance regrettable.

Conductor's fault

The fault was the conductor's, Charles Münch. And yet it wasn't his either, because you cannot condemn a man for having been reared as a Frenchman—that is, a person who cannot lay a finger upon a semiquaver without withering all the feeling out of it.

French music-making can be exquisite, delicate, fascinating in its virtuosity, it can have the energy of the whirlwind and the brilliance of the diamond, but it is inhuman. No soul speaks from it to our soul, and who can find anything more damning to say about an artist's work than that?

In the centre

Let there be no mistake about it. Monsieur Münch is expert enough to hit every bullseye he aims for plump in the centre. It is the nature of the bullseyes I lament.

The works, whose notes were played with blameless accuracy, were Haydn's 102nd Symphony, Schumann's Second (there was a glimmer of emotion in the slow movement here) and Strauss's Don Juan.

There was also a lengthy string of elegiac commonplaces by a Mr. Howard Hanson (of Wahoo, Nebraska, said the programme) in memory of his friend Serge Koussevitsky. I fear it only served to increase our grief at the demise of M. Münch's worthy predecessor.

J. O'D.

President gets birthday gifts from orchestra

IRISH PRESS Reporter

A GOLD MEDAL, struck to mark the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was presented to the President when he attended the orchestra's recital at the Theatre Royal.

The recital was under the patronage of Most Rev. J. C. McQuaid, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin and Primate of Ireland, and was arranged by Our Lady's Choral Society, in aid of Holy Cross College, Clonliffe.

The President was also given the score of a work written by Howard Hanson. Both presentations were to mark his 74th birthday.

Mr. Mike Kelleher, one of the orchestra trustees, presented the President with birthday greetings from the Mayor of Boston, Mr. J. B. Hynes.

The chairman of the trustees, Mr. Henry B. Cabot, presenteing the medal and score, said the presentations were to mark the President's birthday and "in memory of the occasion of playing in this great Catholic city."

Would come again

The President said he was delighted with the visit of the orchestra to Dublin and expressed the hope that it would come again. Its tour of Europe, he he said, would show the Old World that the New World had excellent musicians.

Miss Kitty O'Callaghan, of the Cultural Relations Committee, presented the conductor of the orchestra, Dr. Charles Munch, with the scores of five original works by Irish composers.

The recital was also attended by the Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; Most Rev. Dr. Levame, Papal Nuncio; Mr. Cosgrave, Minister for External Affairs; Mr. de Valera and the Lord Mayor of of Dublin, Mr. R. Briscoe, T.D.

Spectacular music 'machine'

AN orchestra visiting a foreign capital usually plays its best, excited by the occasion and the sense of anticipation which a strange audience communicates.

Enthusiastic reports from other cities put hopes high for the Dublin visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and record collectors remembered their brilliant recordings of the standard repertoire.

Their performance at the Theatre Royal on Saturday showed them as a spectacular machine with a dazzling technique, as glossy and purring as some highly powered musical dynamo.

The strings seemed to breathe together, so shapely and balanced was their phrasing, but other sections of the orchestra make more for brilliance and power than for the more delicate colours of the tonal spectrum.

'Athletic zest'

The brass tended to athletic zest, in particular, the leading trumpeter, who uncheked by conductor, Charles Munch, upped with his bell whenever he had the chance, and launched a deafening assault that obliterated the fine playing of his colleagues in the wood-wind.

But, this apart, it was evident that the individual players are brilliant; and, possibly, a better balance of sound can be obtained in more resonant surroundings.

The programme opened with the Haydn B flat symphony, which was characterised by incisive attack and vigour. The conductor brought out all the gaiety and sparkle of Haydn, sometimes at the expense of shape.

There was astonishing variety of expression, but some of the semi-quavers in the finale cried aloud for elbow-room in the unwonted pace.

Worthy 'Don Juan'

Strauss's mighty tone poem, "Don Juan," fared better. Both conductor and orchestra joined in a brilliant, volatile and electrifying performance, worthy of that amazing score with which the composer, at 25, astonished the musical world in 1889.

The Hanson "Elegy" (in memory of Koussevitzky) made a pleasant contrast in the many styles of late romantic composers.

The Schumann symphony was possibly the best piece of the concert, and showed both Charles Munch and his players to the best advantage But all their glowing tone and suppleness could not dispel an air of premeditation that hung over the performance of this symphony.

Within the composer's creaking structure there is much deeply felt material. Charles Munch sought beauty of shape and sound, and fully projected its emotional content.

R.J.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from the
EVENING HERALD
DUBLIN

Date 25 AUG 1956

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HAD STREAMLINED EFFICIENCY

★ WHEN we think of the Irish in the United States, Boston is the city that most readily comes to mind. Boston is for many the traditional home of the Irish exile and the Boston-Irish the authentic Irish-American.

On Saturday afternoon in the Theatre Royal, an organisation of which Boston is very proud, the Symphony Orchestra, gave their first-ever Dublin concert en route to Edinburgh.

STREAMLINED

Over a hundred strong, the orchestra plays with a streamlined chromium-plated efficiency.

Every shade of sound is turned out with the flourish of the highest form of advanced mechanics.

However, the warmth of tone of the Vienna or Berlin Philharmonic Orchestras is missing.

The Boston brass strikes European ears as rather too strident. This is especially the case in trumpet playing which seems to be forever hailing unseen armies to battle.

THE CONDUCTOR

There is no denying, nevertheless, French conductor Charles Munch has under him a highly effective and brilliant music-making instrument.

The Strauss "Don Juan" tone poem was marked by dazzling string work, although one would have liked to have got the whoop from the horns one hears in Munich or London.

NO PHRASE MISSED

The Haydn Symphony No. 102 was delicately played, no phrase was missed or undervalued, while Hanson's Elegy to Koussevitzky's Memory was expressively executed.

This is Schumann's centenary year and the Boston Orchestra marked it by giving his Second Symphony in C major.

This was the most enjoyable item in the concert.

VERVE

The woodwind of the orchestra is excellent and the principal oboeist, flautist and clarinetist are all splendid players which they amply demonstrated in the third movement.

The strings responded to M. Munch's dramatic directions with verve and beauty.

B. Q.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ.: D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
AUG 26 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHEERED IN DUBLIN

Special to The New York Times.

DUBLIN, Aug. 25—The large audience that filled the Theatre Royal here today marked its appreciation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's final concert in Ireland by repeated ovations for its conductor, Charles Munch.

This was a bigger occasion than the concert the orchestra gave in Cork last night, for the heads of state and church were present. Occupying boxes were President and Mrs. Sean T. O'Kelly, Premier John A. Costello, United States Ambassador William H. Taft and Mrs. Taft, the Papal Nuncio, Archbishop Albert Levame, the Most Rev. John C. McQuaide, Archbishop of Dublin, and Robert Briscoe, the Lord Mayor of Dublin, and Mrs. Briscoe.

The program included Schumann's Symphony No. 2, Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Juan," the Elegy written by Howard Hanson to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky and a Haydn symphony.

The orchestra left tonight for Edinburgh, Scotland, to take part in the festival there.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2
Extract from
IRISH PRESS, Dublin.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Dublin Evening Press.

Boston Orchestra's concert at Royal

4767

DUBLIN gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Royal a most hospitable reception on Saturday afternoon, leaving it to the poor critics to see justice was done.

In my own case judgment is delivered more in sorrow than in anger, for the Orchestra is obviously a splendid one. It is a real orchestra a perfectly integrated whole, not a mere casual assemblage of players.

After half a dozen bars we knew that here was a group capable of giving a conductor all that can be yielded by mortal musicians. Tone was firm, voluminous, and in most cases fine. (I had doubts about the trumpeter, but the lady flautist was good and the oboist splendid). The attack was instantaneous, the ensemble perfect, the clarity admirable, but the performance regrettable.

Conductor's fault

The fault was the conductor's, Charles Münch. And yet it wasn't his either, because you cannot condemn a man for having been reared as a Frenchman—that is, a person who cannot lay a finger upon a semiquaver without withering all the feeling out of it.

French music-making can be exquisite, delicate, fascinating in its virtuosity, it can have the energy of the whirlwind and the brilliance of the diamond, but it is inhuman. No soul speaks from it to our soul, and who can find anything more damning to say about an artist's work than that?

In the centre

Let there be no mistake about it. Monsieur Münch is expert enough to hit every bullseye he aims for plump in the centre. It is the nature of the bullseyes I lament.

The works, whose notes were played with blameless accuracy, were Haydn's 102nd Symphony, Schumann's Second (there was a glimmer of emotion in the slow movement here) and Strauss's Don Juan.

There was also a lengthy string of elegiac commonplaces by a Mr. Howard Hanson (of Wahoo, Nebraska, said the programme) in memory of his friend Serge Koussevitsky. I fear it only served to increase our grief at the demise of M. Münch's worthy predecessor.

J. O'D.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2
Extract from the
EVENING HERALD
DUBLIN
Date

President gets birthday gifts from orchestra

4767

IRISH PRESS Reporter

A GOLD MEDAL, struck to mark the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was presented to the President when he attended the orchestra's recital at the Theatre Royal.

The recital was under the patronage of Most Rev. J. C. McQuaid, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin and Primate of Ireland, and was arranged by Our Lady's Choral Society, in aid of Holy Cross College, Clonliffe.

The President was also given the score of a work written by Howard Hanson. Both presentations were to mark his 74th birthday.

Mr. Mike Kelleher, one of the orchestra trustees, presented the President with birthday greetings from the Mayor of Boston, Mr. J. B. Hynes.

The chairman of the trustees, Mr. Henry B. Cabot, presenteing the medal and score, said the presentations were to mark the President's birthday and "in memory of the occasion of playing in this great Catholic city."

Would come again

The President said he was delighted with the visit of the orchestra to Dublin and expressed the hope that it would come again. Its tour of Europe, he he said, would show the Old World that the New World had excellent musicians.

Miss Kitty O'Callaghan, of the Cultural Relations Committee, presented the conductor of the orchestra, Dr. Charles Munch, with the scores of five original works by Irish composers.

The recital was also attended by the Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; Most Rev. Dr. Levame, Papal Nuncio; Mr. Cosgrave, Minister for External Affairs; Mr. de Valera and the Lord Mayor of of Dublin, Mr. R. Briscoe, T.D.

Spectacular music 'machine'

AN orchestra visiting a foreign capital usually plays its best, excited by the occasion and the sense of anticipation which a strange audience communicates.

Enthusiastic reports from other cities put hopes high for the Dublin visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and record collectors remembered their brilliant recordings of the standard repertoire.

Their performance at the Theatre Royal on Saturday showed them as a spectacular machine with a dazzling technique, as glossy and purring as some highly powered musical dynamo.

The strings seemed to breathe together, so shapely and balanced was their phrasing, but other sections of the orchestra make more for brilliance and power than for the more delicate colours of the tonal spectrum.

'Athletic zest'

The brass tended to athletic zest, in particular, the leading trumpeter, who uncheked by conductor, Charles Munch, upped with his bell whenever he had the chance, and launched a deafening assault that obliterated the fine playing of his colleagues in the wood-wind.

But, this apart, it was evident that the individual players are brilliant; and, possibly, a better balance of sound can be obtained in more resonant surroundings.

The programme opened with the Haydn B flat symphony, which was characterised by incisive attack and vigour. The conductor brought out all the gaiety and sparkle of Haydn, sometimes at the expense of shape.

There was astonishing variety of expression, but some of the semi-quavers in the finale cried aloud for elbow-room in the unwonted pace.

Worthy 'Don Juan'

Strauss's mighty tone poem, "Don Juan," fared better. Both conductor and orchestra joined in a brilliant, volatile and electrifying performance, worthy of that amazing score with which the composer, at 25, astonished the musical world in 1889.

The Hanson "Elegy" (in memory of Koussevitzky) made a pleasant contrast in the many styles of late romantic composers.

The Schumann symphony was possibly the best piece of the concert, and showed both Charles Munch and his players to the best advantage But all their glowing tone and suppleness could not dispel an air of premeditation that hung over the performance of this symphony.

Within the composer's creaking structure there is much deeply felt material. Charles Munch sought beauty of shape and sound, and fully projected its emotional content.

R.J.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Dublin Sunday Press
26 AUG 1956

Orchestra gave medal to President

4767

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra was given a thunderous ovation by a distinguished audience in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, yesterday.

After the concert the President —in honour of his 74th birthday —was presented with a gold medal, struck for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, and the score of a work written for the anniversary by Howard Hanson.

In Cork on Friday, Senator Mrs. Dowdall, on behalf of the Cork Orchestral Society, presented a silver dish to Dr. Munch, the conductor, and Mr. Cabot, the chairman of the orchestra's trustees.

At the concert

Among the audience in the Theatre Royal were the President, the Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Cosgrave; Mr. de Valera; Most Rev. Dr. Levame, Apostolic Nuncio; Most Rev. J. C. McQuaid, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin; Mr. W. H. Taft, American Ambassador; and the Lord Mayor of Dublin, Colr. R. Briscoe, T.D.

Footnote: Dr. Munch's wife died in Paris last Tuesday, after a long illness. He flew over from France to conduct here.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HAD STREAMLINED EFFICIENCY

4767

★ WHEN we think of the Irish in the United States, Boston is the city that most readily comes to mind. Boston is for many the traditional home of the Irish exile and the Boston-Irish the authentic Irish-American.

On Saturday afternoon in the Theatre Royal, an organisation of which Boston is very proud, the Symphony Orchestra, gave their first-ever Dublin concert en route to Edinburgh.

STREAMLINED

Over a hundred strong, the orchestra plays with a streamlined chromium-plated efficiency.

Every shade of sound is turned out with the flourish of the highest form of advanced mechanics.

However, the warmth of tone of the Vienna or Berlin Philharmonic Orchestras is missing.

The Boston brass strikes European ears as rather too strident. This is especially the case in trumpet playing which seems to be forever hailing unseen armies to battle.

THE CONDUCTOR

There is no denying, nevertheless, French conductor Charles Munch has under him a highly effective and brilliant music-making instrument.

The Strauss "Don Juan" tone poem was marked by dazzling string work, although one would have liked to have got the whoop from the horns one hears in Munich or London.

NO PHRASE MISSED

The Haydn Symphony No. 102 was delicately played, no phrase was missed or undervalued, while Hanson's Elegy to Koussevitzky's Memory was expressively executed.

This is Schumann's centenary year and the Boston Orchestra marked it by giving his Second Symphony in C major.

This was the most enjoyable item in the concert.

VERVE

The woodwind of the orchestra is excellent and the principal oboeist, flautist and clarinetist are all splendid players which they amply demonstrated in the third movement.

The strings responded to M. Munch's dramatic directions with verve and beauty.

B. O.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 27 Aug 1956

CONTRASTS IN PERFORMANCE BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

4767

Symphony in B flat, No. 102 (Haydn)
Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 (Howard Hanson)
Tone Poem, Don Juan, Op. 20 (Richard Strauss)
Symphony No. 2 in C, Op. 61 (Schumann)

I really enjoyed and was moved by the last couple of minutes (from the last pause) of "Don Juan" on Saturday at the Theatre Royal, Dublin; and by some expressive playing in the Adagio of the Schumann symphony. In these two passages the Boston Symphony Orchestra showed some life and feeling. But the rest of the afternoon was essentially a demonstration of what is probably the most efficient musical machine that we have heard here.

When the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra came in April they proved to be very slick indeed, but with little soul. One hoped that this was merely a stage in Sergent's development of them and that he will eventually get the machine to make real music. The Boston orchestra proved to be even slicker, with virtually no soul. Charles Munch has now been with them for seven years, and he should have been able in that time to get from them the feeling and poetry of music as well as technical perfection. After all, technique is but the means, and not the end, of expression.

This was the third time this year we have had "Don Juan" in Ireland. Our own radio orchestra has no pretensions to being a world-famous top-flight body, but, in all seriousness, its playing of "Don Juan" was much more enjoyable than Saturday's, because it was alive, had feeling and was done with zest. And that was but a shadow of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra's playing in Cork in May.

Obviously the blame must rest largely with Charles Munch, the Boston's conductor, but does it go deeper than that? In forging this machine, have the players forgotten to enjoy the making of music as such? Except for some of the woodwind (specially the first flute) it seemed very doubtful if any of the players really got a kick out of playing their music.

Perhaps they also felt that it was not a very exciting programme. It was such a pity that with major modern American music so unknown this side of the Atlantic, they should not have brought us something really interesting and memorable. Howard Hanson's Elegy proved to be a highly academic piece of fin-de-siècle romanticism, but not worth bringing three thousand miles to represent the music of the U.S.A.

All this seems very harsh and ungrateful after we have been accorded the opportunity of hearing in our own capital one of the world's famous orchestras. It is probable that in Boston their performances are wonderful; that Saturday was one of those off-days that all artists have. But one can only judge what one hears. And it is because of their fame and position that they have the right to be judged by the highest standards and asked to come back again and play from the heart—to add feeling to precision, exhilaration to technique. As it was on Saturday, they committed the one great sin against the spirit of music—they were boring. This was so sad after all the fanfares of publicity, among the panoply of Church and State, and made one feel all the more bitter that in May the Vienna Philharmonic were not accorded a welcome in our capital as they were in Cork and Limerick. C.A.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 27 AUG 1956

4767

The President, Mr. Sean T. O'Kelly, with Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (left), and the American Ambassador, Mr. W. H. Taft, after the presentation to the President in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Saturday, of the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra. The presentation, which included a gold medal struck to mark the 75th anniversary of the orchestra, was made by Mr. Henry B. Cabot, chairman, on behalf of the trustees of the orchestra, which gave a concert in the Theatre Royal on Saturday.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date

President celebrates 74th birthday

4767

The President, Mr. O'Kelly, who was 74 years old on Saturday, attended the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Saturday afternoon. The trustees of the orchestra honoured the President's birthday by presenting him with the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold meda' struck on the occasion of its 75th birthday.

Mr. O'Kelly had returned to Arus an Uachtarain on Friday night after a fortnight's holiday at his country home in Roundwood, Co. Wicklow. He had no other formal engagements during Saturday and spent his day reading the newspapers and receiving messages of congratulation by telephone and telegram.

He said on Saturday: "I am very happy to have reached 74 years and to have completed one term of office. I hope God will spare me to complete my second term."

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Manchester Guardian
27 AUG 1956

BOSTON HONOURS IRISH PRESIDENT

4767

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly of Ireland on his seventy-fourth birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

BOOKS RECEIVED

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Dublin Evening Mail

27 AUG 1956

Latecomers Delay Of Symphony

4767

THOUGH latecomers and "chatterers" in the audience delayed the start of the concert given in the Theatre Royal by the one hundred and five strong Boston Symphony Orchestra surely the second half of the concert should not have begun until the President and his party had returned to their box.

It was the first visit to Dublin of the 75-year-old orchestra and Saturday's concert was the second of a series of 27 which will take the orchestra to 18 countries in its first European tour.

The Dublin concert, held under the patronage of His Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. J. C. McQuaid, D.D., who was present. Also in the audience were An Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Lord Mayor, Mr. R. Briscoe, T.D.; the Papal Nuncio, Most Rev. Dr. Levame; Mr. Cosgrave, T.D., Minister for External Affairs; Mr. de Valera, T.D.; the American Ambassador, Mr W. H. Taft, and many other members of the Diplomatic Corps. Without doubt, it was an historic occasion in the musical life of Dublin.

CAPACITY AUDIENCE

A capacity audience heard the first performance in Europe of "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44," by the American composer, Howard Hanson, who wrote it, a specially commissioned work, for the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the Boston
is being
Serge of the
The inventi diously colorat rhythm
F Cha
the o own perfo felt t sonal ficen
Pr
stron brea was prop four lack who sou and con
Ha
No
in of cl in w which was balanced, cohesive, reading that proclaimed its structural logic and organic unity, with virtuoso string and woodwind playing.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND LONDON W.C.2
Extract from
The Northern Whig
and Belfast Post
BRIDGE STREET, BELFAST.
London Office: 143 FLEET STREET.
Date
27 AUG 1956

VISIT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Dublin hears what Belfast missed

4767

BELFAST music-lovers have every right to feel aggrieved that the proposed visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to our city did not materialize, although good fortune smiled on both Cork and Dublin in this respect. I am told that it was impossible to include Belfast in the present tour.

At all events, for the Dublin music enthusiast all roads led to the Theatre Royal on Saturday when a big crowd turned up to hear a programme which can hardly be called popular by any stretch of the imagination. One might, moreover, question the choice of music, considering the fact that this orchestra, I believe, boasts 102 players. This was surely an occasion to let us hear some of the music demanding numerical resources outside the economic reach of most of the orchestras one hears.

In view of the criticisms which I may make in the course of this review, let me say at this stage that the B.S.O. is indeed a very fine orchestra and Charles Munch a sincere and greatly gifted conductor who is a joy to watch.

Haydn's symphony in B flat (No. 102) was, I must confess, something of a disappointment although it had many impressive moments. Technically and tonally there was nothing to fault, and indeed there was some particularly beautiful playing from the woodwind. I felt, however, that the unrelenting precision, some over-insistence on dynamics, and a tendency to "spotlight" too much detail, mitigated against the conception as a whole.

One gained the overall impression that this was a very fine and worthy technical achievement rather than the deeply spiritual performance expected.

No one can blame either conductor or players for some dull moments in Schumann's symphony in C major (No. 2), but I gladly record that this performance had a vitality and rhythmic urge that I have found lacking in other performances of this work. Under the circumstances, we ought to be very grateful to Dr. Munch for the loving care which he lavished on this music to such good purpose.

Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, composed for the 75th anniversary of the B.S.O., is, as modern works go, an agreeable and likeable composition. It does not, admittedly, say much that is new, but it is expressive music, and it was played with great authority.

The strings were again heard to fine effect, but I think that the acoustics of this large and very comfortable theatre are not particularly helpful to strings. While the string tone had an almost silky quality, there was not much warmth or "bloom."

The remaining music played was the "Don Juan" Tone Poem of Richard Strauss, and this was a wonderfully disciplined and really thrilling performance, and the best all-playing of the concert. Apart from its musical worth it was welcome, because it allowed us to hear the full strength of this orchestra, and Munch drew from his players some of the most electrifying orchestral tuttis that I have ever heard. This performance alone made the journey to Dublin worth while.

I feel it would be ungrateful to close these notes without recording deep appreciation of Dr. Munch's willingness to carry out his Irish engagements under what must have been for him a very considerable strain. His wife died in Paris on Tuesday, and Dr. Munch flew to Ireland after the funeral on Thursday.

Incidentally, after the orchestra have finished their commitments at the Edinburgh Festival, the remainder of their tour will include visits to Norway and the U.S.S.R. I understand that this will be the first visit of a Western orchestra to Russia since before the Revolution. L.F.M'C.

[48]

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 27 AUG 1956

CONTRASTS IN PERFORMANCE BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

4767

Symphony in B flat, No. 102 (Haydn)
Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 (Howard Hanson)
Tone Poem, Don Juan, Op. 20 (Richard Strauss)
Symphony No. 2 in C, Op. 61 (Schumann)

I really enjoyed and was moved by the last couple of minutes (from the last pause) of "Don Juan" on Saturday at the Theatre Royal, Dublin; and by some expressive playing in the Adagio of the Schumann symphony. In these two passages the Boston Symphony Orchestra showed some life and feeling. But the rest of the afternoon was essentially a demonstration of what is probably the most efficient musical machine that we have heard here.

When the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra came in April they proved to be very slick indeed, but with little soul. One hoped that this was merely a stage in Sergent's development of them and that he will eventually get the machine to make real music. The Boston orchestra proved to be even slicker, with virtually no soul. Charles Munch has now been with them for seven years, and he should have been able in that time to get from them the feeling and poetry of music as well as technical perfection. After all, technique is but the means, and not the end, of expression.

This was the third time this year we have had "Don Juan" in Ireland. Our own radio orchestra has no pretensions to being a world-famous top-flight body, but, in all seriousness, its playing of "Don Juan" was much more enjoyable than Saturday's, because it was alive, had feeling and was done with zest. And that was but a shadow of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra's playing in Cork in May.

Obviously the blame must rest largely with Charles Munch, the Boston's conductor, but does it go deeper than that? In forging this machine, have the players forgotten to enjoy the making of music as such? Except for some of the woodwind (specially the first flute) it seemed very doubtful if any of the players really got a kick out of playing their music.

Perhaps they also felt that it was not a very exciting programme. It was such a pity that with major modern American music so unknown this side of the Atlantic, they should not have brought us something really interesting and memorable. Howard Hanson's Elegy proved to be a highly academic piece of fin-de-siècle romanticism, but not worth bringing three thousand miles to represent the music of the U.S.A.

All this seems very harsh and ungrateful after we have been accorded the opportunity of hearing in our own capital one of the world's famous orchestras. It is probable that in Boston their performances are wonderful; that Saturday was one of those off-days that all artists have. But one can only judge what one hears. And it is because of their fame and position that they have the right to be judged by the highest standards and asked to come back again and play from the heart—to add feeling to precision, exhilaration to technique. As it was on Saturday, they committed the one great sin against the spirit of music—they were boring. This was so sad after all the fanfares of publicity, among the panoply of Church and State, and made one feel all the more bitter that in May the Vienna Philharmonic were not accorded a welcome in our capital as they were in Cork and Limerick.

C.A.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 27 AUG 1956

The President, Mr. Sean T. O'Kelly, with Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (left), and the American Ambassador, Mr. W. H. Taft, after the presentation to the President in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Saturday, of the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra. The presentation, which included a gold medal struck to mark the 75th anniversary of the orchestra, was made by Mr. Henry B. Cabot, chairman, on behalf of the trustees of the orchestra, which gave a concert in the Theatre Royal on Saturday.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date

President celebrates 74th birthday

4767

The President, Mr. O'Kelly, who was 74 years old on Saturday, attended the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Saturday afternoon. The trustees of the orchestra honoured the President's birthday by presenting him with the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold meda' struck on the occasion of its 75th birthday.

Mr. O'Kelly had returned to Arus an Uachtarain on Friday night after a fortnight's holiday at his country home in Roundwood, Co. Wicklow. He had no other formal engagements during Saturday and spent his day reading the newspapers and receiving messages of congratulation by telephone and telegram.

He said on Saturday: "I am very happy to have reached 74 years and to have completed one term of office. I hope God will spare me to complete my second term."

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Manchester Guardian
27 AUG 1956

BOSTON HONOURS IRISH PRESIDENT

4767

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly of Ireland on his seventy-fourth birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

BOOKS RECEIVED

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Dublin Evening Mail

Latecomers Delayed Start Of Symphony Concert

4767

THOUGH latecomers and "chatterers" in the audience delayed the start of the concert given in the Theatre Royal by the one hundred and five strong Boston Symphony Orchestra surely the second half of the concert should not have begun until the President and his party had returned to their box.

It was the first visit to Dublin of the 75-year-old orchestra and Saturday's concert was the second of a series of 27 which will take the orchestra to 13 countries in its first European tour.

The Dublin concert, held under the patronage of His Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. J. C. McQuaid, D.D., who was present. Also in the audience were An Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Lord Mayor, Mr. R. Briscoe, T.D.; the Papal Nuncio, Most Rev. Dr. Levame; Mr. Cosgrave, T.D., Minister for External Affairs; Mr. de Valera, T.D.; the American Ambassador, Mr W. H. Taft, and many other members of the Diplomatic Corps. Without doubt, it was an historic occasion in the musical life of Dublin.

CAPACITY AUDIENCE

A capacity audience heard the first performance in Europe of "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44," by the American composer, Howard Hanson, who wrote it, a specially commissioned work, for the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is being commemorated this year. Serge Koussevitzky was conductor of the orchestra from 1924 to 1949.

The elegy teems with original invention and is notable for fastidiously wrought texture, novel coloration, and ingeniously varied rhythms.

FORCEFUL CONDUCTOR

Charles Munch, the conductor of the orchestra since 1949, has his own personal views on the music performed. The orchestra obviously felt the force of his magnetic personality and responded magnificently throughout.

Precision is this orchestra's strongest point. It was almost breath-taking at times. Yet, there was something lacking — besides properly balanced brass tone—in all four works played. The music lacked the poetic inspiration of one who could delve deep into its very soul, and give sustenance, colour, and "life" to an otherwise superbly correct technical interpretation.

TWO SYMPHONIES

The two symphonies performed—Haydn's No. 102 and Schumann's No. 2—had much that the discerning listener could enjoy in playing of truly extraordinary intensity and clarity, without, however, realising in full the true spirit of either work.

There was a slight improvement in this respect in the playing of the Strauss tone poem, Don Juan, which was given a taut, well-balanced, cohesive, reading that proclaimed its structural logic and organic unity, with virtuoso string and woodwind playing.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND LONDON W.C.2
Extract from
The Northern Whig
and Belfast Post
BRIDGE STREET, BELFAST.
London Office: 143 FLEET STREET.
Date 27 AUG 1956

VISIT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Dublin hears what Belfast missed

4767

BELFAST music-lovers have every right to feel aggrieved that the proposed visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to our city did not materialize, although good fortune smiled on both Cork and Dublin in this respect. I am told that it was impossible to include Belfast in the present tour.

At all events, for the Dublin music enthusiast all roads led to the Theatre Royal on Saturday when a big crowd turned up to hear a programme which can hardly be called popular by any stretch of the imagination. One might, moreover, question the choice of music, considering the fact that this orchestra, I believe, boasts 102 players. This was surely an occasion to let us hear some of the music demanding numerical resources outside the economic reach of most of the orchestras one hears.

In view of the criticisms which I may make in the course of this review, let me say at this stage that the B.S.O. is indeed a very fine orchestra and Charles Munch a sincere and greatly gifted conductor who is a joy to watch.

Haydn's symphony in B flat (No. 102) was, I must confess, something of a disappointment although it had many impressive moments. Technically and tonally there was nothing to fault, and indeed there was some particularly beautiful playing from the woodwind. I felt, however, that the unrelenting precision, some over-insistence on dynamics, and a tendency to "spotlight" too much detail, mitigated against the conception as a whole.

Irish Press Aug. 26 '56

Lord Mayor may visit Boston

Dublin's Lord Mayor, Councillor Robert Briscoe, T.D., was yesterday handed an invitation from his Boston opposite number, Mayor John B. Hynes, to visit Boston in March.

The invitation was given by Mr. Mike Kelleher, Boston business man and a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after the Orchestra's concert in the Theatre Royal.

[48]

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 27 AUG 1956

CONTRASTS IN PERFORMANCE BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

4767

Symphony in B flat, No. 102 (Haydn)
Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 (Howard Hanson)
Tone Poem, Don Juan, Op. 20 (Richard Strauss)
Symphony No. 2 in C, Op. 61 (Schumann)

I really enjoyed and was moved by the last couple of minutes (from the last pause) of "Don Juan" on Saturday at the Theatre Royal, Dublin; and by some expressive playing in the Adagio of the Schumann symphony. In these two passages the Boston Symphony Orchestra showed some life and feeling. But the rest of the afternoon was essentially a demonstration of what is probably the most efficient musical machine that we have heard here.

When the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra came in April they proved to be very slick indeed, but with little soul. One hoped that this was merely a stage in Sergent's development of them and that he will eventually get the machine to make real music. The Boston orchestra proved to be even slicker, with virtually no soul. Charles Munch has now been with them for seven years, and he should have been able in that time to get from them the feeling and poetry of music as well as technical perfection. After all, technique is but the means, and not the end, of expression.

This was the third time this year we have had "Don Juan" in Ireland. Our own radio orchestra has no pretensions to being a world-famous top-flight body, but, in all seriousness, its playing of "Don Juan" was much more enjoyable than Saturday's, because it was alive, had feeling and was done with zest. And that was but a shadow of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra's playing in Cork in May.

Obviously the blame must rest largely with Charles Munch, the Boston's conductor, but does it go deeper than that? In forging this machine, have the players forgotten to enjoy the making of music as such? Except for some of the woodwind (specially the first flute) it seemed very doubtful if any of the players really got a kick out of playing their music.

Perhaps they also felt that it was not a very exciting programme. It was such a pity that with major modern American music so unknown this side of the Atlantic, they should not have brought us something really interesting and memorable. Howard Hanson's Elegy proved to be a highly academic piece of fin-de-siècle romanticism, but not worth bringing three thousand miles to represent the music of the U.S.A.

All this seems very harsh and ungrateful after we have been accorded the opportunity of hearing in our own capital one of the world's famous orchestras. It is probable that in Boston their performances are wonderful; that Saturday was one of those off-days that all artists have. But one can only judge what one hears. And it is because of their fame and position that they have the right to be judged by the highest standards and asked to come back again and play from the heart—to add feeling to precision, exhilaration to technique. As it was on Saturday, they committed the one great sin against the spirit of music—they were boring. This was so sad after all the fanfares of publicity, among the panoply of Church and State, and made one feel all the more bitter that in May the Vienna Philharmonic were not accorded a welcome in our capital as they were in Cork and Limerick.

C.A.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 27 AUG 1956

The President, Mr. Sean T. O'Kelly, with Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (left), and the American Ambassador, Mr. W. H. Taft, after the presentation to the President in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Saturday, of the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra. The presentation, which included a gold medal struck to mark the 75th anniversary of the orchestra, was made by Mr. Henry B. Cabot, chairman, on behalf of the trustees of the orchestra, which gave a concert in the Theatre Royal on Saturday.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date

President celebrates 74th birthday

4767

The President, Mr. O'Kelly, who was 74 years old on Saturday, attended the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Saturday afternoon. The trustees of the orchestra honoured the President's birthday by presenting him with the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold meda' struck on the occasion of its 75th birthday.

Mr. O'Kelly had returned to Arus an Uachtarain on Friday night after a fortnight's holiday at his country home in Roundwood, Co. Wicklow. He had no other formal engagements during Saturday and spent his day reading the newspapers and receiving messages of congratulation by telephone and telegram.

He said on Saturday: "I am very happy to have reached 74 years and to have completed one term of office. I hope God will spare me to complete my second term."

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Manchester Guardian
27 AUG 1956

BOSTON HONOURS IRISH PRESIDENT

4767

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly of Ireland on his seventy-fourth birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

BOOKS RECEIVED

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Dublin Evening Mail

27 AUG 1956

Latecomers Delay Of Symphony

4767

THOUGH latecomers and "chatterers" in the audience delayed the start of the concert given in the Theatre Royal by the one hundred and five strong Boston Symphony Orchestra surely the second half of the concert should not have begun until the President and his party had returned to their box.

It was the first visit to Dublin of the 75-year-old orchestra and Saturday's concert was the second of a series of 27 which will take the orchestra to 13 countries in its first European tour.

The Dublin concert, held under the patronage of His Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. J. C. McQuaid, D.D., who was present. Also in the audience were An Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Lord Mayor, Mr. R. Briscoe, T.D.; the Papal Nuncio, Most Rev. Dr. Levame; Mr. Cosgrave, T.D., Minister for External Affairs; Mr. de Valera, T.D.; the American Ambassador, Mr W. H. Taft, and many other members of the Diplomatic Corps. Without doubt, it was an historic occasion in the musical life of Dublin.

CAPACITY AUDIENCE

A capacity audience heard the first performance in Europe of "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44," by the American composer, Howard Hanson, who wrote it, a specially commissioned work, for the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the Boston S
is being Serge K
of the
The inventi diously
colorat
rhythm

FO
Cha
the o own perfo
felt t sona ficen
Pr
stro brea was pro fou lac wh sou an co

work.

There was a slight improvement in this respect in the playing of the Strauss tone poem, Don Juan, which was given a taut, well-balanced, cohesive, reading that proclaimed its structural logic and organic unity, with virtuoso string and woodwind playing.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND LONDON W.C.2
Extract from
The Northern Whig
and Belfast Post
BRIDGE STREET, BELFAST.
London Office: 143 FLEET STREET.
Date
27 AUG 1956

VISIT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Dublin hears what Belfast missed

4767

BELFAST music-lovers have every right to feel aggrieved that the proposed visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to our city did not materialize, although good fortune smiled on both Cork and Dublin in this respect. I am told that it was impossible to include Belfast in the present tour.

At all events, for the Dublin music enthusiast all roads led to the Theatre Royal on Saturday when a big crowd turned up to hear a programme which can hardly be called popular by any stretch of the imagination. One might, moreover, question the choice of music, considering the fact that this orchestra, I believe, boasts 102 players. This was surely an occasion to let us hear some of the music demanding numerical resources outside the economic reach of most of the orchestras one hears.

In view of the criticisms which I may make in the course of this review, let me say at this stage that the B.S.O. is indeed a very fine orchestra and Charles Munch a sincere and greatly gifted conductor who is a joy to watch.

Haydn's symphony in B flat (No. 102) was, I must confess, something of a disappointment although it had many impressive moments. Technically and tonally there was nothing to fault, and indeed there was some particularly beautiful playing from the woodwind. I felt, however, that the unrelenting precision, some over-insistence on dynamics, and a tendency to "spotlight" tco much detail, mitigated against the conception as a whole.

One gained the overall impression that this was a very fine and worthy technical achievement rather than the deeply spiritual performance expected.

No one can blame either conductor or players for some dull moments in Schumann's symphony in C major (No. 2), but I gladly record that this performance had a vitality and rhythmic urge that I have found lacking in other performances of this work. Under the circumstances, we ought to be very grateful to Dr. Munch for the loving care which he lavished on this music to such good purpose.

Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, composed for the 75th anniversary of the B.S.O., is, as modern works go, an agreeable and likeable composition. It does not, admittedly, say much that is new, but it is expressive music, and it was played with great authority.

The strings were again heard to fine effect, but I think that the acoustics of this large and very comfortable theatre are not particularly helpful to strings. While the string tone had an almost silky quality, there was not much warmth or "bloom."

The remaining music played was the "Don Juan" Tone Poem of Richard Strauss, and this was a wonderfully disciplined and really thrilling performance, and the best all-playing of the concert. Apart from its musical worth it was welcome, because it allowed us to hear the full strength of this orchestra, and Munch drew from his players some of the most electrifying orchestral tuttis that I have ever heard. This performance alone made the journey to Dublin worth while.

I feel it would be ungrateful to close these notes without recording deep appreciation of Dr. Munch's willingness to carry out his Irish engagements under what must have been for him a very considerable strain. His wife died in Paris on Tuesday, and Dr. Munch flew to Ireland after the funeral on Thursday.

Incidentally, after the orchestra have finished their commitments at the Edinburgh Festival, the remainder of their tour will include visits to Norway and the U.S.S.R. I understand that this will be the first visit of a Western orchestra to Russia since before the Revolution.

L.F.M'C.

[48]

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 27 AUG 1956

CONTRASTS IN PERFORMANCE BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Symphony in B flat, No. 102 (Haydn)
Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 (Howard Hanson)
Tone Poem, Don Juan, Op. 20 (Richard Strauss)
Symphony No. 2 in C, Op. 61 (Schumann)

I really enjoyed and was moved by the last couple of minutes (from the last pause) of "Don Juan" on Saturday at the Theatre Royal, Dublin; and by some expressive playing in the Adagio of the Schumann symphony. In these two passages the Boston Symphony Orchestra showed some life and feeling. But the rest of the afternoon was essentially a demonstration of what is probably the most efficient musical machine that we have heard here.

When the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra came in April they proved to be very slick indeed, but with little soul. One hoped that this was merely a stage in Sergent's development of them and that he will eventually get the machine to make real music. The Boston orchestra proved to be even slicker, with virtually no soul. Charles Munch has now been with them for seven years, and he should have been able in that time to get from them the feeling and poetry of music as well as technical perfection. After all, technique is but the means, and not the end, of expression.

This was the third time this year we have had "Don Juan" in Ireland. Our own radio orchestra has no pretensions to being a world-famous top-flight body, but, in all seriousness, its playing of "Don Juan" was much more enjoyable than Saturday's, because it was alive, had feeling and was done with zest. And that was but a shadow of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra's playing in Cork in May.

Obviously the blame must rest largely with Charles Munch, the Boston's conductor, but does it go deeper than that? In forging this machine, have the players forgotten to enjoy the making of music as such? Except for some of the woodwind (specially the first flute) it seemed very doubtful if any of the players really got a kick out of playing their music.

Perhaps they also felt that it was not a very exciting programme. It was such a pity that with major modern American music so unknown this side of the Atlantic, they should not have brought us something really interesting and memorable. Howard Hanson's Elegy proved to be a highly academic piece of fin-de-siècle romanticism, but not worth bringing three thousand miles to represent the music of the U.S.A.

All this seems very harsh and ungrateful after we have been accorded the opportunity of hearing in our own capital one of the world's famous orchestras. It is probable that in Boston their performances are wonderful; that Saturday was one of those off-days that all artists have. But one can only judge what one hears. And it is because of their fame and position that they have the right to be judged by the highest standards and asked to come back again and play from the heart—to add feeling to precision, exhilaration to technique. As it was on Saturday, they committed the one great sin against the spirit of music—they were boring. This was so sad after all the fanfares of publicity, among the panoply of Church and State, and made one feel all the more bitter that in May the Vienna Philharmonic were not accorded a welcome in our capital as they were in Cork and Limerick.

C.A.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date 27 AUG 1956

President, Mr. Sean T. O'Kelly, with Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the American Ambassador, Mr. W. H. Taft, after the presentation to the orchestra at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Saturday, of the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra. The presentation, which included a gold medal struck to mark the 75th anniversary of the orchestra, was made by Mr. Henry B. Cabot, chairman, on behalf of the members of the orchestra, which gave a concert in the Theatre Royal on Saturday.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
EXTRACT FROM
THE IRISH TIMES
(SEE OVER)
DUBLIN
Date

President celebrates 74th birthday

The President, Mr. O'Kelly, who was 74 years old on Saturday, attended the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Saturday afternoon. The trustees of the orchestra honoured the President's birthday by presenting him with the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold meda' struck on the occasion of its 75th birthday.

Mr. O'Kelly had returned to Arus an Uachtarain on Friday night after a fortnight's holiday at his country home in Roundwood, Co. Wicklow. He had no other formal engagements during Saturday and spent his day reading the newspapers and receiving messages of congratulation by telephone and telegram.

He said on Saturday: "I am very happy to have reached 74 years and to have completed one term of office. I hope God will spare me to complete my second term."

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Manchester Guardian
27 AUG 1956

BOSTON HONOURS IRISH PRESIDENT

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly of Ireland on his seventy-fourth birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

BOOKS RECEIVED

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Dublin Evening Mail

Latecomers Delayed Start Of Symphony Concert

THOUGH latecomers and "chatterers" in the audience delayed the start of the concert given in the Theatre Royal by the one hundred and five strong Boston Symphony Orchestra surely the second half of the concert should not have begun until the President and his party had returned to their box.

It was the first visit to Dublin of the 75-year-old orchestra and Saturday's concert was the second of a series of 27 which will take the orchestra to 13 countries in its first European tour.

The Dublin concert, held under the patronage of His Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. J. C. McQuaid, D.D., who was present. Also in the audience were An Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Lord Mayor, Mr. R. Briscoe, T.D.; the Papal Nuncio, Most Rev. Dr. Levame; Mr. Cosgrave, T.D., Minister for External Affairs; Mr. de Valera, T.D.; the American Ambassador, Mr W. H. Taft, and many other members of the Diplomatic Corps. Without doubt, it was an historic occasion in the musical life of Dublin.

CAPACITY AUDIENCE

A capacity audience heard the first performance in Europe of "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44," by the American composer, Howard Hanson, who wrote it, a specially commissioned work, for the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is being commemorated this year. Serge Koussevitzky was conductor of the orchestra from 1924 to 1949.

The elegy teems with original invention and is notable for fastidiously wrought texture, novel coloration, and ingeniously varied rhythms.

FORCEFUL CONDUCTOR

Charles Munch, the conductor of the orchestra since 1949, has his own personal views on the music performed. The orchestra obviously felt the force of his magnetic personality and responded magnificently throughout.

Precision is this orchestra's strongest point. It was almost breath-taking at times. Yet, there was something lacking — besides properly balanced brass tone—in all four works played. The music lacked the poetic inspiration of one who could delve deep into its very soul, and give sustenance, colour, and "life" to an otherwise superbly correct technical interpretation.

TWO SYMPHONIES

The two symphonies performed—Haydn's No. 102 and Schumann's No. 2—had much that the discerning listener could enjoy in playing of truly extraordinary intensity and clarity, without, however, realising in full the true spirit of either work.

There was a slight improvement, in this respect, in the playing of the Strauss tone poem, Don Juan, which was given a taut, well-balanced, cohesive, reading that proclaimed its structural logic and organic unity, with virtuoso string and woodwind playing.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND LONDON W.C.2
Extract from
The Northern Whig
and Belfast Post
BRIDGE STREET, BELFAST.
London Office: 143 FLEET STREET.
Date
27 AUG 1956

VISIT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Dublin hears what Belfast missed

BELFAST music-lovers have every right to feel aggrieved that the proposed visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to our city did not materialize, although good fortune smiled on both Cork and Dublin in this respect. I am told that it was impossible to include Belfast in the present tour.

At all events, for the Dublin music enthusiast all roads led to the Theatre Royal on Saturday when a big crowd turned up to hear a programme which can hardly be called popular by any stretch of the imagination. One might, moreover, question the choice of music, considering the fact that this orchestra, I believe, boasts 102 players. This was surely an occasion to let us hear some of the music demanding numerical resources outside the economic reach of most of the orchestras one hears.

In view of the criticisms which I may make in the course of this review, let me say at this stage that the B.S.O. is indeed a very fine orchestra and Charles Munch a sincere and greatly gifted conductor who is a joy to watch.

Haydn's symphony in B flat (No. 102) was, I must confess, something of a disappointment although it had many impressive moments. Technically and tonally there was nothing to fault, and indeed there was some particularly beautiful playing from the woodwind. I felt, however, that the unrelenting precision, some over-insistence on dynamics, and a tendency to "spotlight" too much detail, mitigated against the conception as a whole.

Lord Mayor may visit Boston

Dublin's Lord Mayor, Councillor Robert Briscoe, T.D., was yesterday handed an invitation from his Boston opposite number, Mayor John B. Hynes, to visit Boston in March.

The invitation was given by Mr. Mike Kelleher, Boston business man and a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after the Orchestra's concert in the Theatre Royal.

[48]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from

Irish Independent

Date

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283
NOV 13 1956

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Northern Echo, Darlington

27 AUG 1956

Boston honours Eire President

4767

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly of Eire on his 74th birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra, and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 Strand, London, W.C.2

Extract from
MUSIC and MUSICIANS
See overleaf
LONDON

DATE OCT 1956

4767 from Mary MacGoris in

DUBLIN

THE two concerts given, one in Cork and one in Dublin, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch caused a great deal of excited anticipation to which the actual performances were a sad anticlimax. The orchestra's virtuosity is incontrovertible but in spite, or perhaps because of the speed—ill-judged at times—with which they went through everything, they seemed to lack vitality, and there was neither beauty of tone nor any depth of musical feeling in their playing.

The first concert, in Cork, was extremely disappointing. The music sounded either raucous or dead; one might have blamed the acoustics of the Savoy Theatre, which are not the best, were it not for the memory of the exquisite and expressive sound produced in the same theatre by the Vienna Philharmonic three months ago.

The Dublin concert, where the programme was perhaps better chosen, was something of an improvement —the Elegy for Serge Koussevitsky was agreeable and Strauss's Don Juan was vigorous and impetuous, if lacking in richness. The Haydn symphony No. 102, which was played at both concerts, suffered most from the exaggerated "effects" which the conductor seemed to favour. Though it was pleasant to hear an orchestra play with such precision and so admirable a perfection of pitch, the overall effect of both performances was, it must be confessed, dull.

In Perspective—On Hearing the Boston Symphony Win Raves in Dublin

The thought had flitted through my mind that on the following Saturday afternoon (if it had stopped raining by then), I might go to the races (if they were to be held within easy striking distance of Dublin) and observe how the breed was improved in Ireland. The thought had come to me after I had left the Quaker Library — perish the idea that the Quakers had put it into my head! — and I was on my way to the Irish Folklore Commission. Rounding a corner opposite Trinity College, I saw a big sign in the window of Pigott's music store announcing that on the following Saturday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra would play in Dublin. Certainly, I recalled that the Boston Symphony, on European tour, would play first in Cork and in Dublin on the way to the Edinburgh Festival.

There would always be racing in Ireland but the first appearance of the Boston Symphony in Dublin was an occasion which could be missed only on the pain of later regrets. I found the Theatre Royal down a side street and "booked" a ticket: the young lady behind the window shoved a map of the seating arrangement at me, pointed out what was available and then scribbled furiously on a pad when I said I would like this one, please. She thought it ought to be a good concert; the tickets were selling well; and when would the rain ever stop: it was the worst summer in years and the farmers' crops would be ruined. You do not receive such good-natured friendliness when you buy a ticket in an American theater and as the woman clerk in Brown Thomas said —but that is another story.

From the crowd of onlookers outside the theater and the imposing-looking captain or chief in charge of the police squad (he looked and dressed like an American police captain), it struck me that something more than the presence of the Boston Symphony accounted for the bystanders, though Bostonmassachusetts is a potent word in Ireland. The President of Ireland himself, familiarly known as "Sean T.", was to attend, so I was told.

The Theatre Royal is a barn of a theater, a movie house under ordinary circumstances, and sometimes a vaudeville show is staged there. You have to tilt your head way back to catch a glimpse of the ceiling, and in a box so high that the figures were dwarfed sat Ambassador William H. Taft and his family and there was a stirring, with some applause, when the President entered the next box.

The remembrance of the Boston Symphony at home flowed in on me when I saw the sky-blue backdrop, as standard equipment for the orchestra away from its own residence as the conductor's podium. The players came drifting in to their places, just like at home, and gawked at the Dubliners and the Dubliners gawked back at them. There were the familiar faces, the chatter of the members and the discordant tuning up. Then that pause and moment of silence, when expectancy stands tiptoe, and Mr. Munch appeared to be received by a standing ovation.

Charles Munch Conducts

The baton lifted and first The Star Spangled Banner and then the Irish national hymn, The Soldier's Song. The audience settled back for the program: Haydn's Symphony in B-Flat Major; Hanson's Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky, written for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony; Strauss' Don Juan tone poem; and, after intermission, Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C major. A young Franciscan, in his brown habit, who sat in front of me, was obviously enjoying the music, and the comments of a pleasant-faced man behind me, who talked knowingly of music, showed he was smitten with it. (The music critic, who I understand is a book reviewer, of the Irish Times, the intellectual journal of Ireland's metropolis, gave the opinion that the Boston Symphony was technically expert but that it lacked soul and compared it rather unfavorably on that score to an Austrian symphony which had recently wandered into Dublin. My Irish friends assured me that the fellow did not know what he was talking about, you had to expect that in Dublin, and, besides, it was an ill-manner violating the rules of Irish hospitality to criticize a visiting orchestra that thought enough of Dublin to go out of its way to appear there. You know, they explained, and this was the clincher, that paper used to speak for the Castle crowd, as though to infer what more could you expect?)

I thought that the Boston Symphony was marvelous on that Dublin Saturday afternoon, and I was extremely proud of it; indeed, I felt an overbearing sense of smugness as Mr. Munch led it through the pyrotechnics of the Don Juan tone poem. I thought to myself that the music-lovers of Dublin must wish they had a symphony orchestra like this, and all the time the critic of the Irish Times was thinking of just where he could sink the barb.

At intermission, a goodly number of the audience drifted to the bar for slugs of hefty Irish whiskey and some for the black, foamy stout, while in the foyer the conversation was all about the splendor of this magnificent orchestra.

As you sat there and listened to the music, you forgot you were in a foreign city and you forgot that all these people around you were strangers but friendly strangers if you started a conversation. At the conclusion, the audience applauded and applauded and Mr. Munch had to return six times before the Dubliners would let him depart. When you walked out into the city, you had been under such a spell that you expected to see the surroundings of the Veterans Memorial and instead you were walking toward the quays in Dublin and thinking how nice it is that there is a Boston Symphony which each season comes to Providence five times.

G. W. P.

Traveler
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
AUG 30 1956

SYMPHONY IN DUBLIN—Boston Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in Dublin Aug. 25. President Sean T. O'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal Theater and was presented with a souvenir score.

Hub Orchestra In Ireland

(UP Telephoto)

SYMPHONY IN DUBLIN—Boston Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in Dublin Aug. 25. President Sean T. O'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal Theater and was presented with a souvenir score.

[49]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from

Irish Independent

Date [redacted]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283

NOV 13 1956

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Northern Echo, Darlington

27 AUG 1956

Boston honours Eire President

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly of Eire on his 74th birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra, and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 Strand, London, W.C.2

Extract from
MUSIC and MUSICIANS
LONDON

See overleaf

DATE OCT 1956

from Mary MacGoris in

DUBLIN

THE two concerts given, one in Cork and one in Dublin, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch caused a great deal of excited anticipation to which the actual performances were a sad anti-climax. The orchestra's virtuosity is incontrovertible but in spite, or perhaps because of the speed—ill-judged at times—with which they went through everything, they seemed to lack vitality, and there was neither beauty of tone nor any depth of musical feeling in their playing.

The first concert, in Cork, was extremely disappointing. The music sounded either raucous or dead; one might have blamed the acoustics of the Savoy Theatre, which are not the best, were it not for the memory of the exquisite and expressive sound produced in the same theatre by the Vienna Philharmonic three months ago.

The Dublin concert, where the programme was perhaps better chosen, was something of an improvement—the Elegy for Serge Koussevitsky was agreeable and Strauss's Don Juan was vigorous and impetuous, if lacking in richness. The Haydn symphony No. 102, which was played at both concerts, suffered most from the exaggerated "effects" which the conductor seemed to favour. Though it was pleasant to hear an orchestra play with such precision and so admirable a perfection of pitch, the overall effect of both performances was, it must be confessed, dull.

In Perspective—On Hearing the Boston Symphony Win Raves in Dublin

The thought had flitted through my mind that on the following Saturday afternoon (if it had stopped raining by then), I might go to the races (if they were to be held within easy striking distance of Dublin) and observe how the breed was improved in Ireland. The thought had come to me after I had left the Quaker Library — perish the idea that the Quakers had put it into my head! — and I was on my way to the Irish Folklore Commission. Rounding a corner opposite Trinity College, I saw a big sign in the window of Pigott's music store announcing that on the following Saturday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra would play in Dublin. Certainly, I recalled that the Boston Symphony, on European tour, would play first in Cork and in Dublin on the way to the Edinburgh Festival.

There would always be racing in Ireland but the first appearance of the Boston Symphony in Dublin was an occasion which could be missed only on the pain of later regrets. I found the Theatre Royal down a side street and "booked" a ticket: the young lady behind the window shoved a map of the seating arrangement at me, pointed out what was available and then scribbled furiously on a pad when I said I would like this one, please. She thought it ought to be a good concert; the tickets were selling well; and when would the rain ever stop: it was the worst summer in years and the farmers' crops would be ruined. You do not receive such good-natured friendliness when you buy a ticket in an American theater and as the woman clerk in Brown Thomas said —but that is another story.

From the crowd of onlookers outside the theater and the imposing-looking captain or chief in charge of the police squad (he looked and dressed like an American police captain), it struck me that something more than the presence of the Boston Symphony accounted for the bystanders, though Bostonmassachusetts is a potent word in Ireland. The President of Ireland himself, familiarly known as "Sean T.", was to attend, so I was told.

The Theatre Royal is a barn of a theater, a movie house under ordinary circumstances, and sometimes a vaudeville show is staged there. You have to tilt your head way back to catch a glimpse of the ceiling, and in a box so high that the figures were dwarfed sat Ambassador William H. Taft and his family and there was a stirring, with some applause, when the President entered the next box.

The remembrance of the Boston Symphony at home flowed in on me when I saw the sky-blue backdrop, as standard equipment for the orchestra away from its own residence as the conductor's podium. The players came drifting in to their places, just like at home, and gawked at the Dubliners and the Dubliners gawked back at them. There were the familiar faces, the chatter of the members and the discordant tuning up. Then that pause and moment of silence, when expectancy stands tiptoe, and Mr. Munch appeared to be received by a standing ovation.

Charles Munch Conducts

The baton lifted and first The Star Spangled Banner and then the Irish national hymn, The Soldier's Song. The audience settled back for the program: Haydn's Symphony in B-Flat Major; Hanson's Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky, written for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony; Strauss' Don Juan tone poem; and, after intermission, Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C major. A young Franciscan, in his brown habit, who sat in front of me, was obviously enjoying the music, and the comments of a pleasant-faced man behind me, who talked knowingly of music, showed he was smitten with it. (The music critic, who I understand is a book reviewer, of the Irish Times, the intellectual journal of Ireland's metropolis, gave the opinion that the Boston Symphony was technically expert but that it lacked soul and compared it rather unfavorably on that score to an Austrian symphony which had recently wandered into Dublin. My Irish friends assured me that the fellow did not know what he was talking about, you had to expect that in Dublin, and, besides, it was an ill-manner violating the rules of Irish hospitality to criticize a visiting orchestra that thought enough of Dublin to go out of its way to appear there. You know, they explained, and this was the clincher, that paper used to speak for the Castle crowd, as though to infer what more could you expect?)

I thought that the Boston Symphony was marvelous on that Dublin Saturday afternoon, and I was extremely proud of it; indeed, I felt an overbearing sense of smugness as Mr. Munch led it through the pyrotechnics of the Don Juan tone poem. I thought to myself that the music-lovers of Dublin must wish they had a symphony orchestra like this, and all the time the critic of the Irish Times was thinking of just where he could sink the barb.

At intermission, a goodly number of the audience drifted to the bar for slugs of hefty Irish whiskey and some for the black, foamy stout, while in the foyer the conversation was all about the splendor of this magnificent orchestra.

As you sat there and listened to the music, you forgot you were in a foreign city and you forgot that all these people around you were strangers but friendly strangers if you started a conversation. At the conclusion, the audience applauded and applauded and Mr. Munch had to return six times before the Dubliners would let him depart. When you walked out into the city, you had been under such a spell that you expected to see the surroundings of the Veterans Memorial and instead you were walking toward the quays in Dublin and thinking how nice it is that there is a Boston Symphony which each season comes to Providence five times.

G. W. P.

gave concert in nce in the Royal

Traveler
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749
AUG 30 1956

SYMPHONY IN DUBLIN—Boston Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in Dublin Aug. 25. President Sean T. O'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal Theater and was presented with a souvenir score.

Hub Orchestra In Ireland

(UP Telephoto)

SYMPHONY IN DUBLIN—Boston Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in Dublin Aug. 25. President Sean T. O'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal Theater and was presented with a souvenir score.

[49]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from

Irish Independent

Date.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Northern Echo, Darlington

27 AUG 1956

Boston honours Eire President

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly of Eire on his 74th birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 Strand, London, W.C.2

Extract from
MUSIC and MUSICIANS
See overleaf LONDON

DATE - OCT 1956

from Mary MacGoris in

DUBLIN

THE two concerts given, one in Cork and one in Dublin, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch caused a great deal of excited anticipation to which the actual performances were a sad anti-climax. The orchestra's virtuosity is incontrovertible but in spite, or perhaps because of the speed—ill-judged at times—with which they went through everything, they seemed to lack vitality, and there was neither beauty of tone nor any depth of musical feeling in their playing.

The first concert, in Cork, was extremely disappointing. The music sounded either raucous or dead; one might have blamed the acoustics of the Savoy Theatre, which are not the best, were it not for the memory of the exquisite and expressive sound produced in the same theatre by the Vienna Philharmonic three months ago.

The Dublin concert, where the programme was perhaps better chosen, was something of an improvement—the Elegy for Serge Koussevitsky was agreeable and Strauss's Don Juan was vigorous and impetuous, if lacking in richness. The Haydn symphony No. 102, which was played at both concerts, suffered most from the exaggerated "effects" which the conductor seemed to favour. Though it was pleasant to hear an orchestra play with such precision and so admirable a perfection of pitch, the overall effect of both performances was, I must be confessed, dull.

stra during its performance in Royal, Dublin.

CONCERT

Ability Of Orchestra

for the concert, the dignitaries were met by Mr. L. Ellman, Managing Director, Odeon (Ireland) Ltd.

Also present at the concert were officers from the Italian naval training ship, Amerigo Vespucci, which is on a visit to Dublin.

OFF TO EDINBURGH

Later, two chartered Aer Lingus planes left Dublin for Edinburgh carrying members of the orchestra. The orchestra will play at the Edinburgh Festival before continuing its European tour. The other members of the orchestra travelled by boat to Glasgow.

DEATH OF ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR'S WIFE

It was announced at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Cork that Mrs. Charles Minch, wife of the conductor of the orchestra, had died in Paris after a long illness. Following the close of the orchestra's season in Massachusetts recently, Dr. Munch flew to France to see his wife. She died on Tuesday last and the funeral took place in Paris on Thursday. Afterwards, Dr. Munch flew to Cork for the orchestra's engagement there.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 5)

FASHION NOTE

By the time the bridal party relires to change into ouf door clothes, the general atmosphere has relaxed considerably. If there is anyone with any theatrical talent present, he or she will probably be glad to oblige with a song or a tune or photographers may be engaged to record the proceedings from start to finish, but these, of course, are nearly always supplemented by eager amateurs among the guests.

Many autumn brides will also be interested in the new sound recording service which covers the whole wedding day from the entrance of the bride into the church until the happy couple have departed on their honeymoon. Complete coverage of the wedding or the reception alone can be recorded at reasonable rates. This service is doubly useful for those who have relatives in distant countries.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

AUG 30 1956

Hub Orchestra In Ireland

(UP Telephoto)

SYMPHONY IN DUBLIN—Boston Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in Dublin Aug. 25. President Sean T. O'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal Theater and was presented with a souvenir score.

Hub Orchestra In Ireland

(UP Telephoto)

SYMPHONY IN DUBLIN—Boston Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in Dublin Aug. 25. President Sean T. O'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal Theater and was presented with a souvenir score.

[49]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from

Irish Independent

DUBLIN

Date 27 AUG 1956

The Boston Symphony Orchestra during its performance in the Theatre Royal, Dublin.

DUBLIN CONCERT

Technical Ability Of Boston Orchestra

By MARY MacGORIS
"Irish Independent" Music Critic

FOR its Dublin concert, held in the Theatre Royal, the Boston Symphony Orchestra chose a programme more calculated to display the particular excellences of its playing than that which was heard in Cork.

A most interesting item was the Elegy by Howard Hanson which, specially commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and in memory of its great conductor Serge Koussevitzky, received on this occasion its first performance.

It is a smoothly-wrought work of quiet beauty, modern in idiom yet without harsh dissonances or discordant harmonies; the orchestra gave it a beautifully flowing and polished performance.

When Richard Strauss conducted his own tone-poems, he did not make them sound as beautiful as did his friend and colleague, the famous conductor, Nikisch (who incidentally was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for some years). When this fact was commented on, Strauss remarked that he did not want them to sound beautiful.

VIGOROUS PERFORMANCE

On this principle the orchestra's performance of Strauss's Don Juan could be described as an authoritative one; by any principles it was a vigorous and stimulating one. The extreme technical ability of all sections of the orchestra was vividly apparent and the precision and clarity of the ensemble, always notable, was particularly effective in this work.

The symphonies of Schumann are not that master's most rewarding works. The sustained intellectual working out of symphonic form could hardly be the strong point of a composer who has been described as "a master of the epigram." Nevertheless in their own way they contain a good deal of agreeable and sometimes even compelling music

His sensitive and lyrical Second Symphony concluded the programme. Charles Munch directed it with a smooth sweeping control which gave a sustained coherence to its numerous expressive musical ideas and the well-finished phrasing of the orchestra emphasised all its most agreeable qualities.

PRESENTATION BY TRUSTEES TO PRESIDENT

The Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly on his 74th birthday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a Gold Medal struck for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra's foundation.

The presentation took place in the presence of dignitaries of Church and State in the Theatre Royal after the concert given by the orchestra in aid of Holy Cross College, Clonliffe

CORDIAL RELATIONS

Thanking Mr. H. B. Cabot, Chairman of the Trustees of the Orchestra, who made the presentation, Mr. O'Kelly, who was accompanied by Mrs. O'Kelly, spoke of the cordial relations existing between Irish people and the people of Boston.

Making the presentation, Mr. Cabot said that to play in Ireland was one of the most delightful experiences the Orchestra had had.

Following the presenation, Kitty O'Callaghan, the pianist, presented Dr. Munch, the conductor, with the scores of a number of works by Irish composers on behalf of the Cultural Relations Committee.

She said that the Committee were presenting the works to Dr. Munch in the hope that he would find time to study them and perform them.

Mr. M. Kelleher, one of the trustees of the orchestra, extended an invitation to Mr. R. Briscoe, T.D., Lord Mayor of Dublin, who was present, to visit Boston in March and also brought birthday wishes from the Mayor of Boston, Mr. J. Hynes.

Present were the Papal Nuncio, Most Rev. Dr. Levame; the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. Dr. McQuaid; the Taoiseach; Mr. Cosgrave, Minister for External Affairs; Mr. W. H. Taft, the U.S. Ambassador, and Mrs. Taft; and Mr de Valera, T.D.

On arrival at the Theatre Royal for the concert, the dignitaries were met by Mr. L. Elliman, Managing Director, Odeon (Ireland) Ltd.

Also present at the concert were officers from the Italian naval training ship, Amerigo Vespucci, which is on a visit to Dublin.

OFF TO EDINBURGH

Later, two chartered Aer Lingus planes left Dublin for Edinburgh carrying members of the orchestra. The orchestra will play at the Edinburgh Festival before continuing its European tour. The other members of the orchestra travelled by boat to Glasgow.

DEATH OF ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR'S WIFE

It was announced at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Cork that Mrs. Charles Minch, wife of the conductor of the orchestra, had died in Paris after a long illness. Following the close of the orchestra's season in Massachusetts recently, Dr. Munch flew to France to see his wife. She died on Tuesday last and the funeral took place in Paris on Thursday. Afterwards, Dr. Munch flew to Cork for the orchestra's engagement there.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Northern Echo, Darlington

27 AUG 1956

Boston honours Eire President

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly of Eire on his 74th birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 Strand, London, W.C.2

Extract from
MUSIC and MUSICIANS
See overleaf
LONDON

DATE OCT 1956

from Mary MacGoris in
DUBLIN

THE two concerts given, one in Cork and one in Dublin, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch caused a great deal of excited anticipation to which the actual performances were a sad anti-climax. The orchestra's virtuosity is incontrovertible but in spite, or perhaps because of the speed—ill-judged at times—with which they went through everything, they seemed to lack vitality, and there was neither beauty of tone nor any depth of musical feeling in their playing.

The first concert, in Cork, was extremely disappointing. The music sounded either raucous or dead; one might have blamed the acoustics of the Savoy Theatre, which are not the best, were it not for the memory of the exquisite and expressive sound produced in the same theatre by the Vienna Philharmonic three months ago.

The Dublin concert, where the programme was perhaps better chosen, was something of an improvement—the Elegy for Serge Koussevitsky was agreeable and Strauss's Don Juan was vigorous and impetuous, if lacking in richness. The Haydn symphony No. 102, which was played at both concerts, suffered most from the exaggerated "effects" which the conductor seemed to favour. Though it was pleasant to hear an orchestra play with such precision and so admirable a perfection of pitch, the overall effect of both performances was, I must be confessed, dull.

Aug 30

Hub Orchestra In Ireland

(UP Telephoto)

SYMPHONY IN DUBLIN—Boston Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in Dublin Aug. 25. President Sean T. O'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal Theater and was presented with a souvenir score.

estra In Ireland

P Telephoto)

Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in 'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal ouvenir score.

[49]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from

Irish Independent

Dat

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Northern Echo, Darlington

27 AUG 1956

4767

Boston honours Eire President

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly of Eire on his 74th birthday yesterday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra, and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283

NOV 13 1956

Music and Musicians is about the music you hear, music you are going to hear and the people who make music for you — composers, conductors, players, singers. Exclusively devoted to serious music and opera, each number contains a full guide to musical events all over Britain, articles by authoritative writers, news and reviews of concerts, operas and recitals from correspondents all over the world. 40 new photographs every month with 20 features, including new records, books, scores, Music Man's Diary, Up-and-coming artists, clubs, musical illustrations, picture supplement of new opera productions.

On sale 20th of month prior to cover date and obtainable from all newsagents and bookstalls by firm order or by postal subscription for one year, 20/-; six months, 10/-, from the publishers, Hansom Books Ltd., 21 Lower Belgrave Street, London, S.W.1. Current number 1/8d. post free.

Hansom Books also publish monthly: Dance and Dancers, Plays and Players, Films and Filming.

Hub Orchestra In Ireland

Herald

(UP Telephoto)
SYMPHONY IN DUBLIN—Boston Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in Dublin Aug. 25. President Sean T. O'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal Theater and was presented with a souvenir score.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 5)

FASHION NOTE

By the time the bridal party retires to change into their door clothes, the general atmosphere has relaxed considerably. If there is anyone with any theatrical talent present, he or she will probably be glad to oblige with a song or a tune on photographers may be engaged to record the proceedings from start to finish, but these, of course, are nearly always supplemented by eager amateurs among the guests.

Many autumn brides will also be interested in the new sound recording service which covers the whole wedding day from the entrance of the bride into the church until the happy couple have departed on their honeymoon. Complete coverage of the wedding or the reception alone can be recorded at reasonable rates. This service is doubly useful for those who have relatives in distant countries.

rain ever stop: it was the worst summer in years and the farmers' crops would be ruined. You do not receive such good-natured friendliness when you buy a ticket in an American theater and as the woman clerk in Brown Thomas said —but that is another story.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 198,749

AUG 30 1956

Hub Orchestra In Ireland

(UP Telephoto)
SYMPHONY IN DUBLIN—Boston Symphony orchestra as it gave concert in Dublin Aug. 25. President Sean T. O'Kelly attended the performance in the Royal Theater and was presented with a souvenir score.

[50]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
SEP 1 1956

Boston Symphony Heard in Ireland

Orchestra Acclaimed In Dublin

By R. M. Fox

Dublin

Since Ireland has always been a land where music is appreciated, the decision of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to begin its European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin, the two largest cities of the Irish Republic, was a welcome gesture.

In Dublin the orchestra won repeated ovations at its performance on Aug. 25. The Theater Royal, the largest hall in the city, was packed to capacity for the occasion. Indeed, the continued applause was embarrassing, for a ship was waiting to take some of the company across the Irish Sea. The ship was held back — without precedent — beyond its scheduled hour of departure.

Red and gold hangings and a pale blue backdrop helped to make a brilliant spectacle of the stage, crowded with more than a hundred musicians and their instruments, including two glittering golden harps. Charles Munch — black-coated, gray-haired and dignified — stood on the podium, an immobile figure like one of the many graven statues in O'Connell Street, but when he began conducting, his whole body moved in sympathy with the music. The orchestra was swept forward on waves of sound which kept the audience spellbound.

Program Presented

The program opened with "The Soldiers' Song"—the Irish National Anthem—and never have I heard it played with more dignity and martial ardor. Then the orchestra playsd "The Star-Spangled Banner" as the audience remained standing. Some Dubliners were disappointed that the "Eire Suite" by Leroy Anderson was not played, as in Cork.

But the program was magnificent. It included Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, Hanson's Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Strauss's "Don Juan," and Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C major. Swift changes from tender melody to crashing chords demonstrated the orchestra's dynamic mastery.

In "Don Juan," so characteristic of Richard Strauss, the expression of emotion grew in poignancy till the final chord. Yet it was in the Schumann that the orchestra achieved its most striking effects. Here the mellow notes of the cello blended with silvery flutes and sweet-toned violins to leave an unforgettable impression.

To pick out the dominant characteristic of the Dublin performance is not easy, but I was chiefly impressed by the brilliance of the technical precision. Some partisans of Continental orchestras, while conceding this, said that the technical excellence of the Boston musicians was in danger of being pushed so far as to appear too mechanical, so that technique might take precedence over temperament and feeling.

Yet one must record that the Dublin audience heard the orchestra in breathless silence and then broke into a tornado of applause. The audience included President S. T. O'Kelly and the Most Rev. J. D. McQuaid, Archbishop of Dublin, besides many other leading figures in Irish affairs.

After the Concert

After the concert the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honored President O'Kelly on his 74th anniversary—the day of the concert — by presenting him with the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra to mark its 75th anniversary — Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

William Howard Taft, 3d, the U.S. Ambassador, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the orchestra, were present at the ceremony with other guests, including Prime Minister John A. Costello and Eamon de Valera. Michael T. Kelleher, one of the orchestra's trustees, extended an invitation to Robert Briscoe, Lord Mayor of Dublin, to visit Boston in March.

Following this presentation, Kitty O'Callaghan presented Dr. Munch with scores of a number of works by modern Irish composers on behalf of the Cultural Relations Committee, a government body.

President Sean T. O'Kelly of the Republic of Ireland, views a music score presented to him after the performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Theater Royal, Dublin. Left to right are Charles Munch, conductor, William Howard Taft, 3d, U. S. Ambassador, and with a hand on the score, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Cork Examiner
27 AUG 1956

BIRTHDAY HONOUR FOR PRESIDENT

4767

Presentation By U.S. Orchestra

The Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly on his 74th birthday on Saturday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra, and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

The presentation, which took place in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, after the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was made by Mr. H. B. Cabot, Chairman of the Trustees of the Orchestra.

Returning thanks, the President spoke of the "most friendly and cordial relations" existing between the Irish and the people of Boston. "There is no place outside Ireland where there are more Irish people to the square mile than there are in the city of Boston," the President continued." I have been there before and, if God spares me, I hope to visit the city again.

PLEASED AT VISIT

"We are delighted with this visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and, please God, they will come again," he added.

Following the presentation, Miss Kitty O'Callaghan presented the conductor, Dr. Munch, with scores of a number of works by Irish composers on behalf of the Cultural Relations Committee.

Those present were: Mrs. O'Kelly, the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. Dr. McQuaid; the Papal Nuncio, Most Rev. Dr. Levame; An Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Cosgrave; the American Ambassador and Mrs. Taft, and Mr. de Valera, T.D.

The members of the orchestra left Dublin for Edinburgh on Saturday evening on two chartered Aer Lingus planes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Catholic Observer
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Catholic
SEP 14 1956

Boston Symphony Gives Benefit For Irish School

DUBLIN (NC) — Concluding its Irish concert tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a benefit performance here to help raise funds to expand the Holy Cross at the con- of Ireland Archbish- stolic Nun- op John C. mier John sador and Taft, III;

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844
AUG 30 1956

IRELAND'S PRESIDENT Sean T. O'Kelly, third from left, examines specially bound score presented to him after the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Dublin's Theater Royal. Watching at left are conductor Charles Munch and William Howard Taft II, U.S. ambassador to Ireland. Holding score at right is Henry B. Cabot, chairman of BSO trustees. (UP Telephoto)

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. 2.
Extract from
The Birmingham Post
27 AUG 1956
Date .....
(SEE INFORMATION OVERLEAF)

this stage last year.

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra trustees honoured President O'Kelly, of Eire, on his 74th birthday yesterday with a presentation of the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra, and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra. 4767

Globe July 30, 1956

(Boston Globe-United Press Telephoto)

GIFT TO EIRE PRESIDENT—Sean T. O'Kelly, President of Ireland, examines specially bound musical score presented by Boston Symphony conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, left, and H. B. Cabot, right, chairman of orchestra trustees. U.S. Ambassador to Eire, William H. Taft II, second left, looks on at ceremony after Symphony's Dublin concert. (Read Cyrus Durgin's story on Boston Symphony's trip to Europe on Page 9 of today's Globe.)

[50]

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
SEP 1 1956

Boston Symphony Heard in Ireland

Orchestra Acclaimed In Dublin

By R. M. Fox

Dublin

Since Ireland has always been land where music is appreci-ted, the decision of the Boston ymphony Orchestra to begin its uropean tour with concerts in ork and Dublin, the two larg-st cities of the Irish Republic, as a welcome gesture.

In Dublin the orchestra won epeated ovations at its perform-nce on Aug. 25. The Theater oyal, the largest hall in the ity, was packed to capacity for he occasion. Indeed, the con-inued applause was embarrass-ng, for a ship was waiting to ake some of the company across he Irish Sea. The ship was held ack — without precedent — be-ond its scheduled hour of de-arture.

Red and gold hangings and a ale blue backdrop helped to ake a brilliant spectacle of he stage, crowded with more han a hundred musicians and eir instruments, including two ittering golden harps. Charles unch — black-coated, gray-aired and dignified — stood on e podium, an immobile figure ke one of the many graven atues in O'Connell Street, but hen he began conducting, his hole body moved in sympathy ith the music. The orchestra as swept forward on waves of und which kept the audience ellbound.

rogram Presented

The program opened with he Soldiers' Song"—the Irish ational Anthem—and never ve I heard it played with more gnity and martial ardor. Then e orchestra playsd "The Star-angled Banner" as the audi-ce remained standing. Some bliners were disappointed at the "Eire Suite" by Leroy nderson was not played, as in rk.

But the program was magni-cent. It included Haydn's Sym-ony in B-flat major, Hanson's egy in Memory of Serge Kous-vitzky, Strauss's "Don Juan," d Schumann's Symphony No. in C major. Swift changes om tender melody to crashing ords demonstrated the orches-a's dynamic mastery.

In "Don Juan," so character-tic of Richard Strauss, the ex-ession of emotion grew in ignancy till the final chord. t it was in the Schumann that e orchestra achieved its most iking effects. Here the mellow tes of the cello blended with very flutes and sweet-toned olins to leave an unforgettable pression.

To pick out the dominant characteristic of the Dublin per-formance is not easy, but I was chiefly impressed by the bril-liance of the technical precision. Some partisans of Continental orchestras, while conceding this, said that the technical excellence of the Boston musicians was in danger of being pushed so far as to appear too mechanical, so that technique might take prece-dence over temperament and feeling.

Yet one must record that the Dublin audience heard the or-chestra in breathless silence and then broke into a tornado of ap-plause. The audience included President S. T. O'Kelly and the Most Rev. J. D. McQuaid, Arch-bishop of Dublin, besides many other leading figures in Irish affairs.

After the Concert

After the concert the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orches-tra honored President O'Kelly on his 74th anniversary—the day of the concert — by presenting him with the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra to mark its 75th anni-versary — Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

William Howard Taft, 3d, the U.S. Ambassador, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the orchestra, were present at the ceremony with other guests, including Prime Minister John A. Costello and Eamon de Va-lera. Michael T. Kelleher, one of the orchestra's trustees, ex-tended an invitation to Robert Briscoe, Lord Mayor of Dublin, to visit Boston in March.

Following this presentation, Kitty O'Callaghan presented Dr. Munch with scores of a number of works by modern Irish com-posers on behalf of the Cultural Relations Committee, a govern-ment body.

President Sean T. O'Kelly of the Republic of Ireland, views a music score presented to him after the performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Theater Royal, Dublin. Left to right are Charles Munch, conductor, William Howard Taft, 3d, U. S. Ambassador, and with a hand on the score, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from

The Birmingham Post

Date 27 AUG 1956

(SEE INFORMATION OVERLEAF)

this stage last year.

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra trustees honoured President O'Kelly, of Eire, on his 74th birth-day yesterday with a presentation of the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra, and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Catholic Observer
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Catholic
SEP 14 1956

Boston Symphony Gives Benefit For Irish School

DUBLIN (NC) — Concluding its Irish concert tour the Boston Sym-phony Orchestra gave a benefit performance here to help raise funds to repair and expand the Diocesan Seminary, Holy Cross College, Clonliffe.

Among those present at the con-cert were the President of Ireland and Mrs. Sean O'Kelly; Archbish-op Alberto Levame, Apostolic Nun-cio to Ireland; Archbishop John C. McQuaid of Dublin; Premier John Costello; U. S. Ambassador and Mrs. William Howard Taft, III; and former Prime Minister Eamon de Valera.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Cork Examiner

BIRTHDAY HONOUR FOR PRESIDENT

Presentation By U.S. Orchestra

The Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured Presi-dent O'Kelly on his 74th birthday on Saturday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commis-sioned for the orchestra, and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

The presentation, which took place in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, after the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was made by Mr. H. B. Cabot, Chairman of the Trustees of the Orchestra.

Returning thanks, the President spoke of the "most friendly and cordial relations" existing between the Irish and the people of Boston. "There is no place outside Ireland where there are more Irish people to the square mile than there are in the city of Boston," the President continued." I have been there before and, if God spares me, I hope to visit the city again.

PLEASED AT VISIT

"We are delighted with this visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and, please God, they will come again," he added.

Following the presentation, Miss Kitty O'Callaghan presented the con-ductor, Dr. Munch, with scores of a number of works by Irish composers on behalf of the Cultural Relations Committee.

Those present were: Mrs. O'Kelly, the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. Dr. McQuaid; the Papal Nuncio, Most Rev. Dr. Levame; An Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Cosgrave; the American Ambassador and Mrs. Taft, and Mr. de Valera, T.D.

The members of the orchestra left Dublin for Edinburgh on Saturday evening on two chartered Aer Lingus planes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844
AUG 30 1956

IRELAND'S PRESIDENT Sean T. O'Kelly, third from left, examines specially bound score presented to him after the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Dublin's Theater Royal. Watching at left are conductor Charles Munch and William Howard Taft II, U.S. ambassador to Ireland. Holding score at right is Henry B. Cabot, chairman of BSO trustees. (UP Telephoto)

Globe AUG 30, 1956

(Boston Globe-United Press Telephoto)

GIFT TO EIRE PRESIDENT—Sean T. O'Kelly, President of Ireland, examines specially bound musical score presented by Boston Symphony conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, left, and H. B. Cabot, right, chairman of orchestra trustees. U.S. Ambassador to Eire, William H. Taft II, second left, looks on at ceremony after Symphony's Dublin concert. (Read Cyrus Durgin's story on Boston Symphony's trip to Europe on Page 9 of today's Globe.)

In Ireland Herald

orchestra as it gave concert in ended the performance in the Royal ore.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
SEP 1 1956

[50]

Boston Symphony Heard in Ireland

Orchestra Acclaimed In Dublin

By R. M. Fox

Dublin

Since Ireland has always been a land where music is appreciated, the decision of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to begin its European tour with concerts in Cork and Dublin, the two largest cities of the Irish Republic, was a welcome gesture.

In Dublin the orchestra won repeated ovations at its performance on Aug. 25. The Theater Royal, the largest hall in the city, was packed to capacity for the occasion. Indeed, the continued applause was embarrassing, for a ship was waiting to take some of the company across the Irish Sea. The ship was held back — without precedent — beyond its scheduled hour of departure.

Red and gold hangings and a pale blue backdrop helped to make a brilliant spectacle of the stage, crowded with more than a hundred musicians and their instruments, including two glittering golden harps. Charles Munch — black-coated, gray-haired and dignified — stood on the podium, an immobile figure like one of the many graven statues in O'Connell Street, but when he began conducting, his whole body moved in sympathy with the music. The orchestra was swept forward on waves of sound which kept the audience spellbound.

Program Presented

The program opened with "The Soldiers' Song"—the Irish National Anthem—and never have I heard it played with more dignity and martial ardor. Then the orchestra playsd "The Star-Spangled Banner" as the audience remained standing. Some Dubliners were disappointed that the "Eire Suite" by Leroy Anderson was not played, as in Cork.

But the program was magnificent. It included Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, Hanson's Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Strauss's "Don Juan," and Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C major. Swift changes from tender melody to crashing chords demonstrated the orchestra's dynamic mastery.

In "Don Juan," so characteristic of Richard Strauss, the expression of emotion grew in poignancy till the final chord. Yet it was in the Schumann that the orchestra achieved its most striking effects. Here the mellow notes of the cello blended with silvery flutes and sweet-toned violins to leave an unforgettable impression.

To pick out the dominant characteristic of the Dublin performance is not easy, but I was chiefly impressed by the brilliance of the technical precision. Some partisans of Continental orchestras, while conceding this, said that the technical excellence of the Boston musicians was in danger of being pushed so far as to appear too mechanical, so that technique might take precedence over temperament and feeling.

Yet one must record that the Dublin audience heard the orchestra in breathless silence and then broke into a tornado of applause. The audience included President S. T. O'Kelly and the Most Rev. J. D. McQuaid, Archbishop of Dublin, besides many other leading figures in Irish affairs.

After the Concert

After the concert the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honored President O'Kelly on his 74th anniversary—the day of the concert — by presenting him with the score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra to mark its 75th anniversary — Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

William Howard Taft, 3d, the U.S. Ambassador, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the orchestra, were present at the ceremony with other guests, including Prime Minister John A. Costello and Eamon de Valera. Michael T. Kelleher, one of the orchestra's trustees, extended an invitation to Robert Briscoe, Lord Mayor of Dublin, to visit Boston in March.

Following this presentation, Kitty O'Callaghan presented Dr. Munch with scores of a number of works by modern Irish composers on behalf of the Cultural Relations Committee, a government body.

President Sean T. O'Kelly of the Republic of Ireland, views a music score presented to him after the performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Theater Royal, Dublin. Left to right are Charles Munch, conductor, William Howard Taft, 3d, U. S. Ambassador, and with a hand on the score, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Catholic Observer
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Catholic
SEP 14 1956

Boston Symphony Gives Benefit For Irish School

DUBLIN (NC) — Concluding its Irish concert tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a benefit performance here to help raise funds to repair and expand the Diocesan Seminary, Holy Cross College, Clonliffe.

Among those present at the concert were the President of Ireland and Mrs. Sean O'Kelly; Archbishop Alberto Levame, Apostolic Nuncio to Ireland; Archbishop John C. McQuaid of Dublin; Premier John Costello; U. S. Ambassador and Mrs. William Howard Taft, III; and former Prime Minister Eamon de Valera.

International Press-Cutting Bureau
184, Strand, London, W.C.2.

Extract from
Cork Examiner

BIRTHDAY HONOUR FOR PRESIDENT

Presentation By U.S. Orchestra

The Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honoured President O'Kelly on his 74th birthday on Saturday with a presentation of a score of a work specially commissioned for the orchestra, and a gold medal struck on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the orchestra.

The presentation, which took place in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, after the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was made by Mr. H. B. Cabot, Chairman of the Trustees of the Orchestra.

Returning thanks, the President spoke of the "most friendly and cordial relations" existing between the Irish and the people of Boston. "There is no place outside Ireland where there are more Irish people to the square mile than there are in the city of Boston," the President continued." I have been there before and, if God spares me, I hope to visit the city again.

PLEASED AT VISIT

"We are delighted with this visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and, please God, they will come again," he added.

Following the presentation, Miss Kitty O'Callaghan presented the conductor, Dr. Munch, with scores of a number of works by Irish composers on behalf of the Cultural Relations Committee.

Those present were: Mrs. O'Kelly, the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. Dr. McQuaid; the Papal Nuncio, Most Rev. Dr. Levame; An Taoiseach, Mr. Costello; the Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Cosgrave; the American Ambassador and Mrs. Taft, and Mr. de Valera, T.D.

The members of the orchestra left Dublin for Edinburgh on Saturday evening on two chartered Aer Lingus planes.

Globe Aug 30, 1956

(Boston Globe-United Press Telephoto)

GIFT TO EIRE PRESIDENT—Sean T. O'Kelly, President of Ireland, examines specially bound musical score presented by Boston Symphony conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, left, and H. B. Cabot, right, chairman of orchestra trustees. U.S. Ambassador to Eire, William H. Taft II, second left, looks on at ceremony after Symphony's Dublin concert. (Read Cyrus Durgin's story on Boston Symphony's trip to Europe on Page 9 of today's Globe.)

n Ireland Herald

orchestra as it gave concert in ded the performance in the Royal e.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Dublin Acclaims Boston's Symphony Orchestra

These Candid Camera Shots of Dr. Munch and His Famous Musicians Showing the Enthusiasm With Which They Were Received, Were Flown From Ireland for Publication Exclusively in The Boston Post

In honor of the first appearance ever of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dublin, the Stars and Stripes fly beside the colors of the Irish Republic from the facade of the Theatre Royal. Edward G. Robinson's film, "Nightmare," also ran the same week.

Certainly the tense interest of this audience could not be surpassed by Boston's regular season ticket holders.

Backstage at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, double-base players Ludwig Juht (left) and John Barwicki (right) think it is time for Kilton Vinal Smith to dress for the concert—but he keeps on booming on his bass tuba to test his lips.

As a memento of its first visit to Ireland, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, through the president of its board of trustees, Henry B. Cabot (right) presents a specially bound orchestral score to the President of the Irish Republic, Sean T. O'Kelly. Looking on are Dr. Charles Munch (extreme left), the orchestra's conductor; and William H. Taft II., U. S. Ambassador to Eire. Perhaps Mr. O'Kelley is saying, "Now, if this were Gaelic I could read it more readily."

Enthusiastic comments to Dr. Charles Munch (centre), conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra are made by the Most Reverend Albert Levame, Papal Nuncio to Eire, while President O'Kelly listens, at left.

While Irish President Sean O'Kelly (centre) cons a [illegible] Robert Briscoe, Dublin's new Jewish Lord Mayor, [illegible] Kelleher

At the stage door of Dublin's Theatre Royal, members of Boston Symphony expedition observe and comment on their Irish surroundings. Left to right: Samuel Diamond, violin; Martin Hoherman, 'cello; Noah Bielski, violin; [illegible] Hoherman, 'cello.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN AND HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH THE QUEEN MOTHER

Edinburgh International Festival

In association with the Scottish Committee of the Arts Council of Great Britain, the British Council and the Corporation of the City of Edinburgh

USHER HALL
Sunday, 26th August 1956, at 8 p.m.

Music from the Ballet

LA PÉRI

Poème dansé — Dukas

(with Istar — Symphonic Variations;
Fervaal — Introduction, Act 1 — d'Indy)

Anatole Fistoulari

conducting the

Westminster Symphony Orchestra

PMC1011

The new one-act ballet "La Péri"
was first performed at Covent Garden
early this year, when the leading rôles were danced by Margot Fonteyn
and Michael Somes;
the choreography of the ballet is by Frederick Ashton.

PARLOPHONE

33⅓ r.p.m. Long Playing Record

THE PARLOPHONE COMPANY LTD. RECORD DIVISION 8-11 GT. CASTLE ST. LONDON W.1

USHER HALL

Sunday, 26th August 1956
at 8 p.m.

The
Boston Symphony Orchestra

Conductor

CHARLES MÜNCH

Founded seventy-five years ago, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had a distinguished history under the direction of, amongst others, George Henschel, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitzky. This, its first visit to the Edinburgh Festival, can be justly regarded as a notable occasion.

Charles Münch became the Orchestra's conductor in 1949. He already had an illustrious career behind him at the head of a number of French orchestras, while in 1948 he had toured America with the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Française. Since his appointment he has added to the already wide prestige of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

As this concert is being broadcast, patrons are requested kindly to return to their seats at the warning bell

PROGRAMME

SYMPHONY No. 102 in B flat major — Haydn (1732-1809)

Largo: Allegro vivace
Adagio
Menuetto: Allegro
Finale: Presto

AFTER the death of his patron, Prince Nicolaus Esterhazy, in 1790, Haydn accepted the pressing invitation of Johann Peter Salomon, a violinist who had turned impresario, to come to London and compose a number of symphonies for performance at Salomon's concerts. Haydn paid two visits to England in 1791 and 1794, and wrote for Salomon a dozen symphonies, all of them masterpieces of a high order, six for each of the two seasons. The Symphony in B flat (No. 102) belongs to the second set and was first performed early in 1795.

Haydn is commonly called the " Father of the Symphony", because until recently little has been heard of the music of his immediate predecessors and contemporaries (saving the youthful Mozart). It is true, none the less, that Haydn was the first great master of the form and that he did more than any other musician to organise the rudimentary elements of the Italian (operatic) sinfonia and of the Suite into the classical symphonic form, whose chief features are a first movement in which there is a dramatic contrast of keys and usually of subjects, a slow movement generally lyrical in form and feeling, a Minuet and a final Rondo. But although Haydn's symphonies conform to this general scheme, each has its own individuality. Symphonic form, as understood by Haydn, was not a mould into which so much material of a given kind could be poured and then turned out, when set, as a symphony. It was a dramatic form to be worked out according to the individual character of the material used, and the result of putting together the themes of, say, the " Military " Symphony, will no more resemble the work we are to hear, than a play featuring Beatrice and Benedick will have much in common, save idiosyncrasies of speech and style, with one in which the chief parts are played by Romeo and Juliet.

Unfortunately, it is impossible to describe precisely in words the character of musical themes as one can describe Juliet and Beatrice. On the other hand, fortunately, the attentive listener needs little help in following Haydn's lucid working out of his musical dramas. In the present instance, the first movement is more than usually " orthodox". A slow Introduction of considerable breadth is followed by an exposition with two distinct subjects (the second in the dominant) and a codetta which seems to allude to the Introduction. (The new style of musicology would no doubt make much of the fact that both the Introduction and the first subject of the Allegro begin with the interval of a rising fourth.) The development is rich and imaginative, ranging as far as C major at a point where, after a pause, the flautist has a conspicuous solo (first subject), after which the orchestra comes in fortissimo to lead the tonality back to B flat. The recapitulation is, for Haydn, unusually " regular ", though he differentiates the first subject with new sforzando markings on each beat, and rounds off the movement with an extended coda.

The Adagio, which Haydn used again in his Pianoforte Trio in F sharp minor published later in 1795, is remarkable for its beautiful orchestration. In it the horns and trumpets are muted (but not the drums, as indicated in some editions owing to a misreading of the manuscript) and there is an important part for a solo violoncello, the remainder playing with the bassi continui. In the brilliant Finale occurs one of Haydn's happiest jokes, and one which Beethoven emulated in a different guise in his Eighth Symphony finale. The movement, like so many of the finales in Haydn's late symphonies, combines rondo- with sonata-form. When the gay " rondo " theme is due to make its final appearance, the first violins pretend that they have forgotten how it goes. They play the opening bar and then stutter and hesitate until the rest of the orchestra can bear it no longer and break in with a loud laugh to carry the movement to its conclusion.

DYNELEY HUSSEY

SYMPHONY No. 6 — Walter Piston (b. 1894)

Fluendo espressivo
Leggerissimo vivace
Adagio sereno
Allegro energico
(First performance in Europe)

WALTER PISTON's Sixth Symphony was commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for this Orchestra's anniversary season and is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

The following orchestration is called for:—Two flutes and piccolo, two oboes and English horn, two clarinets and bass clarinet, two bassoons and contra-bassoon, four horns, three trumpets, three trombones and tuba, timpani, bass drum, triangle, snare drum, military drum, tambourine, cymbals, tam tam, two harps and strings.

Piston writes: " It is known that no two orchestras sound alike, and that the same orchestra sounds differently under different conductors. The composer of orchestral music must be aware of this, and his mental image of the sound of his written notes has to admit a certain flexibility. This image is in a sense a composite resulting from all his experience in hearing orchestral sound, whether produced by one or two instruments or by the entire orchestra in tutti.

" While writing my Sixth Symphony, I came to realise that this was a rather special situation in that I was writing for one designated orchestra, one that I had grown up with, and that I knew intimately. Each note set down sounded in the mind with extraordinary clarity, as though played immediately by those who were to perform the work. On several occasions it seemed as though the melodies were being written by the instruments themselves as I followed along. I refrained from playing even a single note of this Symphony on the piano.

" Little need be said in advance about the Symphony. Indeed, I could wish that my music be first heard without the distraction of preliminary explanation. The headings listed in the programme are indicative of the general character of each movement. The first movement is flowing and expressive, in sonata form; the second a scherzo, light and fast; the third a serene adagio, theme one played by solo 'cello, theme two by the flute; and the fourth an energetic finale with two contrasting themes. The Symphony was composed with no intent other than to make music to be played and listened to.

" I take this occasion to express my immense indebtedness to the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to the conductors Serge Koussevitzky, Richard Burgin and Charles Münch, for the many superb performances of my music."

JOHN N. BURK

INTERVAL

DON JUAN, Tone-poem for large orchestra — Richard Strauss (1864-1949)

ALTHOUGH Strauss had already composed Aus Italien and Macbeth, Don Juan, which was produced in 1888 when he was twenty-four years old, was the work which proclaimed to the world the arrival of a new and original master, a potential successor to Liszt and Wagner.

It is natural that this early work should conform more closely to the Lisztian model than the later tone-poem in which Strauss became more and more objective in the description of detail. But already in Don Juan he showed that he was more interested in the psychology of his subject than in the production of a musical paraphrase of his poet, which was Liszt's object.

The poet in this instance was Nicholaus Lenau, a romantic poet who died in an asylum in 1850. His poem, from which an excerpt is printed at the beginning of Strauss's score, depicts Don Juan as something more than the heartless profligate of the plays of Molière and Shadwell and the eighteenth-century operas based upon them; something more, too, than the romantic adventurer of Byron. Don Juan has acquired a conscience and seeks an ideal—an ideal woman. But his search is in vain, and the consummation of each love-affair brings in its train only disillusion and disgust. At last, after a hectic plunge into dissipation in the vain hope of quieting conscience, he falls in a duel.

For his tone-poems Strauss always adopted, and adapted, appropriate classical forms. Till Eulenspiegel's picaresque adventures fell naturally into rondo-form, Don Quixote's were presented as a set of variations, and Don Juan's aptly provide material for a large sonata-movement in E major with all the familiar features of exposition, development, recapitulation and coda—the last a singularly moving and beautiful description of Don Juan's death. There are two contrasted groups of themes forming each "subject"—the one masculine and vigorous (Allegro molto con brio), the other feminine and yielding, in the orthodox dominant key. Don Juan's self-disgust, which recurs again and again and assumes great prominence at the end, is portrayed in a chromatic theme, which is the late nineteenth-century equivalent of Mozart's formula for the depiction of melancholy. The development consists of a love-duet between the main theme of the first group and the lovely melody for oboe, which is the most important feature of the second subject. The recapitulation, which depicts the hero's ruin, opens with a conspicuous new theme for four horns, which seems to interpret Lenau's line:

> Hinaus und fort nach immer neuen Siegen!
> (Up and away to ever new adventure!)

In the carnival which follows all the themes are brilliantly intermingled until the fatal bolt falls and, Don Juan's energy burnt out, the music dies away quietly in the minor key.

DYNELEY HUSSEY

Scherzo, L'APPRENTI SORCIER — Dukas (1865-1935)

DUKAS'S Scherzo, L'Apprenti Sorcier, tells the story, derived from Goethe's ballad, of a sorcerer's apprentice who, being lazy, uses one of his master's spells upon a broom, and orders it to fetch water for him. But not knowing how to order the bewitched broom to stop, he finds himself likely to be the author of a second deluge, and disaster is only averted by the return of his master, who breaks the spell.

The piece opens with a mysterious theme, which may be taken to represent the magic spell, while a naïve tune played by the wood-wind seems to portray the young magician. After this introductory material has been repeated, the tempo quickens and the scherzo proper begins. Conspicuous among the themes now developed is a grotesque melody for the bassoons which depicts the hopping of the bewitched broom. Soon the music begins to suggest the pouring of water, and recurrences of the spell-theme suggest the efforts of the apprentice to undo the mischief. Failing that, he desperately chops the broom in two, only to find that he has doubled his adversary—the glockenspiel joins the wood-winds with a new theme. At the height of the hubbub the sorcerer returns, majestic on the brass, and breaks the spell. The waters subside and the broom hops back to its corner. What happened to the boy is not recorded by Dukas.

DYNELEY HUSSEY

All programme notes are copyright by their authors

THE CONCERT ENDS AT ABOUT 9.45 P.M.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Music Director: CHARLES MÜNCH

Associate Conductor: RICHARD BURGIN

Violins

Richard Burgin (Concert-master)
Alfred Krips
George Zazofsky
Rolland Tapley
Norbert Lauga
Vladimir Resnikoff
Harry Dickson
Gottfried Wilfinger
Einar Hansen
Joseph Leibovici
Emil Kornsand
Roger Shermont
Minot Beale
Herman Silberman
Stanley Benson
Leo Panasevich
Sheldon Rotenberg
Fredy Ostrovsky
Clarence Knudson
Pierre Mayer
Manuel Zung
Samuel Diamond
Victor Manusevitch
James Nagy
Melvin Bryant
Lloyd Stonestreet
Saverio Messina
William Waterhouse
William Marshall
Leonard Moss
Jesse Ceci
Noah Bielski
Alfred Schneider
Joseph Silverstein

Violas

Joseph de Pasquale
Jean Cauhapé
Eugen Lehner
Albert Bernard
George Humphrey
Jerome Lipson
Robert Karol
Reuben Green
Bernard Kadino
Vincent Mauricci
John Fiasca
Earl Hedberg

'Cellos

Samuel Mayes
Alfred Zighera
Jacobus Langendoen
Mischa Nieland
Karl Zeise
Josef Zimbler
Bernard Parronchi
Leon Marjollet
Martin Hoherman
Louis Berger
Richard Kapuscinski
Robert Ripley

Basses

Georges Moleux
Gaston Dufresne
Ludwig Juht
Irving Frankel
Henry Freeman
Henry Portnoi
Henri Girard
John Barwicki

Flutes

Doriot Anthony Dwyer
James Pappoutsakis
Phillip Kaplan

Piccolo

George Madsen

Oboes

Ralph Gomberg
Jean Devergie
John Holmes

English Horn

Louis Speyer

Clarinets

Gino Cioffi
Manuel Valerio

E-Flat Clarinet

Pasquale Cardillo

Bass Clarinet

Rosario Mazzeo

Bassoons

Sherman Walt
Ernst Panenka
Theodore Brewster

Contra-Bassoon

Richard Plastre

Horns

James Stagliano
Charles Yancich
Harry Shapiro
Harold Meek
Paul Keaney
Osbourne McConathy

Trumpets

Roger Voisin
Marcel Lafosse
Armando Ghitalla
Gerard Goguen

Trombones

William Gibson
William Moyer
Kauko Kahila
Josef Orosz

Tuba

K. Vinal Smith

Harps

Bernard Zighera
Olivia Luetcke

Timpani

Everett Firth
Harold Faberman

Percussion

Charles Smith
Harold Thompson
Arthur Press

Piano

Bernard Zighera

Librarian

Leslie Rogers

Assistant Librarian

Victor Alpert

The Souvenir Programme is now on sale at the Festival Office and at booksellers at the price of 3s. 6d.

Long Play Records by

CHARLES MUNCH

conducting the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Symphony No. 1 in B Flat ("Spring") — Schumann
ALP 1203

Symphony No. 2 in B Flat — Schubert
Symphony No. 104 in D ("London") — Haydn
ALP 1061

Rapsodie espagnole; La Valse — Ravel
Overtures: La Princesse jaune — Saint-Saëns
Béatrice et Bénédict — Berlioz
Le Roi d'Ys — Lalo ALP 1245

Don Quixote — Richard Strauss
with Gregor Piatigorsky (Cello), Richard Burgin (Violin), and Joseph De Pasquale (Viola) ALP 1211

Charles Munch also conducts performances of Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust" (ALP 1225-7) and Dramatic Symphony, "Roméo et Juliette" (ALP 1179-80)

Prices inc. tax: 39 7½d each

Details of further recordings will be found in the "His Master's Voice" Catalogue.

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

LONG PLAY 33⅓ R.P.M. RECORDS

THE GRAMOPHONE CO. LTD. (RECORD DIVISION) 8-11 GT. CASTLE STREET, LONDON, W.1

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE BOSTON SYMPH

Music Director : C

Associate Conductor : F

Violins

Richard Burgin (Concert-master)
Alfred Krips
George Zazofsky
Rolland Tapley
Norbert Lauga
Vladimir Resnikoff
Harry Dickson
Gottfried Wilfinger
Einar Hansen
Joseph Leibovici
Emil Kornsand
Roger Shermont
Minot Beale
Herman Silberman
Stanley Benson
Leo Panasevich
Sheldon Rotenberg
Fredy Ostrovsky
Clarence Knudson
Pierre Mayer
Manuel Zung
Samuel Diamond
Victor Manusevitch
James Nagy
Melvin Bryant
Lloyd Stonestreet
Saverio Messina
William Waterhouse
William Marshall
Leonard Moss
Jesse Ceci
Noah Bielski
Alfred Schneider
Joseph Silverstein

Violas

Joseph de Pasquale
Jean Cauhapé
Eugen Lehner
Albert Bernard
George Humphrey
Jerome Lipson
Robert Karol
Reuben Green
Bernard Kadino
Vincent Mauricci
John Fiasca
Earl Hedberg

'Cellos

Samuel Mayes
Alfred Zighera
Jacobus Langendoen
Mischa Nieland
Karl Zeise
Josef Zimbler
Bernard Parronchi
Leon Marjollet
Martin Hoherman
Louis Berger
Richard Kapuscinski
Robert Ripley

Basses

Georges Moleux
Gaston Dufresne
Ludwig Juht
Irving Frankel
Henry Freeman
Henry Portnoi
Henri Girard
John Barwicki

Flutes

Doriot Anthony Dwyer
James Pappoutsakis
Phillip Kaplan

Piccolo

George Madsen

Oboes

Ralph Gomberg
Jean Devergie
John Holmes

English Horn

Louis Speyer

Clarinets

Gino Cioffi
Manuel Valerio

E-Flat Clarinet

Pasquale Cardillo

Bass Clarinet

Rosario Mazzeo

Bassoons

Sherman Walt
Ernst Panenka
Theodore Brewster

Contra-Bassoon

Richard Plastre

F
C
H
A

Pia
Ber

Libra
Leslie

Assista
Victor

The Souvenir Programme is now on sale at the Festi and at booksellers at the price of 3s. 6d.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
ABETH THE QUEEN MOTHER

burgh al Festival

he Scottish Committee of t Britain, the British Council of the City of Edinburgh

ER HALL
August 1956, at 8 p.m.

GEO. STEWART & CO. LTD., Printers

[54]

An outstanding Long Playing Recording of

DIE ZAUBERFLÖTE

Mozart

Queen of the Night	WILMA LIPP
Tamino	ANTON DERMOTA
First Lady	SENA JURINAC
Second Lady	FRIEDL RIEGER
Third Lady	ELSE SCHÜRHOFF
Papageno	ERICH KUNZ
Monostatos	PETER KLEIN
Pamina	IRMGARD SEEFRIED
First Youth	HERMINE STEINMASSL
Second Youth	ELEONORE DÖRPINGHANS
Third Youth	ANNELIES STUCKL
First Priest	ERICH MAJKUT
Second Priest	HARALD PROGLHOFF
Sarastro	LUDWIG WEBER
Speaker	GEORGE LONDON
Papagena	EMMY LOOSE
Armed Man	LJUBOMIR PANTSCHEFF

VIENNA PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

and

SINGVEREIN DER GESELLSCHAFT DER MUSIKFREUNDE IM WIEN

conducted by

Herbert von Karajan

33CX1013-5

COLUMBIA

33⅓ r.p.m. Long Playing Records

COLUMBIA GRAPHOPHONE CO. LTD., RECORD DIVISION, 8-11 GT. CASTLE ST., LONDON, W.1

USHER HALL

Monday, 27th August 1956

at 8 p.m.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Conductor

PIERRE MONTEUX

Founded seventy-five years ago, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had a distinguished history under the direction of, amongst others, George Henschel, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitzky. This, its first visit to the Edinburgh Festival, can justly be regarded as a notable occasion.

Pierre Monteux began his career as a viola player. From 1912 he conducted Diaghilev's Ballet Russe and he became conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House in 1917. He was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1919-24. In the ten years following he was a regular conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw and became conductor of the San Francisco Orchestra in 1935, a position from which he has now retired. He shared with Mr Münch the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's European tour in May 1952 and the transcontinental tour in 1953.

PROGRAMME

SYMPHONY No. 2, Op. 35

Paul Creston
(b. 1906)

Introduction and Song
Interlude and Dance

PAUL CRESTON'S parents were both Italian (his actual name is Joseph Guttoveggio). Showing ability from childhood, he studied piano with G. Aldo Randegger and Gaston Dethier, and organ with Pietro Yon. In harmony, composition and orchestration he is entirely self-taught, but his music has been recognised by numerous awards of merit, including a Guggenheim Fellowship. Since 1934 he has been organist at St Malachy's Church in New York.

The Second Symphony was completed in June 1944 and the orchestration is as follows:—Three flutes and piccolo, two oboes and English horn, two clarinets and bass clarinet, two bassoons and contra-bassoon, four horns, three trumpets, three trombones and tuba, timpani, bass drum, triangle, cymbals, snare drum, gong, xylophone, piano and strings. The Symphony is dedicated " in profound gratitude " to Dr William Filler, " family friend and physician".

The title " Symphony " is used freely, as the movements show. It was conceived, writes the composer, " as an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music: song and dance.

" In the opening of the Introduction are presented four themes as a cumulative ground bass, i.e., successively superimposed. Theme 1, played by 'cellos, and Theme 2, played by violas, are the main basis of the entire Symphony. Whatever new thematic material emerges is either a ramification or a development of these two themes.

" The Song is largely built on a variation of Theme 1, tender and simple in character, presented first by the flute and then by the horn. After a minor climax, the inversion of Theme 1 is presented by violins and is followed by Theme 2, with the mood gradually increasing in intensity. A short, agitated episode leads to the varied Theme 1, with the whole orchestra participating and played with great breadth and majesty. The movement closes quietly with the original flute theme, this time played by the oboe, slightly varied rhythmically but equally tender and simple in feeling.

" The Interlude opens with a completely transformed Theme 2, quite aggressive and defiant, leading to a rather quiet section, but soon returning to the aggressive character. This last merges into the Dance without pause, which after a rhythmic introduction begins with another variation of Theme 1 (muted trumpet). Each appearance of this variation of Theme 1 alters further the rhythm and contour of the melody. As the excitement mounts, Theme 2 soars above the ever-recurrent rhythmic pulses, developing to a climax and into the next section of the Dance. In the second section, based on a variation of Theme 1 inverted, the rhythmic pattern has changed and there is a greater sense of driving forward. This theme variant goes through several metamorphoses as the section builds to the major climax and then subsides to an altered version of the original cumulative ground bass. Above three concurrent rhythms which were presented separately earlier in the Dance, the flute theme of the Song (now played by violins), becoming more and more intense, brings the composition to a close."

JOHN N. BURK

CONCERTO for Orchestra

Bartók
(1881-1945)

Introduzione
Giuoco delle coppie
Elegia
Intermezzo interrotto
Finale

THIS work, one of Bartók's last—only the Third Piano Concerto and the Viola Concerto are later in date—is typical of the way his style became more approachable and " human " towards the end of his life. It was written in 1943 for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in memory of Mrs Natalie Koussevitzky, and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in December the following year in New York. It is scored for a large orchestra, including triple wood-wind, and Bartók called it a Concerto rather than a Symphony because of " its tendency to treat the single instruments or instrumental groups in a concertante manner".

There are five movements. The Introduzione begins andante with a theme in the bass built up entirely on intervals of the fourth: it has a curiously Hungarian flavour, and is to reappear often throughout the work. A second, rhythmic, theme is taken up and developed, and leads straight into the allegro vivace, the first movement proper, which is in orthodox sonata form. It starts with this subject:

Ex. 1

the second subject, first heard on the oboe over a drone on the violins and 'cellos, vacillates in a curious way between two notes.

In the development section much play is made with motifs based on the fourths of the introduction, and then the two main subjects of the movement appear in reverse order in the recapitulation.

The delightful scherzo, sub-titled " Game of the Couples ", has a distinctly formal and stylised air, and is thought to have been suggested by the opening of some baroque ballet, with the dancers in two long lines. After a few bars on the side-drum (played without snares), the wind instruments enter in pairs in symmetrical phrases, the bassoons in sixths, the oboes in thirds, the clarinets in sevenths, the flutes in fifths and the trumpets (muted) in seconds. A short chorale on the brass (accompanied by the side-drum) leads to a re-entry of the instruments in the same order as before, but this time in more than two parts, and woven into fuller texture.

The mournful Elegia harks back to the opening of the first movement, and uses among its kaleidoscopic material both the motif in fourths and the second theme of the introduction.

The fourth movement, sub-titled " Interrupted Intermezzo ", begins with a pert and very characteristic subject in irregular rhythm on the oboe. This alternates with a broader theme on the strings:—

Ex. 2

The interruption comes from a ridiculously vulgar mock-Spanish tune, which is greeted with jeers and catcalls from the entire orchestra, in the form of squeals, giggles, grunts, bleats and general frivolity. Then the two themes of the first section reappear in reverse order, and after a short flute cadenza the movement ends with fragments of the initial theme.

The Finale is the most considerable movement of the Concerto, and is a brilliant piece of writing. After a brief horn-call, it begins with a bustling perpetuum mobile in the strings which is carried on at some length: after an interlude built on a motif first heard on the bassoon, the rushing strings return, this time as a background to a trumpet theme which is extensively used in the development section: it becomes the subject of a fugue, and is treated in masterly fashion in inversion, stretto, augmentation, diminution and all the other fugal devices. There is a much abbreviated recapitulation, and the movement ends with a short coda after Ex. 3 has been hammered out in triumph by the full brass.

Ex. 3

LIONEL SALTER

INTERVAL

SYMPHONY No. 9 in C major (The " Great ") Schubert (1797-1828)

Andante—Allegro ma non troppo
Andante con moto
Scherzo: Allegro vivace—Trio
Finale: Allegro vivace

THE " Great " C major, in several senses. First, it is a great work, intrinsically. Secondly, Schubert had spoken all his short life of the " great " symphony which he was going to write, or on which he was engaged; and this may fairly be held to be the final outcome of those aspirations. And thirdly, it must be distinguished from an earlier and slighter C major symphony of Schubert's, the Sixth; though not from that one described in an earlier numeration of Schubert's symphonies as No. 7, which was in fact the present work.

The revised enumeration is historically important in that it places this Symphony at the climax of the composer's symphonic output, where it clearly belongs. Chronologically there had been the first five symphonies, which occasion no confusion; No. 6, the lesser C major; the real No. 7, in E, existing only in a sketch form subsequently completed in versions by J. F. Barnett and Weingartner; No. 8 in B minor, the Unfinished; the Gastein, which has disappeared without trace, unless the Grand Duo in C for piano duet is a version of it—the work clearly existed, or perhaps exists, and one wishes that " No. 9 " could have been reserved for it; and a climax for the series, in size and scope, in the present No. 9 in C major dating from early 1828, the last year of Schubert's life.

Of their own music, composers are normally interested only in the work on which they are at that moment engaged, and perhaps in any earlier works that they happen not to have heard, physically, themselves. If Schubert had any of that latter interest, he must have been as frustrated as many contemporary composers; countless works lay unperformed in piles (" and some old music, value 15s. " wrote probate valuers who would soon be put out of business by the Estate Duty Office to-day), and their gradual rescue from oblivion awaited a later generation's interest. The Unfinished Symphony waited forty-two years for discovery and performance; this Great C major only ten, when Schumann discovered it and sent it to Mendelssohn, who immediately performed it in Leipzig. A few years later he tried, too, to perform it in London; but the orchestral strings resented the demand the music made on their willingness to continue accompanying figures for unconscionably long stretches, and the work was withdrawn with mutual bad feeling. But if it was too much for the London Philharmonic of those days, it was not for Prince Albert, who promptly performed it at Windsor with the royal domestic orchestra. Curiously, the London players had a Viennese precedent; the Musikverein there had tried the Symphony over even during Schubert's lifetime, but had rejected it for performance on the grounds of its length and difficulty.

Long it certainly is, matched in previous symphonies only by the Beethoven Ninth of five years earlier. But whereas Beethoven's symphonic writing was dominated by his intellectual force, that of Schubert was largely an extension of his song-style; where, in earlier symphonies, he had allowed his immense respect for the senior and towering figure of Beethoven to induce him to attempt the forceful style in his own music, the result had not been too happy. But there is room in music for many styles, and Schubert's natural lyricism—he was, after all, not merely a resident but also a native of Vienna—was developing in the last years of his life a melancholy, if not a tragic, vein and an incipient feeling for drama, that could have led in time to a wonderful flowering of his instrumental music.

It did in fact lead to this Ninth Symphony, where the lyrical impulse is sustained through what Schuman called its " heavenly length ", and is undeniably the victor whenever it comes into conflict with classical precedent.

A slow introduction prefaces the first movement. The two horns unite to announce unaccompanied a theme of which the rising thirds of the first, and also of the second bar, recur throughout the work; and German romanticism is at the same time announced as clearly as it had been two years before at the same place, on the same instrument, and curiously enough with almost the same phrase in Weber's Oberon.

The introduction leads straight into an expansive allegro; the shape is of course sonata-form, with the unorthodoxy of key-relationship within that form that was common with Schubert—how else could his habit of sudden modulation be accommodated? —and with an unusual emphasis of the second subject, whose twitterings provide an unexpected background to a soft trombone reference to the opening rising thirds. The same phrase ends the development, and again provides an apotheosis for the end of the movement's coda.

The slow movement consists of the double alternation of melancholy but mobile music, having two themes, minor and major, both initiated by the oboe, with smoother sections based on a single theme. There is a constant tendency towards the fourfold repetition of a note; perhaps the Finale was already in Schubert's mind.

The Scherzo is fully developed in that it is a miniature replica of full sonata-form, a procedure borrowed from that of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony; the Trio is altogether simpler—the ländler of the Austrian countryside brought into town.

The Finale has an impetus that is sustained in an altogether unusual degree for Schubert. Indeed, the first subject consists of little other than a rhythmic impulse; but it expands into a sonata-form movement of 1,155 bars (not counting the somewhat optimistically marked repeat), with the noticeable assistance of the second subject. In the original draft Schubert sketched the beginning of a fugue here, but soon dropped the idea in favour of a bewitching tune that derives from the four repeated notes of the slow movement; its accompaniment is enlivened by the composer's discovery of the motive power of pizzicato basses moving up and down arpeggios a hundred years before his time.

Above all, the Symphony makes it clear that Schubert would have discovered much else, given the time and the opportunity. His personal brand of lyricism was just beginning to expand in its own fashion to include what of Beethoven's music, and what of the romantics, it found useful. It would have gone on, one may surmise, to include a lot more, and not entirely of music that was in the event written quite adequately by other composers.

MALCOLM MACDONALD

Music quotations from the Bartók Concerto by kind permission of Messrs Boosey & Hawkes Ltd.

All programme notes are copyright by their authors

THE CONCERT ENDS AT ABOUT 10.05 P.M.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Music Director: CHARLES MÜNCH

Associate Conductor: RICHARD BURGIN

Violins

Richard Burgin (Concert-master)
Alfred Krips
George Zazofsky
Rolland Tapley
Norbert Lauga
Vladimir Resnikoff
Harry Dickson
Gottfried Wilfinger
Einar Hansen
Joseph Leibovici
Emil Kornsand
Roger Shermont
Minot Beale
Herman Silberman
Stanley Benson
Leo Panasevich
Sheldon Rotenberg
Fredy Ostrovsky
Clarence Knudson
Pierre Mayer
Manuel Zung
Samuel Diamond
Victor Manusevitch
James Nagy
Melvin Bryant
Lloyd Stonestreet
Saverio Messina
William Waterhouse
William Marshall
Leonard Moss
Jesse Ceci
Noah Bielski
Alfred Schneider
Joseph Silverstein

Violas

Joseph de Pasquale
Jean Cauhapé
Eugen Lehner
Albert Bernard
George Humphrey
Jerome Lipson
Robert Karol
Reuben Green
Bernard Kadinoff
Vincent Mauricci
John Fiasca
Earl Hedberg

'Cellos

Samuel Mayes
Alfred Zighera
Jacobus Langendoen
Mischa Nieland
Karl Zeise
Josef Zimbler
Bernard Parronchi
Leon Marjollet
Martin Hoherman
Louis Berger
Richard Kapuscinski
Robert Ripley

Basses

Georges Moleux
Gaston Dufresne
Ludwig Juht
Irving Frankel
Henry Freeman
Henry Portnoi
Henri Girard
John Barwicki

Flutes

Doriot Anthony Dwyer
James Pappoutsakis
Phillip Kaplan

Piccolo

George Madsen

Oboes

Ralph Gomberg
Jean Devergie
John Holmes

English Horn

Louis Speyer

Clarinets

Gino Cioffi
Manuel Valerio

E-Flat Clarinet

Pasquale Cardillo

Bass Clarinet

Rosario Mazzeo

Bassoons

Sherman Walt
Ernst Panenka
Theodore Brewster

Contra-Bassoon

Richard Plaster

Horns

James Stagliano
Charles Yancich
Harry Shapiro
Harold Meek
Paul Keaney
Osbourne McConathy

Trumpets

Roger Voisin
Marcel Lafosse
Armando Ghitalla
Gerard Goguen

Trombones

William Gibson
William Moyer
Kauko Kahila
Josef Orosz

Tuba

K. Vinal Smith

Harps

Bernard Zighera
Olivia Luetcke

Timpani

Everett Firth
Harold Faberman

Percussion

Charles Smith
Harold Thompson
Arthur Press

Piano

Bernard Zighera

Librarian

Leslie Rogers

Assistant Librarian

Victor Alpert

The Souvenir Programme is now on sale at the Festival Office and at booksellers at the price of 3s. 6d.

Long Play Records by

PIERRE MONTEUX

conducting the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra

Symphonie fantastique — Berlioz ALP 1137

"As an interpreter of French music, the veteran Pierre Monteux is unsurpassed, and his performance of Berlioz's Symphonie fantastique with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra is wonderfully vivid and exhibits the varying moods and colours of the work to the full."
LONDON MUSICAL EVENTS

Symphony in D Minor — Franck ALP 1019

"... a very fine performance, vividly contrasting the vigour of the first and third movements with the spiritual delicacy of the middle movement. The recording is excellent."
LONDON MUSICAL EVENTS

Price inc. tax 39/7½d each

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

LONG PLAY 33⅓ R.P.M. RECORDS

THE GRAMOPHONE CO. LTD. (RECORD DIVISION) 8-11 GT. CASTLE STREET, LONDON, W.1

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE BOSTON SYM

Music Director :

Associate Conductor

Violins
Richard Burgin (Concert-master)
Alfred Krips
George Zazofsky
Rolland Tapley
Norbert Lauga
Vladimir Resnikoff
Harry Dickson
Gottfried Wilfinger
Einar Hansen
Joseph Leibovici
Emil Kornsand
Roger Shermont
Minot Beale
Herman Silberman
Stanley Benson
Leo Panasevich
Sheldon Rotenberg
Fredy Ostrovsky
Clarence Knudson
Pierre Mayer
Manuel Zung
Samuel Diamond
Victor Manusevitch
James Nagy
Melvin Bryant
Lloyd Stonestreet
Saverio Messina
William Waterhouse
William Marshall
Leonard Moss
Jesse Ceci
Noah Bielski
Alfred Schneider
Joseph Silverstein

Violas
Joseph de Pasquale
Jean Cauhapé
Eugen Lehner
Albert Bernard
George Humphrey
Jerome Lipson
Robert Karol
Reuben Green
Bernard Kadinoff
Vincent Mauricci
John Fiasca
Earl Hedberg

'Cellos
Samuel Mayes
Alfred Zighera
Jacobus Langendoen
Mischa Nieland
Karl Zeise
Josef Zimbler
Bernard Parronchi
Leon Marjollet
Martin Hoherman
Louis Berger
Richard Kapuscinski
Robert Ripley

Basses
Georges Molet
Gaston Dufres
Ludwig Juht
Irving Frankel
Henry Freeman
Henry Portnoi
Henri Girard
John Barwicki

Flutes
Doriot Anthony
James Pappoutsa
Phillip Kaplan

Piccolo
George Madsen

Oboes
Ralph Gomberg
Jean Devergie
John Holmes

English Horn
Louis Speyer

Clarinets
Gino Cioffi
Manuel Valerio

E-Flat Clarinet
Pasquale Cardillo

Bass Clarinet
Rosario Mazzeo

Bassoons
Sherman Walt
Ernst Panenka
Theodore Brewster

The Souvenir Programme is now on sale and at booksellers at the price

8

GROVE'S

. OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
ELIZABETH THE QUEEN MOTHER

DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICI

nburgh

nal Festival

The nine volumes of the new great 5th Edition (Cloth now obtainable separate

These nine handsome volumes contain o
8,000 pages and many hundreds of illustratio with the Scottish Committee of f Great Britain, the British Council

ration of the City of Edinburgh

VOL. I. A FOSSA, Johannes to BYZANTINE M
1078 pages)
VOL. II. ÇA IRA to EZIO (Opera) (996 pages)
VOL. III. F.R.C.O. to GYTHORNE (864 pages)
VOL. IV. HAACK, Friedrich to KYRIE (881 pag
VOL. V. LA BARRE, Michel de to M
WOYCIECHOWSKA, Leokadia (104
VOL. VI. NABOKOV, Nikolay to QUTB AL-DÍN
(1040 pages)
VOL. VII. RAABE, Peter to SOWIŃSKI, Wojciec
VOL. VIII. SPANDARIUS to VIOTTI, Giovanni
pages)
VOL. IX. VIRCHI, Paolo to ŻYWNY, Wojciech
(604 pages)

9 volumes at £4 net e

(The complete set in a box, £36

We shall be pleased to forward prospectus on app

SHER HALL
28th August 1956, at 8 p.m.

MACMILLAN & CO.
St. Martin's Street, London,

GEO. STEWART & CO. LTD., Printers, EDINBU

[54]

Music from the Ballet

LA PÉRI

Poème dansé — Dukas

(with Istar — Symphonic Variations;
Fervaal — Introduction, Act 1 — d'Indy)

Anatole Fistoulari

conducting the

Westminster Symphony Orchestra

PMC1011

The new one-act ballet "La Péri"
was first performed at Covent Garden
early this year, when the leading rôles were danced by Margot Fonteyn
and Michael Somes;
the choreography of the ballet is by Frederick Ashton.

PARLOPHONE

33⅓ r.p.m. Long Playing Record

THE PARLOPHONE COMPANY LTD. RECORD DIVISION 8-11 GT. CASTLE ST. LONDON W.1

USHER HALL

Tuesday, 28th August 1956
at 8 p.m.

The
Boston Symphony Orchestra

Conductor

CHARLES MÜNCH

Soloist

ISAAC STERN (violin)

Founded seventy-five years ago, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had a distinguished history under the direction of, amongst others, George Henschel, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitzky. This, its first visit to the Edinburgh Festival, can be justly regarded as a notable occasion.

Charles Münch became the Orchestra's conductor in 1949. He already had an illustrious career behind him at the head of a number of French orchestras, while in 1948 he had toured America with the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Française. Since his appointment he has added to the already wide prestige of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Although actually born in Russia, Isaac Stern was taken to America before he was a year old, and has received all his musical education there. He made his first appearance in his early 'teens in San Francisco, and at the age of twenty-three was already being hailed throughout the United States as a master player. He has since toured very extensively in most parts of the world and made a large number of recordings; this is his third Edinburgh Festival.

As this concert is being broadcast, patrons are requested kindly to return to their seats at the warning bell

PROGRAMME

SYMPHONIC ODE (1929); Revised 1955

Copland (b. 1900)

(First performance in Europe)

COPLAND's music has its individual style and unmistakable character, but at the same time shows great versatility. In earlier works such as " Music for the Theatre ", he was one of the first to become absorbed in the possibilities of jazz and the use of the complex rhythms it suggested. He has been called " functional " because of his natural facility in adapting music to various mediums; ballet, opera, films, the stage. Music like El Salon Mexico and Danzon Cubano has reflected his immediate surroundings. In ballets such as Rodeo, Billy the Kid and Appalachian Spring he has caught a folk flavour. A Lincoln Portrait and the opera The Tender Land have subtly captured their early American period. In Hollywood he has lifted the role of film music far above its usual subordinate function of background. His chamber music shows on the other hand a distinct taste for the " absolute " category.

The Symphonic Ode was composed by commission of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation for the Orchestra's 75th anniversary and is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitsky. This work is a revision made in 1955 of a work by the same title which Copland wrote in 1928-29 for this Orchestra's 50th anniversary season.

When performed in its original form, Mr Copland provided for the programme a description of the music and his intent. He disclaimed at that time any " literary " idea in connection with his piece and yet it may now surely be said that it bears for him associations with its first conductor, who was close to him for many years as they worked together in the school at Tanglewood and as his new works appeared from time to time and were performed.

The composer explained in 1932:—

" It is not an Ode to anything other than the particular spirit to be found in the music itself. What that particular spirit is, is not for me to say. In another connection, André Gide has well expressed my meaning: ' Before explaining my book to others, I wait for them to explain it to me. To wish to explain it first would be to restrain its meaning prematurely, because even if we know what we wish to say, we cannot know if we have said only that. And what interests me especially is what I have put into my book without my own knowledge—that part of the unconscious that I should like to name " la part de Dieu ".'

" The musical origin of the Ode is a two-measure phrase to be found in my Nocturne for violin and piano (1926). This phrase, stated in the violin piece without development, seemed rich in possibilities for expansion. In various guises, it forms the principal thematic material of the Ode. As a whole, the work is cast in five-sectional form, which can roughly be represented as A-B-C-B-D. Sections A, C and D are in slow tempo, Sections B in fast tempo. The massive opening section (A) gradually acquires momentum and breaks up into the ' feathery brightness ' of the Allegro (B), which is followed by (C), a more lyrical treatment of the first section's material. The repetition of the Allegro section (B) is only approximate. It moves imperceptibly into Section D, which combines A and B to form a coda in the monumental mood of the opening."

Mr Copland informs us that " the overall shape and character of the Ode has remained unaltered ". The size of the orchestra has been slightly reduced, " mainly for practical reasons ". The rhythmic beat is quite irregular, and the bars have been notated differently in order to " simplify performance problems ". A cut in the end of the slow section (C) has been restored. " The opening and closing sections of the original were written quite high for the brass and strings. These have been lowered somewhat with concomitant re-adjustments in the tonality scheme." Certain parts have been filled out with fuller textures. " Only at one point were completely new measures substituted for those of the original. These occur at the start of the 7/4 section that leads to the apotheosis of the end."

JOHN N. BURK

M

CONCERTO for Violin and Orchestra, in D major, Op. 61

Beethoven
(1770–1827)

Allegro ma non troppo
Larghetto
Allegro

Soloist : ISAAC STERN

IT was in the same year (1806) as the Fourth Symphony, the third Leonora Overture and the Rasoumovsky String Quartets that Beethoven wrote the Violin Concerto; hurriedly it is thought, in order to have the work ready for a concert given by a player named Clement in Vienna. The Concerto made little impression, at least of a favourable nature. Small wonder, since the conditions under which it was displayed were so inimical: lack of adequate rehearsal, the music itself strange and unprepossessing then, a player, primarily a singer virtuoso with the mentality of a performer capable of presenting the first movement in the first half of the programme, the second and third after the interval and, in between, certain trick pieces of his own manufacture.

Four drum beats start the work. They sound insignificant, having no appreciable weight, colour or tone; they merely fill discreetly a preparatory bar. But in this movement where the lyric and the dramatic are strongly and often startingly confronted, those four repeated notes are to have great significance.

After the orchestra has given out the chief themes on which the movement is founded, the violin entering with a spreading, cadenza-like passage, begins its own version of this material and there ensues one of the most exhilarating contests of endurance and wit in all the literature of this type of music where a solo instrument is pitted against an orchestra.

Now there follows a short moderately slow movement. It is a leisurely conversation between two profoundly sensitive and intelligent protagonists. The song with which the orchestra begins has an exquisite afterthought from which grow the violin's initial phrases. Eventually that instrument has its own special song, to which the orchestra listens in hushed attention.

Ex. 1

Without a pause the solo instrument breaks into the ingenuous rondo theme, the chief subject of discussion in the last movement. But what at first seems to be artless is found, as the movement progresses, to offer opportunities for artifice and wit (an instance, the only two pizzicato notes for the solo violin), for everyday discussion between the two parties, and for the finest poetry, as in the broad minor melody. There is finally a coda summing up all these qualities and characteristics, the last opportunity the Concerto gives us to hear Beethoven's mind working and to make up our own.

Ex. 2

SCOTT GODDARD

INTERVAL

SYMPHONY No. 2 in C major, Op. 61

Schumann
(1810–1856)

Sostenuto assai: Allegro, ma non troppo
Scherzo; Allegro vivace
Adagio espressivo
Allegro molto vivace

M

SCHUMANN began his career as a composer in 1830 when at the age of twenty, while still a law student, he commenced his period of study as a pianist with Wieck. For ten years he composed enormous quantities of superlative and highly original piano music, but nothing whatever in any other genre. In 1840 he married Clara Wieck and poured out the great mass of his songs in a transport of sheer joy. In 1841 he turned to the orchestra and produced three symphonic works; in 1842 he embarked on a spate of chamber music. He then had a nervous breakdown. Twelve months later a large choral work appeared, and the year 1844 saw the composer once again prostrate with a serious collapse.

There is no doubt whatever that Schumann's freshest and most spontaneous work was written during the years up to and including 1840. This is in no way to disparage the influence of Clara upon him; they were as united a couple as the world has yet seen. The only possible fault that can be laid at Clara's door is that in her desire to spur Schumann on to new triumphs she was inclined to make him aim higher and seek success in larger mediums than his natural bent directed him. His works for the piano and his songs are so light and original in texture that it is incredible to compare them with the uninspired, muddy and often ill-executed works of his last years. The true cause of this terrible collapse of his genius can be found in the dreadful illness which gradually unhinged his mind. That is why in the midst of his worst period, occasional glimpses of first-class musical thought appear, such as the Manfred music and most of the " Rhenish " Symphony, these being composed during intervals of convalescence.

But since the best of Schumann's later music was written for the orchestra, it is particularly tragic that even that often suffers from his inability to separate his work of creation from the memory of his short but dreadful experiences as a conductor. For, with the arrival of children, and therewith the necessity of earning substantially and regularly, he was ill-advised enough, especially after a nervous breakdown, to accept posts as conductor in Dresden and later Düsseldorf. This proved disastrous both to his health and to his works, for he was entirely unable to control an orchestra and, since thinking in terms of orchestral technique was always strange to him, he soon fell into the habit of rendering his scores foolproof through " doubling ". A particularly unfortunate example of this is the D minor Symphony No. 4, which, although originally written in 1841 as No. 2 was held back, thoroughly revised and re-scored, and finally published in its new and " safe " guise ten years later.

The re-numbering of the D minor Symphony of course means that the works known as Nos. 2 and 3 are in fact the third and fourth in order of composition. The C major Symphony, published as No. 2, was written during 1845-46, that is, just after the first serious nervous breakdown, and during Schumann's stay at Dresden. Since it also followed immediately upon a period of study devoted to the contrapuntal forms such as Fugue, it is understandable that in this Symphony Schumann replaces the gay romanticism of the " Spring " Symphony No. 1 by a sterner symphonic style and a new interest in the chorale. This latter is evident already in the introduction, where the brass immediately announces a solemn motif against a meandering string counterpoint:

Ex. 1

It is interesting to note that whereas to-day this Symphony is the least played of Schumann's four, Dannreuther, in the Oxford

History of Music, selects it as " the high-water mark of Schumann's symphonic output " and quotes in full score no less than eighteen of the opening bars. As the tempo quickens, fragments of the Allegro first subject appear, and soon the movement is in full swing. Dannreuther is certainly right when he refers to the conciseness of form peculiar to this Symphony. The present exposition continues the process begun in the D minor Symphony, in which the first subject dominates the second. In fact the latter could almost be described as the temporary absence of the former, although the apparently transitional figure later acquires considerable importance.

Ex. 2

Ex. 3

The development is on slightly more expansive lines and takes especial notice of the contrapuntal material of the introduction. The reprise is regular, but the coda raises the music to an unexpectedly dramatic climax in the midst of which the Chorale theme is heard, this time in triumphant tones.

The Scherzo is considerably influenced by Mendelssohn, and this may have been deliberate since Schumann was indebted to that composer for the first performances of both this and the B flat Symphonies. Mendelssohn is known also to have given Schumann some advice on the scoring of this movement, such as the occasional total omission of strings in the first trio. The sharp antiphony between the unalloyed colours of wood-wind and strings is certainly very effective after the perpetuum mobile string writing of the Scherzo. It is fascinating to discover an echo from the Schubert " Great C major " Symphony in this first trio, since Schumann was instrumental in bringing that work to light:

Ex. 4

The Scherzo returns and is followed, as in the B flat Symphony, by a second trio. This is again somewhat hymn-like in character and is particularly noteworthy for its contrapuntal work. It soon leads, however, to the final return of the Scherzo which ends splendidly with a brilliant coda during which Example 1 in its capacity as motto-theme makes a brief re-appearance.

The Adagio gives us a wistful glimpse of the old Schumann, and is one of those delicately romantic movements of which he remained a master to the end. The melody pervading the movement is so typical as to be strongly reminiscent of a hundred other such themes of its composer, but it is none the less welcome on that account, and its treatment on high strings dissolving into trills is one of Schumann's happiest orchestral ideas.

Ex. 5

With the finale Schumann aimed at the sky and failed to achieve his vision. The rhythm of the jubilant first subject is unfortunately inclined to become tiresome:

Ex. 6

On the other hand, Schumann's use of the theme from the Adagio as second subject is a delightful surprise and springs from his experiments in cyclic form, which date once again from the D minor Symphony. Here the melody is accompanied by a light rhythmic figure which seems also to bear a certain allegiance to Schubert's masterpiece:

Ex. 7

It would certainly have been surprising if so far-reaching a discovery had not had its repercussions on so impressionable a mind as Schumann's.

The work of compression is cleverly carried on in this finale, the development being combined with the reprise. The rising scale of the opening bar of the movement undergoes considerable discussion in combination with the triplet figure. Example 7, and the whole forms the background to a new series of chorale-like statements. These grow in importance until, in the coda, they dominate the music entirely:

Ex. 8

The noble brass motto theme, Example 1, now re-enters for the last time, cautiously at first, but as it finds its feet it helps to direct the music into ever more majestic circles, until the exultant closing bars are reached.

NORMAN DEL MAR

All programme notes are copyright by their authors

THE CONCERT ENDS AT ABOUT 9.50 P.M.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Music Director: CHARLES MÜNCH

Associate Conductor: RICHARD BURGIN

Violins
Richard Burgin (Concert-master)
Alfred Krips
George Zazofsky
Rolland Tapley
Norbert Lauga
Vladimir Resnikoff
Harry Dickson
Gottfried Wilfinger
Einar Hansen
Joseph Leibovici
Emil Kornsand
Roger Shermont
Minot Beale
Herman Silberman
Stanley Benson
Leo Panasevich
Sheldon Rotenberg
Fredy Ostrovsky
Clarence Knudson
Pierre Mayer
Manuel Zung
Samuel Diamond
Victor Manusevitch
James Nagy
Melvin Bryant
Lloyd Stonestreet
Saverio Messina
William Waterhouse
William Marshall
Leonard Moss
Jesse Ceci
Noah Bielski
Alfred Schneider
Joseph Silverstein

Violas
Joseph de Pasquale
Jean Cauhape
Eugen Lehner
Albert Bernard
George Humphrey
Jerome Lipson
Robert Karol
Reuben Green
Bernard Kadinoff
Vincent Mauricci
John Fiasca
Earl Hedberg

'Cellos
Samuel Mayes
Alfred Zighera
Jacobus Langendoen
Mischa Nieland
Karl Zeise
Josef Zimbler
Bernard Parronchi
Leon Marjollet
Martin Hoherman
Louis Berger
Riehard Kapuscinski
Robert Ripley

Basses
Georges Moleux
Gaston Dufresne
Ludwig Juht
Irving Frankel
Henry Freeman
Henry Portnoi
Henri Girard
John Barwicki

Flutes
Doriot Anthony Dwyer
James Pappoutsakis
Phillip Kaplan

Piccolo
George Madsen

Oboes
Ralph Gomberg
Jean Devergie
John Holmes

English Horn
Louis Speyer

Clarinets
Gino Cioffi
Manuel Valerio

E-Flat Clarinet
Pasquale Cardillo

Bass Clarinet
Rosario Mazzeo

Bassoons
Sherman Walt
Ernst Panenka
Theodore Brewster

Contra-Bassoon
Richard Plaster

Horns
James Stagliano
Charles Yancich
Harry Shapiro
Harold Meek
Paul Keaney
Osbourne McConathy

Trumpets
Roger Voisin
Marcel Lafosse
Armando Ghitalla
Gerard Goguen

Trombones
William Gibson
William Moyer
Kauko Kahila
Josef Orosz

Tuba
K. Vinal Smith

Harps
Bernard Zighera
Olivia Luetcke

Timpani
Everett Firth
Harold Faberman

Percussion
Charles Smith
Harold Thompson
Arthur Press

Piano
Bernard Zighera

Librarian
Leslie Rogers

Assistant Librarian
Victor Alpert

The Souvenir Programme is now on sale at the Festival Office and at booksellers at the price of 3s. 6d.

[54]

Long Play Records by

CHARLES MUNCH

conducting the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Symphony No. 1 in B Flat ("Spring") — Schumann
ALP 1203

Symphony No. 2 in B Flat — Schubert
Symphony No. 104 in D ("London") — Haydn
ALP 1061

Rapsodie espagnole; La Valse — Ravel
Overtures: La Princesse jaune — Saint-Saëns
Béatrice et Bénédict — Berlioz
Le Roi d'Ys — Lalo ALP 1245

Don Quixote — Richard Strauss
with Gregor Piatigorsky ('Cello), Richard Burgin (Violin), and Joseph De Pasquale (Viola) ALP 1211

Charles Munch also conducts performances of Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust" (ALP 1225-7) and Dramatic Symphony, "Roméo et Juliette" (ALP 1179-80)

Prices inc. tax: 39 7½d each

Details of further recordings will be found in the "His Master's Voice" Catalogue.

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"
LONG PLAY 33⅓ R.P.M. RECORDS

THE GRAMOPHONE CO. LTD. (RECORD DIVISION) 8-11 GT. CASTLE STREET, LONDON, W.1

INFORMATION OBSCURED

records exclusively for PHILIPS

ISAAC STERN

one of the world's greatest violinists

GE OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
EN ELIZABETH THE QUEEN MOTHER

inburgh
onal Festival

with the Scottish Committee of
f Great Britain, the British Council
ration of the City of Edinburgh

BACH ABL 301
Partita in E mi
Sonata in G mi
Sonata No. 3 in with Alexande

BRAHMS AB
Violin Concer
with the Roya
Orchestra co
SIR THOMA

BRAHMS A
Violin Sona
Frei Aber E with Alexa

HER HALL
9th August 1956, at 8 p.m.

PHILIPS Minigroo

Philips Electrical Limited, Gramophone Records Divisi
Place, London, W.2
Philips are world-renowned makers of Radiograms, Re
Equipment incorporating the famous Philips 'Feathertwe

GEO. STEWART & CO. LTD., Printers, E

[54]

An outstanding Long Playing Recording of

DIE ZAUBERFLÖTE

Mozart

Queen of the Night	WILMA LIPP
Tamino	ANTON DERMOTA
First Lady	SENA JURINAC
Second Lady	FRIEDL RIEGER
Third Lady	ELSE SCHÜRHOFF
Papageno	ERICH KUNZ
Monostatos	PETER KLEIN
Pamina	IRMGARD SEEFRIED
First Youth	HERMINE STEINMASSL
Second Youth	ELEONORE DÖRPINGHANS
Third Youth	ANNELIES STUCKL
First Priest	ERICH MAJKUT
Second Priest	HARALD PROGLHOFF
Sarastro	LUDWIG WEBER
Speaker	GEORGE LONDON
Papagena	EMMY LOOSE
Armed Man	LJUBOMIR PANTSCHEFF

VIENNA PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

and

SINGVEREIN DER GESELLSCHAFT DER MUSIKFREUNDE IM WIEN

conducted by

Herbert von Karajan

33CX1013-5

COLUMBIA

33⅓ r.p.m. Long Playing Records

COLUMBIA GRAPHOPHONE CO. LTD., RECORD DIVISION, 8-11 GT. CASTLE ST., LONDON, W.1

USHER HALL

Wednesday, 29th August 1956
at 8 p.m.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Conductor
PIERRE MONTEUX

Soloist
ROBERT CASADESUS (pianoforte)

Founded seventy-five years ago the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had a distinguished history under the direction of, amongst others, George Henschel, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitzky. This, its first visit to the Edinburgh Festival, can be justly regarded as a notable occasion.

Pierre Monteux began his career as a violin player. From 1912 he conducted Diaghilev's Ballet Russe and he became conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House in 1917. He was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1919-24. In the ten years following he was a regular conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw and became conductor of the San Francisco Orchestra in 1935, a position from which he has now retired. He shared with Mr Münch the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's European tour in May 1952 and the transcontinental tour in May 1953.

A member of a famous family of musicians, Robert Casadesus was born in Paris and studied at the Conservatoire there. In 1934 he became head of the piano department at the American Conservatory at Fontainebleau, and the following year appeared for the first time in the United States, where he is now one of the most admired pianists of the day. On his last visit to the Edinburgh Festival in 1951 he played with the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of New York.

As this concert is being broadcast, patrons are requested kindly to return to their seats at the warning bell

PROGRAMME

FESTIVAL OVERTURE

Isadore Freed
(b. 1900)

ISADORE FREED has spent the greater part of his life in Philadelphia. He was educated at the Philadelphia Conservatory of Music and at the University of Pennsylvania, studying composition privately with Ernest Bloch. He later joined the faculty of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. From 1929 to 1933 he lived in Paris and there studied with Vincent d'Indy. Returning to the United States, he taught at Temple University. Since 1945 he has been the Chairman of the Composition and Theory Departments at Hartt College of Music in Hartford, Connecticut. His compositions include two symphonies, two operas, four string quartets, choral works and chamber music.

Of his Overture, composed in 1944, Isadore Freed writes:—"This is music of festive mood based on five distinct bits of thematic material. The Overture begins with a slow motive in the brass (maestoso), which serves as an introduction to the actual first theme of the work. This enters allegro moderato e giubiloso. Later is heard the third idea, which is actually derived from the allegro moderato theme. This enters sempre giubiloso, but takes on a soft and rather mysterious character. After some development of this material a fourth theme enters con nobilita, to be repeated con fervore. The fifth theme contrasts with all of these, as it is calma e cantando in its character. These five themes and their development furnish the entire material upon which the whole work is built."

JOHN N. BURK

SYMPHONY No. 3 in F major, Op. 90

Brahms
(1833-1897)

Allegro con brio
Andante
Poco allegretto
Allegro

BRAHMS was not really, basically, a classicist so much as a romanticist with sense of values enough to spend his life searching for ways and means of expressing the romantic spirit on a larger scale, and at a greater depth of emotion, than that which appeared adequate to some of the earlier romanticists. In the process he took over many of the classical forms, altering them where required for his purpose; and with a due reverence for the status of the symphony he spent two-thirds of his life preparing for his first essays in that field, which date from 1875. He was more than ready, and so there is no such thing as an immature Brahms symphony; and as was his lifelong habit with many categories of works, he wrote two for good measure. Then, among major orchestral works, the Violin and B Flat Piano Concertos; and in 1882 the Third Symphony was begun. It was finished the following year, during what was supposed to be a summer holiday at Wiesbaden, on the Rhine; if the spas of Europe now tend to live in their past, that past certainly contributed much to music. Again Brahms's fondness for pairing operated; with the first performance of the Third out of the way—Hans Richter gave it in Vienna in December—the very next year saw the Fourth Symphony begun.

The Third announces immediately a motto—F, A, F—which is to dominate the first movement, and is also to some extent to play its part in unifying the whole Symphony:

Ex.

"Frei aber froh" had been a motto in their youth both to Brahms and to Joachim; if now an objector claim that A flat is not A, a translation of the correct note into German merely increases the degree of happiness sought. The flatness of the A has a more important bearing on the Symphony by pulling the feel of the first movement somewhat towards F minor. The second movement is in C major; the third C minor; and the fourth definitely F minor, resolving into F major for its coda—a scheme which induces only a reluctant agreement to the whole Symphony's claim to be in F major. The point, needless to say, has no bearing on the quality of the music.

This is declared with no uncertainty at the outset; a magnificent sweeping tune in the strings, over the motto in the bass, is extended more lyrically, and then veers round to A for the second subject proper, whose presentation by the clarinet may possibly be one of the first-fruits of Brahms's acquaintance with Mühlfeld, whom he had just met. The exposition is not allowed to close without further references to the motto, which plays its full part in the development; after a section based at some length on (unusually) the second subject, the horn displays the motto clearly in a passage which called forth particular ecstasy from Clara Schumann, always one of Brahms's most fervent admirers. A reference to the first subject leads to the recapitulation, in turn followed by a coda in which the sweep of this subject is given even fuller play than elsewhere.

The Andante opens simply and attractively in different shades of grey; its second subject—clarinet and bassoon in octaves—plays a more important part in the finale than here, though its characteristic rhythm—antiphonal pairs of crotchets—is used to display harmonies that were daring in their day, and are moving still. A brief development of the first subject is followed by a recapitulation that manages to exclude the theme of the second, while referring to its rhythm; the final coda will be supposed by modern children, wrongly, to have been composed by Humperdinck.

Brahms had many virtues with which the ability to write a scherzo would have been inconsistent. He seldom tried, and doesn't here; the characteristic marking of poco allegretto introduces a simple movement that is lent distinction by the quality of its constituents, and by the differing light shed on them by the varied scoring of their successive appearances.

With the finale, fury and energy are quickly unleashed; the second four bars contain material subsequently as important as the first four. Very soon the second subject of the Andante, modified, occurs in A flat, the orthodox key of the second subject of an F minor movement; but a quick return to the tonic and its fury leads us to think that the next event, triplets on horn and 'cello in C major, would qualify as the second subject in a formal analysis. Energy and modulation continue and merge into a development section which uses the "false" second subject to build up a massive climax with expectations of an F major recapitulation; but in fact a short minor-key section of the first subject prefaces the "real" second subject in F minor, and a transposition of the vigorous bridge passage leads to a surprising and wholly moving coda. In place of a massive onslaught Brahms allows muted violas to lead with a quiet B minor version of the first subject into F major for the placid conclusion; final references to the motto, and even to the first subject of the first movement, round off the work.

MALCOLM MACDONALD

INTERVAL

SYMPHONIC VARIATIONS for Piano and Orchestra

César Franck
(1822-1890)

Soloist: ROBERT CASADESUS

IN 1885, the year of the Symphonic Variations, to play a French piano concerto meant to play Saint-Saëns; a situation that Franck felt impelled to rectify. But to better those technically accomplished works in their own field would indeed have been difficult, and to write a heavily dramatic virtuoso piece would have been to admit the precedence of the Germans, of Liszt, and of Tschaikovsky. So Franck decided to fulfil his avowed aim of writing serious piano music by turning to some extent away from his contemporaries to the eighteenth century for inspiration; it resulted in the Prelude, Choral and Fugue, and the Prelude, Aria and Finale for the independent soloist, and the Symphonic Variations for the soloist with orchestra.

The relationship to the eighteenth century, in the case of this work, is limited to a community of outlook on the proper function of a concerto soloist: Franck, like Mozart, considered the man and his instrument to be, with the orchestra, the vehicles of expression on which the music rode, whereas his contemporaries most often considered the music, and the orchestra, to be the vehicles on which the soloist should ride. In objecting to this Franck and Mozart have been very far from alone; and in conscious revolt against the dominance of the soloist generations of composers have styled their concertos sinfonie concertanti, or, when remotely possible, symphonic variations.

In the case of Franck's music it was remotely possible, and this title was used—but only at the expense of being somewhat misleading. For any attempt at analysis of the result in terms of a set of variations must break down at some point, precisely where depending on the ingenuity, and the determination, of the analyst. Very considerably more readily may the work be considered a concerto in miniature, in which a small set of variations forms an incidental section.

More precisely, the second section. The first is of an introductory nature: the orchestra immediately announces one of Franck's themes, to which the piano responds with a second, and the two partners continue with a preliminary discussion of these, occasionally referring in advance to the third theme. This is more clearly announced by the solo piano some few minutes into the work, when it is immediately followed by the comparatively formal, though short, set of real variations. The last of these is given to the orchestral 'cellos, accompanied by the piano; it is slow and beautiful, and is extended to form something of an abbreviated slow movement before a trill for the piano introduces the last section of the work: a finale, gay indeed for Franck, with a strong resemblance to classical sonata form but none whatever to a set of variations. It does, however, use all three of the work's principal themes, and most successfully rounds off a work in which Franck certainly fulfilled his original intention of writing serious and enjoyable concertante piano music. That he only partially fulfilled the implications of his chosen title is of very secondary importance.

MALCOLM MACDONALD

CONCERTO for the Left Hand, for Piano and Orchestra

Ravel
(1875-1937)

Lento—Andante—Allegro—Lento—Allegro

Soloist: ROBERT CASADESUS

KEYBOARD instruments were invented for players with two hands; why then is there music for one hand alone, and why is it more often for left hand than for right? There are two answers, one general and one particular. A pianist's right hand is stronger than his left, and often he likes to give some extra practice to the left one; for some reason too it is easier for the left hand to span the compass of the piano. This is why Brahms transcribed Bach's Violin Chaconne for left hand, why Scriabin wrote a study, and why Godowsky arranged Chopin's Etudes for left hand alone. The particular reason is that an Austrian pianist called Paul Wittgenstein lost his right arm in the first world war, and later commissioned piano music for left hand from several eminent composers, including Britten, Strauss, Ernest Walker and Hans Gal, as well as Ravel. Oddly enough the commission reached Ravel at the precise time when he was meditating a piano concerto for two hands, which he intended to play himself (later he decided to give it to Madame Marguerite Long). Throughout 1930 Ravel worked at both concertos simultaneously. He was a good deal intrigued by jazz rhythms, and these found a place in both concertos, but otherwise the two piano concertos are quite different. The left-hand concerto was the first to be completed, and was first performed on 27th November 1931 in Vienna. Of all the works commissioned by Wittgenstein, Ravel's Concerto is the only one that has reached the repertory of many two-handed pianists. One of these, Alfred Cortot, did attempt to arrange it for two hands, but was prevented by copyright from making it public. Cortot remained well known, however, as an exponent of Ravel's original version.

The piano writing is so diabolically virtuoso that Cortot's idea may be condoned. Nevertheless the strong individuality of the work, which has made it more than a pièce d'occasion, is the left-handed character of the solo part; it is fantastically difficult, but it does lie under the fingers, and, more important, it ranges the extremes of the keyboard with a directness and spontaneity that belongs to the action of one hand only. It might be expected that much of the piano writing would be in the bass clef, or in conjunction with solo instruments; in fact the part lies high on the whole, and the texture of the music is fairly clearly divided between orchestral ritornelli, solo passages and piano with orchestra.

The design of the Concerto is fairly involved, for its single movement partakes of several sections, detailed above (less the minor modifications of tempo which are frequent), yet there is no hint of rhapsody about the form; it is closely knit. The orchestral introduction, like a classical exposition, produces three themes. It begins at the bottom of nowhere, and in time one learns that the double bassoon is playing the most important idea of all:

Ex. 1

The second tune, played by the horns, starts like "Three Blind Mice," and should therefore be recognised. The entry of the piano is dramatically prepared. The piano discourses by itself, adding to Example 1 a Lisztian declamatory sort of phrase which is to return in the orchestra just before the end. After another orchestral look at Example 1 the piano moves to another more leisurely topic, in F sharp minor (the Concerto is in D major), but Example 1 is brought back before long. The Allegro starts with a cymbal crash, and a sinister march accompaniment; this is the jazzy section. Later there is an oriental-like melody, built on one of Ravel's favourite "gapped scales", and scored for high wind and harp, with piano filigree. When the march resumes, "Three Blind Mice" is taken up by the bassoon. The orchestral reprise of the Lisztian idea leads to a long cadenza, which starts with the leisurely tune. There is one more attempt at "Three Blind Mice", and then the sinister march is telescoped into a five-bar coda.

WILLIAM MANN

Suite from DER ROSENKAVALIER

Richard Strauss
(1864-1949)

IN the Vienna of Maria Theresa's day it was the custom for a prospective bridegroon to entrust a silver rose to a friend for presentation to the bride. The friend was known as der Rosenkavalier, the Knight of the Rose; what proportion of intended marriages suffered a hiatus as a result of an over-handsome choice of Rosenkavalier is not on record, but Hugo von Hofmannsthal's account of one such has in Strauss's hands become a classic.

The libretto is warmly and astonishingly human; in 1911 it came as all the stronger surprise because the immediately preceding result of the Hofmannsthal-Strauss collaboration had been Elektra, a work not calculated to engender expectations in theatre-goers of any gay or romantic successor. But, helped no doubt by reports of a brush with the censors, and also by a plenitude of the most seductive waltzes, Der Rosenkavalier won not merely a success but the greatest and most enduring success of any twentieth-century German opera.

Hofmannsthal's plot tells with dignity and sympathy of the acceptance of middle age by a Marschallin. At the beginning of the opera she dismisses reluctantly Octavian, her youthful lover; at its end she blesses his union with Sophie, a girl of his own age—a girl to whom she had earlier despatched him as Rosenkavalier for the lecherous and dowry-seeking Baron Ochs, an unwelcome cousin.

The relationships of these characters, and of others, are painted by Strauss in the most consistently heart-warming music. The present suite of extracts has been made anonymously, and consists of orchestral versions of some of the outstanding scenes of the opera. They are the Prelude to Act I; three scenes between Sophie and Octavian, including that of the actual presentation of the rose; the trio of Sophie, Octavian and the Marschallin; and the waltzes associated with Baron Ochs: his predilection for these being the solitary redeeming feature of an otherwise most unattractive character.

MALCOLM MACDONALD

Music quotation from Piano Concerto by Ravel reprinted by kind permission of Durand et Cie. (United Music Publishers Ltd., London)

Programme notes are copyright by the authors

THE CONCERT ENDS AT ABOUT 9.55 P.M.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Music Director: CHARLES MUNCH

Associate Conductor: RICHARD BURGIN

Violins

Richard Burgin (Concert-master)
Alfred Krips
George Zazofsky
Rolland Tapley
Norbert Lauga
Vladimir Resnikoff
Harry Dickson
Gottfried Wilfinger
Einar Hansen
Joseph Leibovici
Emil Kornsand
Roger Shermont
Minot Beale
Herman Silberman
Stanley Benson
Leo Panasevich
Sheldon Rotenberg
Fredy Ostrovsky
Clarence Knudson
Pierre Mayer
Manuel Zung
Samuel Diamond
Victor Manusevitch
James Nagy
Melvin Bryant
Lloyd Stonestreet
Saverio Messina
William Waterhouse
William Marshall
Leonard Moss
Jesse Ceci
Noah Bielski
Alfred Schneider
Joseph Silverstein

Violas

Joseph de Pasquale
Jean Cauhapé
Eugen Lehner
Albert Bernard
George Humphrey
Jerome Lipson
Robert Karol
Reuben Green
Bernard Kadinoff
Vincent Mauricci
John Fiasca
Earl Hedberg

'Cellos

Samuel Mayes
Alfred Zighera
Jacobus Langendoen
Mischa Nieland
Karl Zeise
Josef Zimbler
Bernard Parronchi
Leon Marjollet
Martin Hoherman
Louis Berger
Richard Kapuscinski
Robert Ripley

Basses

Georges Moleux
Gaston Dufresne
Ludwig Juht
Irving Frankel
Henry Freeman
Henry Portnoi
Henri Girard
John Barwicki

Flutes

Doriot Anthony Dwyer
James Pappoutsekis
Phillip Kaplan

Piccolo

George Madsen

Oboes

Ralph Gomberg
Jean Devergie
John Holmes

English Horn

Louis Speyer

Clarinets

Gino Cioffi
Manuel Valerio

E-Flat Clarinet

Pasquale Cardillo

Bass Clarinet

Rosario Mazzeo

Bassoons

Sherman Walt
Ernst Panenka
Theodore Brewster

Contra-Bassoon

Richard Plaster

Horns

James Stagliano
Charles Yancich
Harry Shapiro
Harold Meek
Paul Keaney
Osbourne McConathy

Trumpets

Roger Voisin
Marcel Lafosse
Armando Ghitalla
Gerard Goguen

Trombones

William Gibson
William Moyer
Kauko Kahila
Josef Orosz

Tuba

K. Vinal Smith

Harps

Bernard Zighera
Olivia Luetcke

Timpani

Everett Firth
Harold Faberman

Percussion

Charles Smith
Harold Thompson
Arthur Dress

Piano

Bernard Zighera

Librarian

Leslie Rogers

Assistant Librarian

Victor Alpert

The Souvenir Programme is now on sale at the Festival Office and at booksellers at the price of 3s. 6d.

Long Play Records by

PIERRE MONTEUX

conducting the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra

Symphonie fantastique — Berlioz ALP 1137

"As an interpreter of French music, the veteran Pierre Monteux is unsurpassed, and his performance of Berlioz's Symphonie fantastique with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra is wonderfully vivid and exhibits the varying moods and colours of the work to the full."

LONDON MUSICAL EVENTS

Symphony in D Minor — Franck ALP 1019

"... a very fine performance, vividly contrasting the vigour of the first and third movements with the spiritual delicacy of the middle movement. The recording is excellent."

LONDON MUSICAL EVENTS

Price inc. tax 39/7½d each

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

LONG PLAY 33⅓ R.P.M. RECORDS

THE GRAMOPHONE CO. LTD. (RECORD DIVISION) 8-11 GT. CASTLE STREET, LONDON, W.1

INFORMATION OBSCURED

BEETHOVEN ABR 4046 28/8d. ER MAJESTY THE QUEEN Piano Sonata N BETH THE QUEEN MOTHER in F minor, Op.
Piano Sonata N
in A major, Op.

burgh

DEBUSSY ABL 3081 38/
12 Preludes Bo
*Six epigraphes antiques
*En blanc et no

al Festival

MOZART ABL 3060 38
Piano Concer
in C minor, K
Piano Concer
in D major, K

with Gabu Casa

the Scottish Committee of reat Britain, the British Council on of the City of Edinburgh

now recording for P

France's most distinguished pianist

RO

CASADESUS

SHER HALL
30th August 1956, at 8 p.m.

PHILIPS Minigroove

Philips Electrical Limited, Gramophone Records Divi
Stanhope Place, London, W2
Philips are world-renowned makers of Radiograms, Record P
Equipment incorporating the famous Philips 'Featherweight' P

GEO. STEWART & CO. LTD., Printers, EDINBUR

An outstanding Long Playing Recording of

DIE ZAUBERFLÖTE

Mozart

Queen of the Night	WILMA LIPP
Tamino	ANTON DERMOTA
First Lady	SENA JURINAC
Second Lady	FRIEDL RIEGER
Third Lady	ELSE SCHÜRHOFF
Papageno	ERICH KUNZ
Monostatos	PETER KLEIN
Pamina	IRMGARD SEEFRIED
First Youth	HERMINE STEINMASSL
Second Youth	ELEONORE DÖRPINGHANS
Third Youth	ANNELIES STUCKL
First Priest	ERICH MAJKUT
Second Priest	HARALD PROGLHOFF
Sarastro	LUDWIG WEBER
Speaker	GEORGE LONDON
Papagena	EMMY LOOSE
Armed Man	LJUBOMIR PANTSCHEFF

VIENNA PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

and

SINGVEREIN DER GESELLSCHAFT DER MUSIKFREUNDE IM WIEN

conducted by

Herbert von Karajan

33CX1013-5

COLUMBIA

33⅓ r.p.m. Long Playing Records

COLUMBIA GRAPHOPHONE CO. LTD., RECORD DIVISION, 8-11 GT. CASTLE ST., LONDON, W.1

HOMAGE TO

Serge Koussevitzky

THE INTERNATIONAL MUSIC FUND

"The composer is the ultimate creator and source of our great art. To him we are indebted for everything : the spiritual wealth of music ; the cultural wealth of the greatest musical literature past and present ; the material wealth of the expanding musical profession and industry."

Serge Koussevitzky
at UNESCO House, Paris, in May, 1950.

Committee of Honour

PABLO CASALS
EDOUARD HERRIOT
MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT
ALBERT SCHWEITZER
JEAN SIBELIUS
IGOR STRAVINSKY
RALPH VAUGHAN WILLIAMS
HEITOR VILLA LOBOS

Wherever there is an interest in contemporary music it is appropriate that concerts should be given in Homage to Serge Koussevitzky. June 4 of this year marked the fifth anniversary of his death. But it is to the vital spirit of the man and to his unique and enduring influence on composers and on the developments of music that homage is due.

During the more than half century career of Serge Koussevitzky as a conductor in Russia, in Western Europe and in the United States, he was recognized as a champion of contemporary music and a friend of composers of all countries. He established a publishing house to publish new works ; he was indefatigable in performing new scores ; he commissioned many new compositions, either personally or through the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

In 1948, with Dr. Koussevitzky's aid, the International Music Fund came into existence as a means of placing interest in and support for composers on a broad international basis. Sums raised in 1948 and 1949 by Dr. Koussevitzky and the American Committee were transmitted to UNESCO which supervised its distribution as commissions and fellowships.

In May 1951 a benefit concert, arranged by the French National Committee of the International Music Fund, was given at the Théâtre des Champs Elysées in Paris with the National Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch. Again the funds realized were allocated by UNESCO to young students of composition from France and other countries.

In the Spring of 1953 the International Music Council, a non-governmental organization created by UNESCO, decided to revive the International Music Fund on a permanent international basis.

Concerts in Homage to Serge Koussevitzky provide occasions for bringing the attention of the music public to the International Music Fund as an organization which merits support and encouragement so that it may answer the need which exists today, as much as ever, for aiding composers and for spreading internationally the knowledge and enjoyment of the music of our own time.

The objectives of the Fund are to promote :

the INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE of CONTEMPORARY MUSIC through live performances, broadcasts and recordings

and

the CIRCULATION of MUSICIANS BETWEEN COUNTRIES particularly through the interchange of composers and students of composition.

Executive Committee

MRS. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY—Chairman
SIR STEUART WILSON—Vice-Chairman
HENRY BARRAUD (FRANCE)
AARON COPLAND (U.S.)
MARCEL CUVELIER (BELGIUM)
HOWARD HANSON (U.S.)
MARIO LABROCA (ITALY)
CHARLES MUNCH (U.S.)
DOMINGO SANTA CRUZ (CHILE)
CARLETON SPRAGUE SMITH (U.S.)

Inquiries for further information or contributions for support of the International Music Fund may be sent to :

Executive Secretary,
International Music Fund,
UNESCO House,
19 Avenue Kléber,
Paris 16, France.

In the United States, please address the :
American International Music Fund,
119 West 57 Street,
New York 19, N.Y.

GEO. STEW...

USHER HALL

Thursday, 30th August 1956
at 8 p.m.

Homage to Koussevitzky

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Conductor
CHARLES MÜNCH

Soloist
CLIFFORD CURZON (pianoforte)

Founded seventy-five years ago, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had a distinguished history under the direction of, amongst others, George Henschel, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitzky. This, its first visit to the Edinburgh Festival, can be justly regarded as a notable occasion.

Charles Münch became the Orchestra's conductor in 1949. He already had an illustrious career behind him at the head of a number of French orchestras, while in 1948 he had toured America with the Orchestre National de la Radio-diffusion Française. Since his appointment he has added to the already wide prestige of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Clifford Curzon studied in London, in Berlin with Schnabel and in Paris with Landowska. His first appearance was at the age of sixteen at a London Promenade Concert, and since then he has given recitals and appeared as soloist with major orchestras of international fame. This is his fourth visit to the Edinburgh Festival.

PROGRAMME

ELEGY to the Memory of my Friend, Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 — Howard Hanson (b. 1896)

(First performance in Europe)

SINCE 1924 Howard Hanson has been director of the Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester, New York. The Elegy was composed for the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which falls this year.

It opens with an expressive melody presented by the strings, at first canonically, and in 3/4 time. This melody, varied in development, is the basis of the piece. A section in 4/4 rhythm opening in the wind reaches a climax of intensity and subsides to a return of the original tempo (teneramente con simplicità) to a pianissimo ending.

JOHN N. BURK

CONCERTO for Piano and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 54 — Schumann (1810-1856)

Allegro affettuoso
Intermezzo (Andantino grazioso)— Allegro vivace

Soloist: CLIFFORD CURZON

OF all Schumann's compositions for solo instruments with orchestra, his Piano Concerto is without question his most successful. Some indication of the advance there has been in the general level of technical achievement during the last century is given by the fact that while in Schumann's lifetime his piano writing was considered far too exacting (as late as 1879 George Grove—not yet knighted—was characterising the finale of the Concerto as "of enormous difficulty"), the Concerto has for many years now been an indispensable item in the repertoire of every pianist who aspires to play concertos at all, and a popular favourite with audiences everywhere. Not that nimble fingers are not called for in its performance; but the main emphasis throughout the work is on its poetic side, and virtuosity is never introduced for its own sake.

All Schumann's music during the first ten years of his composing career was for the piano, the instrument with which he had the greatest sympathy and on which he had originally intended to become a concert artist: in 1840, the year of his marriage to the pianist, Clara Wieck, he turned to song-writing and swiftly poured out over 120 songs ("I should like to sing myself to death like a nightingale", he wrote in a letter): only in 1841 did he for the first time try his hand at writing for the orchestra. With the example of Schubert's "Great" C major Symphony as inspiration, he composed his "Spring" Symphony in B flat, another in D minor (now known as No. 4), and in addition an Overture, Scherzo and Finale and a Phantasie for piano and orchestra. Clara tried out this last at a rehearsal in the Leipzig Gewandhaus, and expressed her delight at it, especially at the delicate interplay between the solo instrument and the orchestra. Four years later, in 1845, Schumann added two further movements to the Phantasie to make it into the present Piano Concerto. The work was dedicated to Ferdinand Hiller, who conducted the first performance with Clara Schumann as soloist.

From the very outset—a challenging phrase down the keyboard after a single orchestral chord—it is clear that the piano is to be the main protagonist, although Schumann's use of the orchestra is highly imaginative and completely free from that thickness of scoring which sometimes mars his works. Worthy of note is the economical use of his material: the pathetic subject which follows the introductory bars, heard first on woodwind and answered by the piano, is the master-cell of the entire work, and by ingeniously deriving themes for the later movements from it a strong feeling of cohesion is given to the concerto as a whole. In the first movement, indeed, it provides nearly all the thematic interest, for the second subject is only the same theme put into the relative major. The development consist of a dreamy meditation (in the key of A flat) shared by the piano and a solo clarinet, interrupted by the initial emphatic gesture and a more passionate return of the basic subject ; and in the recapitulation, after an expressive cadenza, it returns yet again in the guise of a brisk 2/4 march-like coda.

The questioning dialogue between piano and orchestra which begins the F major Intermezzo also derives from the same source: the rest of this idyllic movement centres on a warmly lyrical melody expounded by the 'cellos. At the end, a momentary reminiscence of the motto-theme twice provokes a sigh from the piano, and then, turning to the major, runs straight into the finale, becoming (in a subtly changed version) its main subject. The other principal theme of this movement is the most famous instance of Schumann's delight in syncopated effects, the rhythm appearing to change to 3/2 but in fact only hopping across the existing bar-lines. There is a touch of fugal play in the development (for the finale is again in sonata-form), and Schumann springs his last surprise by starting his recapitulation in the sub-dominant key—which leads him effortlessly into A major for the conclusion, the coda being yet another transformation of the omnipresent master-theme.

LIONEL SALTER

INTERVAL

SYMPHONY No. 5 (Di tre re) — Honegger (1892-1955)

Grave
Allegretto—Adagio—Allegretto
Allegro marcato

THIS, the last of Honegger's symphonies, was composed for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the last three months of 1950 and introduced in America by Charles Münch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The sub-title, "Symphony of three D's", refers to the timpani part of the work, which consists exclusively of three notes, a single pp tap on the note D at the end of each movement. Even so, the timpani are marked ad lib. in the score, so that the significance of Honegger's title is an enigma; and he was quite content that it should so remain. What is plain, on internal evidence as much as by the composer's own avowal, is that this is a symphony of tragic import.

The first movement opens with a solemn chorale-like section whose inner dissonances produce a powerful forward impetus: this is music of sinew and strength. A new theme, sombrely climbing from the bass clarinet to the cor anglais over a repeated rhythmic pattern, is contested by insistent trumpet tuckets and rises to an excited climax: then the chorale returns quietly on divisi strings, this time with a delicate counterpoint extended across the woodwinds. Mere fragments of the second theme are heard again before the first four bars of the chorale on pizzicato strings bring the movement to a close.

Though the texture of the Allegretto is lighter, the humour of this movement (if indeed it is humorously conceived) is of a tight-lipped, wry kind: the idiom, angular and contrapuntal, resembles that of Roussel. To the accompaniment of a single clarinet, the first violins expound a staccato subject which is then tossed about in the woodwind and promptly inverted for use by the flutes. Small arpeggio figurations introduce brief phrases built on fourths and fifths, and then the main theme returns, accompanied by bustling strings. An adagio middle section has grieving strings murmuring broken phrases over strange muted-trombone sounds: this leads to a more agitated version of the Allegretto subject with complex treatment, becoming vehement before once more introducing the Adagio, in which the woodwind now cling to their initial contrapuntal theme. The Allegretto, with its thematic ideas presented in reverse order, returns to round off the movement.

A mood of violence runs through the finale, which after an introduction of repeated brass chords and rushing strings exposes an angular subject by the horns and bassoons in unison, accompanied by jerky syncopated rhythms. The atmosphere is troubled, and through agitated strings a tuba phrase appears, followed by heavy brass in a kind of relentless march. Elements from this material are developed with vigour, and a new five-note motive makes its appearance on the brass both in plain and inverted forms: yet another subject is found to be an augmentation of the fourth bar of the main theme. At the height of this thrustful movement Honegger suddenly hushes his orchestra, and the symphony ends quietly.

LIONEL SALTER

Symphonic Sketches, LA MER

Debussy
(1862-1918)

De l'aube à midi sur la mer
Jeux de vagues
Dialogue du vent et de la mer

BY 1903, when he began the composition of La Mer, Debussy was no longer the promising young man whose fierce, uncompromising ideals demanded constant practical refutation of traditional values. He was famous, such an acknowledged figure that Parisian music-lovers were either ardent supporters or raging antagonists. Debussy could afford to shock both parties, if he saw reason to do so; the fervent revolutionary wrote a symphony firmly based on the harmony of the common chord, and if the full range of his harmony is exploited, that was because deep near-romantic feelings for a vast subject were involved.

La Mer is a symphony in design and in thought. Its language is so evocative and elusive that the main title is useful but the chapter-headings could almost be disregarded. Erik Satie put them where they belong when he replied to Debussy that he "particularly liked the little bit at a quarter to eleven" in the first movement. La Mer is musical poetry, and needs no elucidation.

As a musical view of the sea it is certainly uncompromising; no ships, no shore, not even fish—sky and water, light and wind, inhuman elements are evoked through the materials of an artist in timbre and sonority Debussy was a connoisseur of painting, and a painter in sound as, above all, his piano works show. He also loved the sea; he began La Mer without its direct inspiration at Bichain, well inland, but with the Riviera, and his childish desires for a sailor's life, in mind. The task of composition was completed in Jersey, the scoring at Eastbourne. But, if the sea was far away at the initial conception, land never existed so far as the music is concerned.

The symphonic coherence of the three movements owes little to themes or thematic development even as to structure there is no more to say than that the second movement is a scherzo. Soon after the misty, moisty introduction to the first sketch, cor anglais and trumpet offer a melodic line that is used again in the concluding Dialogue and near the end of the movement, at about ten minutes to mid-day, the horns steal in with a sombre, subdued idea which is to blaze forth in triumph at the end of the whole work:

Ex. 1

Ex. 2

But other wisps of tune undergo constant variation as new light from the sky and the orchestral palette plays on them. What never ceases to fascinate the student of orchestral music is the fastidious, economical, almost chamber-musical, way in which that rich, polychromatic palette is deployed.

WILLIAM MANN

Music Quotations from "La Mer" by Debussy reprinted by kind permission of Durand et Cie (United Music Publishers Ltd., London)

Programme notes are copyright by the authors

THE CONCERT ENDS AT ABOUT 9.55 P.M.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Music Director: CHARLES MÜNCH

Associate Conductor: RICHARD BURGIN

Violins
Richard Burgin (Concert-master)
Alfred Krips
George Zazofsky
Rolland Tapley
Norbert Lauga
Vladimir Resnikoff
Harry Dickson
Gottfried Wilfinger
Einar Hansen
Joseph Leibovici
Emil Kornsand
Roger Shermont
Minot Beale
Herman Silberman
Stanley Benson
Leo Panasevich
Sheldon Rotenberg
Fredy Ostrovsky
Clarence Knudson
Pierre Mayer
Manuel Zung
Samuel Diamond
Victor Manusevitch
James Nagy
Melvin Bryant
Lloyd Stonestreet
Saverio Messina
William Waterhouse
William Marshall
Leonard Moss
Jesse Ceci
Noah Bielski
Alfred Schneider
Joseph Silverstein

Violas
Joseph de Pasquale
Jean Cauhapé
Eugen Lehner
Albert Bernard
George Humphrey
Jerome Lipson
Robert Karol
Reuben Green
Bernard Kadinoff
Vincent Mauricci
John Fiasca
Earl Hedberg

'Cellos
Samuel Mayes
Alfred Zighera
Jacobus Langendoen
Mischa Nieland
Karl Zeise
Josef Zimbler
Bernard Parronchi
Leon Marjollet
Martin Hoherman
Louis Berger
Richard Kapuscinski
Robert Ripley

Basses
Georges Moleux
Gaston Dufresne
Ludwig Juht
Irving Frankel
Henry Freeman
Henry Portnoi
Henri Girard
John Barwicki

Flutes
Doriot Anthony Dwyer
James Pappoutsakis
Phillip Kaplan

Piccolo
George Madsen

Oboes
Ralph Gomberg
Jean Devergie
John Holmes

English Horn
Louis Speyer

Clarinets
Gino Cioffi
Manuel Valerio

E-Flat Clarinet
Pasquale Cardillo

Bass Clarinet
Rosario Mazzeo

Bassoons
Sherman Walt
Ernst Panenka
Theodore Brewster

Contra-Bassoon
Richard Plaster

Horns
James Stagliano
Charles Yancich
Harry Shapiro
Harold Meek
Paul Keaney
Osbourne McConathy

Trumpets
Roger Voisin
Marcel Lafosse
Armando Ghitalla
Gerard Goguen

Trombones
William Gibson
William Moyer
Kauko Kahila
Josef Orosz

Tuba
K. Vinal Smith

Harps
Bernard Zighera
Olivia Luetcke

Timpani
Everett Firth
Harold Faberman

Percussion
Charles Smith
Harold Thompson
Arthur Press

Piano
Bernard Zighera

Librarian
Leslie Rogers

Assistant Librarian
Victor Alpert

The Souvenir Programme is now on sale at the Festival Office and at booksellers at the price of 3s. 6d.

Long Play Records by

CHARLES MUNCH

conducting the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Symphony No. 1 in B Flat ("Spring") — Schumann
ALP 1203

Symphony No. 2 in B Flat — Schubert
Symphony No. 104 in D ("London") — Haydn
ALP 1061

Rapsodie espagnole; La Valse — Ravel
Overtures: La Princesse jaune — Saint-Saëns
Béatrice et Bénédict — Berlioz
Le Roi d'Ys — Lalo ALP 1245

Don Quixote — Richard Strauss
with Gregor Piatigorsky ('Cello), Richard Burgin (Violin), and Joseph De Pasquale (Viola) ALP 1211

Charles Munch also conducts performances of Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust" (ALP 1225-7) and Dramatic Symphony, "Roméo et Juliette" (ALP 1179-80)

Prices inc. tax: 39 7½d each

Details of further recordings will be found in the "His Master's Voice" Catalogue.

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"
LONG PLAY 33⅓ R.P.M. RECORDS

THE GRAMOPHONE CO. LTD. (RECORD DIVISION) 8-11 GT. CASTLE STREET, LONDON. W.1

Great artists are heard at their best on Decca long playing ffrr records

CLIFFORD CURZON

records exclusively for Decca

RACHMANINOV
Concerto No.2 in C minor for Piano and Orchestra, Op. 18
CLIFFORD CURZON
with THE LONDON
PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
conducted by
SIR ADRIAN BOULT
LXT 5178

SCHUMANN
Fantasia in C major, Op. 11 remainder of 2nd side:
Kinderscenen, Op. 15
CLIFFORD CURZON
LXT 2933

GRIEG
Concerto in A minor
for Piano and Orchestra, Op. 16
CLIFFORD CURZON
with THE LONDON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
conducted by
ANATOLE FISTOULARI
LXT 2657

SCHUBERT
Impromptus, Op. 142: No.1 in F minor and No.2 in A flat major;
No.3 in B flat major and No.4 in F minor
CLIFFORD CURZON
LXT 2781

The Decca-group catalogues of microgroove records give full details of an unrivalled wealth of recorded music of all kinds including many other fine recordings by CLIFFORD CURZON. The catalogues are obtainable from any dealer, price 10/-, or direct from us post free and with no extra charge for all supplements to date.

TRUE HIGH FIDELITY ffrr
DECCA RECORDS

THE DECCA RECORD COMPANY LTD., 1-3 BRIXTON ROAD, LONDON, S.W.9

GEO. STEWART & CO. LTD., Printers, EDINBURGH.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 13,684

AUG 20 1956

Boston Symphony To Give Concerts During Festival

For the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be a part of the annual Edinburgh Festival, currently in its 10th season, during its tour of 13 European countries. Five of the 27 concerts the orchestra will give abroad during late August and September will be played in Usher Hall in the Scottish capital, from Aug. 26-30.

Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra for the past seven years, will share the podium on two occasions with his long-time friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony for five years following World War I and a frequent guest conductor in recent years on its programs in Boston, on a short tour of Europe in 1952, a coast-to-coast American tour in 1953, and during the past five summers at its summer Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch, who has been a guest conductor at the Edinburgh Festival on several occasions, most recently in August 1954, will conduct the first Edinburgh concert of the Boston Symphony on Sunday evening, Aug. 26, as well as the concerts of Tuesday, Aug. 28, and Thursday, Aug. 30. Mr. Monteux will lead the 105-piece orchestra on Monday, Aug. 27, and Wednesday, Aug. 29.

On the Aug. 28 program American violinist Isaac Stern will be soloist in the Beethoven Violin Concerto. French pianist Robert Casadesus will perform Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand and Franck's Symphonic Variations in the concert of Aug. 29. English pianist Clifford Curzon will play the Schumann Piano Concerto in A minor on Aug. 30. All three virtuosi have frequently performed with the Bostonians on home ground.

The British Broadcasting Corporation will broadcast live the concerts of Aug. 26, 28 and 29, and there are plans to televise the concert with Mr. Stern on the 28th.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860

JUN 3 1956

PLANNING EARLY FOR THE EDINBURGH FESTIVAL

By WENDY HALL

THIS year's Edinburgh International Festival, Aug. 19-Sept. 8, apparently is to be a bigger tourist attraction than ever. It is the tenth to be held since that first festival was launched, as an act of faith and hope, in the still difficult post-war year 1947. As a token of the importance attached to this tenth event, the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh will be present at the opening service in St. Giles' Cathedral, and will, it is hoped, attend one or more of the festival performances. And more visitors than ever are expected.

Numbers have soared year by year. Last year nearly 85,000 visitors were stopping in Edinburgh during the festival period; of these, nearly 12,000 were Americans. In 1950 the corresponding figures were 57,000 and 4,000. It is a success story that imposes on this year's intending visitor the inescapable necessity of planning well in advance.

First, and major, problem is timing a visit, except for those who can stay the whole three weeks. Six main performances—concert, ballet, opera and three plays—run concurrently every evening. Most mornings and a couple of afternoons each week there are chamber concerts and recitals. A military tattoo takes place in front of the Castle every night except Sundays and Thursdays, at varying times, and on some days can be seen at 11 P. M., after other performances are over. The Film Festival and a Braque Exhibition continue throughout the three weeks.

It is barely possible to do the festival adequately in less than a week. A well-chosen, if culturally indigestible, three days could just include two concerts, visits to ballet and opera, the military tattoo, the Braque Exhibition, a film and at least one side trip from Edinburgh.

Evening Events

Here, as guide to the choice of time for a visit, are the major evening events:

Week beginning Aug. 19:

Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, Sadler's Wells Ballet, Hamburg State Opera, "Under Milk Wood," by Dylan Thomas; "Pleasure of Scotland" (an entertainment); "The Anatomist," by James Bridie.

Week beginning Aug. 26:

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sadler's Wells Ballet, Hamburg State Opera, Piccolo Teatro of Milan, Stratford Ontario Festival Company, "The Anatomist."

Week beginning Sept. 2:

London Mozart Players, Vienna Hofmusik-Kapelle, Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, Hamburg State Opera, "Fanny's First Play," by G. B. Shaw; Stratford Ontario Festival Company, "The Anatomist."

Booking Lodgings

Tickets, for which application should be made as soon as possible from the American Express or Cook's, are available at a wide range of prices. Concerts run from 42 cents to $4.20 (though mosts seats are in the 70 cents-$2.50 bracket); opera from $1.20 to $5.60; theatre from 42 cents to $2.80. A seat at the tattoo costs around 50 cents and $1.40.

Tickets obtained, the intending visitor can proceed to book accommodations, and here the problem is considerably less acute. The Festival Society has got the situation so well taped that no one is ever turned away or stranded during the festival season. In addition to the usual hotel and boarding house accommodation (bed and breakfast, approximately $2.50, without bath, to $8.40 with bath, per head per day), there are double and single rooms in University residences (bed, breakfast and dinner, $3), and bed and breakfast in private homes, $1.75 up).

This last type of accommodation grows increasingly popular with overseas visitors, as the private people, not professional landladies, who do not want to make a hefty profit out of their guests but would just like the pleasure of getting acquainted with folks from abroad. All private rooms are officially inspected every year.

The Festival Office, Synod Hall, Castle Terrace, Edinburgh, 1, will arrange any of these three kinds of reservations. If, for instance, a lawyer from overseas specifies that he would like to stop with a lawyer in Edinburgh, it will even try to fix this. Applications for quarters, as for tickets, can be made on special forms available from the American Express or Cook's.

For those who are making Edinburgh a center, and taking in only a few of the programs, rather than conscientiously attending all possible performances, there is much to do in and around the capital city. In Edinburgh itself university students usually put on shows which may range from Greek tragedy to sharp-tongued modern revue. The big hotels, like the Caledonian, the North British and the George, have dinner dances.

Eating at the hotels and in restaurants is ample and comes up to adequate cosmopolitan standards. More picturesquely Scottish atmosphere and fare, whether haggis or just a wee mutton pie, are to be had at streamlined inns.

Highland Games will be held once, on the afternoon of Saturday, Aug. 18. Every day during the festival period there is an excursion to one of Scotland's historic homes and famous gardens. These are extremely popular and should be booked well ahead. Information is obtained from Scotland's Gardens Scheme, 26 Castle Terrace, Edinburgh, 1.

From the capital, day tours by coach can be taken as far as Oban and the Western Highlands, Loch Lomond and the Trossachs, Ayr and the Burns Country, Abbotsford and the Scott Country, or Glamis Castle, early home of Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother.

Transportation between London and Edinburgh is good. Air time, city center to city center, is 4 to 4½ hours. On the railroad there are overnight services with sleeping cars in both classes.

As for ancestor worship: While in Edinburgh anyone with a wee drappie of Scots blood in his veins can take the opportunity to find out more about his forebears by calling at the Scots Ancestry Research Society, 4 North St. David's Street. Only one good clue is needed—for instance, date and place of a grandmother's birth in Sc[illegible]

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 22 1956

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

AUG 18 1956

Brass Ensemble To Perform At Edinburgh Festival Aug. 28

The Boston Brass Ensemble, composed of eight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of its first trumpeter, Roger Voisin, will give a concert of its own, during the Boston Symphony's five-day engagement at the Edinburgh Festival.

At 11 a.m. in the Scottish capital's Freemason Hall, on Tuesday, Aug. 28, Mr. Voisin and Armando Ghitalla, trumpets; Harold Meek and Paul Keaney, horns; Kauko Kahila, trombone; Josef Orosz, baritone; Kilton V. Smith, tuba, with William Gibson, trombone, assisting, will perform a program of five works dating from the late 16th century to modern times.

Organized in 1952

The Boston Brass Ensemble was organized in the summer of 1952 by Roger Voisin because there was a need for a representative brass group in Boston. A vast amount of brass literature had accumulated through the years, but had few outlets to the public. For many years in the U.S., Chicago and New York were the only cities which had a professional ensemble of this nature.

Mr. Voisin, leader of the Boston Brass Ensemble, is the son of a former member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. When he joined the orchestra at the age of 16, he became its all-time youngest performer. He has been featured soloist on many recordings of the orchestra, and is on the faculty of the Boston Symphony's summer music school, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood and at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

Armando Ghitalla joined the Boston Symphony five years ago, and has been trumpet soloist of its Boston Pops Orchestra since 1952. He is a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music in New York and played first trumpet with the New York City Opera Company in Houston.

The Program

The complete program:

Canzon Septimi Toni	Giovanni Gabrieli (late 16th Century)
Toccata	Aurelio Bonelli (1600)
Sonata	Francis Poulenc (1922)
Quintet in B flat	Robert Sanders (1948)
Brass Suite	Nicolai Berezowsky (1942)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 95,161

AUG. 20 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO TAKE PART IN EDINBURGH FETE

For the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be a part of the annual Edinburgh Festival, currently in its tenth season, during its tour of 13 European countries. Five of the 27 concerts the orchestra will give abroad during late August and September will be played in Usher Hall in the Scottish capital, from Aug. 26-30.

Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra for the past seven years, will share the podium on two occasions with his long-time friend and colleague, Pierre Monteux, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony for five years following World War I and a frequent guest conductor in recent years on its programs in Boston, on a short tour of Europe in 1952, a coast-to-coast American tour in 1953, and during the past five summers at its summer Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch, who has been a guest conductor at the Edinburgh Festival on several occasions, most recently in August, 1954, will conduct the first Edinburgh concert of the Boston Symphony on Sunday evening, Aug. 26, as well as the concerts of Tuesday, Aug. 28, and Thursday, Aug. 30. Monteux will lead the 105-piece orchestra on Monday, Aug. 27, and Wednesday, Aug. 29.

The British Broadcasting Corporation will broadcast live the concerts of Aug. 26, 28 and 29.

The Boston Symphony will be formally welcomed to the Edinburgh Festival by the Lord Provost of the city, The Rt. Honorable Sir John G. Banks, and a ceremonial meeting will probably be held between him, Dr. Munch, Monteux, Boston Symphony Orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., and two trustees of the orchestra who will be present, Henry B. Cabot and Edward A. Taft.

Following its five days in Edinburgh the Boston Symphony makes a swing through the Scandinavian capitals of Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki; then becomes the first American orchestra ever to visit Russia, giving two concerts in Leningrad and two in Moscow. Visits follow to Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London, before the orchestra returns to commence its 76th season in Boston on Oct. 5. The usual pair of concerts by the orchestra here as a part of the Woolsey Hall Series, one in the fall and the other in the spring, are now being arranged for the coming season.

10th Int'l Edinburgh Fest Launched With Brit. Royalty at I[illegible]

Jesuits
Soni[illegible] actress, "fringe. Neal P[illegible] Y.M.C.A. First is a Strindberg Julia'), ab[illegible] is precede[illegible] tain-raiser, Trio will be "Springtime old play by More legit the Phoenix "Samson A drama in vers A distinguishe Catherine Lac and George Ha[illegible]

Austria is represe[illegible] mous Vienna H[illegible] paying its first vi[illegible] Hofmusikkapelle is of members of the Opera Orch (Vienna Orch), members of State Opera Chorus a[illegible] na Boys' Choir. Hof[illegible] is rarely heard outside Deal to play at the Edi[illegible] junket was clinched aft[illegible] flight to Vienna by R[illegible] sonby, of the Edinburgh

New High in Advance

Booking for the scores this year reached a new h[illegible] ready value of tickets sold is about $15,000 higher than at this time last year. Biggest demand has come from the U. S. with orders

Albu[illegible]

One of the highlights of fall album program is the platter package of "Ethel M[illegible] A Musical Autobiography" a rundown of the top tu[illegible] over a dozen musical come[illegible] Merman has starred George and Ira Gershwi[illegible] Crazy" opened back in 19[illegible] dition to some non-showt[illegible] Although never at her b[illegible] disk medium, this pac[illegible] succeed in projecting so[illegible] songstress' color and vi[illegible] addition to the singing, man also handles the number patter, giving th[illegible] the setting of the son[illegible] newly recorded, the [illegible] were sliced with variou[illegible] combos, including the Quartet, and orchs und[illegible] tion of Jay Blackton, nick, Gordon Jenki[illegible] Oliver. Her original "Dearie" with Ray B[illegible] part of the songalog. ton and other singer[illegible] sist where other sing[illegible] required. It's an with photos and a[illegible] liner by Louis Unte[illegible] listing of the Broad[illegible] the various shows.

Johnny Mathis

Johnny Mathis, a ty[illegible] San Francisco whe[illegible] by Columbia last usual stylist who into the jazz than gory. He si[illegible]

the opening service in St. Giles Cathedral, and will, it is hoped, attend one or more of the festival performances. And more visitors than ever are expected.

Numbers have soared year by year. Last year nearly 85,000 visitors were stopping in Edinburgh during the festival period; of these, nearly 12,000 were Americans. In 1950 the corresponding figures were 57,000 and 4,000. It is a success story that imposes on this year's intending visitor the inescapable necessity of planning well in advance.

First, and major, problem is timing a visit, except for those who can stay the whole three weeks. Six main performances—concert, ballet, opera and three plays—run concurrently every evening. Most mornings and a couple of afternoons each week there are chamber concerts and recitals. A military tattoo takes place in front of the Castle every night except Sundays and Thursdays, at varying times, and on some days can be seen at 11 P. M., after other performances are over. The Film Festival and a Braque Exhibition continue throughout the three weeks.

It is barely possible to do the festival adequately in less than a week. A well-chosen, if culturally indigestible, three days could just include two concerts, visits to ballet and opera, the military tattoo, the Braque Exhibition, a film and at least one side trip from Edinburgh.

Evening Events

Here, as guide to the choice of time for a visit, are the major evening events:

Week beginning Aug. 19:

Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, Sadler's Wells Ballet, Hamburg State Opera, "Under Milk Wood," by Dylan Thomas; "Pleasure of Scotland" (an entertainment); "The Anatomist," by James Bridie.

Week beginning Aug. 26:

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sadler's Wells Ballet, Hamburg State Opera, Piccolo Teatro of Milan, Stratford Ontario Festival Company, "The Anatomist."

Week beginning Sept. 2:

London Mozart Players, Vienna

from $1.20 to $5.60; theatre from 42 cents to $2.80. A seat at the tattoo costs around 50 cents and $1.40.

Tickets obtained, the intending visitor can proceed to book accommodations, and here the problem is considerably less acute. The Festival Society has got the situation so well taped that no one is ever turned away or stranded during the festival season. In addition to the usual hotel and boarding house accommodation (bed and breakfast, approximately $2.50, without bath, to $8.40 with bath, per head per day), there are double and single rooms in University residences (bed, breakfast and dinner, $3), and bed and breakfast in private homes, $1.75 up).

This last type of accommodation grows increasingly popular with overseas visitors, as the private people, not fix this. Applications for quarters, as for tickets, can be made on special forms available from the American Express or Cook's.

For those who are making Edinburgh a center, and taking in only a few of the programs, rather than conscientiously attending all possible performances, there is much to do in and around the capital city. In Edinburgh itself university students usually put on shows which may range from Greek tragedy to sharp-tongued modern revue. The big hotels, like the Caledonian, the North British and the George, have dinner dances.

Eating at the hotels and in restaurants is ample and comes up to adequate cosmopolitan standards. More picturesquely Scottish atmosphere and fare, whether haggis or just a wee as Oban and the Western Highlands, Loch Lomond and the Trossachs, Ayr and the Burns Country, Abbotsford and the Scott Country, or Glamis Castle, early home of Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother.

Transportation between London and Edinburgh is good. Air time, city center to city center, is 4 to 4½ hours. On the railroad there are overnight services with sleeping cars in both classes.

As for ancestor worship: While in Edinburgh anyone with a wee drappie of Scots blood in his veins can take the opportunity to find out more about his forebears by calling at the Scots Ancestry Research Society, 4 North St. David's Street. Only one good clue is needed—for instance, date and place of a grandmother's birth in Sc

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 22 1956

10th Int'l Edinburgh Fest Launched With Brit. Royalty at 1st Concert

By GORDON IRVING

Edinburgh, Aug. 21.

The 10th International Festival of Edinburgh has opened here with a flourish of trumpets, a visit by English royalty, and a selection of talent from most countries, including major entries from the U.S. and Canada. Despite clouded world politics, the international galaxy is undimmed. Foreign accents mingle with sturdy Auld Lang Syne speech. Overseas visitors have taxed hotel and rooming house accommodations to the limit. Hundreds are housed with local families.

Queen Elizabeth, accompanied by her husband the Duke of Edinburgh, and by Princess Margaret, graced the opening Fest concert given Sunday (19) by Britain's Royal Philharmonic under Sir Thomas Beecham. Program featured Beethoven's Choral Symphony with the Edinburgh Royal Choral Union and soloists Sylvia Fisher, Nan Merriman, Richard Lewis and Kim Borg.

Transatlantic influence will be more to fore next week (26) when the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux ar-

(Continued on page 43)

This is Dylan Thomas's last work,

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

AUG 18 1956

Brass Ensemble To Perform At Edinburgh Festival Aug. 28

The Boston Brass Ensemble, composed of eight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of its first trumpeter, Roger Voisin, will give a concert of its own, during the Boston Symphony's five-day engagement at the Edinburgh Festival.

At 11 a.m. in the Scottish capital's Freemason Hall, on Tuesday, Aug. 28, Mr. Voisin and Armando Ghitalla, trumpets; Harold Meek and Paul Keaney, horns; Kauko Kahila, trombone; Josef Orosz, baritone; Kilton V. Smith, tuba, with William Gibson, trombone, assisting, will perform a program of five works dating from the late 16th century to modern times.

Organized in 1952

The Boston Brass Ensemble was organized in the summer of 1952 by Roger Voisin because there was a need for a representative brass group in Boston. A vast amount of literature has accumulated through the years, but had few outlets to the public. For many years in the U.S., Chicago and New York were the only cities which had a professional ensemble of this nature.

Mr. Voisin, leader of the Boston Brass Ensemble, is the son of a former member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. When he joined the orchestra at the age of 16, he became its all-time youngest performer. He has been featured soloist on many recordings of the orchestra, and is on the faculty of the Boston Symphony's summer music school, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood and at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

Armando Ghitalla joined the Boston Symphony five years ago, and has been trumpet soloist of its Boston Pops Orchestra since 1952. He is a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music in New York and played first trumpet with the New York City Opera Company in Houston.

The Program

The complete program:

Canzon Septimi Toni	Giovanni Gabrieli	(late 16th Century)
Toccata	Aurelio Benelli	(1600)
Sonata	Francis Poulenc	(1922)
Quintet in B flat	Robert Sanders	(1948)
Brass Suite	Nicolai Berezowsky	(1942)

[55]

Boston Symphony

Edinburgh Fest

from page 2

and was first broadcast on the BBC's arty Third Program in January, 1954. It won the Italia Prize in that year.

Italian drama is also, like Canada's, making an Edinburgh Fest bow. The Piccolo Teatro of Milan will present Goldoni's comedy "Arlecchino" for one week, and a play by Pirandello, "Questa Sera si Recita a Soggetta" (Tonight We Improvise).

George Bernard Shaw Tribute

As a George Bernard Shaw tribute in the G. B. S. centenary year, London impresario Henry Sherek is presenting, for the last week of the festival "Fanny's First Play," preceded by "Village Wooing." Casts include leading British thespers Michael Denison, Brenda Bruce and Jacqueline Mackenzie, the last-named a Scot gal who has been making a name.

On the unofficial or "fringe" list of legit events, Donald Wolfit, stalwart English actor, has opened in the Lauriston Hall in "The Strong Are Lonely." This is adopted from the original of Fritz Hochwalder by Eva Le Gallienne, daughter of the poet Richard Le Gallienne.

Play, already presented in New York, Paris and in European cities, was staged at the Piccadilly Theatre, London, last November. Plot between the Jesuits and the King of Spain.

Sonia Dresdel, leading British actress, also pops up on the Fest "fringe." She leads the Fraser Neal Players in the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. Theatre in three works. First is a version by Max Faber of Strindberg's "Froken Julie" ('Miss Julia'), about a neurotic girl. It is preceded by the Cocteau curtain-raiser, "La Voix Humaine." Trio will be completed Sept. 3 by "Springtime of Others," a 30-year-old play by Jean-Jacques Bernard. More legit fodder is available in the Phoenix Group presentation, of "Samson Agonistes," Milton's drama in verse in the Greek style. A distinguished company includes Catherine Lacey, John Westbrook and George Hagen.

Auld Lang Syne Revue

Opening Festival production, under official aegis, was an Auld Lang Syne revue, "Pleasure of Scotland," with singers, dancers, narrators, balladeers and bagpipers. This takes form of a large-scale ceilidh (Gaelic for Scotch party or night-out), an interpretation of authentic living arts of Scot music and dance, with Jameson Clark, radio and tv commentator, doing the narrating.

For after-the-show diversion three revues are offered this Festival. "Reprise," staged nightly through midnight at the Palladium vaudery, comprises top items from successful London revues like "Lyric Revue," "Intimacy at 8:30," "High Spirits," "After the Show" and "Slings and Arrows." Leonard Urry is presenting this Peter Myers selection for three weeks, cast including revue artistes Fenella Fielding, Bernard Hunter, Tom Criddle, Patricia Cree, Susan Denny and Susan Pardone. Oxford Theatre Group is staging a revue in the historic Gullan's Close. Another college group also will present late-night entertainment.

Other non-legit highlights of the 1956 Festival include offerings by Sadler's Wells Ballet, the Hamburg State Opera, the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, and the British Royal Philharmonic Orch. Other groups taking part are the London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orch, BBC Scottish Orch, and the National Youth Orch of Great Britain.

Austria is represented by the famous Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, paying its first visit to Britain. Hofmusikkapelle is a combination of members of the Vienna State Opera Orch (Vienna Philharmonic Orch), members of the Vienna State Opera Chorus and the Vienna Boys' Choir. Hofmusikkapelle is rarely heard outside of Vienna. Deal to play at the Edinburgh 1956 junket was clinched after a plane flight to Vienna by Robert Ponsonby, of the Edinburgh Fest.

New High in Advance Sales

Booking for the scores of events this year reached a new high. Already value of tickets sold is about $15,000 higher than at this time last year. Biggest demand has come from the U. S. with orders

Cathedral, and will, it is hoped, attend one or more of the festival performances. And more visitors than ever are expected.

Numbers have soared year by year. Last year nearly 85,000 visitors were stopping in Edinburgh during the festival period; of these, nearly 12,000 were Americans. In 1950 the corresponding figures were 57,000 and 4,000. It is a success story that imposes on this year's intending visitor the inescapable necessity of planning well in advance.

First, and major, problem is timing a visit, except for those who can stay the whole three weeks. Six main performances—concert, ballet, opera and three plays—run concurrently every evening. Most mornings and a couple of afternoons each week there are chamber concerts and recitals. A military tattoo takes place in front of the Castle every night except Sundays and Thursdays, at varying times, and on some days can be seen at 11 P. M., after other performances are over. The Film Festival and a Braque Exhibition continue throughout the three weeks.

It is barely possible to do the festival adequately in less than a week. A well-chosen, if culturally indigestible, three days could just include two concerts, visits to ballet and opera, the military tattoo, the Braque Exhibition, a film and at least one side trip from Edinburgh.

Evening Events

Here, as guide to the choice of time for a visit, are the major evening events:

Week beginning Aug. 19:

Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, Sadler's Wells Ballet, Hamburg State Opera, "Under Milk Wood," by Dylan Thomas; "Pleasure of Scotland" (an entertainment); "The Anatomist," by James Bridie.

Week beginning Aug. 26:

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sadler's Wells Ballet, Hamburg State Opera, Piccolo Teatro of Milan, Stratford Ontario Festival Company, "The Anatomist."

Week beginning Sept. 2:

London Mozart Players, Vienna

from 42 cents to $2.80. A seat at the tattoo costs around 50 cents and $1.40.

Tickets obtained, the intending visitor can proceed to book accommodations, and here the problem is considerably less acute. The Festival Society has got the situation so well taped that no one is ever turned away or stranded during the festival season. In addition to the usual hotel and boarding house accommodation (bed and breakfast, approximately $2.50, without bath, to $8.40 with bath, per head per day), there are double and single rooms in University residences (bed, breakfast and dinner, $3), and bed and breakfast in private homes, $1.75 up).

This last type of accommodation grows increasingly popular with overseas visitors, as the private people, not ters, as for tickets, can be made on special forms available from the American Express or Cook's.

For those who are making Edinburgh a center, and taking in only a few of the programs, rather than conscientiously attending all possible performances, there is much to see in and around the capital. Edinburgh itself unfolds as students usually p... which may ran... tragedy to sh... ern revue. ... the Caledo... ish and ... dances.

Eati... restaurant... up to adequate standards. Mo... Scottish atmosphe... whether haggis or ...

as Oban and the Western Highlands, Loch Lomond and the Trossachs, Ayr and the Burns Country, Abbotsford and the Scott Country, or Glamis Castle, early home of Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother.

Transportation between London and Edinburgh is good. Air ... city center to city center, ... 4½ hours. On the rail... are overnight serv... sleeping cars in both ...

...or worship: anyone with ... blood in ... portu... his

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
CLIPPING BUREAU
Street - New York

Showtime Writers Kept Busy On Scores Inclu

PIX P

Broadway showtime writers are keeping a tight grip on their property. Latest writers hold of complete works is the retaining of original cast album royalty control over the theirs share in the disk albums. There have been instances in the past where the deletions shut out the usual gravy from the original cast set album rights. Lately, however, the deletions have been in the album backers' favor. There have been instances where the deletions have been in the album backers' favor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 27,844

AUG 18 1956

Brass Ensemble To Perform At Edinburgh Festival Aug. 28

The Boston Brass Ensemble, composed of eight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of its first trumpeter, Roger Voisin, will give a concert of its own, during the Boston Symphony's five-day engagement at the Edinburgh Festival.

At 11 a.m. in the Scottish capital's Freemason Hall, on Tuesday, Aug. 28, Mr. Voisin and Armando Ghitalla, trumpets; Harold Meek and Paul Keaney, horns; Kauko Kahila, trombone; Josef Orosz, baritone; Kilton V. Smith, tuba, with William Gibson, trombone, assisting, will perform a program of five works dating from the late 16th century to modern times.

Organized in 1952

The Boston Brass Ensemble was organized in the summer of 1952 by Roger Voisin because there was a need for a representative brass group in Boston. A vast amount of ... had accumulated through the years, but had few outlets to the public. For many years in the U.S., Chicago and New York were the only cities which had a professional ensemble of this nature.

Mr. Voisin, leader of the Boston Brass Ensemble, is the son of a former member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. When he joined the orchestra at the age of 16, he became its all-time youngest performer. He has been featured soloist on many recordings of the orchestra, and is on the faculty of the Boston Symphony's summer music school, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood and at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

Armando Ghitalla joined the Boston Symphony five years ago, and has been trumpet soloist of its Boston Pops Orchestra since 1952. He is a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music in New York and played first trumpet with the New York City Opera Company in Houston.

The Program

The complete program:

Canzon Septimi Toni	Giovanni Gabrieli (late 16th Century)
Toccata	Aurelio Bonelli (1600)
Sonata	Francis Poulenc (1922)
Quintet in B flat	Robert Sanders (1948)
Brass Suite	Nicolai Berezowsky (1942)

[55]

10th Int'l Edin... With Brit. Ro...

Boston Symphony

10th Int'l Edinburgh Fest

Continued from page 2

rives. A series of concerts is skedded for the 3,000-seat Usher Hall. Soloists with the orch are Isaac Stern, Robert Casadesus and Clifford Curzon. Canada's first contribution to the Edinburgh junket is on the legit side. The Stratford (Ont.) Festival Co, is set for appearances at the Assembly Hall apron-stage theatre during second and third weeks in "Henry V," by Shakespeare, and Sophocles's "Oedipus Rex," the W. B. Yeats version. Tyrone Guthrie has directed "Oedipus Rex" for playing in masks, with settings for this (and for "Henry V") by Tanya Moiseiwitch.

12 Showings of 'Henry V'

Festival audiences will see 12 performances of "Henry V" and only four of "Oedipus Rex." By coincidence, the Canadian entry in the simultaneous Edinburgh International Film Fest (a more vivid cinematic event this August than in previous years), is a film version of the Tyrone Guthrie production of "Oedipus Rex."

Major dramatic interest has centered on the Henry Sherek-H. M. Tennent production of Dylan Thomas's "Under Milk Wood," which has its stage preem at the Lyceum Theatre tonight (Tues.). This is Dylan Thomas's last work, and was first broadcast on the BBC's arty Third Program in January, 1954. It won the Italia Prize in that year.

Italian drama is also, like Canada's, making an Edinburgh Fest bow. The Piccolo Teatro of Milan will present Goldoni's comedy "Arlecchino" for one week, and a play by Pirandello, "Questa Sera si Recita a Soggetta" (Tonight We Improvise).

George Bernard Shaw Tribute

As a George Bernard Shaw tribute in the G. B. S. centenary year, London impresario Henry Sherek is presenting, for the last week of the festival "Fanny's First Play," preceded by "Village Wooing." Casts include leading British thespers Michael Denison, Brenda Bruce and Jacqueline Mackenzie, the last-named a Scot gal who has been making a name.

On the unofficial or "fringe" list of legit events, Donald Wolfit, stalwart English actor, has opened in the Lauriston Hall in "The Strong Are Lonely." This is adopted from the original of Fritz Hochwalder by Eva Le Gallienne, daughter of the poet Richard Le Gallienne.

Play, already presented in New York, Paris and in European cities, was staged at the Piccadilly Theatre, London, last November. Plot ... between the Jesuits and the King of Spain.

Sonia Dresdel, leading British actress, also pops up on the Fest "fringe." She leads the Fraser Neal Players in the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. Theatre in three works. First is a version by Max Faber of Strindberg's "Froken Julie" ('Miss Julia'), about a neurotic girl. It is preceded by the Cocteau curtain-raiser, "La Voix Humaine." Trio will be completed Sept. 3 by "Springtime of Others," a 30-year-old play by Jean-Jacques Bernard. More legit fodder is available in the Phoenix Group presentation, of "Samson Agonistes," Milton's drama in verse in the Greek style. A distinguished company includes Catherine Lacey, John Westbrook and George Hagen.

Auld Lang Syne Revue

Opening Festival production, under official aegis, was an Auld Lang Syne revue, "Pleasure of Scotland," with singers, dancers, narrators, balladeers and bagpipers. This takes form of a large-scale ceilidh (Gaelic for Scotch party or night-out), an interpretation of authentic living arts of Scot music and dance, with Jameson Clark, radio and tv commentator, doing the narrating.

For after-the-show diversion three revues are offered this Festival. "Reprise," staged nightly through midnight at the Palladium vaudery, comprises top items from successful London revues like "Lyric Revue," "Intimacy at 8:30," "High Spirits," "After the Show" and "Slings and Arrows." Leonard Urry is presenting this Peter Myers selection for three weeks, cast including revue artistes Fenella Fielding, Bernard Hunter, Tom Criddle, Patricia Cree, Susan Denny and Susan Pardone. Oxford Theatre Group is staging a revue in the historic Gullan's Close. Another college group also will present late-night entertainment.

Other non-legit highlights of the 1956 Festival include offerings by Sadler's Wells Ballet, the Hamburg State Opera, the Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, and the British Royal Philharmonic Orch. Other groups taking part are the London Mozart Players, Scottish National Orch, BBC Scottish Orch, and the National Youth Orch of Great Britain.

Austria is represented by the famous Vienna Hofmusikkapelle, paying its first visit to Britain. Hofmusikkapelle is a combination of members of the Vienna State Opera Orch (Vienna Philharmonic Orch), members of the Vienna State Opera Chorus and the Vienna Boys' Choir. Hofmusikkapelle is rarely heard outside of Vienna. Deal to play at the Edinburgh 1956 junket was clinched after a plane flight to Vienna by Robert Ponsonby, of the Edinburgh Fest.

New High in Advance Sales

Booking for the scores of events this year reached a new high. Already value of tickets sold is about $15,000 higher than at this time last year. Biggest demand has come from the U. S. with orders

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from

The Birmingham Post

Date.....

(SEE INFORMATION OVERLEAF)

Radio—TV Preview

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

4767

By Our Correspondent

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will be taking part in the Edinburgh Festival next week and listeners and viewers will be able to hear several of the concerts. The orchestra is making a five-week European tour to mark the end of its 75th anniversary season. The itinerary includes a short tour of the U.S.S.R. and finishes with two concerts in London.

Part of the concert to be given in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, will be seen on B.B.C. television on Tuesday. The soloist will be Isaac Stern who will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was born in Strasburg in 1891, and at one time led the famous Gewandhaus Orchestra. He went to the Boston Orchestra in 1949, and has made appearances with the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra in this country.

Isaac Stern was born in Russia in 1920 and his parents moved to San Francisco when he was an infant. At the age of six he began to study the piano and changed to the violin when he was eight. He has played in many countries, undertaking a world tour in 1954. Earlier this year he made a four-week tour of the U.S.S.R. where he was enthusiastically received.

Two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relayed in the Third Programme. At the first, on Sunday, works by Haydn, Walter Piston, Strauss and Dukas will be played, and the programme of the second concert on Wednesday will consist of works by Brahms, Ravel and Strauss, and Robert Casadesus will be the soloist.

The Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Sir John Barbirolli, is appearing at the Promenade Concerts, and Friday's concert will be relayed from the Royal Albert Hall in the Third Programme. The soloists will be Endre Wolf (violin) and Andre Navarra (cello).

Andre Navarra is a professor of the cello at the Conservatoire National de Musique in Paris. He made his first appearance in England at the Cheltenham Festival in 1950.

On Sunday in B.B.C. television Concert Hour Andre Navarra is the soloist with the B.B.C. Northern Orchestra, conducted by George Tzipine. He will play the Schumann Cello Concerto. The orchestral works will include the overture A Roman Carnival by Berlioz; Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune by Debussy, and the scherzo by Paul Dukas, L'Apprenti Sorcier.

A Leading French Authority

Georges Tzipine was born in Paris in 1907. He studied the violin at the Conservatoire there and soon reached virtuoso standard. He is considered a leading authority on French contemporary music and during October he will be conducting the National Orchestra in Paris at four public concerts on the first anniversary of the death of Arthur Honneger, when the programmes will include all this composer's five symphonies.

The popular Max Jaffa Trio makes another appearance in Music at Ten on Sunday.

Peter Yorke and His Orchestra are featured in Summer Serenade on B.B.C. television on Wednesday. Lisbeth Webb, who was married a few days ago to Col. Guy Campbell, chief of the British Military Mission in Libya, will return from her honeymoon to sing in this show.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

AUG 1956

Unfamiliar Music from Edinburgh

—introduced by MAURICE LINDSAY

FROM time to time, voices are raised in protest against the conservative nature of the programmes at the Edinburgh Festival: voices invariably belonging to people who do not have to cope with the balancing of box-office returns and expenditure.

However, the three orchestral concerts which are being broadcast in the Third Programme this week (Sunday, Wednesday, and Friday) each have unfamiliar items to offer. On Friday the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain, under Walter Susskind, are giving the comparatively little-known but delightful Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Bassoon, Violin, Cello, and Orchestra of Haydn. On Wednesday the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux are playing an 'American Overture' by Isadore Freed, while, on Sunday, under Charles Munch, they are giving the first European performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6.

The fact that Freed will be a new name for most, and Piston little more than a name, focuses attention on our curious, relative ignorance of contemporary American music on this side of the Atlantic. American music-lovers have long since been made familiar with the major works of Vaughan Williams, Walton and, to a les extent, Britten, by means of British long-play discs, apart from actual performances of music of these composers. But of America's b known living composers, only Aaron Copla has so far made any considerable impact o here. (I am not forgetting Samuel Barber; his British popularity, after all, rests on short movement!)

Yet to Americans, Piston is a consider contemporary figure. He was born at Rockla Maine, in January 1894, and devoted his early studies to drawing and painting. Caught up in the first world war, he joined the Navy and played the saxophone in a naval band. Then in 1920, he went to Harvard as a freshman. Four years later he came over to Paris, where he studied with Nadia Boulanger. When he returned to America in 1926, he was appointed to the Music Faculty at his Alma Mater, becoming its first Professor of Music in 1944. His influence as a teacher has thus been at least as noticeable in America as his influence as a composer.

Piston's style is a combination of logic and an astringent yet delicate lyricism, allied to considerable linear contrapuntal strength. If

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
THE
West London Observer
HAMMERSMITH, LONDON, W.6

Date 24 AUG 1956

Gramophone Society's orchestral evening

4767

The last meeting of the Hammersmith Gramophone Society opened with Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2, introduced by the Society's Chairman, Mr. S. Bloomer.

Soloist was Artur Rubinstein, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch. The concerto is a mature work, for the most part lyrical and reflective, and Brahms well deserved to follow Beethoven as the idol of critics and public alike.

The second half of the programme, introduced by Mr. M. Clark, was a selection of mainly orchestral records including Mozart's Magic Flute overture, Adagio for Strings by Barber and a pre-view of the next meeting with a suite of music from 'Carmen'.

The Society's next meeting will be on August 31, at 8 p.m. at Westcott Lodge, when Mr. E. Snell will present a shortened version of Bizet's opera 'Carmen'.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
CHIGWELL TIMES
& WEST ESSEX STAR
167, HIGH RD., LOUGHTON, Essex.

Date.....

Boston Symphony Orchestra

4767

Part of the concert given in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Charles Munch), on Tuesday, August 28, will be seen on Television. The soloist is Isaac Stern who will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto. This is the second time that the conductor and violinist have been seen together in an Edinburgh Festival concert from the Usher Hall. Two years ago they were televised with the Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise, playing Prokofiev's first Violin Concerto.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is making a five-week European tour which marks the end of its seventy-fifth anniversary season The itinerary includes a short tour of the U.S.S.R. and finishes with two concerts in London.

Charles Munch, now the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where Koussevitzky made his great reputation, was born in Strasbourg in 1891, and at one time led the famous Gewandhaus Orchestra. He went to the Boston Orchestra in 1949, and has made appearances with the BBC Symphony Orchestra in this country.

Isaac Stern was born in Russia in 1920 and his parents moved to San Francisco when he was one At the age of six he began to study the piano, and he changed to the violin when he was eight. He has played in many countries, undertaking a world tour in 1954. Earlier this year he made a four-week tour of the U.S.S.R., where he was enthusiastically received.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from
THE IRAQ TIMES
BAGHDAD

Date _____

Edinbu rgh Festival of music, drama

4767

2,000 ARTISTS

Edinburgh, Wednesday

The 10th Edinburgh Festival which opened on Sunday is expected to attract a quarter million visitors to the Scottish capital between now and September 8.

Two thousand artists were listed in the programme in addition to those taking part in "fringe" events—independent ventures which are often most rewarding.

Tickets valued at £138,000 have been sold for 164 official performances ranging from concerts by the Royal Philharmonic and Boston Symphony Orchestras to an exhibition of paintings by Braque; or from the stage version of Dylan Thomas's radio play "Under the Milk Wood" to Stratford (Ontario) players who will present Shakespeare's "Henry V" and "Oedipus Rex" of Sophocles on the stage of the Assembly Hall.

The Hamburg State Opera occupies the stage of Kings Theatre this year and Milan's famous Teatro Piccolo is anticipated with keen interest. The Sadlers Wells Ballet and Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, Vienna's Hofmusikkapelle and "Fanny's First Play" (in honour of Bernard Shaw's Centenary) are among the other attractions.

Solo artists include Dame Edith Sitwell, Ernest Von Dohnanyi, Irmgard Segfried, Robert Casadesus, Isaac Stern and Dame Myra Hess.

The Festival opened with a majestic performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony given by Sir Thomas Beecham and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, with the Royal visitors among the audience.

On Monday the rush of events began and the Queen spent a day of a typical Festival visitor when she embarked upon a 13-hour programme beginning with the art exhibition and taking in the film show. "Magic Flute" given by the Hamburg State Opera and the military tatto, which will attract thousands nightly to the floodlit esplanade of the Edinburgh Castle.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

kely to capture our to stimulate and

ed in three Home week. On Sunday
rs Beethoven's last
, 110, and 111. For he highlight of the y and Friday morn-
leus String Quartet,

in G minor, K.516,
of his father, and
s, is balanced in the uintet in D, K.593,
the E flat Quintet
of a musical friend, s.

String Quartet—Op. 77 No. 1—makes up the other morning programme with Beethoven's String Quintet in C, Op. 29. This charming, rarely-heard work was published by Breitkopf and Härtel in 1802. The manuscript was mysteriously stolen in Vienna, however, and shortly afterwards Artaria brought out a pirated edition. Beethoven accused him, along with another man subsequently vindicated, of stealing the manuscript. Artaria took Beethoven to court and though the composer lost the action, he still refused to withdraw the accusation. In the end, Artaria forgave Beethoven, who promised to write him a further String Quintet—which he failed to complete! Seldom indeed can there have been so much bother about such innocent and sunny music.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

8.25 Tenth Edinburgh International Festival

Aug 28

BEETHOVEN
Violin Concerto in D played by Isaac Stern (violin)
and the
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor, Charles Munch

Part of a concert given in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Presented for television by Noble Wilson

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from

The Birmingham Post

Date.....

(SEE INFORMATION OVERLEAF)

Radio—TV Preview

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

By Our Correspondent

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will be taking part in the Edinburgh Festival next week and listeners and viewers will be able to hear several of the concerts. The orchestra is making a five-week European tour to mark the end of its 75th anniversary season. The itinerary includes a short tour of the U.S.S.R. and finishes with two concerts in London.

Part of the concert to be given in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, will be seen on B.B.C. television on Tuesday. The soloist will be Isaac Stern who will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was born in Strasburg in 1891, and at one time led the famous Gewandhaus Orchestra. He went to the Boston Orchestra in 1949, and has made appearances with the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra in this country.

Isaac Stern was born in Russia in 1920 and his parents moved to San Francisco when he was an infant. At the age of six he began to study the piano and changed to the violin when he was eight. He has played in many countries, undertaking a world tour in 1954. Earlier this year he made a four-week tour of the U.S.S.R. where he was enthusiastically received.

Two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relayed in the Third Programme. At the first, on Sunday, works by Haydn, Walter Piston, Strauss and Dukas will be played, and the programme of the second concert on Wednesday will consist of works by Brahms, Ravel and Strauss, and Robert Casadesus will be the soloist.

The Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Sir John Barbirolli, is appearing at the Promenade Concerts, and Friday's concert will be relayed from the Royal Albert Hall in the Third Programme. The soloists will be Endre Wolf (violin) and Andre Navarra (cello).

Andre Navarra is a professor of the cello at the Conservatoire National de Musique in Paris. He made his first appearance in England at the Cheltenham Festival in 1950.

On Sunday in B.B.C. television Concert Hour Andre Navarra is the soloist with the B.B.C. Northern Orchestra, conducted by George Tzipine. He will play the Schumann Cello Concerto. The orchestral works will include the overture A Roman Carnival by Berlioz; Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune by Debussy, and the scherzo by Paul Dukas, L'Apprenti Sorcier.

A Leading French Authority

Georges Tzipine was born in Paris in 1907. He studied the violin at the Conservatoire there and soon reached virtuoso standard. He is considered a leading authority on French contemporary music and during October he will be conducting the National Orchestra in Paris at four public concerts on the first anniversary of the death of Arthur Honneger, when the programmes will include all this composer's five symphonies.

The popular Max Jaffa Trio makes another appearance in Music at Ten on Sunday.

Peter Yorke and His Orchestra are featured in Summer Serenade on B.B.C. television on Wednesday. Lisbeth Webb, who was married a few days ago to Col. Guy Campbell, chief of the British Military Mission in Libya, will return from her honeymoon to sing in this show.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
THE
West London Observer
HAMMERSMITH, LONDON, W.6

Date 24 AUG 1956

Gramophone Society's orchestral evening

The last meeting of the Hammersmith Gramophone Society opened with Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2, introduced by the Society's Chairman, Mr. S. Bloomer.

Soloist was Artur Rubinstein, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch. The concerto is a mature work, for the most part lyrical and reflective, and Brahms well deserved to follow Beethoven as the idol of critics and public alike.

The second half of the programme, introduced by Mr. M. Clark, was a selection of mainly orchestral records including Mozart's Magic Flute overture, Adagio for Strings by Barber and a pre-view of the next meeting with a suite of music from 'Carmen'.

The Society's next meeting will be on August 31, at 8 p.m. at Westcott Lodge, when Mr. E. Snell will present a shortened version of Bizet's opera 'Carmen'.

Extract from
CHIGWELL TIMES
& WEST ESSEX STAR
167, HIGH RD., LOUGHTON, Essex.

Date.....

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from
THE IRAQ TIMES
BAGHDAD

Date _____

Edinburgh Festival of music, drama

2,000 ARTISTS

Edinburgh, Wednesday

The 10th Edinburgh Festival which opened on Sunday is expected to attract a quarter million visitors to the Scottish capital between now and September 8.

Two thousand artists were listed in the programme in addition to those taking part in "fringe" events—independent ventures which are often most rewarding.

Tickets valued at £138,000 have been sold for 164 official performances ranging from concerts by the Royal Philharmonic and Boston Symphony Orchestras to an exhibition of paintings by Braque; or from the stage version of Dylan Thomas's radio play "Under the Milk Wood" to Stratford (Ontario) players who will present Shakespeare's "Henry V" and "Oedipus Rex" of Sophocles on the stage of the Assembly Hall.

The Hamburg State Opera occupies the stage of Kings Theatre this year and Milan's famous Teatro Piccolo is anticipated with keen interest. The Sadlers Wells Ballet and Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, Vienna's Hofmusikkapelle and "Fanny's First Play" (in honour of Bernard Shaw's Centenary) are among the other attractions.

Solo artists include Dame Edith Sitwell, Ernest Von Dohnanyi, Irmgard Segfried, Robert Casadesus, Isaac Stern and Dame Myra Hess.

The Festival opened with a majestic performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony given by Sir Thomas Beecham and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, with the Royal visitors among the audience.

On Monday the rush of events began and the Queen spent a day of a typical Festival visitor when she embarked upon a 13-hour programme beginning with the art exhibition and taking in the film show. "Magic Flute" given by the Hamburg State Opera and the military tatto, which will attract thousands nightly to the floodlit esplanade of the Edinburgh Castle.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

24 AUG 1956

Unfamiliar Music from Edinburgh

—introduced by MAURICE LINDSAY

FROM time to time, voices are raised in protest against the conservative nature of the programmes at the Edinburgh Festival: voices invariably belonging to people who do not have to cope with the balancing of box-office returns and expenditure.

However, the three orchestral concerts which are being broadcast in the Third Programme this week (Sunday, Wednesday, and Friday) each have unfamiliar items to offer. On Friday the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain, under Walter Susskind, are giving the comparatively little-known but delightful Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Bassoon, Violin, Cello, and Orchestra of Haydn. On Wednesday the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux are playing an 'American Overture' by Isadore Freed, while, on Sunday, under Charles Munch, they are giving the first European performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6.

The fact that Freed will be a new name for most, and Piston little more than a name, focuses attention on our curious, relative ignorance of contemporary American music on this side of the Atlantic. American music-lovers have long since been made familiar with the major works of Vaughan Williams, Walton and, to a lesser extent, Britten, by means of British long-playing discs, apart from actual performances of the music of these composers. But of America's best known living composers, only Aaron Copland has so far made any considerable impact over here. (I am not forgetting Samuel Barber; but his British popularity, after all, rests on one short movement!)

Yet to Americans, Piston is a considerable contemporary figure. He was born at Rockland, Maine, in January 1894, and devoted his early studies to drawing and painting. Caught up in the first world war, he joined the Navy and played the saxophone in a naval band. Then in 1920, he went to Harvard as a freshman. Four years later he came over to Paris, where he studied with Nadia Boulanger. When he returned to America in 1926, he was appointed to the Music Faculty at his Alma Mater, becoming its first Professor of Music in 1944. His influence as a teacher has thus been at least as noticeable in America as his influence as a composer.

Piston's style is a combination of logic and an astringent yet delicate lyricism, allied to considerable linear contrapuntal strength. If these do not seem qualities likely to capture our hearts, at least they ought to stimulate and sustain our interest.

Chamber music is featured in three Home Service broadcasts during the week. On Sunday afternoon, Myra Hess plays Beethoven's last three Piano Sonatas, Op. 109, 110, and 111. For many, her recital may be the highlight of the whole Festival. On Thursday and Friday mornings, we shall hear the Amadeus String Quartet, with Cecil Aronowitz.

Mozart's String Quintet in G minor, K.516, written just after the death of his father, and one of music's topmost peaks, is balanced in the first programme with his Quintet in D, K.593, written in 1790, along with the E flat Quintet 'at the earnest solicitation of a musical friend,' as a note on the score tells us.

On Friday a late Haydn String Quartet—Op. 77 No. 1—makes up the other morning programme with Beethoven's String Quintet in C, Op. 29. This charming, rarely-heard work was published by Breitkopf and Härtel in 1802. The manuscript was mysteriously stolen in Vienna, however, and shortly afterwards Artaria brought out a pirated edition. Beethoven accused him, along with another man subsequently vindicated, of stealing the manuscript. Artaria took Beethoven to court and though the composer lost the action, he still refused to withdraw the accusation. In the end, Artaria forgave Beethoven, who promised to write him a further String Quintet—which he failed to complete! Seldom indeed can there have been so much bother about such innocent and sunny music.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

24 AUG 1956

8.0 Edinburgh International Festival

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor, Charles Munch
From the Usher Hall, Edinburgh
Part 1
Symphony No. 102, in B flat.....Haydn
Symphony No. 6.....Piston
(first performance in Europe)

Maurice Lindsay writes on page 4

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from

The Birmingham Post

Date.....

(SEE INFORMATION OVERLEAF)

Radio—TV Preview

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

By Our Correspondent

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will be taking part in the Edinburgh Festival next week and listeners and viewers will be able to hear several of the concerts. The orchestra is making a five-week European tour to mark the end of its 75th anniversary season. The itinerary includes a short tour of the U.S.S.R. and finishes with two concerts in London.

Part of the concert to be given in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, will be seen on B.B.C. television on Tuesday. The soloist will be Isaac Stern who will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was born in Strasburg in 1891, and at one time led the famous Gewandhaus Orchestra. He went to the Boston Orchestra in 1949, and has made appearances with the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra in this country.

Isaac Stern was born in Russia in 1920 and his parents moved to San Francisco when he was an infant. At the age of six he began to study the piano and changed to the violin when he was eight. He has played in many countries, undertaking a world tour in 1954. Earlier this year he made a four-week tour of the U.S.S.R. where he was enthusiastically received.

Two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relayed in the Third Programme. At the first, on Sunday, works by Haydn, Walter Piston, Strauss and Dukas will be played, and the programme of the second concert on Wednesday will consist of works by Brahms, Ravel and Strauss, and Robert Casadesus will be the soloist.

The Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Sir John Barbirolli, is appearing at the Promenade Concerts, and Friday's concert will be relayed from the Royal Albert Hall in the Third Programme. The soloists will be Endre Wolf (violin) and Andre Navarra (cello).

Andre Navarra is a professor of the cello at the Conservatoire National de Musique in Paris. He made his first appearance in England at the Cheltenham Festival in 1950.

On Sunday in B.B.C. television Concert Hour Andre Navarra is the soloist with the B.B.C. Northern Orchestra, conducted by George Tzipine. He will play the Schumann Cello Concerto. The orchestral works will include the overture A Roman Carnival by Berlioz; Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune by Debussy, and the scherzo by Paul Dukas, L'Apprenti Sorcier.

A Leading French Authority

Georges Tzipine was born in Paris in 1907. He studied the violin at the Conservatoire there and soon reached virtuoso standard. He is considered a leading authority on French contemporary music and during October he will be conducting the National Orchestra in Paris at four public concerts on the first anniversary of the death of Arthur Honneger, when the programmes will include all this composer's five symphonies.

The popular Max Jaffa Trio makes another appearance in Music at Ten on Sunday.

Peter Yorke and His Orchestra are featured in Summer Serenade on B.B.C. television on Wednesday. Lisbeth Webb, who was married a few days ago to Col. Guy Campbell, chief of the British Military Mission in Libya, will return from her honeymoon to sing in this show.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
THE
West London Observer
HAMMERSMITH, LONDON, W.6

Date 24 AUG 1956

Gramophone Society's orchestral evening

The last meeting of the Hammersmith Gramophone Society opened with Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2, introduced by the Society's Chairman, Mr. S. Bloomer.

Soloist was Artur Rubinstein, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch. The concerto is a mature work, for the most part lyrical and reflective, and Brahms well deserved to follow Beethoven as the idol of critics and public alike.

The second half of the programme, introduced by Mr. M. Clark, was a selection of mainly orchestral records including Mozart's Magic Flute overture, Adagio for Strings by Barber and a pre-view of the next meeting with a suite of music from 'Carmen'.

The Society's next meeting will be on August 31, at 8 p.m. at Westcott Lodge, when Mr. E. Snell will present a shortened version of Bizet's opera 'Carmen'.

Extract from
CHIGWELL TIMES
& WEST ESSEX STAR
167, HIGH RD., LOUGHTON, Essex.

Date.....

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from
THE IRAQ TIMES
BAGHDAD

Date

Edinburgh Festival of music, drama

2,000 ARTISTS

Edinburgh, Wednesday

The 10th Edinburgh Festival which opened on Sunday is expected to attract a quarter million visitors to the Scottish capital between now and September 8.

Two thousand artists were listed in the programme in addition to those taking part in "fringe" events—independent ventures which are often most rewarding.

Tickets valued at £138,000 have been sold for 164 official performances ranging from concerts by the Royal Philharmonic and Boston Symphony Orchestras to an exhibition of paintings by Braque; or from the stage version of Dylan Thomas's radio play "Under the Milk Wood" to Stratford (Ontario) players who will present Shakespeare's "Henry V" and "Oedipus Rex" of Sophocles on the stage of the Assembly Hall.

The Hamburg State Opera occupies the stage of Kings Theatre this year and Milan's famous Teatro Piccolo is anticipated with keen interest. The Sadlers Wells Ballet and Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, Vienna's Hofmusikkapelle and "Fanny's First Play" (in honour of Bernard Shaw's Centenary) are among the other attractions.

Solo artists include Dame Edith Sitwell, Ernest Von Dohnanyi, Irmgard Segfried, Robert Casadesus, Isaac Stern and Dame Myra Hess.

The Festival opened with a majestic performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony given by Sir Thomas Beecham and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, with the Royal visitors among the audience.

On Monday the rush of events began and the Queen spent a day of a typical Festival visitor when she embarked upon a 13-hour programme beginning with the art exhibition and taking in the film show, "Magic Flute" given by the Hamburg State Opera and the military tatto, which will attract thousands nightly to the floodlit esplanade of the Edinburgh Castle.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

AUG 1956

Unfamiliar Music from Edinburgh

—introduced by MAURICE LINDSAY

FROM time to time, voices are raised in protest against the conservative nature of the programmes at the Edinburgh Festival: voices invariably belonging to people who do not have to cope with the balancing of box-office returns and expenditure.

However, the three orchestral concerts which are being broadcast in the Third Programme this week (Sunday, Wednesday, and Friday) each have unfamiliar items to offer. On Friday the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain, under Walter Susskind, are giving the comparatively little-known but delightful Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Bassoon, Violin, Cello, and Orchestra of Haydn. On Wednesday the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux are playing an 'American Overture' by Isadore Freed, while, on Sunday, under Charles Munch, they are giving the first European performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6.

The fact that Freed will be a new name for most, and Piston little more than a name, focuses attention on our curious, relative ignorance of contemporary American music on this side of the Atlantic. American music-lovers have long since been made familiar with the major works of Vaughan Williams, Walton and, to a lesser extent, Britten, by means of British long-playing discs, apart from actual performances of the music of these composers. But of America's best known living composers, only Aaron Copland has so far made any considerable impact over here. (I am not forgetting Samuel Barber; but his British popularity, after all, rests on one short movement!)

Yet to Americans, Piston is a considerable contemporary figure. He was born at Rockland, Maine, in January 1894, and devoted his early studies to drawing and painting. Caught up in the first world war, he joined the Navy and played the saxophone in a naval band. Then in 1920, he went to Harvard as a freshman. Four years later he came over to Paris, where he studied with Nadia Boulanger. When he returned to America in 1926, he was appointed to the Music Faculty at his Alma Mater, becoming its first Professor of Music in 1944. His influence as a teacher has thus been at least as noticeable in America as his influence as a composer.

Piston's style is a combination of logic and an astringent yet delicate lyricism, allied to considerable linear contrapuntal strength. If these do not seem qualities likely to capture our hearts, at least they ought to stimulate and sustain our interest.

Chamber music is featured in three Home Service broadcasts during the week. On Sunday afternoon, Myra Hess plays Beethoven's last three Piano Sonatas, Op. 109, 110, and 111. For many, her recital may be the highlight of the whole Festival. On Thursday and Friday mornings, we shall hear the Amadeus String Quartet, with Cecil Aronowitz.

Mozart's String Quintet in G minor, K.516, written just after the death of his father, and one of music's topmost peaks, is balanced in the first programme with his Quintet in D, K.593, written in 1790, along with the E flat Quintet 'at the earnest solicitation of a musical friend,' as a note on the score tells us.

On Friday a late Haydn String Quartet—Op. 77 No. 1—makes up the other morning programme with Beethoven's String Quintet in C, Op. 29. This charming, rarely-heard work was published by Breitkopf and Härtel in 1802. The manuscript was mysteriously stolen in Vienna, however, and shortly afterwards Artaria brought out a pirated edition. Beethoven accused him, along with another man subsequently vindicated, of stealing the manuscript. Artaria took Beethoven to court and though the composer lost the action, he still refused to withdraw the accusation. In the end, Artaria forgave Beethoven, who promised to write him a further String Quintet—which he failed to complete! Seldom indeed can there have been so much bother about such innocent and sunny music.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

1956

8.0 Edinburgh International Festival

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT

Robert Casadesus (piano)
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conducted by Pierre Monteux

Part 1

American Overture.....Isadore Freed
Symphony No. 3, in F.....Brahms

in 'MARCHING SONG'
by John Whiting
Produced by Royston Morley
Cast in order of speaking:
Harry Lancaster.....Stanley Maxted
Dido Morgan.....Miranda Connell
(Continued in next column)

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from

The Birmingham Post

Date.....

(SEE INFORMATION OVERLEAF)

Radio—TV Preview

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

By Our Correspondent

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will be taking part in the Edinburgh Festival next week and listeners and viewers will be able to hear several of the concerts. The orchestra is making a five-week European tour to mark the end of its 75th anniversary season. The itinerary includes a short tour of the U.S.S.R. and finishes with two concerts in London.

Part of the concert to be given in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, will be seen on B.B.C. television on Tuesday. The soloist will be Isaac Stern who will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was born in Strasburg in 1891, and at one time led the famous Gewandhaus Orchestra. He went to the Boston Orchestra in 1949, and has made appearances with the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra in this country.

Isaac Stern was born in Russia in 1920 and his parents moved to San Francisco when he was an infant. At the age of six he began to study the piano and changed to the violin when he was eight. He has played in many countries, undertaking a world tour in 1954. Earlier this year he made a four-week tour of the U.S.S.R. where he was enthusiastically received.

Two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relayed in the Third Programme. At the first, on Sunday, works by Haydn, Walter Piston, Strauss and Dukas will be played, and the programme of the second concert on Wednesday will consist of works by Brahms, Ravel and Strauss, and Robert Casadesus will be the soloist.

The Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Sir John Barbirolli, is appearing at the Promenade Concerts, and Friday's concert will be relayed from the Royal Albert Hall in the Third Programme. The soloists will be Endre Wolf (violin) and Andre Navarra (cello).

Andre Navarra is a professor of the cello at the Conservatoire National de Musique in Paris. He made his first appearance in England at the Cheltenham Festival in 1950.

On Sunday in B.B.C. television Concert Hour Andre' Navarra is the soloist with the B.B.C. Northern Orchestra, conducted by George Tzipine. He will play the Schumann Cello Concerto. The orchestral works will include the overture A Roman Carnival by Berlioz; Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune by Debussy, and the scherzo by Paul Dukas, L'Apprenti Sorcier.

A Leading 'French Authority

Georges Tzipine was born in Paris in 1907. He studied the violin at the Conservatoire there and soon reached virtuoso standard. He is considered a leading authority on French contemporary music and during October he will be conducting the National Orchestra in Paris at four public concerts on the first anniversary of the death of Arthur Honneger, when the programmes will include all this composer's five symphonies.

The popular Max Jaffa Trio makes another appearance in Music at Ten on Sunday.

Peter Yorke and His Orchestra are featured in Summer Serenade on B.B.C. television on Wednesday. Lisbeth Webb, who was married a few days ago to Col. Guy Campbell, chief of the British Military Mission in Libya, will return from her honeymoon to sing in this show.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
THE
West London Observer
HAMMERSMITH, LONDON, W.6

Date 24 AUG 1956

Gramophone Society's orchestral evening

The last meeting of the Hammersmith Gramophone Society opened with Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2, introduced by the Society's Chairman, Mr. S. Bloomer.

Soloist was Artur Rubinstein, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch. The concerto is a mature work, for the most part lyrical and reflective, and Brahms well deserved to follow Beethoven as the idol of critics and public alike.

The second half of the programme, introduced by Mr. M. Clark, was a selection of mainly orchestral records including Mozart's Magic Flute overture, Adagio for Strings by Barber and a pre-view of the next meeting with a suite of music from 'Carmen'.

The Society's next meeting will be on August 31, at 8 p.m. at Westcott Lodge, when Mr. E. Snell will present a shortened version of Bizet's opera 'Carmen'.

Extract from
CHIGWELL TIMES
& WEST ESSEX STAR
167, HIGH RD., LOUGHTON, Essex.

Date.....

Boston
ghose sive for e supply is automatically ned to the clocks.

THE GOLDEN VOICE

the inauguration cere-
. In 1936 the Post Office
"The Golden Voice should rtically everlasting," and ty years of service has lised the truth of that ment. Is there another in the whole world which spoken so faithfully and such satisfaction to so y inquirers for the RECT TIME?

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from
THE IRAQ TIMES
BAGHDAD

Date _____

Edinbu rgh Festival of music, drama

4767

2,000 ARTISTS

Edinburgh, Wednesday

The 10th Edinburgh Festival which opened on Sunday is expected to attract a quarter million visitors to the Scottish capital between now and September 8.

Two thousand artists were listed in the programme in addition to those taking part in "fringe" events—independent ventures which are often most rewarding.

Tickets valued at £138,000 have been sold for 164 official performances ranging from concerts by the Royal Philharmonic and Boston Symphony Orchestras to an exhibition of paintings by Braque; or from the stage version of Dylan Thomas's radio play "Under the Milk Wood" to Stratford (Ontario) players who will present Shakespeare's "Henry V" and "Oedipus Rex' of Sophocles [illegible] the Assembly Hall.

The Hamburg State Opera occupies the stage of Kings Theatre this year and Milan's famous Teatro Piccolo is anticipated with keen interest. The Sadlers Wells Ballet and Ram Gopal Indian Ballet, Vienna's Hofmusikkapelle and "Fanny's First Play" (in honour of Bernard Shaw's Centenary) are among the other attractions.

Solo artists include Dame Edith Sitwell, Ernest Von Dohnanyi, Irmgard Segfried, Robert Casadesus, Isaac Stern and Dame Myra Hess.

The Festival opened with a majestic performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony given by Sir Thomas Beecham and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, with the Royal visitors among the audience.

On Monday the rush of events began and the Queen spent a day of a typical Festival visitor when she embarked upon a 13-hour programme beginning with the art exhibition and taking in the film show, "Magic Flute" given by the Hamburg State Opera and the military tatto, which will attract thousands nightly to the floodlit esplanade of the Edinburgh Castle.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

Unfamiliar Music from Edinburgh

—introduced by MAURICE LINDSAY

FROM time to time, voices are raised in protest against the conservative nature of the programmes at the Edinburgh Festival: voices invariably belonging to people who do not have to cope with the balancing of box-office returns and expenditure.

However, the three orchestral concerts which are being broadcast in the Third Programme this week (Sunday, Wednesday, and Friday) each have unfamiliar items to offer. On Friday the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain, under Walter Susskind, are giving the comparatively little-known but delightful Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Bassoon, Violin, Cello, and Orchestra of Haydn. On Wednesday the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux are playing an 'American Overture' by Isadore Freed, while, on Sunday, under Charles Munch, they are giving the first European performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6.

The fact that Freed will be a new name for most, and Piston little more than a name, focuses attention on our curious, relative ignorance of contemporary American music on this side of the Atlantic. American music-lovers have long since been made familiar with the major works of Vaughan Williams, Walton and, to a lesser extent, Britten, by means of British long-playing discs, apart from actual performances of the music of these composers. But of America's best known living composers, only Aaron Copland has so far made any considerable impact over here. (I am not forgetting Samuel Barber; but his British popularity, after all, rests on one short movement!)

Yet to Americans, Piston is a considerable contemporary figure. He was born at Rockland, Maine, in January 1894, and devoted his early studies to drawing and painting. Caught up in the first world war, he joined the Navy and played the saxophone in a naval band. Then in 1920, he went to Harvard as a freshman. Four years later he came over to Paris, where he studied with Nadia Boulanger. When he returned to America in 1926, he was appointed to the Music Faculty at his Alma Mater, becoming its first Professor of Music in 1944. His influence as a teacher has thus been at least as noticeable in America as his influence as a composer.

Piston's style is a combination of logic and an astringent yet delicate lyricism, allied to considerable linear contrapuntal strength. If these do not seem qualities likely to capture our hearts, at least they ought to stimulate and sustain our interest.

Chamber music is featured in three Home Service broadcasts during the week. On Sunday afternoon, Myra Hess plays Beethoven's last three Piano Sonatas, Op. 109, 110, and 111. For many, her recital may be the highlight of the whole Festival. On Thursday and Friday mornings, we shall hear the Amadeus String Quartet, with Cecil Aronowitz.

Mozart's String Quintet in G minor, K.516, written just after the death of his father, and one of music's topmost peaks, is balanced in the first programme with his Quintet in D, K.593, written in 1790, along with the E flat Quintet 'at the earnest solicitation of a musical friend,' as a note on the score tells us.

On Friday a late Haydn String Quartet—Op. 77 No. 1—makes up the other morning programme with Beethoven's String Quintet in C, Op. 29. This charming, rarely-heard work was published by Breitkopf and Härtel in 1802. The manuscript was mysteriously stolen in Vienna, however, and shortly afterwards Artaria brought out a pirated edition. Beethoven accused him, along with another man subsequently vindicated, of stealing the manuscript. Artaria took Beethoven to court and though the composer lost the action, he still refused to withdraw the accusation. In the end, Artaria forgave Beethoven, who promised to write him a further String Quintet—which he failed to complete! Seldom indeed can there have been so much bother about such innocent and sunny music.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Radio Times, London

8.0 Edinburgh Aug 29
International Festival

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT
Robert Casadesus (piano)
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conducted by Pierre Monteux
Part 1
American Overture.....Isadore Freed
Symphony No. 3, in F.....Brahms

in
'MARCHING SONG'
by John Whiting
Produced by Royston Morley
Cast in order of speaking:
Harry Lancaster.....Stanley Maxted
Dido Morgan.....Miranda Connell
(Continued on next column)

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the
EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf.)

MEN AND AFFAIRS

In Scotland on holiday at present is the Lord Mayor of London, Alderman Sir Cuthbert Lowell Ackroyd. He is staying in North Berwick, and next week is to make his first visit to the Edinburgh Festival. In the company of the Lord and Lady Provost and Sir James and Lady Miller he is to attend a number of Festival performances and he will also be a guest at receptions in the City Chambers and the Royal Scottish Academy.

Alderman Sir Cuthbert Ackroyd, the Lord Mayor of London.

Sir Cuthbert will be accompanied by his wife and a son, Christopher Ackroyd.

Their intense programme of Festival viewing starts on Sunday with a visit to the concert being given in the Usher Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On Monday the party will attend the Lyceum to see the Piccolo Teatro, Milan, in "Arlecchino," and on Wednesday, a matinee performance by Sadler's Wells Ballet at the Empire and "The Anatomist" at the Gateway.

On Thursday and Friday they will pay second visits to the Usher Hall and to the ballet, ending a comprehensive tour on Saturday with a visit to the Assembly Hall and the Stratford Ontario Festival Company in "Henry V."

Sir Cuthbert, who is a Yorkshireman, became Lord Mayor last year. His wife is a Scotswoman and is keenly interested in music, being a talented violinist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 104,780
AUG 26 1956

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Edinburgh Evening News

THE PAS

AN EVENING DISPATCH REPORTER'S DIARY

Canada and Italy

AMONG newcomers to Edinburgh's International Festival who will take the stage next week, are the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Stratford (Ontario) Festival Company, and the Piccolo Theatre of Milan.

The Boston Orchestra, which is celebrating its seventy-fifth anniversary, arrived in Cork yesterday, and, after giving a concert there, proceeded to Dublin.

Pierre Monteux, guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of five concerts in Edinburgh will be given in the Usher Hall to-morrow.

The orchestra, which consists of 104 members, will be conducted by its regular conductor, Dr Charles Munch, and a guest conductor, M. Pierre Monteux. Since its foundation in 1881, when Henry L. Higginson, a Boston millionaire, gathered together the best musicians he could obtain, the orchestra has achieved greatness under a succession of brilliant conductors—among them Serge Koussevitsky, who was with it for 25 years.

Included in the programme will be five compositions which were commissioned for this, the seventy-fifth season, and on Thursday a special programme will be given entitled "Homage to Koussevitsky."

The Boston Brass Ensemble, a chamber music group formed by members of the orchestra, will give a concert on Tuesday forenoon in the Freemasons' Hall and will include works by contemporary American composers Robert Sanders and Nicolai Berezowsky.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Reading Standard

LOOK AND LISTEN

WITH "Marching Song" (Sunday night's play on B.B.C. television) John Whiting established himself as one of the most promising of our younger dramatists. Here he presents the dilemma of an ex-general invited to take full responsibility for his country's recent defeat in war, thus absolving the national conscience.

Part of the Edinburgh Festival concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday will be screened. The soloist in Beethoven's Violin Concerto is Isaac Stern and the conductor, Charles Münch.

On Wednesday there is the first of three fortnightly programmes called "Seas and Ships" and based largely on films which Alan Villiers (to command the "Mayflower" replica now building at Brixham) has made during a lifetime of sailing adventures.

On Thursday, Sir Donald Bradman discusses this year's Tests with R. W. V. Robins and expounds his controversial ideas for the improvement of cricket.

Customs and the speeding symphony

CUSTOMS officers examined the instruments and baggage of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the back stage of the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, yesterday while Dame Myra Hess played to a Festival audience in front.

It was the end of the most hectic 32 hours in the orchestra's career . . . 32 hours involving playing in Dublin, flying or sailing to Scotland, and giving their first Festival concert.

Their 85 instruments and baggage came direct by boat to Glasgow to be rushed through by road to the Usher Hall.

So quickly did it move that the Customs sealed the crates and cases to allow it to move on to Edinburgh. Then completed their examinations a few minutes before a last-minute rehearsal.

The orchestra rehearsed, ate a cold buffet in a [illegible] changed into [illegible] and came back to [illegible]

[illegible] assistant manager of [illegible] Mr. G. W. Rector, [illegible] through the rehearsal [illegible] Symphony No. 6. "We [illegible]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Greenock Telegraph

25 AUG 1956

Music

Boston Symphony to Give Concerts in Scotland Today

By RAYMOND MORIN, Telegram Music Critic

One of the criticisms leveled at the Boston Symphony programs at Tanglewood this summer was that they were "dress rehearsals" for the orchestra's European tour, now in progress.

We can't see how the Berkshire audiences were "guinea pigs" simply because the same music was to be repeated thousands of miles away. It's about on a par with the complaint that they were "rehashing" their old Symphony Hall programs. There is always the possibility that different audiences attended the three series.

Much more important is the inclusion of a major orchestral work by an American composer on each of the 27 concerts that the Boston Symphony is giving in Europe.

Series Opens Today

Tonight they begin a series of five concerts in Edinburgh, Scotland. American composers are represented by Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6; Paul Creston's Symphony No. 2; Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode"; Isadore Freed's "Festival Overture"; and Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky."

The purpose, naturally, is to show Europe what Americans are capable of creating orchesthan the one she sported when she sang there two years ago.

"Women in the Bowl audience are no different from women in any other audience," he explains. "Some may have seen Rise two years ago, and remember what she wore. We can't afford to take the chance."

Furthermore, Mr. Surovy's "book" in his wife's first Bowl appearance noted too that her program was "to heavy." "We won't make that mistake again," Mr. Surovy says. "It will be lots of Carmen and Broadway show hits."

By this time Mr. Surovy's file on Miss Stevens must be at least as tall as she is—5 feet, seven inches.

Lapse of Memory

We can't imagine anything less than waves of sympathy being directed at Johnny Desmond when he got bawled up with the words of the "Star Spangled Banner" at t he opening session of the Democratic National Convention.

Having once heard a member of the clergy forget the words to the "Lord's Prayer," we

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Huddersfield Daily Examiner

The Royal Tour

The B.B.C. cameramen have been busy in Scotland recently. They have made a film of the principal events of the Royal Tour of the Western Isles, which will be shown on Sunday evening.

On Tuesday the cameras will be at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, from which part of the Festival concert will be transmitted.

The orchestra is the Boston Symphony and the soloist Isaac Stern, and the two will co-operate in Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

The Boston Orchestra, now seventy-five years old, are playing in Edinburgh "en route" to Russia. Their conductor is Charles Munch, who, being born in Strasbourg in 1891, began his musical career as a German. After Alsace-Lorraine was incorporated in the French Republic he became a Frenchman and two years ago conducted the French Broadcasting Orchestra at Edinburgh.

Munch is now the regular conductor of the Boston Orchestra, with whom Koussevitzky made his great reputation.

EDINBURGH FESTIVAL MOVES INTO SECOND SUCCESS WEEK

(By a Telegraph Writer)

LAUNCHED in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen, the Edinburgh Festival gives every indication of repeating this year the success of previous years.

At the end of the first week it is confidently predicted that the present Festival, tenth in the series, will bring more visitors to Edinburgh than any of the former events.

Widespread interest has been aroused during the Festival's first week by the first stage presentations of the "play for voices" by Dylan Thomas, "Under Milk Wood"; and also by the most Scottish feature of the whole Festival, the entertainment in the Assembly Hall called "Pleasure of Scotland."

Both of these have their last performance tonight and will be replaced next week.

To the Lyceum comes the "Little Theatre" of Milan, presenting two pieces by Goldoni and one by Pirandello; while the Stratford Ontario Festival Company

during the week include the recently-produced "Homage to the Queen," and such old and well-tried favourites as "Coppelia" and the beloved "Lac des Cygnes."

For music-lovers, the Hambourg State Opera continues at the Kings Theatre its presentation of "The Magic Flute" and "Oedipus Rex." The repertoire this week also includes for the first time Strauss's comparatively little - known "Salome."

BOSTON SYMPHONY

At the Usher Hall the principal series of concerts next week will

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the
EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf)

SCRAP THAT WALL,

...ldermen Sir Cuthbert Lowell Ackroyd. He is staying in North Berwick, and next week is to make his first visit to the Edinburgh Festival. In the company of the Lord and Lady Provost and Sir James and Lady Miller he is to attend a number of Festival performances and he will also be a guest at receptions in the City Chambers and the Royal Scottish Academy.

Alderman Sir Cuthbert Ackroyd, the Lord Mayor of London.

Sir Cuthbert will be accompanied by his wife and a son, Christopher Ackroyd.

Their intense programme of Festival viewing starts on Sunday with a visit to the concert being given in the Usher Hall by the ... Orchestra. On Monday the party will attend the Lyceum to see the Piccolo Teatro, Milan, in "Arlecchino," and on Wednesday, a matinee performance by Sadler's Wells Ballet at the Empire and "The Anatomist" at the Gateway.

On Thursday and Friday they will pay second visits to the Usher Hall and to the ballet, ending a comprehensive tour on Saturday with a visit to the Assembly Hall and the Stratford Ontario Festival Company in "Henry V."

Sir Cuthbert, who is a Yorkshireman, became Lord Mayor last year. His wife is a Scotswoman and is keenly interested in music, being a talented violinist.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Reading Standard

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Edinburgh Evening News

THE PAS...

Boston Orchestr... Canada and Italy

AMONG newcomers to Edinburgh's International Festival who will take the stage next week, are the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Stratford (Ontario) Festival Company, and the Piccolo Theatre of Milan.

The Boston Orchestra, which is celebrating its seventy-fifth anniversary, arrived in Cork yesterday, and, after giving a concert there, proceeded to Dublin.

Pierre Monteux, guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of five concerts in Edinburgh will be given in the Usher Hall to-morrow.

The orchestra, which consists of 104 members, will be conducted by its regular conductor, Dr Charles Munch, and a guest conductor, M. Pierre Monteux. Since its foundation in 1881, when Henry L. Higginson, a Boston millionaire, gathered together the best musicians he could obtain, the orchestra has achieved greatness under a succession of brilliant conductors—among them Serge Koussevitsky, who was with it for 25 years.

Included in the programme will be five compositions which were commissioned for this, the seventy-fifth season, and on Thursday a special programme will be given entitled "Homage to Koussevitsky."

The Boston Brass Ensemble, a chamber music group formed by members of the orchestra, will give a concert on Tuesday forenoon in the Freemasons' Hall and will include works by contemporary American composers Robert Sanders and Nicolai Berezowsky.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Greenock Telegraph

25 AUG 1956

Customs and the speeding symphony

CUSTOMS officers examined the instruments and baggage of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the back stage of the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, yesterday while Dame Myra Hess played to a Festival audience in front.

It was the end of the most hectic 32 hours in the orchestra's career . . . 32 hours involving playing in Dublin, flying or sailing to Scotland, and giving their first Festival concert.

Their 85 instruments and luggage came direct by bus to Glasgow to be rushed through by road to the Usher Hall.

So quickly did it move that the Customs sealed the crate and cases to allow it to move on to Edinburgh when completed their examinations a few minutes before a last-minute rehearsal.

The orchestra rehearsed, rushed [illegible] a cold bite in a nearby hotel, changed into concert clothes and came on to play.

Said [illegible] assistant manager of the [illegible] Mr. G. W. Abbott, as [illegible] through the [illegible] of Pa[illegible] Symphony No. We[illegible] rea[illegible]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Huddersfield Daily Examiner

The Royal Tour

The B.B.C. cameramen have been busy in Scotland recently. They have made a film of the principal events of the Royal Tour of the Western Isles, which will be shown on Sunday evening.

On Tuesday the cameras will be at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, from which part of the Festival concert will be transmitted.

The orchestra is the Boston Symphony and the soloist Isaac Stern, and the two will co-operate in Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

The Boston Orchestra, now seventy-five years old, are playing in Edinburgh "en route" to Russia. Their conductor is Charles Munch, who, being born in Strasbourg in 1891, began his musical career as a German. After Alsace-Lorraine was incorporated in the French Republic he became a Frenchman and two years ago conducted the French Broadcasting Orchestra at Edinburgh.

Munch is now the regular conductor of the Boston Orchestra, with whom Koussevitzky made his great reputation.

LOOK AND LISTEN

WITH "Marching Song" (Sunday night's play on B.B.C. television) John Whiting established himself as one of the most promising of our younger dramatists. Here he presents the dilemma of an ex-general invited to take full responsibility for his country's recent defeat in war, thus absolving the national conscience.

Part of the Edinburgh Festival concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday will be screened. The soloist in Beethoven's Violin Concerto is Isaac Stern and the conductor, Charles Münch.

On Wednesday there is the first of three fortnightly programmes called "Seas and Ships" and based largely on films which Alan Villiers (to command the "Mayflower" replica now building at Brixham) has made during a lifetime of sailing adventures.

On Thursday, Sir Donald Bradman discusses this year's Tests with R. W. V. Robins and expounds his controversial ideas for the improvement of cricket.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 104,780
AUG 26 1956

Music

Boston Symphony to Give Concerts in Scotland Today

By RAYMOND MORIN, Telegram Music Critic

One of the criticisms leveled at the Boston Symphony programs at Tanglewood this summer was that they were "dress rehearsals" for the orchestra's European tour, now in progress.

We can't see how the Berkshire audiences were "guinea pigs" simply because the same music was to be repeated thousands of miles away. It's about on a par with the complaint that they were "rehashing" their old Symphony Hall programs. There is always the possibility that different audiences attended the three series.

Much more important is the inclusion of a major orchestral work by an American composer on each of the 27 concerts that the Boston Symphony is giving in Europe.

Series Opens Today

Tonight they begin a series of five concerts in Edinburgh, Scotland. American composers are represented by Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6; Paul Creston's Symphony No. 2; Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode"; Isadore Freed's "Festival Overture"; and Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky."

The purpose, naturally, is to show Europe what Americans are capable of creating, rather than the one she sported when she sang there two years ago.

"Women in the Bowl audience are no different from women in any other audience," he explains. "Some may have seen Rise two years ago, and remember what she wore. We can't afford to take the chance."

Furthermore, Mr. Surovy's "book" in his wife's first Bowl appearance noted too that her program was "to heavy." "We won't make that mistake again," Mr. Surovy says. "It will be lots of Carmen and Broadway show hits."

By this time Mr. Surovy's file on Miss Stevens must be at least as tall as she is—5 feet, seven inches.

Lapse of Memory

We can't imagine anything less than waves of sympathy being directed at Johnny Desmond when he got bawled up with the words of the "Star Spangled Banner" at t he opening session of the Democratic National Convention.

Having once heard a member of the clergy forget the words to the "Lord's Prayer," we

EDINBURGH FESTIVAL MOVES INTO SECOND SUCCESS WEEK

(By a Telegraph Writer)

LAUNCHED in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen, the Edinburgh Festival gives every indication of repeating this year the success of previous years.

At the end of the first week it is confidently predicted that the present Festival, tenth in the series, will bring more visitors to Edinburgh than any of the former events.

Widespread interest has been aroused during the Festival's first week by the first stage presentations of the "play for voices" by Dylan Thomas, "Under Milk Wood"; and also by the most Scottish feature of the whole Festival, the entertainment in the Assembly Hall called "Pleasure of Scotland."

Both of these have their last performance tonight and will be replaced next week.

To the Lyceum comes the "Little Theatre" of Milan, presenting two pieces by Goldoni and one by Pirandello; while the Stratford Ontario Festival Company ...

during the week include the recently-produced "Homage to the Queen," and such old and well-tried favourites as "Coppelia" and the beloved "Lac des Cygnes."

For music-lovers, the Hambourg State Opera continues at the Kings Theatre its presentation of "The Magic Flute" and "Oedipus Rex." The repertoire this week also includes for the first time Strauss's comparatively little - known "Salome."

BOSTON SYMPHONY

At the Usher Hall the principal series of concerts next week will

TIGHT BINDING

THE PAS

Orchestr and Italy

dinburgh's International Festival ge next week, are the Boston Stratford (Ontario) Festival heatre of Milan.

The first of five concerts in Edinburgh will be given in the Usher Hall to-morrow.

The orchestra, which consists of 104 members, will be conducted by its regular conductor, Dr Charles Munch, and a guest conductor, M. Pierre Monteux. Since its foundation in 1881, when Henry L. Higginson, a Boston millionaire, gathered together the best musicians he could obtain, the orchestra has achieved greatness under a succession of brilliant conductors—among them Serge Koussevitsky, who was with it for 25 years.

Included in the programme will be five compositions which were commissioned for this, the seventy-fifth season, and on Thursday a special programme will be given entitled "Homage to Koussevitsky."

The Boston Brass Ensemble, a chamber music group formed by members of the orchestra, will give a concert on Tuesday forenoon in the Freemasons' Hall and will include works by contemporary American composers Robert Sanders and Nicolai Berezowsky.

Customs aid the speeding symphony

CUSTOMS officers examined the instruments and baggage of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the back stage of the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, yesterday while Dame Myra Hess played to a Festival audience in front.

It was the end of the m hectic 32 hours in the orchest career . . . 32 hours involv playing in Dublin, flying or sai to Scotland, and giving their f Festival concert.

Thei 85 instruments a luggage came direct by boat Glasgow to be rushed through road to the Usher Hall

So quickly did it move that t Customs sealed the crates a cases to allow it to move on Edinburgh—then completed th examinations a few minutes bef a last-minute rehearsal.

Then the orchestra rehears rushed off for a cold buffet i nearby hotel, changed i concert dress and came back play.

Said the assistant manager the orchestra, Mr. G. W. Rect as it went through the rehear of Piston's Symphony No. 6: "W really hustled.

NEW YORK TIMES,
MONDAY, AUGUST, 27, 1956.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH BOW

Munch Leads First European Performance of the Sixth Symphony by Piston

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS
Special to The New York Times.

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Aug. 25—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra knocked gently and discreetly on the door of the Edinburgh Festival tonight with Haydn's Symphony No. 102. Having made their entrance with this, they followed it with the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, Strauss' "Don Juan" and Dukas' brightly colored box of tricks, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Was this a really satisfying program for their first appearance at the festival? Those who had expected this orchestra to take the stage like a buskined actor, in brilliant limelight and with a thunderous fanfare, were disappointed, and said so.

After all, they argued, this was a festival occasion. They wanted to test the orchestra's mettle and the program, agreeable though it was, contained no full-dress work of universal breadth and significance to challenge them into comparing the Boston's group interpretation with others that have made history.

A Vivacious Concert

It was if the great tragedian chose to display "the pith and marrow of his attribute" not with, say "Hamlet," but with a prologue, two epilogues and an unfamiliar four-acter, in which the audience would be too closely occupied with following the play to assess the skill of the player.

However, is was a splendidly vivacious concert, even if there was nothing in it that sent us away clamoring, in Barbellion's words "to dine off ten elephants and pick our teeth with the spire of Strasbourg Cathedral."

"Don Juan" and the crackling pyrotechnics of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" call for no deeply imaginative fire from either conductor or players, but they are lively display pieces for an orchestra with well-disciplined artillery. And so magnificently agile is this orchestra that I felt that if Munch had asked the players to jump through the roof of the Usher Hall they would have obeyed with the utmost sang froid.

Strauss Work Played

He began "Don Juan" rather slowly, and the opening lacked impetuosity. But after that he was like a locomotive engineer making up for lost time and the Don's later themes were like boulders crashing down a hill.

Hadyn was full of an affectionate geniality, and the Dukas was perfect: Every nail was banged into its socket with a resounding clash and an arrogant flourish.

Walter Piston's symphony did not demand much close concentration. Experts pronounced it the work of a composer who knew his orchestra, his audience and his own limitations. The end of the balletic scherzo evoked that little simpel of pleasure from an audience too well bred to applaud between movements. The slow movement, we found, had the charm of a man thinking aloud, and we swayed enjoyably to the Holstian tune in the finale.

Orchestra Cites O'Kelly

DUBLIN, Aug. 26 (Reuters)—Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honored Ireland's President Sean T. O'Kelly on his seventy-fourth birthday here yesterday when they presented to him a score, especially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the symphony's seventy-fifth anniversary.

Triumph for the 'Boston'

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra last night found Edinburgh difficult to bowl over.

But before the end of the first concert of their European tour, their triumph was complete.

Charles Munch's performance of Haydn's 102nd Symphony in B Flat kept attention alert through Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, which followed.

With Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" came the winning blow. Here was the young Strauss's "tone poem for a large orchestra" in all its splendour.—J. T.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUR
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from Scottish Daily Express, Glasgow.

heart and mind alike.

CUSTOMS MEN SPEED A SYMPHONY...

Express Staff Reporter

CUSTOMS officers examined the instruments and baggage of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the back stage of the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, yesterday while Dame Myra Hess played to a Festival audience in front.

It was the end of the most hectic 32 hours in the orchestra's career . . . 32 hours involving playing in Dublin, flying or sailing to Scotland, and giving their first Festival concert.

The 85 instruments and luggage came direct by boat to Glasgow to be rushed through by road to the Usher Hall.

So quickly did it move that the Customs sealed the crates and cases to allow it to move on to Edinburgh—then completed their examinations a few minutes before a last-minute rehearsal.

The orchestra finished playing under music director and conductor Dr. Charles Munch an hour before the concert and rushed off to a cold buffet in a nearby hotel and quick changes into concert dress.

Said the assistant manager of the orchestra, Mr. G. W. Rector, as it went through the rehearsal of Piston's Symphony No. 6: "We really hustled.

"We left Cork on Saturday morning to arrive in Dublin at 12. Then we drove by bus straight to the Theatre Royal for a rehearsal from 1.45 to 2.15 . . and played at 3 p.m."

BY PLANES

Coaches rushed the orchestra to Dublin Airport and the docks. Two planes carried Dr. Munch and a section to Turnhouse Airport, Edinburgh.

The remainder arrived in Glasgow by boat yesterday and drove direct to Edinburgh. A party of 50 wives accompanies the 120 musicians and officials.

The orchestra is to visit Scandinavia, Finland, Russia, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Switzerland, France and Britain, by September 26.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Observer, London

26 AUG 1956

TABLE
By Penc

I WONDER what view Colonel Nasser takes of the choice of Mr. Menzies to lead the sub-committee of nations who will submit the Canal-users' resolutions to him? On the one hand Nasser may feel, having read Mr. Menzies's televised speech of two weeks ago, that the Australian Prime Minister is about as tough an imperialist as is to be found in the West. On the other hand, if he has been told how shrewd and flexible a politician and diplomat Mr. Menzies can be, he may feel that the appointment is an indication of the West's predisposition to compromise rather than to clash.

I wonder, too, what impressions Nasser may make on Menzies. On Friday night, Associated Rediffusion's much improving weekly magazine This Week screened, as well as an interview between Mr. Menon and William Hardcastle, an interview given by Nasser to Frank Owen. Some friends who watched this with me were astonished at the calm, good nature and calibre which Nasser as a man apparently displays.

The Conductor

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert at Edinburgh to-day will be conducted by Charles Munch. Not long ago Munch came second only to Winston Churchill, and ahead of Gary Cooper and Jean Marais, when 10,000 Frenchwomen were asked by a magazine, "What man would you like to have dinner with to-night if you had your choice?"

Munch—he is sixty-four—came to conducting comparatively late in life. Until he was forty he taught the violin and was for many years leader of the famous Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra. In 1932, however, he returned to his native France—he was born in Strasbourg—and began to build up a reputation as a conductor. In 1949 he succeeded Koussevitsky as permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which ranks as perhaps the outstanding virtuoso body among the world's orchestras.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

AUG 27 1956

'Bravos' Greet Hub Symphony At Edinburgh

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Aug. 26 (Reuters)—Waves of prolonged applause, mingled with shouts of "Bravo," filled a crowded Usher Hall here tonight following the Boston Symphony Orchestra's opening concert at the 10th Edinburgh Festival.

Conductor Charles Munch led the orchestra through a program of four works: Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B Flat, Piston's Symphony No. 6, the "Don Juan" Symphonic Poem (Op. 20) by Strauss and Dukas' L'Apprenti Sorcier.

It was the first time Harvard Music Prof. Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 had been played in Europe. Prof. Piston wrote the work for the orchestra's 75th anniversary last December.

Yesterday in Dublin trustees of the Boston Symphony honored Ireland's President Sean O'Kelly on his 74th birthday when they presented him with a score of music especially commissioned for the orchestra, and a gold medal.

Thanking the trustees' chairman, Henry B. Cabot, the President commented:

"There is no place outside Ireland where there are more Irish people to the square mile than there are in the city of Boston."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 134,866

AUG 27 1956

Mettle Not Tested, Says Critic

Symphony's Edinburgh Bow Called Vivacious but Not Epic

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS
[Boston Herald-N. Y. Times Dispatch]

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Aug. 26—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra knocked gently and discreetly on the door of the Edinburgh Festival tonight with Haydn's Symphony No. 102. Having made their entrance with this, they followed it with the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, Strauss' "Don Juan" and Dukas' brightly colored box of tricks, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Was this a really satisfying program for their first appearan at the festival? Those who had expected this orchestra to take the stage like a buskined actor, in brilliant limelight and with a thunderous fanfare, were disappointed, and said so.

NO FULL-DRESS WORK

After all, they argued, this was a festival occasion. They wanted to test the orchestra's mettle and the program, agreeable though it was, contained no full-dress work of universal breadth and significance to challenge them into comparing the Boston group's interpretation with others that have made history.

It was as if the great tragedian chose to display "the pith and marrow of his attribute" not with, say "Hamlet," but with a prologue, two epilogues and an unfamiliar four-acter, in which the audience would be too closely occupied with following the play to assess the skill of the player.

However, it was a splendidly vivacious concert, even if there was nothing in it that sent us away clamoring, in Barbellion's words "to dine off ten elephants and pick our teeth with the spire of Strasbourg cathedral."

"Don Juan" and the crackling pyrotechnics of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" call for no deeply imaginative fire from either conductor or players, but they are lively display pieces for an orchestra with well-disciplined artillery. And so magnificently agile is this orchestra that I felt that if Munch had asked the players to jump through the roof of the Usher hall they would have obeyed with the utmost sang froid.

CRASHING BOULDERS

He began "Don Juan" rather slowly, and the opening lacked impetuosity. But after that he was like a locomotive engineer making up for lost time and the Don's later themes were like boulders crashing down a hill.

Haydn was full of an affectionate geniality, and the Dukas was perfect: every nail was banged into its socket with a resounding clash and an arrogant flourish.

Walter Piston's symphony did not demand much close concentration. Experts pronounced it the work of a composer who knew his orchestra, his audience and his own limitations.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675

AUG 27 1956

Boston Symphony Scores at Festival

By Reuters

London

Two widely read British music critics had high praise Aug. 27 for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day engagement at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival Aug. 26.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass-circulation Daily Express, said: "Music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points.

"Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of, tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard's Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

The Piston work, in its European premiere performance, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Mr. Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the Daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding the Piston symphony: "I like this lucid score. . . . A meritorious feat. . . . Its inventiveness never falters. . . ."

THE C

VISITORS FROM AMERICA

Boston Symphony Orchestra

From Our Music Critic

WELCOME American guests, the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, visiting the festival as part of a 75th anniversary tour that takes them as far as Russia, took over in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night.

Under their conductor, Charles Münch, no empty show piece marked their festival début but a mature Haydn symphony, No. 102 in B flat major, one of the London or Salomon Spmphonies and typically rich in vigorous good humour and beauty, qualities that characterised last night's spirited performance in which the remarkable efficiency of the orchestra was well and truly established.

Range of Power

Strauss's tone poem "Don Juan," and even more so, if that were possible, Dukas's Scherzo "L'Apprenti Sorcier" displayed on a much more lavish scale the incredible brilliance and range of power at their disposal—a power at times overwhelming in its sheer impact.

Their advocacy of American music began with the first European performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, whose four movements were, in the composer's own words, "flowing and expressive, light and fast, a serene adagio, and an energetic finale." Most of the purely musical content seemed to be in the adagio. What the other movements added up to must await further hearings though, in their rhythmic vitality and dissonance, they made a considerable physical impact at least and were played with astonishing virtuosity.

Last night's concert made it difficult to decide whether that virtuosity was always a means to a musical end, or at times an end in itself. But hearing the Boston orchestra is certainly an exhilarating experience.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283

AUG 27 1956

British Critics Laud Boston Symphony

London—(Reuters)—Two widely-read British music critics today had high praise for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day run at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival last night.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass-circulation Daily Express, said: "High-press music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points."

Mr. Goodwin went on: "Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard music professor Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

Piston's work, which had its European premiere performance last night, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Mr. Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the Daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding Piston's symphony.

"I like this lucid score . . . a meritorious feat . . . its inventiveness never falters . . .," Mr. Cater wrote.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Manchester Daily Express

THE SCOTSMAN, MONDAY, AUGUST 27, 1956.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Charles Münch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in their fir
Agonistes" at the Hall of Edinburgh Academy. The blir

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

AUG 27 1956

British Critics Laud Symphony, Hub Composer

LONDON, Aug. 27 (Reuters)—Two widely-read British music critics today had high praise for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day run at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival last night.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass- circulation daily Express, said: "High-press music of an extraordinaly vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points."

Goodwin went on: "Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard music Prof. Walter Piston's Symphoney No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

Piston's work, which had its European premiere performance last night, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding Piston's symphony.

"I like this lucid score . . . a meritorious feat . . .its inventiveness never falters . . ." Cater wrote.

3

FESTIVAL STOMP

4767

Boston peps up Edinburgh music

by NOEL GOODWIN

HIGH pressure music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points last night.

It came from the Boston Symphony Orchestra less than three hours after Customs men had unsealed their instruments on arrival from Ireland. Seldom has there been such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra.

Its varied programme included the first European performance of the Sixth Symphony by Walter Piston, a 52-year-old American. Frisky, solemn, and boisterous by turn, it was an attractive birthday present to the orchestra, 75 this year.

This is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again.

It ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic.

The 100 Boston players—including two women—are in Edinburgh for a week as part of a European tour that will make them the first Western orchestra to visit Russia and will take them to London on the way back.

Boston Symphony Scores at Festival

By Reuters

London

Two widely read British music critics had high praise Aug. 27 for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day engagement at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival Aug. 26.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass-circulation Daily Express, said: "Music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points.

"Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard's Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

The Piston work, in its European premiere performance, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Mr. Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the Daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding the Piston symphony: "I like this lucid score. . . . A meritorious feat. . . . Its inventiveness never falters. . . ."

Monitor
Aug 27

THE FESTIVAL

FIRST CONCERT BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

A revelation of playing

BY OUR MUSIC CRITIC

Here in Edinburgh for the second week of the Festival is one of the finest orchestras ever assembled. Like so many superior things, it comes from Boston, and is booked on a European tour It is even going as far as Moscow. It is fairly sure to leave a trail of red faced jealousy and unkind comparisons in its wake. Not deliberately. It just can't help it—Koussevitsky and Münch have made it that way. Its playing can only be described as prodigious, perhaps the best that will ever have been heard in the Usher Hall.

It is too soon to guage the full quality of the brass and wind, though obviously they are extremely efficient, but the strings are simply magnificent, superbly disciplined, sweet toned (but not too rich), and lots of them. When the orchestra was in full cry last night the effect was absolutely stunning, and without that harshness which crept into comparable passages by the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

The natural temptation with an orchestra of this kind is to cultivate the show-off kind of music, a category to which both Strauss's "Don Juan" and Dukas's "L'Apprenti Sorcier" may without offence be assigned. Both were played last night with virtuosity, but it was the Dukas which had by far the more telling performance. One had a sort of voluptuous pleasure out of the sound of "Don Juan" without really sympathising with Charles Münch's conception of the piece. That was true also of Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B flat, played in disguise with full strings in a luxurious deep velvet performance of immaculate precision. Given the Boston treatment the introduction to the first movement had an almost Tristanesque effect.

There is a ration of one American work an evening, very heavily chaperoned by the safest of standard classics and respectable moderns. Yesterday's choice was Piston's Sixth Symphony, which was having its European premiere. This was well liked by the Usher Hall audience, and should gain friends, if not influence people, in other European cities. The composer, who was one of the first to follow that well-worn trail that leads from the Statue of Liberty to Nadia Boulanger's class in Paris is now Professor of Music at Harvard, on all sorts of committees, and a writer of excellent text-books. He has never been one for chasing the latest fad or for producing them himself, but has rather gone his own way quietly absorbing what he liked or needed from the contemporary scene.

As far as the first movement of the present symphony is concerned, there are reminiscences of Hindemithian procedures; in the far more personal, elegiac, and rather beautiful slow movement in the slick rub-a-dub Scherzo, and the ebullient Finale the composer converses with his listeners without pretentions to obscurity. The symphony was tailor-made for the Boston Orchestra, which had commissioned it for its anniversary season. It was a perfect fit, receiving the sort of performance under Münch which many composers would give their ears for.

Among the audience were the Princess Royal, the Lord Mayor of London, Sir Cuthbert Ackroyd, Lord and Lady Harewood, and the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, Sir John G. Banks.

SALTIRE SOCIETY GIVE VERSE, MUSIC RECITAL

A Festival recital of contemporary Scottish music and verse was given by the Saltire Society in Gladstone's Land, Edinburgh, last night. The recital included the Sonatina in G Minor, by J. B. McEwan, and Air and Variations by Ian Whyte, played sensitively by pianist Agnes Walker, and verse readings by Iain Cuthbertson.

Mr Cuthbertson has a fine, resonant voice, which exploited to the full the craggy beauty of the poems, which included works by Hugh McDiarmid, Sydney Goodsir Smith, and Norman McCaig.

Bulletin Aug.

A Stephens Orr portrait of Charles Munch, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in last night's Usher Hall concert.

SPLENDID BRILLIANCE FROM BOSTON

STARTLING splendour of sound is the most obvious characteristic of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which made its debut in the Usher Hall, night

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 146,283

AUG 27 1956

British Critics Laud Boston Symphony

London—(Reuters)—Two widely-read British music critics today had high praise for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day run at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival last night.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass-circulation Daily Express, said: "High-press music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points."

Mr. Goodwin went on: "Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard music professor Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

Piston's work, which had its European premiere performance last night, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Mr. Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the Daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding Piston's symphony.

"I like this lucid score . . . a meritorious feat . . . its inventiveness never falters . . .," Mr. Cater wrote.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Manchester Daily Express

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Charles Münch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in their fir
Agonistes" at the Hall of Edinburgh Academy. The blir

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

AUG 2 1956

British Critics Laud Symphony, Hub Composer

LONDON, Aug. 27 (Reuters)—Two widely-read British music critics today had high praise for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day run at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival last night.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass- circulation daily Express, said: "High-press music of an extraordinaly vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points."

Goodwin went on: "Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard music Prof. Walter Piston's Symphoney No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

Piston's work, which had its European premiere performance last night, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding Piston's symphony.

"I like this lucid score . . a meritorious feat . . its inventiveness never falters . . ." Cater wrote.

3

FESTIVAL STOMP

Boston peps up Edinburgh music

by NOEL GOODWIN

HIGH pressure music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points last night.

It came from the Boston Symphony Orchestra less than three hours after Customs men had unsealed their instruments on arrival from Ireland. Seldom has there been such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra.

Its varied programme included the first European performance of the Sixth Symphony by Walter Piston, a 52-year-old American. Frisky, solemn, and boisterous by turn, it was an attractive birthday present to the orchestra, 75 this year.

This is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again.

It ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic.

The 100 Boston players—including two women—are in Edinburgh for a week as part of a European tour that will make them the first Western orchestra to visit Russia and will take them to London on the way back.

Boston Symphony Scores at Festival

By Reuters

London

Two widely read British music critics had high praise Aug. 27 for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day engagement at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival Aug. 26.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass-circulation Daily Express, said: "Music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points.

"Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard's Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

The Piston work, in its European premiere performance, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Mr. Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the Daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding the Piston symphony: "I like this lucid score. . . . A meritorious feat. . . . Its inventiveness never falters. . . ."

THE FESTIVAL

FIRST CONCERT BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

A revelation of playing

BY OUR MUSIC CRITIC

Here in Edinburgh for the second week of the Festival is one of the finest orchestras ever assembled. Like so many superior things, it comes from Boston, and is booked on a European tour. It is even going as far as Moscow. It is fairly sure to leave a trail of red faced jealousy and unkind comparisons in its wake. Not deliberately. It just can't help it—Koussevitsky and Münch have made it that way. Its playing can only be described as prodigious, perhaps the best that will ever have been heard in the Usher Hall.

It is too soon to guage the full quality of the brass and wind, though obviously they are extremely efficient, but the strings are simply magnificent, superbly disciplined, sweet toned (but not too rich), and lots of them. When the orchestra was in full cry last night the effect was absolutely stunning, and without that harshness which crept into comparable passages by the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

The natural temptation with an orchestra of this kind is to cultivate the show-off kind of music, a category to which both Strauss's "Don Juan" and Dukas's "L'Apprenti Sorcier" may without offence be assigned. Both were played last night with virtuosity, but it was the Dukas which had by far the more telling performance. One had a sort of voluptuous pleasure out of the sound of "Don Juan" without really sympathising with Charles Münch's conception of the piece. That was true also of Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B flat, played in disguise with full strings in a luxurious deep velvet performance of immaculate precision. Given the Boston treatment the introduction to the first movement had an almost Tristanesque effect.

There is a ration of one American work an evening, very heavily chaperoned by the safest of standard classics and respectable moderns. Yesterday's choice was Piston's Sixth Symphony, which was having its European premiere. This was well liked by the Usher Hall audience, and should gain friends, if not influence people, in other European cities. The composer, who was one of the first to follow that well-worn trail that leads from the Statue of Liberty to Nadia Boulanger's class in Paris is now Professor of Music at Harvard, on all sorts of committees, and a writer of excellent text-books. He has never been one for chasing the latest fad or for producing them himself, but has rather gone his own way quietly absorbing what he liked or needed from the contemporary scene.

As far as the first movement of the present symphony is concerned, there are reminiscences of Hindemithian procedures; in the far more personal elegiac, and rather beautiful slow movement in the slick rub-a-dub Scherzo and the ebullient Finale the composer converses with his listeners without pretentions to obscurity. The symphony was tailor-made for the Boston Orchestra, which had commissioned it for its anniversary season. It was a perfect fit, receiving the sort of performance under Münch which many composers would give their ears for.

Among the audience were the Princess Royal, the Lord Mayor of London, Sir Cuthbert Ackroyd, Lord and Lady Harewood, and the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, Sir John G. Banks.

SALTIRE SOCIETY GIVE VERSE, MUSIC RECITAL

A Festival recital of contemporary Scottish music and verse was given by the Saltire Society in Gladstone's Land, Edinburgh, last night. The recital included the Sonatina in G Minor, by J. B. McEwan, and Air and Variations by Ian Whyte, played sensitively by pianist Agnes Walker, and verse readings by Iain Cuthbertson.

Mr Cuthbertson has a fine, resonant voice, which exploited to the full the craggy beauty of the poems, which included works by Hugh McDiarmid, Sydney Goodsir Smith, and Norman McCaig.

Bulletin

A Stephens Orr portrait of Charles Munch, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in last night's Usher Hall concert.

SPLENDID BRILLIANCE FROM BOSTON

STARTLING splendour of sound is the most obvious characteristic of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which made its debut in the Usher Hall,

Circ. 146,283

AUG 27 1956

British Critics Laud Boston Symphony

London—(Reuters)—Two widely-read British music critics today had high praise for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day run at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival last night.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass-circulation Daily Express, said: "High-press music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points."

Mr. Goodwin went on: "Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard music professor Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

Piston's work, which had its European premiere performance last night, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Mr. Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the Daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding Piston's symphony.

"I like this lucid score . . . a meritorious feat . . . its inventiveness never falters . . .," Mr. Cater wrote.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from Manchester Daily Express

3

FESTIVAL STOMP

Boston peps up Edinburgh music

by NOEL GOODWIN

HIGH pressure music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points last night.

It came from the Boston Symphony Orchestra less than three hours after Customs men had unsealed their instruments on arrival from Ireland. Seldom has there been such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra.

Its varied programme included the first European performance of the Sixth Symphony by Walter Piston, a 52-year-old American. Frisky, solemn, and boisterous by turn, it was an attractive birthday present to the orchestra, 75 this year.

This is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again.

It ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic.

The 100 Boston players—including two women—are in Edinburgh for a week as part of a European tour that will make them the first Western orchestra to visit Russia and will take them to London on the way back.

Boston Symphony Scores at Festival

By Reuters

London

Two widely read British music critics had high praise Aug. 27 for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day engagement at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival Aug. 26.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass-circulation Daily Express, said: "Music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points.

"Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard's Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

The Piston work, in its European premiere performance, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Mr. Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the Daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding the Piston symphony: "I like this lucid score. . . . A meritorious feat. . . . Its inventiveness never falters. . . ."

Mail Mon Aug 27

THE SCOTSMAN, MONDAY, AUGUST 27, 1956.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Charles Münch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in their fir
Agonistes" at the Hall of Edinburgh Academy. The blir

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 154,300

AUG 2 1956

British Critics Laud Symphony, Hub Composer

LONDON, Aug. 27 (Reuters)—Two widely-read British music critics today had high praise for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day run at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival last night.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass- circulation daily Express, said: "High-press music of an extraordinaly vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points."

Goodwin went on: "Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard music Prof. Walter Piston's Symphoney No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

Piston's work, which had its European premiere performance last night, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding Piston's symphony.

"I like this lucid score . . . a meritorious feat . . .its inventiveness never falters . . ." Cater wrote.

THE FESTIVAL

FIRST CONCERT BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

A revelation of playing

BY OUR MUSIC CRITIC

Here in Edinburgh for the second week of the Festival is one of the finest orchestras ever assembled. Like so many superior things, it comes from Boston, and is booked on a European tour It is even going as far as Moscow. It is fairly sure to leave a trail of red faced jealousy and unkind comparisons in its wake. Not deliberately. It just can't help it—Koussevitsky and Münch have made it that way. Its playing can only be described as prodigious, perhaps the best that will ever have been heard in the Usher Hall.

It is too soon to guage the full quality of the brass and wind, though obviously they are extremely efficient, but the strings are simply magnificent, superbly disciplined, sweet toned (but not too rich), and lots of them. When the orchestra was in full cry last night the effect was absolutely stunning, and without that harshness which crept into comparable passages by the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

The natural temptation with an orchestra of this kind is to cultivate the show-off kind of music, a category to which both Strauss's "Don Juan" and Dukas's "L'Apprenti Sorcier" may without offence be assigned. Both were played last night with virtuosity, but it was the Dukas which had by far the more telling performance. One had a sort of voluptuous pleasure out of the sound of "Don Juan" without really sympathising with Charles Münch's conception of the piece. That was true also of Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B flat, played in disguise with full strings in a luxurious deep velvet performance of immaculate precision. Given the Boston treatment the introduction to the first movement had an almost Tristanesque effect.

There is a ration of one American work an evening, very heavily chaperoned by the safest of standard classics and respectable moderns. Yesterday's choice was Piston's Sixth Symphony, which was having its European premiere. This was well liked by the Usher Hall audience, and should gain friends, if not influence people, in other European cities. The composer, who was one of the first to follow that well-worn trail that leads from the Statue of Liberty to Nadia Boulanger's class in Paris is now Professor of Music at Harvard, on all sorts of committees, and a writer of excellent text-books. He has never been one for chasing the latest fad or for producing them himself, but has rather gone his own way quietly absorbing what he liked or needed from the contemporary scene.

As far as the first movement of the present symphony is concerned, there are reminiscences of Hindemithian procedures; in the far more personal elegiac, and rather beautiful slow movement in the slick rub-a-dub Scherzo, and the ebullient Finale the composer converses with his listeners without pretentions to obscurity The symphony was tailor-made for the Boston Orchestra, which had commissioned it for its anniversary season. It was a perfect fit, receiving the sort of performance under Münch which many composers would give their ears for.

Among the audience were the Princess Royal, the Lord Mayor of London, Sir Cuthbert Ackroyd, Lord and Lady Harewood, and the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, Sir John G. Banks.

SALTIRE SOCIETY GIVE VERSE, MUSIC RECITAL

A Festival recital of contemporary Scottish music and verse was given by the Saltire Society in Gladstone's Land, Edinburgh, last night. The recital included the Sonatina in G Minor, by J. B. McEwan, and Air and Variations by Ian Whyte, played sensitively by pianist Agnes Walker, and verse readings by Iain Cuthbertson.

Mr Cuthbertson has a fine, resonant voice, which exploited to the full the craggy beauty of the poems, which included works by Hugh McDiarmid, Sydney Goodsir Smith, and Norman McCaig.

Bulletin Aug.

A Stephens Orr portrait of Charles Munch, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in last night's Usher Hall concert.

SPLENDID BRILLIANCE FROM BOSTON

STARTLING splendour of sound is the most obvious characteristic of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which made its debut in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night under Charles Munch.

There was an astonishing lushness about their performance of Strauss's "Don Juan," and at the climax of Dukas's "L'Apprenti Sorcier," a volume of tone thrilling almost to the point of becoming physically oppressive to ears unused to such mammoth forces.

Previous American orchestras which have appeared at the Festival have caused a certain amount of puzzlement over their streamlined ideas on how the great European masters should be interpreted. Happily, the Boston Symphony Orchestra doesn't indulge in these un-European musical activities.

Military Precision

Their performance of Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B flat had no eccentricities, though it was play[illegible] positively milita[illegible]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the
EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH

Date 27 AUG 1956
(See information overleaf.)

THE FESTIVAL SHOWS

THE BOSTON OPEN WITH A PREMIERE

4767

Charles Munch

With the first concert of the much-vaunted Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Usher Hall last night came the Festival's initial taste of contemporary American music—the European première of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, a decidedly interesting work cast in traditional four-movement mould.

Composed "with no intent other than to make music to be played and listened to," as Piston remarks in a programme note, the symphony is full of vital, original material, and is scored throughout with remarkable perception and craftsmanship.

From first bar to last it is a perfect vehicle for the Boston players—small wonder, since it was written with them in mind—and each instrumental depart ment took every advantage give Particularly effective was th spiky, delicate little Scher which showed off their brilliar almost machine-like, style to pe fection.

So far as could be judged fr a first hearing, conductor Char Munch, too, extracted everyth possible from the score, secur admirable contrasts from various moods.

DAZZLING

Possibly the most successful in the remainder of the gramme was Richard Strauss' domitable tone poem "Don J another work lending itself t dazzling technical abilities o orchestra.

True, there were moments Mr Munch's interpretation dangerously near to being excitable, but his was a full-blooded reading, brimming over with the vigour and pure romance which is so much the younger Strauss.

Immediately after, a sparkling account of Dukas's "Sorcerer's Apprentice" made its inclusion in a Festival concert justifiable. How refreshing it was, by the way, to hear this Promenade stand-by taken up to speed for a change, instead of jogging along like a tired locomotive on a steep hill.

Only performance which did not "click" in the entire evening, indeed, was Haydn's delectable Symphony No. 102 in B flat major. This turned out to be an amazing demonstration of the Boston's ... play "prestissimo" ... from

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Daily Telegraph, London
27 AUG 1956

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Edinburgh Evening News

27 AUG 1956

BOSTON BRASS BLASTS SOME OLD COBWEBS OF CONVENTION

Brilliant Festival Debut By American Musical 'Dynamo'

4767

No stuffy conventionalism for our orchestra friends from across the Atlantic! The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which made its Edinburgh Festival debut in the Usher Hall last night, is a good match in high-powered musical dynamics for the New York Philharmonic Orchestra which has "gingered-up" two Edinburgh Festivals.

By well-known reputation, of course, everything Bostonian is "of the best," so that Festival audiences are entitled to be keyed up for a musical experience every bit as thrilling as that provided last year by the New York Philharmonic.

Honours were even on last night's showing. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now celebrating the 75th anniversary of its foundation, has attracted to its ranks some of the finest musical talent in the world's market. Throughout its history, also, it has been able to attract a succession of illustrious conductors and from each it has gained something distinctive in artistic development.

Like the New York Philharmonic the Boston Symphony Orchestra speaks with a massive voice. The gleaming brilliance of singing string tones simply radiates virtuosity. The trombones, trumpets, and horns, when in full chorus, would make any audience sit up and take notice.

The Bostonians are very proud of their brass ensemble, which has some justifiable claim to being world-famous. It is brass with a powerful resonance which seems to be a characteristic of American orchestras. That alone, in last night's programme, was sufficient to blast some of the conventional cobwebs away, but there were other big forces at work as well.

This Boston musical "giant" has a tremendous gait, and, without doubt, it travelled a great deal faster than anything Haydn contemplated when he wrote his bright and cheerful Symphony No. 102 in B flat major.

This was the Boston Orchestra's introductory work. In technical polish and beauty of well-controlled tone it was absolutely impeccable, but how it remained so in the dazzling pace of the final presto seemed almost beyond comprehension.

Dr Charles Munch, who has been the Boston Orchestra's permanent conductor for seven years, believes that an essential quality of a good

Herald Aug 27

Mettle Not Tested, Says Critic

Symphony's Edinburgh Bow Called Vivacious but Not Epic

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS
[Boston Herald-N. Y. Times Dispatch]

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Aug. 26—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra knocked gently and discreetly on the door of the Edinburgh Festival tonight with Haydn's Symphony No. 102. Having made their entrance with this, they followed it with the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, Strauss' "Don Juan" and Dukas' brightly colored box of tricks, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Was this a really satisfying program for their first appearan at the festival? Those who had expected this orchestra to take the stage like a buskined actor, in brilliant limelight and with a thunderous fanfare, were disappointed, and said so.

NO FULL-DRESS WORK

After all, they argued, this was a festival occasion. They wanted to test the orchestra's mettle and the program, agreeable though it was, contained no full-dress work of universal breadth and significance to challenge them into comparing the Boston group's interpretation with others that have made history.

It was as if the great tragedian chose to display "the pith and marrow of his attribute" not with, say "Hamlet," but with a prologue, two epilogues and an unfamiliar four-acter, in which the audience would be too closely occupied with following the play to assess the skill of the player.

However, it was a splendidly vivacious concert, even if there was nothing in it that sent us away clamoring, in Barbellion's words "to dine off ten elephants and pick our teeth with the spire of Strasbourg cathedral."

"Don Juan" and the crackling pyrotechnics of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" call for no deeply imaginative fire from either conductor or players, but they are lively display pieces for an orchestra with well-disciplined artillery. And so magnificently agile is this orchestra that I felt that if Munch had asked the players to jump through the roof of the Usher hall they would have obeyed with the utmost sang froid.

CRASHING BOULDERS

He began "Don Juan" rather slowly, and the opening lacked impetuosity. But after that he was like a locomotive engineer making up for lost time and the Don's later themes were like boulders crashing down a hill.

Haydn was full of an affectionate geniality, and the Dukas was perfect: every nail was banged into its socket with a resounding clash and an arrogant flourish.

Walter Piston's symphony did not demand much close concentration. Experts pronounced it the work of a composer who knew his orchestra, his audience and his own limitations.

Edinburgh Festival

VIRTUOSITY OF STYLE

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

From MARTIN COOPER

EDINBURGH, Sunday.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first of five concerts in Usher Hall to-night with Charles Munch conducting. Haydn's Symphony No. 102, which opened the programme, immediately showed the conductor's qualities, but not in the most favourable light.

His tense, supercharged style and an inclination to exaggerations of rhythm and dynamics were better suited to Strauss's "Don Juan," where the ear-splitting climaxes and excessively sumptuous orchestral palette emphasised the work's kolossal character.

The unfamiliar piece of the evening was Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony. This is written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and reflects its extraordinary virtuosity of style and individual achievement.

The scherzo in particular is a wholly successful orchestral étude and clear lines and lively rhythms characterise all four movements. This music "sounds", admirably, and it would probably be a mistake to ask anything more of it.

16th CENTURY MUSIC

Renaissance Singers

The Edinburgh Festival has always remained surprisingly untouched by the passions of musical revivalists, and neither mediævalists nor baroque-fanciers have found much footing. The Renaissance Singers have thus been breaking comparatively new ground this year with their concerts in Freemasons' Hall.

Their programme on Saturday morning started with Taverner's "Small Devotion" Mass, and then launched into the unknown with some anonymous 16th century Mass music and Scottish polyphonic motets.

The Latin pieces by Robert Johnson and David Peebles seemed correct, fluent, and rather conventional. But a very early metrical psalm by Andro Blackhall showed the extraordinary and sudden change of both style and feeling that accompanied the Reformation in Scotland

The ensemble seems stronger in its middle than its outer voices, but style and discipline were excellent

Isaac Stern Dazzles

The first of the Scottish National Orchestra's two concerts in Usher Hall on Saturday night was distinguished by the appearance of Isaac Stern as soloist in Bartok's violin concerto.

This is still no easy work for the average concert-goer, but a performance of such dazzling technical quality, mercurial temperament and sheer tonal beauty as this over-rode all possible objections.

Dr. Rankl proved a most intelligent accompanist and the orchestra plainly knew the complex score remarkably well.

Times

MONDAY, AUGUST 27, 1956.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH BOW

Münch Leads First European Performance of the Sixth Symphony by Piston

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS
Special to The New York Times.

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Aug. 26—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra knocked gently and discreetly on the door of the Edinburgh Festival tonight with Haydn's Symphony No. 102. Having made their entrance with this, they followed it with the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, Strauss' "Don Juan" and Dukas' brightly colored box of tricks, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Was this a really satisfying program for their first appearance at the festival? Those who had expected this orchestra to take the stage like a buskined actor, in brilliant limelight and with a thunderous fanfare, were disappointed, and said so.

After all, they argued, this was a festival occasion. They wanted to test the orchestra's mettle and the program, agreeable though it was, contained no full-dress work of universal breadth and significance to challenge them into comparing the Boston's group interpretation with others that have made history.

A Vivacious Concert

It was if the great tragedian chose to display "the pith and marrow of his attribute" not with, say "Hamlet," but with a prologue, two epilogues and an unfamiliar four-acter, in which the audience would be too closely occupied with following the play to assess the skill of the player.

However, is was a splendidly vivacious concert, even if there was nothing in it that sent us away clamoring, in Barbellion's words, "to dine off ten elephants and pick our teeth with the spire of Strasbourg Cathedral."

"Don Juan" and the crackling pyrotechnics of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" call for no deeply imaginative fire from either conductor or players, but they are lively display pieces for an orchestra with well-disciplined artillery. And so magnificently agile is this orchestra that I felt that if Munch had asked the players to jump through the roof of the Usher Hall they would have obeyed with the utmost sang froid.

Strauss Work Played

He began "Don Juan" rather slowly, and the opening lacked impetuosity. But after that he was like a locomotive engineer making up for lost time and the Don's later themes were like boulders crashing down a hill.

Haydn was full of an affectionate geniality, and the Dukas was perfect: Every nail was banged into its socket with a resounding clash and an arrogant flourish.

Walter Piston's symphony did not demand much close concentration. Experts pronounced it the work of a composer who knew his orchestra, his audience and his own limitations. The end of the balletic scherzo evoked that little simpel of pleasure from an audience too well bred to applaud between movements. The slow movement, we found, had the charm of a man thinking aloud, and we swayed enjoyably to the Holstian tune in the finale.

Orchestra Cites O'Kelly

DUBLIN, Aug. 26 (Reuters)—Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honored Ireland's President Sean T. O'Kelly on his seventy-fourth birthday here yesterday when they presented to him a score, especially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the symphony's seventy-fifth anniversary.

New Yorker Wins Music Event

BIEL, Switzerland, Aug. 26 (UP)—John Harold Padula Jr. of 152 Chester Street the Bronx, New York, won first place in the accordion competition for 1956 here today. This is the first time an American has finished first since the "world championship" competitions were started in 1948. The accordionist, who is 18 years old, was accompanied on his trip by his father.

70¢ TILL NOON · Doors Open 10:45 A.M. · PALACE · Broadway at 47th St · 8 BIG ACTS · VAUDEVILLE · RICHARD WIDMARK · TREVOR HOWARD · JANE GREER · RUN FOR THE SUN · SUPERSCOPE

[60]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the
EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH

Date 27 AUGUST 1956
(See information overleaf.)

THE FESTIVAL SHOWS

THE BOSTON OPEN WITH A PREMIERE

4767

Charles Munch

With the first concert of the much-vaunted Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Usher Hall last night came the Festival's initial taste of contemporary American music—the European première of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, a decidedly interesting work cast in traditional four-movement mould.

Composed "with no intent other than to make music to be played and listened to," as Piston remarks in a programme note, the symphony is full of vital, original material, and is scored throughout with remarkable perception and craftsmanship.

From first bar to last it is a perfect vehicle for the Boston players—small wonder, since it was written with them in mind—and each instrumental department took every advantage given. Particularly effective was the spiky, delicate little Scherzo which showed off their brilliant, almost machine-like, style to perfection.

So far as could be judged from a first hearing, conductor Charles Munch, too, extracted everything possible from the score, securing admirable contrasts from its various moods.

DAZZLING

Possibly the most successful item in the remainder of the programme was Richard Strauss's indomitable tone poem "Don Juan," another work lending itself to the dazzling technical abilities of the orchestra.

True, there were moments when Mr Munch's interpretation came dangerously near to being over-excitable, but his was a full-blooded reading, brimming over with the vigour and pure romance which is so much the younger Strauss.

Immediately after, a sparkling account of Dukas's "Sorcerer's Apprentice" made its inclusion in a Festival concert justifiable. How refreshing it was, by the way, to hear this Promenade stand-by taken up to speed for a change, instead of jogging along like a tired locomotive on a steep hill.

Only performance which did not "click" in the entire evening, indeed, was Haydn's delectable Symphony No. 102 in B flat major. This turned out to be an amazing demonstration of the Boston's ability to play "prestissimo" which was as far removed from Haydn as chalk from cheese. N. G.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Edinburgh Evening News

27 AUG

BOSTON BRASS BLASTS AWAY SOME OLD COBWEBS OF CONVENTION

Brilliant Festival Debut By American Musical 'Dynamo'

4767

No stuffy conventionalism for our orchestra friends from across the Atlantic! The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which made its Edinburgh Festival debut in the Usher Hall last night, is a good match in high-powered musical dynamics for the New York Philharmonic Orchestra which has "gingered-up" two Edinburgh Festivals.

By well-known reputation, of course, everything Bostonian is "of the best," so that Festival audiences are entitled to be keyed up for a musical experience every bit as thrilling as that provided last year by the New York Philharmonic.

Honours were even on last night's showing. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now celebrating the 75th anniversary of its foundation, has attracted to its ranks some of the finest musical talent in the world's market. Throughout its history, also, it has been able to attract a succession of illustrious conductors and from each it has gained something distinctive in artistic development.

Like the New York Philharmonic the Boston Symphony Orchestra speaks with a massive voice. The gleaming brilliance of singing string tones simply radiates virtuosity. The trombones, trumpets, and horns, when in full chorus, would make any audience sit up and take notice.

The Bostonians are very proud of their brass ensemble, which has some justifiable claim to being world-famous. It is brass with a powerful resonance which seems to be a characteristic of American orchestras. That alone, in last night's programme, was sufficient to blast some of the conventional cobwebs away, but there were other big forces at work as well.

This Boston musical "giant" has a tremendous gait, and, without doubt, it travelled a great deal faster than anything Haydn contemplated when he wrote his bright and cheerful Symphony No 102 in B flat major.

This was the Boston Orchestra's introductory work. In technical polish and beauty of well-controlled tone it was absolutely impeccable, but how it remained so in the dazzling pace of the final presto seemed almost beyond comprehension.

Dr Charles Munch, who has been the Boston Orchestra's permanent conductor for seven years, believes that an essential quality of a good

Herald Aug 27

Mettle Not Tested, Says Critic

Symphony's Edinburgh Bow Called Vivacious but Not Epic

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS
[Boston Herald-N. Y. Times Dispatch]

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Aug. 26—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra knocked gently and discreetly on the door of the Edinburgh Festival tonight with Haydn's Symphony No. 102. Having made their entrance with this, they followed it with the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, Strauss' "Don Juan" and Dukas' brightly colored box of tricks, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Was this a really satisfying program for their first appearan at the festival? Those who had expected this orchestra to take the stage like a buskined actor, in brilliant limelight and with a thunderous fanfare, were disappointed, and said so.

NO FULL-DRESS WORK

After all, they argued, this was a festival occasion. They wanted to test the orchestra's mettle and the program, agreeable though it was, contained no full-dress work of universal breadth and significance to challenge them into comparing the Boston group's interpretation with others that have made history.

It was as if the great tragedian chose to display "the pith and marrow of his attribute" not with, say "Hamlet," but with a prologue, two epilogues and an unfamiliar four-acter, in which the audience would be too closely occupied with following the play to assess the skill of the player.

However, it was a splendidly vivacious concert, even if there was nothing in it that sent us away clamoring, in Barbellion's words "to dine off ten elephants and pick our teeth with the spire of Strasbourg cathedral."

"Don Juan" and the crackling pyrotechnics of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" call for no deeply imaginative fire from either conductor or players, but they are lively display pieces for an orchestra with well-disciplined artillery. And so magnificently agile is this orchestra that I felt that if Munch had asked the players to jump through the roof of the Usher hall they would have obeyed with the utmost sang froid.

CRASHING BOULDERS

He began "Don Juan" rather slowly, and the opening lacked impetuosity. But after that he was like a locomotive engineer making up for lost time and the Don's later themes were like boulders crashing down a hill.

Haydn was full of an affectionate geniality, and the Dukas was perfect: every nail was banged into its socket with a resounding clash and an arrogant flourish.

Walter Piston's symphony did not demand much close concentration. Experts pronounced it the work of a composer who knew his orchestra, his audience and his own limitations.

MONDAY, AUGUST 27, 1956.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH BOW

Munch Leads First European Performance of the Sixth Symphony by Piston

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS
Special to The New York Times.

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Aug. 26—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra knocked gently and discreetly on the door of the Edinburgh Festival tonight with Haydn's Symphony No. 102. Having made their entrance with this, they followed it with the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, Strauss' "Don Juan" and Dukas' brightly colored box of tricks, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Was this a really satisfying program for their first appearance at the festival? Those who had expected this orchestra to take the stage like a buskined actor, in brilliant limelight and with a thunderous fanfare, were disappointed, and said so.

After all, they argued, this was a festival occasion. They wanted to test the orchestra's mettle and the program, agreeable though it was, contained no full-dress work of universal breadth and significance to challenge them into comparing the Boston's group interpretation with others that have made history.

A Vivacious Concert

It was if the great tragedian chose to display "the pith and marrow of his attribute" not with, say "Hamlet," but with a prologue, two epilogues and an unfamiliar four-acter, in which the audience would be too closely occupied with following the play to assess the skill of the player.

However, is was a splendidly vivacious concert, even if there was nothing in it that sent us away clamoring, in Barbellion's words, "to dine off ten elephants and pick our teeth with the spire of Strasbourg Cathedral."

"Don Juan" and the crackling pyrotechnics of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" call for no deeply imaginative fire from either conductor or players, but they are lively display pieces for an orchestra with well-disciplined artillery. And so magnificently agile is this orchestra that I felt that if Munch had asked the players to jump through the roof of the Usher Hall they would have obeyed with the utmost sang froid.

Strauss Work Played

He began "Don Juan" rather slowly, and the opening lacked impetuosity. But after that he was like a locomotive engineer making up for lost time and the Don's later themes were like boulders crashing down a hill.

Haydn was full of an affectionate geniality, and the Dukas was perfect: Every nail was banged into its socket with a resounding clash and an arrogant flourish.

Walter Piston's symphony did not demand much close concentration. Experts pronounced it the work of a composer who knew his orchestra, his audience and his own limitations. The end of the balletic scherzo evoked that little simpel of pleasure from an audience too well bred to applaud between movements. The slow movement, we found, had the charm of a man thinking aloud, and we swayed enjoyably to the Holstian tune in the finale.

Orchestra Cites O'Kelly

DUBLIN, Aug. 26 (Reuters)—Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra honored Ireland's President Sean T. O'Kelly on his seventy-fourth birthday here yesterday when they presented to him a score, especially commissioned for the orchestra and a gold medal struck on the symphony's seventy-fifth anniversary.

New Yorker Wins Music Event

BIEL, Switzerland, Aug. 26 (UP)—John Harold Padula Jr. of 152 Chester Street the Bronx, New York, won first place in the accordion competition for 1956 here today. This is the first time an American has finished first since the "world championship" competitions were started in 1948. The accordionist, who is 18 years old, was accompanied on his trip by his father.

70¢ TILL NOON
Doors Open 10:45 A.M.
RKO PALACE B'WAY at 47th ST
8 BIG ACTS VAUDEVILLE
RICHARD WIDMARK TREVOR HOWARD JANE GREER
RUN FOR THE SUN SUPERSCOPE

[60]

SCOTTISH DAILY MAIL, Monday, August 27, 1956

★ THE FESTIVAL LAST NIGHT ★

THIS ORCHESTRA HAS SNAP

The 'Boston' in top form

By PERCY CATER

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose Usher Hall concert last night was its first at an Edinburgh Festival, played in a manner worthy of its long reputation. Not a sign of "nerves" at the meeting with Edinburgh's international audience.

On the contrary, everything done by this 100-strong force—only two girl players, the principal flute and a harpist, in its ranks — is conspicuously assured, collected, controlled.

It is in first-class form for the trip. In the Haydn No. 102 Symphony last night the strings sang as sweetly as I have heard any in a long time.

Outsize white baton

Charles Münch, tall, lean, white-haired, wielding an outsized white baton, thrashes the air with it, vibrates in moments of crisis.

The response is there almost before Münch demands it. This orchestra has freshness, alacrity, smartness. It snaps to its work, and the sound has an edge on it. The string tone is lithe and surging, can become, of itself, apart from Münch's taut discipline, vigorous and proud, of nuanced to delicate shades.

I liked the balance of the ensemble in the adagio and the rush of the finale was captivating.

The American composer Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, commissioned by the Boston Orchestra and the Koussevitzky Foundation for this anniversary season, which was given its first European performance, strikes me as a meritorious feat.

It is sombre and gay, but always the objective is plain.

The scherzo is a fine frolic for the strings. Its inventiveness never falters. The energetic finale lets the brass show what it can do.

In Strauss's "Don Juan" we had a great surge in the leaping figure at the start, a warmly rhapsodic account of the romantic chapters, impressive brass-bound climaxes.

The horn-playing was firm in timbre, the carnival riot was brilliant, and the shimmering away of tone after the Don's disaster was exquisitely brought off.

It takes you back

I would not have thought that, at this late date, an orchestra could have played Dukas's "L'Apprenti Sorcier" with wonder in its eyes, so to speak. The colour was applied with a mixture of neatness and verve which brought the thing itself out before us. This playing took me back to when I heard this piece for the first time.

International Press Cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2
Extract from
The Press and Journal
ABERDEEN
Date.....
(See

THE TIMES TUESDAY AUGUST 28 1956

The Arts

BOSTON ORCHESTRA COMES TO EUROPE

FROM OUR MUSIC CRITIC

EDINBURGH, Aug. 27

The Boston Symphony Orchestra celebrates its seventy-fifth birthday with a tour in Europe which began with a concert in Cork last week, includes a five days' stay at the Edinburgh Festival, and will ultimately take it as far as Moscow. This is the orchestra which had George Henschel as its first conductor, became internationally famous during Koussevitzky's 25 years' reign, and is now directed by two Frenchmen, Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, who share the concerts of the present tour.

There was naturally some excitement in the Usher Hall last night in anticipation of hearing this American orchestra in the flesh for the first time. Its tone quality was soon revealed as nearer to that of the Philadelphia Orchestra than to the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra's, which was here last year. The tone of the strings is deep and warm, of the wood-wind lustrous and of the brass brilliant—the trumpets are indeed too shatteringly loud. The New York tone as a whole was like burnished brass with a high surface polish from which, as it were, the music bounced off. The music rides comfortably like a ship in deep water on the full orchestral tone of the Boston players. But the heavy brass obtrudes even more than in our own English orchestras, where it is allowed only to dominate the tutti in a climax and break through the texture in a way that Viennese orchestras avoid even at a fortissimo. The programme chosen for the first concert, which was conducted by Mr. Munch, amply demonstrated the technical virtuosity of its members.

But orchestra and conductor blotted their copy book right at the beginning by an absurdly inflated performance of Haydn's B Flat symphony No. 102. Have French conductors no sense of style and do they disregard the scholars' work done in the present century on the music of the eighteenth? For Mr. Monteux was guilty of the same breach of style and taste at a recent concert in London. Mr. Munch halved the number of his contrabasses but otherwise retained his full strength. It was a gaudy noise, but it was not Haydn. What were right for Strauss's Don Juan and Dukas's L'apprenti sorcier—i.e., weight of tone and frontal assault—were not right for eighteenth-century classicism.

The first programme, consisting of two tone-poems and two symphonies, contained the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, which was commissioned by this orchestra and composed with its style and sound-quality in mind. As such it was a case of hand in glove: the music suited the orchestra and the orchestra made the most of the music. The scherzo was the movement with most individual character. No key is assigned to the symphony as a whole but it is firmly based on key tonality. It has no programme but bears in general the American traits of being positive and free from mystery, energetic and rejoicing in its own functioning. The slow movement was more contemplative, elegiac even with themes of a romantic character propelled by the slow grinding of mild dissonances, which is perhaps to say that it was a little old fashioned. If the emotional content was slight for a full-scale, fully scored symphony, it was interesting as an example of the way in which American composers are gradually forging a music of their own, though we onlookers have to beware of seeing too readily a generic picture of a continental culture in particular works of individual composers.

IMPROVING REPERTORY STANDARDS

GUILDFORD'S ASPIRATIONS

The Guildford Theatre, which has just issued its annual report, is one of those repertory theatres in the ambiguous position of being a weekly rep. with aspirations to the standards usually associated with a fortnightly or even three-weekly one.

Its consumption of plays, to use its own phrase, is at the rate of 50 a year. So is that of the ordinary weekly repertory. But since it means to present these plays as well as it possibly can, it contrives as far as possible to give each play two weeks' rehearsal instead of one. In fact, one out of every three plays it does is given two weeks' rehearsal. In case it may be wondered how this is possible, the report explains that it has been done by retaining a larger permanent company and by "a suitable arrangement in the order of plays." This, together with the fact that actors and actresses under contract have been given more "weeks out" than in the past, has helped to ease the strain on the company and has, it is said, materially contributed to better artistic standards. There is no easing of the strain, however, on the stage director, stage managers, and other stage staff. As artistic standards rise and more rehearsal time is given to each production, says the report, so their duties and responsibility increase.

It is the policy of the Guildford Theatre to give opportunities to new and young producers, in which, it may be commented

After a battle the dumb Catherine threatens her mother because she will not give offers shirts as bandages for wounded farmers—a scene from the play Mother Courage by Bertold Brecht, performed by the Berliner Ensemble at the Palace Theatre last night.

FESTIVAL LETTER

Aberdeen Players Could Learn From 'Milk Wood'

By W. A. MITCHELL

Edinburgh, Monday night.

WHATEVER else is in store in these next two weeks of this tenth Edinburgh Festival it is almost certainly to be referred to in the future as the Oedipus Festival.

Last week the Hamburg State Opera gave us Stravinsky's near-oratorio version of the legend. Next week the Stratford Players from Ontario will stage Sophocles' more straightforward account in a translation by W. B. Yeats.

In between, in the Royal Arch Halls, members of the Aberdeen University Dramatic and Mermaid Societies have been trying their hand at Jean Cocteau's slant on Oedipus, which he calls "The Infernal Machine."

Parts of Speech

BY the time I was able to get round to this production the students had had plenty of time to get into their stride and play the piece to the full extent of their abilities. As far as the producer, Jimmy Bayne, was concerned, his side was display-

Edinburgh setting of the days of Burke and Hare and the "Resurrectionists" this should have entertained the visitors better.

As Dr Knox, Tom Fleming is well suited and Marilyn Gray's Mary Paterson electrifies the tavern scene in the second act. Lennox Milne keeps the right grip on Amelia Dishart. But elsewhere there are too many wantings. Surely it would not have been asking too much that Burke and Hare be recruited from the Abbey Theatre, Dublin?

On the drama side of this Festival there is much still to come, but meanwhile the one really worth-while piece encountered has been the dramatisation of Dylan Thomas's "Under Milk Wood." Now there was speaking and voice production for you. Attendance at one or two of the rehearsals would have shown the Aberdeen players the true light.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
"THE SCOTSMAN"
EDINBURGH
28 AUG 1956
Date .....
(See information overleaf.)

Pierre Monteux, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Usher Hall last night, wears his tartan jacket at rehearsal.

SCOTTISH DAILY MAIL, Monday, August 27, 1956

★ THE FESTIVAL LAST NIGHT ★

THIS ORCHESTRA HAS SNAP

The 'Boston' in top form

By PERCY CATER

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose Usher Hall concert last night was its first at an Edinburgh Festival, played in a manner worthy of its long reputation. Not a sign of "nerves" at the meeting with Edinburgh's international audience.

On the contrary, everything done by this 100-strong force—only two girl players, the principal flute and a harpist, in its ranks — is conspicuously assured, collected, controlled.

It is in first-class form for the trip. In the Haydn No. 102 Symphony last night the strings sang as sweetly as I have heard any in a long time.

Outsize white baton

Charles Münch, tall, lean, white-haired, wielding an outsized white baton, thrashes the air with it, vibrates in moments of crisis.

The response is there almost before Münch demands it. This orchestra has freshness, alacrity, smartness. It snaps to its work, and the sound has an edge on it. The string tone is lithe and surging, can become, of itself, apart from Münch's taut discipline, vigorous and proud, of nuanced to delicate shades.

I liked the balance of the ensemble in the adagio and the rush of the finale was captivating.

The American composer Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, commissioned by the Boston Orchestra and the Koussevitzky Foundation for this anniversary season, which was given its first European performance, strikes me as a meritorious feat.

It is sombre and gay, but always the objective is plain.

The scherzo is a fine frolic for the strings. Its inventiveness never falters. The energetic finale lets the brass show what it can do.

In Strauss's "Don Juan" we had a great surge in the leaping figure at the start, a warmly rhapsodic account of the romantic chapters, impressive brass-bound climaxes.

The horn-playing was firm in timbre, the carnival riot was brilliant, and the shimmering away of tone after the Don's disaster was exquisitely brought off.

It takes you back

I would not have thought that, at this late date, an orchestra could have played Dukas's "L'Apprenti Sorcier" with wonder in its eyes, so to speak. The colour was applied with a mixture of neatness and verve which brought the thing itself out before us. This playing took me back to when I heard this piece for the first time.

International Press-Cutting Bureau
184 Strand, London, W.C.2

Extract from
The Press and Journal
ABERDEEN

Date.....
(See information overleaf.)

THE TIMES TUESDAY AUGUST 28 1956

The Arts

BOSTON ORCHESTRA COMES TO EUROPE

FROM OUR MUSIC CRITIC

EDINBURGH, Aug. 27

The Boston Symphony Orchestra celebrates its seventy-fifth birthday with a tour in Europe which began with a concert in Cork last week, includes a five days' stay at the Edinburgh Festival, and will ultimately take it as far as Moscow. This is the orchestra which had George Henschel as its first conductor, became internationally famous during Koussevitzky's 25 years' reign, and is now directed by two Frenchmen, Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, who share the concerts of the present tour.

There was naturally some excitement in the Usher Hall last night in anticipation of hearing this American orchestra in the flesh for the first time. Its tone quality was soon revealed as nearer to that of the Philadelphia Orchestra than to the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra's, which was here last year. The tone of the strings is deep and warm, of the wood-wind lustrous and of the brass brilliant—the trumpets are indeed too shatteringly loud. The New York tone as a whole was like burnished brass with a high surface polish from which, as it were, the music bounced off. The music rides comfortably like a ship in deep water on the full orchestral tone of the Boston players. But the heavy brass obtrudes even more than in our own English orchestras, where it is allowed only to dominate the tutti in a climax and break through the texture in a way that Viennese orchestras avoid even at a fortissimo. The programme chosen for the first concert, which was conducted by Mr. Munch, amply demonstrated the technical virtuosity of its members.

But orchestra and conductor blotted their copy book right at the beginning by an absurdly inflated performance of Haydn's B Flat symphony No. 102. Have French conductors no sense of style and do they disregard the scholars' work done in the present century on the music of the eighteenth? For Mr. Monteux was guilty of the same breach of style and taste at a recent concert in London. Mr. Munch halved the number of his contrabasses but otherwise retained his full strength. It was a gaudy noise, but it was not Haydn. What were right for Strauss's Don Juan and Dukas's L'apprenti sorcier—i.e., weight of tone and frontal assault—were not right for eighteenth-century classicism.

The first programme, consisting of two tone-poems and two symphonies, contained the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, which was commissioned by this orchestra and composed with its style and sound-quality in mind. As such it was a case of hand in glove: the music suited the orchestra and the orchestra made the most of the music. The scherzo was the movement with most individual character. No key is assigned to the symphony as a whole but it is firmly based on key tonality. It has no programme but bears in general the American traits of being positive and free from mystery, energetic and rejoicing in its own functioning. The slow movement was more contemplative, elegiac even with themes of a romantic character propelled by the slow grinding of mild dissonances, which is perhaps to say that it was a little old fashioned. If the emotional content was slight for a full-scale, fully scored symphony, it was interesting as an example of the way in which American composers are gradually forging a music of their own, though we onlookers have to beware of seeing too readily a generic picture of a continental culture in particular works of individual composers.

IMPROVING REPERTORY STANDARDS

GUILDFORD'S ASPIRATIONS

The Guildford Theatre, which has just issued its annual report, is one of those repertory theatres in the ambiguous position of being a weekly rep. with aspirations to the standards usually associated with a fortnightly or even three-weekly one.

Its consumption of plays, to use its own phrase, is at the rate of 50 a year. So is that of the ordinary weekly repertory. But since it means to present these plays as well as it possibly can, it contrives as far as possible to give each play two weeks' rehearsal instead of one. In fact, one out of every three plays it does is given two weeks' rehearsal. In case it may be wondered how this is possible, the report explains that it has been done by retaining a larger permanent company and by "a suitable arrangement in the order of plays." This, together with the fact that actors and actresses under contract have been given more "weeks out" than in the past, has helped to ease the strain on the company and has, it is said, materially contributed to better artistic standards. There is no easing of the strain, however, on the stage director, stage managers, and other stage staff. As artistic standards rise and more rehearsal time is given to each production, says the report, so their duties and responsibility increase.

It is the policy of the Guildford Theatre to give opportunities to new and young producers, in which, it may be commented

After a battle the dumb Catherine threatens her mother because she will not give officers' shirts as bandages for wounded farmers—a scene from the play Mother Courage by Bertold Brecht, performed by the Berliner Ensemble at the Palace Theatre last night.

FESTIVAL LETTER

Aberdeen Players Could Learn From 'Milk Wood'

By W. A. MITCHELL

Edinburgh, Monday night.

WHATEVER else is in store in these next two weeks of this tenth Edinburgh Festival it is almost certainly to be referred to in the future as the Oedipus Festival.

Last week the Hamburg State Opera gave us Stravinsky's near-oratorio version of the legend. Next week the Stratford Players from Ontario will stage Sophocles' more straightforward account in a translation by W. B. Yeats.

In between, in the Royal Arch Halls, members of the Aberdeen University Dramatic and Mermaid Societies have been trying their hand at Jean Cocteau's slant on Oedipus, which he calls "The Infernal Machine."

Parts of Speech

BY the time I was able to get round to this production the students had had plenty of time to get into their stride and play the piece to the full extent of their abilities. As far as the producer, Jimmy Bayne, was concerned, his side was display-

Edinburgh setting of the days of Burke and Hare and the "Resurrectionists" this should have entertained the visitors better.

As Dr Knox, Tom Fleming is well suited and Marilyn Gray's Mary Paterson electrifies the tavern scene in the second act. Lennox Milne keeps the right grip on Amelia Dishart. But elsewhere there are too many wantings. Surely it would not have been asking too much that Burke and Hare be recruited from the Abbey Theatre, Dublin?

On the drama side of this Festival there is much still to come, but meanwhile the one really worth-while piece encountered has been the dramatisation of Dylan Thomas's "Under Milk Wood." Now there was speaking and voice production for you. Attendance at one or two of the rehearsals would have shown the Aberdeen players the true light.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
"THE SCOTSMAN"
EDINBURGH
28 AUG 1956

Date .....
(See information overleaf.)

Pierre Monteux, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Usher Hall last night, wears his tartan jacket at rehearsal.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Edinburgh Evening News

IMPRESSIVE PLAYING BY BOSTON BRASS

"Never look encouragingly at the brass," said Richard Strauss once in his slightly tongue-in-the-cheek ten golden rules for conductors. We know what he meant alright but, of course, he never heard the present Boston Brass. This ensemble, formed in 1952, gave their European premiere in the Freemasons' Hall this forenoon and a right worthy one it was.

All full-time members of the Boston Orchestra, the body varies in size from quartet to octet as the occasion demands; virtuosi players they are, one and all.

The first two items, by Gabrielli and Bonelli, are examples of sixteenth century antiphonal playing. The two brass choirs (each of trumpet, trombone, horn, and tuba) sit on opposite sides of the platform and then let battle commence. The resonant Freemasons' Hall shook a bit, but the control and balance of the choirs was indeed beautifully sensitive. The Toccata by Bonelli was perhaps not quite so showy as it might have been.

BRITTLE, BRILLIANT

Poulenc's Sonata for horn, trumpet, and trombone, from the chirpy allegro to its scintillatingly played Rondeau was the antidote par excellence for a wet morning.

The Sanders Quintet in B Flat, however, was the best thing of the day. Though the sparse programme notes give no clue, Sanders is a contemporary American composer who is at present Professor of Music at Brooklyn College. This work, 1942 vintage, has in the allegro vivo some wonderful writing for brass; brittle, brilliant, and mercifully scored for the breathing needs of the players.

Berezowsky, another American composer, was represented by his Brass Septet in B Flat. The rondo with which it closes was a performance of prodigious technical virtuosity by the players.

Sensibly the programme was the shortest — 50 minutes — of the Festival. Mr Voisin knows when to stop with his brilliant brass ensemble.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from The
LIVERPOOL DAILY POST
Date

AT THE

An orche

perso

By A. K.

ONE of the big three orchestras, the Boston at the Edinburgh Festival last five concerts. Their present who shares the concert with a

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
The Glasgow Herald
GLASGOW
28 AUG 1956

A CHANGE OF PERSONALITY

Pierre Monteux as Conductor

From Our Music Critic

IN a festival of remarkably youthful veterans, the daddy of the lot, Pierre Monteux, aged 81, last night took charge of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. With the change of conductor, the orchestra pretty well changed its personality. Generally it was as efficient as ever, but the edges were rounded, the ruthless bite was softened.

Even the trumpets at times shunned their too-brassy assault on the ears—though that is no doubt their usual function—and made music.

There was loss as well as profit in this. The lovely things in the inner movements of Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra, with quite delectable woodwind in the "Game of the Couples" scherzo, did not quite compensate for the over-all lack of drive, the occasional sag in the tension.

But Schubert's great C major, the Ninth Symphony, was all gain in a performance of mellow beauty, gracious, and warmhearted over the whole of its leisurely length.

American Work

The American work in the programme was Paul Creston's Second Symphony, a loose description of a two-movement work, conceived "as an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music; song and dance." Less brutally incisive in its impact than Piston's symphony of the previous night, no less competent in invention and more convincing in content, with a remembrance that feeling is a constituent part of musical expression, it made a considerable impression and fared well at the hands of last night's orchestra.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Huddersfield Daily Examiner

PLAYFELLOW'S FESTIVAL NOTE BOOK

This U.S. Orchestra Is Well Drilled

Edinburgh (Tuesday)

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived here in Edinburgh this last week-end on a flying tour that will take them to Russia. They are a combination of which, one gathers, Americans are very proud.

For one thing, we are assured in accents of New England, that they are "very old." The orchestra has in fact just completed their seventy-fifth season and for any organisation to be seventy-five years old in the United States is to be almost venerable.

There are other reasons why Americans should feel proud of this orchestra. It is a wonderfully fine musical instrument. For my own part I like it much better than any other American orchestra I have heard in Edinburgh and I very much doubt that there can be any body of strings in the U.S.A. as good as those of the Boston Orchestra. They number sixty-six players in all—thirty-four of them first and second violins—and from these forces you might expect a big volume of tone.

Surprisingly enough the tone is rather small—thin, indeed—but pure and sweet and quite free from the steeliness we associate with New York Philharmonic.

Strongest Feature

Their strongest feature, I think, is in their brass section. I have never heard an orchestra anywhere whose trumpets—there is an exceptionally gifted first trumpet—horns and trombones produce such beauty of tone. It is not just that each separate section is good but that all together they have a blend of almost unbelievable beauty.

The whole orchestra is as well drilled as any German or Austrian combination. In the Haydn Symphony 102 in B Flat Major it was, if anything, too well drilled. Haydn's music is sometimes played as though he were half a woman—Charles Munch and the Boston Orchestra took us to the other extreme so that a great deal of refined precision left us at the end feeling that the symphony had been robbed of its true sense of repose.

The concert introduced to Europe Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony. This is a most engaging work in which the orchestra could show themselves off to perfection. Piston himself has said that he wrote the work with this orchestra in mind, and there is evidence that he understands it very well.

Not Profound Music

The symphony is not profound music and the composer, supplying programme notes, declines to supply any of the usual sort saying that the work was composed "with no other effect than to make music to be played and listened to."

What is most remarkable about it is the way in which Piston uses his large forces with such a light touch. If he does not move us at all deeply he enchants the ear with the variety and ingenuity of orchestral effect.

The bravura quality of this orchestra was well displayed in Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" and even better in Paul Dukas's "L' Apprenti Sorcier." I have never heard the latter played with such variety of effects, with so much brilliance of detail and with such an overwhelming sense of magic.

This orchestra, by the way, will play in Leeds on its return from Russia.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the
EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH
Date 28
(See information overleaf)

Brilliant fare from the Boston

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played again in the Usher Hall last night, this time under the octogenarian conductor Pierre Monteux.

It was a brilliant occasion, as befitted the very best that America can provide for the Festival. Last year the New York Orchestra showed what high standards mean on the other side of the Atlantic. Now it is the turn of that cultural centre, Boston, Mass.

Brilliance often has superficiality as its concomitant but that accusation cannot be levelled at the Boston Orchestra. Neither can it be said that it is a machine without a soul. It is wonderful to hear a work in all its component parts, with all the contrasts of light and shade and texture woven into one homogeneous whole.

Such was the experience in the first item. Our visiting orchestras bring, on the side, so to speak, a sample or two of the native brew and one such last night was the Symphony No. 2 by Paul Creston. Hearing a modern work for the first time is often a testing experience, but this delightful work held its interest from beginning to end for two reasons—its intrinsic merit derived from a fundamental sincerity of purpose and the clear exposition it was accorded.

Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra—a work with perhaps less general appeal—underlined the technical competence of the orchestra. There is an insistent compulsion to listen to and to comprehend the composer's ideas. In exposition everything is clear and precise; one department does not blot out another. In tutti and forte there is a full-bodied welling sound that is wholly satisfying.

Modern works in front, the great C Major Symphony of Schubert after the interval—this was good programme planning, for the appetite was whetted. The meal satisfied both the gourmet and the gourmand in us. This was glorious music making, the immortal melodies surging onward in a rounded beauty of orchestral tone B.

No night stops

IN the autumn air travellers will be able to fly from

High speed

HIGH speed photography is being used increasingly in modern research, and in the last year or two has been applied for the first time in connection with work on nuclear and other explosions, and on ballistic problems generally. The Department of Scientific and Industrial Research are keenly aware of the importance of this developing science and are, in fact, sponsoring the third International Congress on High-speed photography in London next month. Among the subjects to be discussed are the application of new techniques since the first congress was held in Washington in 1952—the second was in Paris two years later—to biology and medicine, industrial machine analysis, aero-research, and underwater work. Mr J. R. Bevins, Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Works, and M.P. for Toxteth, will greet visitors to the congress at a reception in Lancaster House on September 10. Some 300 delegates including 200 from overseas, are expected to attend the congress, which will last for five days.

allegro ... writing for brass; brittle, brilliant, and mercifully scored for the breathing needs of the players.

Berezowsky, another American composer, was represented by his Brass Septet in B Flat. The rondo with which it closes was a performance of prodigious technical virtuosity by the players.

Sensibly the programme was the shortest — 50 minutes — of the Festival. Mr Voisin knows when to stop with his brilliant brass ensemble.

... in a performance of mellow beauty, gracious, and warmhearted over the whole of its leisurely length.

American Work

The American work in the programme was Paul Creston's Second Symphony, a loose description of a two-movement work, conceived "as an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music; song and dance." Less brutally incisive in its impact than Piston's symphony of the previous night, no less competent in invention and more convincing in content, with a remembrance that feeling is a constituent part of musical expression, it made a considerable impression and fared well at the hands of last night's orchestra.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
104 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from The
LIVERPOOL DAILY POST
Date 28 AUG 1956

AT THE FESTIVAL

An orchestra with personality

By A. K. HOLLAND

EDINBURGH, Monday.

ONE of the big three of America's most famous orchestras, the Boston Symphony, made their debut at the Edinburgh Festival last night in the first of a series of five concerts. Their present conductor is Charles Munch who shares the concert with a former conductor the veteran Pierre Monteux.

Their programmes are inevitably designed to show off the qualities in which they excel but they bring with them two American works which are new to Europe, the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston and the Symphonic Ode of Aaron Copland. Both were commissioned to celebrate the 75th anniversary this year of the orchestra's foundation and indeed Piston confesses that his symphony was written with the very sounds of this particular orchestra in mind.

That being so one is perhaps justified in seeing in the symphony no deep or hidden meanings but simply a piece of music for a finely equipped orchestra. If it is a showpiece that need not be derogatry Thus the first movement exemplifies the expressive cantabile style and generally sets out to reveal the orchestra as a whole. The second is a gosamer scherzo which displays both the delicacy and the speed of the various sections.

* * *

THE third is a serene adagio with some prominence given to solo instruments and to string tone while the last is perhaps the most obviously American eupetic energy and its fashionable fugal development.

Thus the symphony is less a statement of Mr Piston's own personality than a tribute to that of the orchestra. Personality is what this orchestra has, it is a well bred and highly cultivated orchestra, the product of intensive training and unremitting idealism. That it is a brilliant orchestra is almost to be taken to granted but it never stems to let brilliance get the better of artistic purpose.

There is no section that is not first class in itself. There is a wonderfully fine and intense quality in the strings, sixty-six in number and all men (there are only two women players in the orchestra, a first flute and a second harp) the trumpet playing is obviously that of a country which has developed the trumpet for good or ill into the position of an instrumental prima donna and thorns and trombones are massively bland in tone.

The woodwind is superb and the drumming again is that of the virtuoso order though rather too dry and military-band for my taste.

* * *

SUCH a performance as they gave of Strauss' "Don Juan" full of dramatic tension, incisive in attack, of faultless unaminity and remorseless energy was lacking only in the more sentimental German qualities of warmth and intimacy. Munch drove the work hard but he followed it by an electrifying performance of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" of Dukas which managed however to be more sinister than humorous more grisly than fantastic. But it was superb as orchestral presentation.

It was all such a complete contrast to Beecham. There was not a lose-end or an effeminate contour anywhere. Virile, clean, well mannered and immensely self confident, it left us a little breathless and over-awed at the end. Obviously the Bostonians have been rehearsed upto the hilt for this is the beginning of a hustling European tour covering nineteen cities and thirteen countries in twenty-seven days.

... trombones produce such beauty of tone. It is not just that each separate section is good but that all together they have a blend of almost unbelievable beauty.

The whole orchestra is as well drilled as any German or Austrian combination. In the Haydn Symphony 102 in B Flat Major it was, if anything, too well drilled. Haydn's music is sometimes played as though he were half a woman—Charles Munch and the Boston Orchestra took us to the other extreme so that a great deal of refined precision left us at the end feeling that the symphony had been robbed of its true sense of repose.

The concert introduced to Europe Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony. This is a most engaging work in which the orchestra could show themselves off to perfection. Piston himself has said that he wrote the work with this orchestra in mind, and there is evidence that he understands it very well.

Not Profound Music

The symphony is not profound music and the composer, supplying programme notes, declines to supply any of the usual sort saying that the work was composed "with no other effect than to make music to be played and listened to."

What is most remarkable about it is the way in which Piston uses his large forces with such a light touch. If he does not move us at all deeply he enchants the ear with the variety and ingenuity of orchestral effect.

The bravura quality of this orchestra was well displayed in Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" and even better in Paul Dukas's "L' Apprenti Sorcier." I have never heard the latter played with such variety of effects, with so much brilliance of detail and with such an overwhelming sense of magic.

This orchestra, by the way, will play in Leeds on its return from Russia.

... night, this time under the octogenarian conductor Pierre Monteux.

It was a brilliant occasion, as befitted the very best that America can provide for the Festival. Last year the New York Orchestra showed what high standards mean on the other side of the Atlantic. Now it is the turn of that cultural centre, Boston, Mass.

Brilliance often has superficiality as its concomitant but that accusation cannot be levelled at the Boston Orchestra. Neither can it be said that it is a machine without a soul. It is wonderful to hear a work in all its component parts, with all the contrasts of light and shade and texture woven into one homogeneous whole.

Such was the experience in the first item. Our visiting orchestras bring, on the side, so to speak, a sample or two of the native brew and one such last night was the Symphony No. 2 by Paul Creston. Hearing a modern work for the first time is often a testing experience, but this delightful work held its interest from beginning to end for two reasons—its intrinsic merit derived from a fundamental sincerity of purpose and the clear exposition it was accorded.

Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra —a work with perhaps less general appeal—underlined the technical competence of the orchestra. There is an insistent compulsion to listen to and to comprehend the composer's ideas. In exposition everything is clear and precise; one department does not blot out another. In tutti and forte there is a full-bodied welling sound that is wholly satisfying.

Modern works in front, the great C Major Symphony of Schubert after the interval—this was good programme planning, for the appetite was whetted. The meal satisfied both the gourmet and the gourmand in us. This was glorious music making, the immortal melodies surging onward in a rounded beauty of orchestral tone

B.

BOSTON BOSTON EDITION SEPTEMBER 28 1956

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Yorkshire Evening News, Leeds

YOUR LOOK-IN TONIGHT

Boxing and Beethoven

VIEWERS tonight will see a special B.B.C. television film of the British heavyweight championship contest between Johnny Williams and Joe Erskine at Cardiff.

Part of the concert given in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conductor Charles Munch, tonight will be seen on television. The soloist is Isaac Stern, who will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Charles Munch, now the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where Koussevitzky made his great reputation, was born in Strasbourg in 1891, and at one time led the famous Gewandhaus Orchestra.

He went to the Boston Orchestra in 1949, and has made appearances with the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra in this country.

Isaac Stern was born in Russia in 1920 and his parents moved to San Francisco when he was one. At the age of six he began to study the piano and changed to the violin when he was eight.

He has played in many countries, undertaking a world tour in 1954. Earlier this year he made a four-week tour of the U.S.S.R., where he was enthusiastically received.

THE YORKSHIRE POST AND LEEDS MERCURY, TUESDAY, AUGUST 28, 19

Boston Orchestra at Edinburgh Festival

Contrasts in two symphonies

From ERNEST BRADBURY

EDINBURGH, Monday

An orchestra of fabulous reputation, already past its 75th birthday, two years older than Amsterdam's Concertgebouw, and known to gramophone enthusiasts the world over—the Boston Symphony—has arrived to give five concerts.

In the handsome brochure which it is taking on its travels there is a map of Europe showing the route of the Orchestra's tour. This began last week in Ireland. The line moves on to Scandinavia, Helsinki, Leningrad and Moscow, returning via Austria, Switzerland, Germany and Paris. Then it shoots forward surprisingly to Leeds—the only provincial town marked on its map—before returning to London for the farewell concerts.

Leeds is, therefore, extremely fortunate and enterprising, and visitors to the Town Hall on September 23 will hear an orchestra of splendour and majesty, unbelievably disciplined, wonderfully sonorous, with an enormous mass of string tone and brass and wind to match, a virtuoso ensemble of the highest calibre.

The Orchestra's appearance here is a highlight not only of this Festival, but of all the Festivals Edinburgh has yet held. Moreover, it has brought in its programmes three American works new to Europe, Symphonies by Piston and Creston and a Symphonic Ode by Copland—enough here, surely, to satisfy anybody. It is, therefore, with some sense of dismay that one quarrels with the very first work played in the Usher Hall last night, Haydn's B flat Symphony No. 102, which was given—or rather interpreted by Charles Münch—in so sledgehammer a fashion, with a brutality, heaviness and insensitivity so hideous, and with so scant a regard for Haydnesque grace and charm and tempi, as to make one gasp.

Poor Haydn!

MICHAEL BOMES and ELAINE FIFIELD
In a scene from last night's ballet.

MUSIC AS SCHUBERT MEANT IT TO BE

By GILBERT COLE

PIERRE MONTEUX, the veteran former conductor of the Boston Philharmonic Orchestra, walked slowly and with the little steps of an old man to the rostrum of the Usher Hall last night.

He is in his 85th year. In his youth he knew Brahms. He is one of music's most valuable direct links with the great past.

But, in conducting his first Edinburgh Festival concert with his old orchestra he proved himself as modern as the hour.

Two striking features of his conducting are the clarity and steadiness of his beat and the complete lack of any personal heroics. You feel with Mr. Monteux that what you are hearing is what the composer intended you to hear.

They began last night with an interesting American work, Paul Creston's Second Symphony, which makes effective use of modern jazz idioms in the second of its two movements.

Then came a performance of Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," which showed as few other works could have done the precision of the orchestra and the modernity of veteran Monteux's outlook.

Then, to show us that he is still as much in love with the classics, he gave us a performance of the Schubert Ninth Symphony which had breadth, humour, beauty, and all the other qualities Schubert put into it.

Boston men sound their trumpets

FOR the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, dapper, white-haired, Charles Münch strode with quick intenseness on to the Usher Hall platform and plunged into Haydn's Symphony in B flat Major.

In Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, which had its first European performance, I was too busy analysing the music as it went along to pay too much attention to the playing, but the Finale and the high-speed Scherzo were clearly performances in the virtuoso class.

★

Strauss's Don Juan was slowed down and speeded up in violent alternation. The trumpets' scream became ruthless The big "hero" tune for four horns was gratuitously reinforced by trombones.

Dukas' L'Apprenti Sorcier whizzed by neurasthenically. The players' energy and discipline were astonishing. No British orchestra could play like this. None would want to. I hope

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
The Glasgow Herald
GLASGOW
28 AUG 1956
Date.....

VISITORS FROM AMERICA

Boston Symphony Orchestra

From Our Music Critic

WELCOME American guests, the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, visiting the festival as part of a 75th anniversary tour that takes them as far as Russia, took over in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, on Sunday night.

Under their conductor, Charles Münch, no empty show piece marked their festival début but a mature Haydn symphony, No. 102 in B flat major, one of the London or Salomon Symphonies and typically rich in vigorous good humour and beauty, qualities that characterised Sunday night's spirited performance in which the remarkable efficiency of the orchestra was well and truly established.

Range of Power

Strauss's tone poem "Don Juan," and even more so, if that were possible, Dukas's Scherzo "L'Apprenti Sorcier" displayed on a much more lavish scale the incredible brilliance and range of power at their disposal—a power at times overwhelming in its sheer impact.

Their advocacy of American music began with the first European performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, whose four movements were, in the composer's own words, "flowing and expressive, light and fast, a serene adagio, and an energetic finale." Most of the purely musical content seemed to be in the adagio. What the other movements added up to must await further hearings though, in their rhythmic vitality and dissonance, they made a considerable physical impact at least and were played with astonishing virtuosity.

Sunday night's concert made it difficult to decide whether that virtuosity was always a means to a musical end, or at times an end in itself. But hearing the Boston orchestra is certainly an exhilarating experience.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
THE TIMES
LONDON

Date 28 AUG 1956

BOSTON ORCHESTRA COMES TO EUROPE

VIRTUOSITY IN THE USHER HALL

FROM OUR MUSIC CRITIC

EDINBURGH, Aug. 27

The Boston Symphony Orchestra celebrates its seventy-fifth birthday with a tour in Europe which began with a concert in Cork last week, includes a five days' stay at the Edinburgh Festival, and will ultimately take it as far as Moscow. This is the orchestra which had George Henschel as its first conductor, became internationally famous during Koussevitzky's 25 years' reign, and is now directed by two Frenchmen, Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, who share the concerts of the present tour.

There was naturally some excitement in the Usher Hall last night in anticipation of hearing this American orchestra in the flesh for the first time. Its tone quality was soon revealed as nearer to that of the Philadelphia Orchestra than to the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra's, which was here last year. The tone of the strings is deep and warm, of the wood-wind lustrous and of the brass brilliant—the trumpets are indeed too shatteringly loud. The New York tone as a whole was like burnished brass with a high surface polish from which, as it were, the music bounced off. The music rides comfortably like a ship in deep water on the full orchestral tone of the Boston players. But the heavy brass obtrudes even more than in our own English orchestras, where it is allowed only to dominate the tutti in a climax and break through the texture in a way that Viennese orchestras avoid even at a fortissimo. The programme chosen for the first concert, which was conducted by Mr. Munch, amply demonstrated the technical virtuosity of its members.

But orchestra and conductor blotted their copy book right at the beginning by an absurdly inflated performance of Haydn's B Flat symphony No. 102. Have French conductors no sense of style and do they disregard the scholars' work done in the present century on the music of the eighteenth? For Mr. Monteux was guilty of the same breach of style and taste at a recent concert in London. Mr. Munch halved the number of his contrabasses but otherwise retained his full strength. It was a gaudy noise, but it was not Haydn. What were right for Strauss's Don Juan and Dukas's L'apprenti sorcier—i.e., weight of tone and frontal assault—were not right for eighteenth-century classicism.

The first programme, consisting of two tone-poems and two symphonies, contained the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, which was commissioned by this orchestra and composed with its style and sound-quality in mind. As such it was a case of hand in glove: the music suited the orchestra and the orchestra made the most of the music. The scherzo was the movement with most individual character. No key is assigned to the symphony as a whole but it is firmly based on key tonality. It has no programme but bears in general the American traits of being positive and free from mystery, energetic and rejoicing in its own functioning. The slow movement was more contemplative, elegiac even with themes of a romantic character propelled by the slow grinding of mild dissonances, which is perhaps to say that it was a little old fashioned. If the emotional content was slight for a full-scale, fully scored symphony, it was interesting as an example of the way in which American composers are gradually forging a music of their own, though we onlookers have to beware of seeing too readily a generic picture of a continental culture in particular works of individual composers.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Northern Dispatch, Darlington

Once Again

The violinist, Isaac Stern, could say "We've done this before," when the B.B.C. cameras focus on him and Mr. Charles Munch, who will be conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for tonight's visit to the Edinburgh Festival (8.25).

Two years ago the 36-year-old Russian-born violinist was at the Usher Hall at Edinburgh, also playing before the television cameras with the 65-year-old conductor. Only the orchestra and the music have changed. Then it was the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise. They played Prokofiev's first violin concerto. Tonight the work is Beethoven's violin concerto.

* * * *

Rossano Brazzi, the Italian star, will be the main guest of tonight's Picture Parade at 9.45.

* * * *

A tele-recording of the broadcast of the Solemn Requiem Mass for Cardinal Griffin takes the place of Relax, Look and Listen at 10.45 tonight.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Yorkshire Evening News, Leeds

YOUR LOOK-IN TONIGHT

Boxing and Beethoven

VIEWERS tonight will see a special B.B.C. television film of the British heavyweight championship contest between Johnny Williams and Joe Erskine at Cardiff.

Part of the concert given in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conductor Charles Munch, tonight will be seen on television. The soloist is Isaac Stern, who will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Charles Munch, now the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where Koussevitzky made his great reputation, was born in Strasbourg in 1891, and at one time led the famous Gewandhaus Orchestra.

He went to the Boston Orchestra in 1949, and has made appearances with the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra in this country.

Isaac Stern was born in Russia in 1920 and his parents moved to San Francisco when he was one. At the age of six he began to study the piano and changed to the violin when he was eight.

He has played in many countries, undertaking a world tour in 1954. Earlier this year he made a four-week tour of the U.S.S.R., where he was enthusiastically received.

THE YORKSHIRE POST AND LEEDS MERCURY, TUESDAY, AUGUST 28, 19

Boston Orchestra at Edinburgh Festival

Contrasts in two symphonies

From ERNEST BRADBURY

EDINBURGH, Monday

An orchestra of fabulous reputation, already past its 75th birthday, two years older than Amsterdam's Concertgebouw, and known to gramophone enthusiasts the world over—the Boston Symphony—has arrived to give five concerts.

In the handsome brochure which it is taking on its travels there is a map of Europe showing the route of the Orchestra's tour. This began last week in Ireland. The line moves on to Scandinavia, Helsinki, Leningrad and Moscow, returning via Austria, Switzerland, Germany and Paris. Then it shoots forward surprisingly to Leeds—the only provincial town marked on its map—before returning to London for the farewell concerts.

Leeds is, therefore, extremely fortunate and enterprising, and visitors to the Town Hall on September 23 will hear an orchestra of splendour and majesty, unbelievably disciplined, wonderfully sonorous, with an enormous mass of string tone and brass and wind to match, a virtuoso ensemble of the highest calibre.

The Orchestra's appearance here is a highlight not only of this Festival, but of all the Festivals Edinburgh has yet held. Moreover, it has brought in its programmes three American works new to Europe, Symphonies by Piston and Creston and a Symphonic Ode by Copland—enough here, surely, to satisfy anybody. It is, therefore, with some sense of dismay that one quarrels with the very first work played in the Usher Hall last night, Haydn's B flat Symphony No. 102, which was given—or rather interpreted by Charles Münch—in so sledgehammer a fashion, with a brutality, heaviness and insensitivity so hideous, and with so scant a regard for Haydnesque grace and charm and tempi, as to make one gasp.

Poor Haydn!

MICHAEL GOMES and ELAINE FIFIELD
In a scene from last night's ballet.

SCOTTISH DAILY EXPRESS 8/28

MUSIC AS SCHUBERT MEANT IT TO BE

By GILBERT COLE

PIERRE MONTEUX, the veteran former conductor of the Boston Philharmonic Orchestra, walked slowly and with the little steps of an old man to the rostrum of the Usher Hall last night.

He is in his 85th year. In his youth he knew Brahms. He is one of music's most valuable direct links with the great past.

But, in conducting his first Edinburgh Festival concert with his old orchestra he proved himself as modern as the hour.

Two striking features of his conducting are the clarity and steadiness of his beat and the complete lack of any personal heroics. You feel with Mr. Monteux that what you are hearing is what the composer intended you to hear.

They began last night with an interesting American work, Paul Creston's Second Symphony, which makes effective use of modern jazz idioms in the second of its two movements.

Then came a performance of Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," which showed as few other works could have done the precision of the orchestra and the modernity of veteran Monteux's outlook.

Then, to show us that he is still as much in love with the classics, he gave us a performance of the Schubert Ninth Symphony which had breadth, humour, beauty, and all the other qualities Schubert put into it.

NEWS CHRONICLE + DAILY DISPATCH 8/28

Boston men sound their trumpets

FOR the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, dapper, white-haired, Charles Münch strode with quick intenseness on to the Usher Hall platform and plunged into Haydn's Symphony in B flat Major.

In Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, which had its first European performance, I was too busy analysing the music as it went along to pay too much attention to the playing, but the Finale and the high-speed Scherzo were clearly performances in the virtuoso class.

★

Strauss's Don Juan was slowed down and speeded up in violent alternation. The trumpets' scream became ruthless The big "hero" tune for four horns was gratuitously reinforced by trombones.

Dukas' L'Apprenti Sorcier whizzed by neurasthenically. The players' energy and discipline were astonishing. No British orchestra could play like this. None would want to, I hope.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
The Glasgow Herald
GLASGOW
28 AUG 1956
Date.....

VISITORS FROM AMERICA

Boston Symphony Orchestra

From Our Music Critic

WELCOME American guests, the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, visiting the festival as part of a 75th anniversary tour that takes them as far as Russia, took over in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, on Sunday night.

Under their conductor, Charles Munch, no empty show piece marked their festival début but a mature Haydn symphony, No. 102 in B flat major, one of the London or Salomon Symphonies and typically rich in vigorous good humour and beauty, qualities that characterised Sunday night's spirited performance in which the remarkable efficiency of the orchestra was well and truly established.

Range of Power

Strauss's [illegible] "Don Juan," and even [illegible] that were possib[illegible]. Dukas's "Scherzo "L'Apprenti Sorcier" displayed on a much more lavish scale the incredib[illegible] and range of power [illegible]—a power at time[illegible] in its sheer impact.

The [illegible] American music [illegible] with the first European [illegible] of Walter Piston's [illegible] No. [illegible] whose four mov[illegible] were, in the composer's [illegible] words, [illegible]owing and expres[illegible]ht and [illegible]st, a serene ada[illegible] an energetic finale." Mo[illegible] purely musical content s[illegible] to be in the adagio. Wh[illegible] other movements added up [illegible] await further hearings th[illegible] their rhythmic vitality and [illegible]ce, they made a considerab[illegible] musical impact at least and [illegible] played with astonishing [illegible].

Sunday n[illegible] concert made it difficult to [illegible] whether the virtuosity w[illegible] a means to a musical end [illegible] times an end in itself. B[illegible] the Boston orchestra i[illegible] an exhilarating experien[illegible]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
THE TIMES
LONDON

Date 28 AUG 1956

BOSTON ORCHESTRA COMES TO EUROPE

VIRTUOSITY IN THE USHER HALL

FROM OUR MUSIC CRITIC

EDINBURGH, AUG. 27

The Boston Symphony Orchestra celebrates its seventy-fifth birthday with a tour in Europe which began with a concert in Cork last week, includes a five days' stay at the Edinburgh Festival, and will ultimately take it as far as Moscow. This is the orchestra which had George Henschel as its first conductor, became internationally famous during Koussevitzky's 25 years' reign, and is now directed by two Frenchmen, Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, who share the concerts of the present tour.

There was naturally some excitement in the Usher Hall last night in anticipation of hearing this American orchestra in the flesh for the first time. Its tone quality was soon revealed as nearer to that of the Philadelphia Orchestra than to the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra's, which was here last year. The tone of the strings is deep and warm, of the wood-wind lustrous and of the brass brilliant—the trumpets are indeed too shatteringly loud. The New York tone as a whole was like burnished brass with a high surface polish from which, as it were, the music bounced off. The music rides comfortably like a ship in deep water on the full orchestral tone of the Boston players. But the heavy brass obtrudes even more than in our own English orchestras, where it is allowed only to dominate the tutti in a climax and break through the texture in a way that Viennese orchestras avoid even at a fortissimo. The programme chosen for the first concert, which was conducted by Mr. Munch, amply demonstrated the technical virtuosity of its members.

But orchestra and conductor blotted their copy book right at the beginning by an absurdly inflated performance of Haydn's B Flat symphony No. 102. Have French conductors no sense of style and do they disregard the scholars' work done in the present century on the music of the eighteenth? For Mr. Monteux was guilty of the same breach of style and taste at a recent concert in London. Mr. Munch halved the number of his contrabasses but otherwise retained his full strength. It was a gaudy noise, but it was not Haydn. What were right for Strauss's Don Juan and Dukas's L'apprenti sorcier i.e., weight of tone and frontal assault were not right for eighteenth-century classicism.

The first programme, consisting of two tone-poems and two symphonies, contained the first performance in Europe of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, which was commissioned by this orchestra and composed with its style and sound-quality in mind. As such it was a case of hand in glove: the music suited the orchestra and the orchestra made the most of the music. The scherzo was the movement with most individual character. No key is assigned to the symphony as a whole but it is firmly based on key tonality. It has no programme but bears in general the American traits of being positive and free from mystery, energetic and rejoicing in its own functioning. The slow movement was more contemplative, elegiac even with themes of a romantic character propelled by the slow grinding of mild dissonances, which is perhaps to say that it was a little old fashioned. If the emotional content was slight for a full-scale, fully scored symphony, it was interesting as an example of the way in which American composers are gradually forging a music of their own, though we onlookers have to beware of seeing too readily a generic picture of a continental culture in particular works of individual composers.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Northern Dispatch, Darlington

Once Again

The violinist, Isaac Stern, could say "We've done this before," when the B.B.C. cameras focus on him and Mr. Charles Munch who will be conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra for tonight's visit to the Edinburgh Festival (8.25).

Two years ago the 36-year-old Russian-born violinist was at the Usher Hall at Edinburgh, also playing before the television cameras with the 65-year-old conductor. Only the orchestra and the music have changed. Then it was the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise. They played Prokofiev's first violin concerto. Tonight the work is Beethoven's violin concerto.

* * * *

Rossano Brazzi, the Italian star, will be the main guest of tonight's Picture Parade at 9.45.

* * * *

A tele-recording of the broadcast of the Solemn Requiem Mass for Cardinal Griffin takes the place of Relax, Look and Listen at 10.45 tonight.

TIGHT BINDING

URY, THE YORKSHIR

stra at estival

ymphonies

OBURY

DINBURGH, Monday

n, already past its 75th am's Concertgebouw, and world over—the Boston

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BURE
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C

Extract from

The Glasgow Her

GLASGOW

28 AUG 1956

Date.....

VISITORS FROM AMERICA

Boston Symphony Orchestra

From Our Music Critic

WELCOME American guests, the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, visiting the festival as part of a 75th anniversary tour that takes them as far as Russia, took over in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, on Sunday night.

Under their conductor, Charles Münch, no empty show piece marked their festival début but a mature Haydn symphony, No. 102 in B flat major, one of the London or Salomon Symphonies and typically rich in vigorous good humour and beauty, qualities that characterised Sunday night's spirited performance in which the remarkable efficiency of the orchestra was well and truly established.

Range of Power

Strauss's tone poem "Don Juan," and even more so, if that were possible, Dukas's Scherzo "L'Apprenti Sorcier" displayed on a much more lavish scale the incredible brilliance and range of power at their disposal—a power at times overwhelming in its sheer impact.

Their advocacy of American music began with the first European performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, whose four movements were, in the composer's own words, "flowing and expressive, light and fast, a serene adagio, and an energetic finale." Most of the purely musical content seemed to be in the adagio. What the other movements added up to must await further hearings though, in their rhythmic vitality and dissonance, they made a considerable physical impact at least and were played with astonishing virtuosity.

Sunday night's concert made it difficult to decide whether that virtuosity was always a means to a musical end, or at times an end in itself. But hearing the Boston orchestra is certainly an exhilarating experience.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

AUG 28 1956

British Critics Laud Symphony, Hub Composer

LONDON, Aug 27 (Reuters)—Two widely read British music critics today had high praise for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day run at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival last night.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass-circulation Daily Express, said: "High-press music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several notches.

"Goodwin was one: Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard music Prof. Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

Piston's work, which had its European premiere performance last night, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the Daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding Piston's symphony.

"I like this lucid score . . . a meritorious feat . . its inventiveness never falters . . ." Cater wrote.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Manchester Guardian

Edinburgh Festival

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Haydn Up to Date; New Works by American Composers

By Colin Mason

EDINBURGH, MONDAY.

After he had finished his concerts on Friday Sir Thomas Beecham kindly but sarcastically hoped that what was to follow would be as good. Last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its conductor Charles Munch, making its first appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, took over the evening concert at the Usher Hall, and alas for Sir Thomas's sarcasm and for our national pride, it was better—better than the Royal Philharmonic as incontrovertibly as it is better than the Scottish National, the B.B.C., or the Hallé. Fortunately for our self-esteem, it is also no less clearly better than the New York Philharmonic, the Concertgebouw, or the Berlin Philharmonic.

So dazzling to the ear was its playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no "departments," no brass, wind, and strings to compare and evaluate. Its sound is a single marvellously rich silken texture into which every note of every instrument is so carefully woven that everything can be heard except the joins. Even the austerest critics, by temperament resistant to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of technique, had boiled hard by constant listening, were thrilled by it, and that not only Strauss's "Don Juan," where the music can only win from such orchestral luxury, but almost equally in a Haydn symphony, which could easily be ruined by it. The shining surface and perfect drill, although sometimes unnecessary to, or even slightly out of keeping with, the music, were rarely achieved at its expense, and much more often enriched it.

In "Don Juan" Munch succeeded in giving the orchestral writing all of the suaveness and sweetness of the typical orchestration of Strauss's decadence, without sacrificing anything of its early Straussian virility and exuberance. So, too, in the Haydn, using the full orchestra with no regard for the modern cult of "authenticity," he gave it a warmth and richer than Haydn could ever have imagined, but one that he could only have gasped at in sheer disbelief that such good fortune could be true. How he would have liked the speed at which Munch took the minuet and the last movement is more debatable. They were much faster than he is ever likely to have thought possible, but at this speed they were played with a style, precision, and elegance of phrase that nobody could better, either at this or at more "proper" speeds, and for this Haydn, being their inventor and creator, and not, like us modern pedants, a pious reverer, would probably have been delighted with them too. Even we self-appointed guardians of the musical proprieties, who, lacking Haydn's right to action it, could only disapprovingly admire, guiltily enjoyed it.

This does not end the catalogue of the orchestra's and Mr Munch's virtues. At each of their five concerts they are introducing a work by an American composer, three of them major ones receiving their first performance in Europe. At the opening concert it was Walter Piston's Sixth Symhony, commissioned by the orchestra for its seventy-fifth anniversary season earlier this year. Piston has taken full advantage of the orchestra's qualities and capabilities. In his scherzo he has given them just the kind of virtuoso piece (the modern equivalent of it that is) that Munch makes for them out of the Haydn last movement, and throughout the symphony he has exploited to the full (in the first movement sometimes rather too self-consciously) the experience of his exhaustive studies for his recently published book on orchestration. The best of its four movements are the middle two, the scherzo a brilliant piece in the vein of the best "motoric" movements of some of Hindemith's very witty early work, the adagio, a finely sustained melodic movement that bears comparison with some of the slow movements of Shostakovich's latest works. Unfortunately the outer movements are of inferior quality, the last commonplace and empty and the first very uneven. It has one very fine episode near the end of the first subject, heard in both exposition and recapitulation, in which the rhythmic melodic phrase and the very unorthodox and inelegant but beautiful harmonic progression strongly and pleasingly recall, with no hint of plagiarism, certain passages in Tippett's "Midsummer Marriage." There are other attractive lyrical moments in it, but too much of what surrounds them is undistinguished or arid. In spite of these weaknesses, the work as a whole left an impression of real musical quality and some personality, and unless the orchestra and Mr Munch, who lavished as much care and understanding on it as on the other work, were making it sound as much better than it really is, as they did Dukas's "Sorcerer's Apprentice," it is worth hearing again.

The orchestra's second concert to-night is under Pierre Monteux, who is playing Schubert's Symphony no. 9 and Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra, with another American symphony by Paul Creston, who is of a slightly younger generation than Piston. This concert clashes with the first stage performance in Britain of Bartók's ballet "The Miraculous Mandarin," but it was possible to hear Creston's symphony, his second, in rehearsal. Although it has not been performed in public before on this side of the Atlantic, it is not a new work (it was composed in 1944) and has been available for some time on gramophone records. It is music of less distinction, though possibly of readier popular appeal, than Piston's. The two main movements, each of which has an extended introduction, are like music for two unrelated films, the first a quiet pastoral romance, very tranquil, all sweet, soft Frenchified harmonies, with one "climactic" episode of no discernible relevance, the second a pursuit sequence, with breathing-spaces, in a thriller, beginning stealthily, like tracking along corridors at night, working up to an exciting chase, passing through a fairground, and including towards the end a train ride, suggested by an endlessly worked ostinato-rhythm—a trick on which Creston relies heavily elsewhere too, as he does altogether on cliches of one sort or another. It is efficient and effective music by a competent composer, efficient in originality and sensibility.

PIERRE MONTEUX WITH BOSTON ORCHESTRA

SCOTSMAN 3/28/56

BY OUR MUSIC CRITIC

It is an annual Festival phenomenon—the chameleon knack that orchestras have of altering their style and actual quality of tone to suit their different conductors. The most extreme case was provided by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra last year, when it suffered more than a sea-change on switching over from Ormandys to Hindemith's baton.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was perfectly recognisable last night when it was playing for that veteran expatriate French conductor, Pierre Monteux, instead of for Münch, but there were unmistakable differences of emphasis. Sunday's concert had been one of incisive brilliance, virtuosity, and excitement. Yesterday's was one of penny plain sobriety, a smoother, more classical "line" and a slightly more relaxed approach. The results were duller and in some ways more musical.

It depended on the sort of works up for performance. Given those Boston instrumentalists, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra could, and should, have been stupendous, whereas it emerged as a decent, thoroughly competent piece of playing of an overrr composition. On the other hand, th were some thrilling passages in great C major Symphony of Schul which ended the Usher Hall p gramme. The Finale was, however disappointment, as it is apt to be unl the conductor is making very long-te plans, and has set in motion a gigar ground rhythm.

The evening's novelty was a tv movement symphony (No. 2, Op. 35) the American composer, Paul Crest who describes it as "an apotheosis the two foundations of all music—so and dance." Mr Creston née Guttovegs is Sicilian by blood, and there is warmly lyrical impulse mixed up wi the barbed-wire impressionism of th "Introduction and Song." "The Inte lude and Dance" have a rather takin brash, rhythmic vigour, suggestive some "programme" which does not i fact exist.

ERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Edinburgh Evening News

BOSTON BEAU AND BRILLIAN

What a wonderfully rich fabric of sound the Symphony Orchestra can weave! They demonstr again in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night, w were conducted by Pierre Monteux in a programm from Schubert through Bartok to the contemporary A composer, Paul Creston.

This musical span of the Old and New World began in America with Creston's Symphony No. 2 Op. 35. It is a free interpretation of the word "symphony," being in two movements designed as, in the composer's words, "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music: song and dance."

Two other words (almost synonymous), "lyricism" and "rhythm," convey exactly the basis of the two movements. The first, founded on an essentially simple theme, demands great clarity of texture to keep its interweaving strands distinct, and this, indeed, it received from conductor and players alike.

In the second movement, rhythm and syncopation come to the fore.

One of the minor bewilderments of this Festival is that Mr Monteux, who looks like an amiable teddy bear, should encompass the dynamic force to recreate this diamantine brilliance.

RICH AND MOBILE

In Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, it was again the noble sounds achieved by all departments that made a lasting impression. In view of to-day's recital by the Boston Brass Ensemble (composed of instrumentalists from the orchestra), this department's rich and mobile playing in the chorale theme in the scherzo tucularly noteworthy.

Mr Monteux and the made Schubert's Sympho in C (The "Great") a ma monumental work. It re more emphatic treatment usually accorded it, and, because of this, the slow m did not have its usual appeal.

But again, as throughout gramme, the standard of was high, reaching at t unforgettable brillian beauty.

TARTAN TONES MUSIC AND MIR'

For the special benefit of I visitors there is a first-rate variety show at the Pal Theatre. It has the title of land Swing," and last audiences enjoyed a riot of music, and mirth from the t clad artists.

Comedians Grace Clark Colin Murray were in top while Desmond Carrol and Leslie provided a contrasting of mirth. Outstanding on musical side were the acco playing of Will Hannah and c butions by Grace Calvert wit Newhaven and Mussell Fisherwives' Choir. The burgh Transport Pipe Band received a great reception.

Uninhibited "Festival Gay was showered liberally on audience at the Gaiety last n Tommy Loman and Jo Beattie led the cast throug number of humorous sketc among which were "Time Laughter," "Nautical Nonser and "Something Domestic." B.B.C. recording team, the Kordites, were again in top form and delighted the audience with a number of their recent hit tunes.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from the
Evening Gazette
ROUGH
AUG 1956

Scottish Daily Mail Aug 28

PAGE 6

BOSTON— First they are BRILLIANT Then they are ROUGH

By D. L. HARPER

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra gave last night's Usher Hall concert under the command of its second conductor, Pierre Monteux, an 81-year-old with plenty of young ideas.

He belongs, in fact, to another musical era—he was 22 when Brahms died. Yet he is an authoritative interpreter of our contemporary music.

Bela Bartok's works are not easy to put over, nor are they—for many people—easy to listen to. But Monteux made last night's audience not only accept but warmly acclaim the Concerto for Orchestra, one of that controversial composer's last products.

He made it clear that the fearsome Bartok was only a simple fellow at heart, with a love of neat tunes, syncopation and humour.

Such successful missionary work will soon cause the "controversial" aspect to disappear.

And Paul Creston, a New York church organist, could not have had a more persuasive advocate to present his Symphony No. 2.

But it, unfortunately, provided only passing pleasure from some moments of orchestral poetry and power, with sombre use of the lower strings and no startling innovations.

The orchestra had been performing exceedingly efficiently in these two items. And so well they might, for Monteux gave them every encouragement.

He tidily ticked every phrase off the end of his stick so that one felt that, with him to guide, the merest novice could join that orchestra without fear of going far wrong.

But it was when we returned to a regular repertory item, Schubert's "Great C major" Symphony, that the quality of the playing seemed to decline.

There were rough passages that contrasted sharply with the orchestra's brilliant best.

The violins did, of course, give us many tastes of the lush Boston tone. But they were not above giving also some graceless gut-scrubbing in the Scherzo.

TIGHT BINDING

URY, THE YORKSHIR

stra at estival

ymphonies

DBURY

DINBURGH, Monday
n, already past its 75th lam's Concertgebouw, and world over—the Boston

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BURE
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C

Extract from

The Glasgow Her

GLASGOW

28 AUG 1956

Date.....

VISITORS FROM AMERICA

Boston Symphony Orchestra

From Our Music Critic

WELCOME American guests, the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, visiting the festival as part of a 75th anniversary tour that takes them as far as Russia, took over in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, on Sunday night.

Under their conductor, Charles Münch, no empty show piece marked their festival début but a mature Haydn symphony, No. 102 in B flat major, one of the London or Salomon Symphonies and typically rich in vigorous good humour and beauty, qualities that characterised Sunday night's spirited performance in which the remarkable efficiency of the orchestra was well and truly established.

Range of Power

Strauss's tone poem "Don Juan," and even more so, if that were possible, Dukas's Scherzo "L'Apprenti Sorcier" displayed on a much more lavish scale the incredible brilliance and range of power at their disposal—a power at times overwhelming in its sheer impact.

Their advocacy of American music began with the first European performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, whose four movements were, in the composer's own words, "flowing and expressive, light and fast, a serene adagio, and an energetic finale." Most of the purely musical content seemed to be in the adagio. What the other movements added up to must await further hearings though, in their rhythmic vitality and dissonance, they made a considerable physical impact at least and were played with astonishing virtuosity.

Sunday night's concert made it difficult to decide whether that virtuosity was always a means to a musical end, or at times an end in itself. But hearing the Boston orchestra is certainly an exhilarating experience.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 131,485

AUG 28 1956

British Critics Laud Symphony, Hub Composer

LONDON, Aug. 27 (Reuters)—Two widely-read British music critics today had high praise for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened a five-day run at the 10th International Edinburgh Festival last night.

Noel Goodwin, writing in the mass-circulation Daily Express, said: "High-press music of an extraordinary vitality notched the Edinburgh Festival standards up several points.

Goodwin went on: "Seldom have I heard such freshness of spirit from a visiting orchestra. And never such warmth of tone from American players—who usually sound hard and chromium-plated to our ears."

The Express critic confessed that Harvard music Prof. Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 "is one of the few new works I would gladly seize the chance to hear again."

Piston's work, which had its European premiere performance last night, "ought to make the composer's name more widely known on this side of the Atlantic," Goodwin said.

Percy Cater, writing in the Daily Mail, spent the major part of his review lauding Piston's symphony.

"I like this lucid score . . . a meritorious feat . . . its inventiveness never falters . . ." Cater wrote.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Manchester Guardian

Edinburgh Festival

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Haydn Up to Date; New Works by American Composers

By Colin Mason

EDINBURGH, MONDAY.

After he had finished his concerts on Friday Sir Thomas Beecham kindly but sarcastically hoped that what was to follow would be as good. Last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its conductor Charles Munch, making its first appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, took over the evening concert at the Usher Hall, and as for Sir Thomas's sarcasm and for our national pride, it was better—better than the Royal Philharmonic as incontrovertibly is it is better than the Scottish National, the B.B.C., or the Hallé. Fortunately for our self-esteem, it is also no less clearly better than the New York Philharmonic, the Concertgebouw, or the Berlin Philharmonic.

So dazzling to the ear was its playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no "departments," no brass, wind, and strings to compare and evaluate. Its sound is a single marvellously rich silken texture into which every note of every instrument is so carefully woven that everything can be heard except the joins. Even the pickiest critics, by temperament resistant to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of technique, held boiled hard by constant listening, were thrilled by it, and that not only Strauss's "Don Juan," where the music can only benefit from such orchestral luxury, but almost equally in a Haydn symphony, which could easily be ruined by it. The shining surface and perfect drill, although sometimes unnecessary to, or even slightly out of keeping with, the music, were rarely achieved at its expense, and much more often enriched it.

In "Don Juan" Munch succeeded in giving the orchestral writing all of the heaviness and sweetness of the typical orchestration of Strauss's decadence, without sacrificing anything of its early Straussian virility and exuberance. So, too, in the Haydn, using the full orchestra with no regard for the modern cult of "authenticity," he gave it a sound richer than Haydn could ever have imagined, but so that he could only have gasped at in sheer disbelief that such good fortune could be true. How he would have liked the speed at which Munch took the minuet and the last movement is more debatable. They were much faster than he is ever likely to have thought possible, but at this speed they were played with a style, precision, and elegance of phrase that nobody could better, either at this or at a more "proper" speed, and for this Haydn, being their inventor and creator, and not, like us modern pedants, a pious reverer, would probably have been delighted with this, too. Even we self-appointed guardians of the musical proprieties, who, lacking Haydn's right to enjoy it, could only disapprovingly admire, guiltily enjoyed it.

This does not end the catalogue of the orchestra's and Mr Munch's virtues. At each of their five concerts they are introducing a work by an American composer, three of them major ones receiving their first performance in Europe. At the opening concert it was Walter Piston's Sixth Symhony, commissioned by the orchestra for its seventy-fifth anniversary season earlier this year. Piston has taken full advantage of the orchestra's qualities and capabilities. In his scherzo he has given them just the kind of virtuoso piece (the modern equivalent of it that is) that Munch makes for them out of the Haydn last movement, and throughout the symphony he has exploited to the full (in the first movement sometimes rather too self-consciously) the experience of his exhaustive studies for his recently published book on orchestration. The best of its four movements are the middle two, the scherzo a brilliant piece in the vein of the best "motoric" movements of some of Hindemith's very witty early work, the adagio, a finely sustained melodic movement that bears comparison with some of the slow movements of Shostakovich's latest works. Unfortunately the outer movements are of inferior quality, the last commonplace and empty and the first very uneven. It has one very fine episode near the end of the first subject, heard in both exposition and recapitulation, in which the rhythmic melodic phrase and the very unorthodox and inelegant but beautiful harmonic progression strongly and pleasingly recall, with no hint of plagiarism, certain passages in Tippett's "Midsummer Marriage." There are other attractive lyrical moments in it, but too much of what surrounds them is undistinguished or arid. In spite of these weaknesses, the work as a whole left an impression of real musical quality and some personality, and unless the orchestra and Mr Munch, who lavished as much care and understanding on it as on the other work, were making it sound as much better than it really is, as they did Dukas's "Sorcerer's Apprentice," it is worth hearing again.

The orchestra's second concert to-night is under Pierre Monteux, who is playing Schubert's Symphony no. 9 and Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra, with another American symphony by Paul Creston, who is of a slightly younger generation than Piston. This concert clashes with the first stage performance in Britain of Bartók's ballet "The Miraculous Mandarin," but it was possible to hear Creston's symphony, his second, in rehearsal. Although it has not been performed in public before on this side of the Atlantic, it is not a new work (it was composed in 1944) and has been available for some time on gramophone records. It is music of less distinction, though possibly of readier popular appeal, than Piston's. The two main movements, each of which has an extended introduction, are like music for two unrelated films, the first a quiet pastoral romance, very tranquil, all sweet, soft Frenchified harmonies, with one "climactic" episode of no discernible relevance, the second a pursuit sequence, with breathing-spaces, in a thriller, beginning stealthily, like tracking along corridors at night, working up to an exciting chase, passing through a fairground, and including towards the end a train ride, suggested by an endlessly worked ostinato-rhythm—a trick on which Creston relies heavily elsewhere too, as he does altogether on cliches of one sort or another. It is efficient and effective music by a competent composer, efficient in originality and sensibility.

PIERRE MONTEUX WITH BOSTON ORCHESTRA

SCOTSMAN 8/28/56

BY OUR MUSIC CRITIC

It is an annual Festival phenomenon—the chameleon knack that orchestras have of altering their style and actual quality of tone to suit their different conductors. The most extreme case was provided by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra last year, when it suffered more than a sea-change on switching over from Ormandys to Hindemith's baton.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was perfectly recognisable last night when it was playing for that veteran expatriate French conductor, Pierre Monteux, instead of for Münch, but there were unmistakable differences of emphasis. Sunday's concert had been one of incisive brilliance, virtuosity, and excitement. Yesterday's was one of penny plain sobriety, a smoother, more classical "line" and a slightly more relaxed approach. The results were duller and in some ways more musical.

It depended on the sort of works up for performance. Given those Boston instrumentalists, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra could, and should, have been stupendous, whereas it emerged as a decent, thoroughly competent piece of playing of an overrated composition. On the other hand, there were some thrilling passages in the great C major Symphony of Schubert which ended the Usher Hall programme. The Finale was, however, a disappointment, as it is apt to be unless the conductor is making very long-term plans, and has set in motion a gigantic ground rhythm.

The evening's novelty was a two-movement symphony (No. 2, Op. 35), by the American composer, Paul Creston, who describes it as "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music—song and dance." Mr Creston née Guttoveggio is Sicilian by blood, and there is a warmly lyrical impulse mixed up with the barbed-wire impressionism of the "Introduction and Song." "The Interlude and Dance" have a rather taking, brash, rhythmic vigour, suggestive of some "programme" which does not in fact exist.

ERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Edinburgh Evening News

BOSTON BEAUTY AND BRILLIANCE

What a wonderfully rich fabric of sound the Boston Symphony Orchestra can weave! They demonstrated this again in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night, when they were conducted by Pierre Monteux in a programme ranging from Schubert through Bartok to the contemporary American composer, Paul Creston.

This musical span of the Old and New World began in America with Creston's Symphony No. 2 Op. 35. It is a free interpretation of the word "symphony," being in two movements designed as, in the composer's words, "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music: song and dance."

Two other words (almost synonymous), "lyricism" and "rhythm," convey exactly the basis of the two movements. The first, founded on an essentially simple theme, demands great clarity of texture to keep its interweaving strands distinct, and this, indeed, it received from conductor and players alike.

In the second movement, rhythm and syncopation come to the fore.

One of the minor bewilderments of this Festival is that Mr Monteux, who looks like an amiable teddy bear, should encompass the dynamic force to recreate this diamantine brilliance.

RICH AND MOBILE

In Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, it was again the noble sounds achieved by all departments that made a lasting impression. In view of to-day's recital by the Boston Brass Ensemble (composed of instrumentalists from the orchestra), this department's rich and mobile playing in the chorale theme in the scherzo was particularly noteworthy.

Mr Monteux and the orchestra made Schubert's Symphony No. 9 in C (The "Great") a massive and monumental work. It received a more emphatic treatment than is usually accorded it, and, perhaps because of this, the slow movement did not have its usual poignant appeal.

But again, as throughout the programme, the standard of playing was high, reaching at times an unforgettable brilliance and beauty.

TARTAN TONES IN MUSIC AND MIRTH

For the special benefit of Festival visitors there is a first-rate Scots variety show at the Palladium Theatre. It has the title of "Highland Swing," and last night's audiences enjoyed a riot of colour, music, and mirth from the tartan-clad artists.

Comedians Grace Clark and Colin Murray were in top form, while Desmond Carrol and Billy Leslie provided a contrasting style of mirth. Outstanding on the musical side were the accordion playing of Will Hannah and contributions by Grace Calvert with the Newhaven and Musselburgh Fisherwives' Choir. The Edinburgh Transport Pipe Band also received a great reception.

Uninhibited "Festival Gay'ity" was showered liberally on the audience at the Gaiety last night.

Tommy Loman and Johnny Beattie led the cast through a number of humorous sketches, among which were "Time for Laughter," "Nautical Nonsense," and "Something Domestic." The B.B.C. recording team, the Kordites, were again in top form and delighted the audience with a number of their recent hit tunes.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from the

Evening Gazette

MIDDLESBROUGH

28 AUG 1956

Date.....
(See information overleaf)

LAST TIME we saw Robin Scott in action on the screen he was swopping pleasantries with the inhabitants of Montmartre in a Saturday Night Out programme from Paris. Tonight he produces a show full of women.

A solitary male figure in the arena at Earl's Court, he is directing today the rehearsal of several hundred women for the 40-minute entertainment "Ladies First." A feature of the display is the election of the B.B.C. Arenascope sports girl.

Sheila van Damm and Carole Carr, and Pat Moss and Dorothy Campbell compete in a sport and show business car control contest. There is PT by the W.R.A.F., singing by Ann Shelton and the Luton Girls' Choir, music from the Dagenham Girl Pipers, and the Gracie Cole All Girls' Orchestra, and horse riding. How would you like to be Mr. Scott?

Billy Cotton presents his band show "Wakey Wakey" from the Radio Exhibition studio at Earl's Court (writes Malcolm Moore). Hutch of the mellow voice and brow-mopping habits is one of his guests, Al Koran another, and the Leslie Roberts Girls figure in dance numbers.

Interviewed in "Picture Parade" this evening is James Mason, Yorkshire-born naturalised American star.

Contrasting interests also catered for by B.B.C. TV are the Beethoven concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Edinburgh Festival, and a telerecording of last night's heavyweight championship boxing at Cardiff.

BLANK PAGE

M n, st n, Gr
7/6.
2, 2

BLANK PAGE

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from

The Birmingham Post

Date 28 AUG 1956

(SEE INFORMATION OVERLEAF)

Symphony Orchestra

Our Correspondent

was wrecked in the Bay ay and sank in seventy of water. It tells how age ship Artiglio, belonga Genoese company, was with special equipment team of highly skilled it also describes the les which had to be over-fore the first coins and were successfully brought urface ten years after the
ank. F. B.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the

EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf.)

Encouragement

One of the dominating people behind the Boston Symphony Orchestra has no official connection with it. Yet she is so interested in its work that she has come to Edinburgh to be present at the present series of concerts in the Usher Hall.

Mrs Serge Koussevitzky, the widow of the Russian conductor who directed the orchestra for 25 years, is associated in a leading position with the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

From the funds of this organisation goes encouragement to young composers and commissions to those established. The Boston Symphony play many of the compositions during their 46-week season.

Last night at the Usher Hall I heard of Mrs Koussevitzky's long association with the orchestra and the respect in which she is held by its members.

One of the most consistent followers of the performances, she accepts her position with the foundation as no sinecure, and takes a leading part in the discussions which bring about the composing of new major works.

was one of the most remarkable figures of the last war and was known in Britain as Christine Granville. She was awarded the George Cross and Croix de Guerre. The groups she established after being parachuted into enemy-occupied territory remained intact. When working for British organisations she rescued three agents from Gestapo death cells.

The story of the greatest feat in the history of deep sea salvaging is the theme of a feature programme The Egypt's Gold in the Home Service. It is written by David Scott and tells how in May, 1922, the Egypt, carrying a cargo of gold coin and

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from

The Glasgow Herald
GLASGOW

29 AUG 1956

Date.....
(See information overleaf)

MUSIC OF PAST AND PRESENT

Boston Brass Ensemble

AN unusual concert was provided in the Freemasons' Hall, Edinburgh, yesterday morning by the Boston Brass Ensemble. All these accomplished players are drawn from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and directed by Roger Voisin, the first trumpet. The works played fell into two sections—the past, represented by the Italians Gabrieli and Bonelli, and the present by Poulenc, Sanders, and Berezowsky.

The modern music was of a light character, intent on exploiting the possibilities of the instruments, often with humorous effect, and as such was successful usually in the quick movements, but the slow ones had not always the musical worth to stand the slower speed.

None came near the first work of all to be played—the Canzon Septimi Toni No. 1 for double brass choir from the Sacrae Symphoniae by Gabrieli. This was one of the many pieces Gabrieli wrote for the Venetian festivals. In it was all the grandeur that can be achieved by brass instruments, with a glorious ringing tone alternating with a softer, rounder one, providing an experience unsurpassed by any of the spectacular technical acrobatics that came later in the programme. M. B. Martin.

THE BULLETIN
Wed. Aug 29 1956

Sound and Serenity From Boston

The record for having given the shortest concert at any Festival was established yesterday morning when the Boston Brass Ensemble played for 50 minutes in the Freemasons' Hall, Edinburgh. the music by Gabrieli and and Bonelli made a thrilling sound.

But the sonata for horn, trumpet and trombone by Poulenc sounded, as usual, like an 18th century composition gone a bit off, while two short contemporary American works demonstrated the virtuosic ability of these members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Roar of Applause

Virtuosity was also the characteristic of the concert which the orchestra gave in the Usher Hall in the evening, under Charles Munch.

In urgency and forcefulness of expression, it left the work of Piston and Creston, heard earlier in the week, far behind.

No one could possibly wish for a finer performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto than that which Isaac Stern gave. Pure-toned, serene, and spacious, it justly earned him a roar of an ovation.

Then Munch gave us an unforgettable performance of the endearing Symphony No. 2 of Schumann, in which the much over-stressed defects of orchestration disappeared beneath dynamic rhythmic drive and playing of the very highest order. M. L.

before long

The pomp of echoing brass

NOVEL sounds filled the Freemasons' Hall yesterday when the seven-man Boston Brass Ensemble—members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—gave a brief concert of ancient and modern music for brass instruments.

Normally I prefer this sort of thing in the open-air but the Boston group, led by principal trumpet Roger Voisin, achieved a surprising delicacy in the small hall excellently balanced.

Two sixteenth century Italian pieces for double brass choirs—echoing and answering each other from opposite sides of the stage—had an impressive effect of pomp and splendour.

Surely it was cheating, though, to use two groups of soloists, saving each other's breath, in a sparkling modern sonata by the French composer Francis Poulenc, intended for three soloists alone.

Scrappy notes in the programme told listeners precious little about the music itself. But the performance left no doubt that the players are expert in technique and gifted artists whom it was a pleasure to hear.

NOEL GOODWIN.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Bristol Evening World

TV AND RADIO

Boston Symphony Goes to Russia

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra is off to Russia and TV viewers will have a chance tonight to see them before they go.

The orchestra, which is taking part in the Edinburgh Festival, will be before the cameras tonight at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh.

Tonight they are performing Beethoven's Violin Concerto under the leadership of Charles Munch. The soloist will be Isaac Stern.

It will be the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra has performed before the TV cameras at Edinburgh.

Two years ago they were televised with the Orchestra Nationale de la Radiodefusion Francaise. Now the Boston Orchestra is making a five-weeks tour of European centres in their 75th anniversary season.

During their tour they will visit the USSR to give a series of concerts in the main Soviet cultural centres.

OCCASIONS like the Edinburgh Festival are when television justifies itself, offering millions the opportunity of seeing something which would otherwise be the privilege of only a few.

Tonight's tit-bit is a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is celebrating its 75th anniversary with a five-week tour, including a trip to Russia after Edinburgh.

Soloist with the orchestra is Isaac Stern, who was on television last year.

LOOKING-IN LAST NIGHT . . .

THE Chataway series "Away from it All," which finished last night, has been a success, without doubt.

Apart from its serious investigating theme, a lot of credit must go to the actual filming of the remote spots that it visited.

Some of the shots were quite enthralling—the film of the Welsh hill farms and their surroundings springs to mind as the best example.

If the series became more of a travelogue than a probe as it went on, it was surely because once the main advantages or disadvantages of the remote life had been stated—that was that.

Chataway pretty well got the same answers everywhere.

But that side of the programme wasn't plugged too hard—and they lost nothing by it.

Mans race miniature

RSON

ome the setting for a Le Mans e tomorrow. The idea is

Mr. Ellis Smith

BOSTON BRASS ENSEMBLE

"Venice Preserved"

By Our Music Critic

Wind ensembles have been heard here before, and military bands are forever stamping up and down the Castle Esplanade. A brass ensemble of trumpets, trombones, and tuba is, however, a new experience for the Freemasons Hall and, for a limited duration, a pleasant one. The seven or eight Boston Symphony players who form the Ensemble are the suavest of exponents of their particular instruments, and they are also well aware of the risk of overstaying their welcome. Hence the programme yesterday morning was not too long, just about an hour and made up of a number of short pieces. (That was out of consideration for the audience in a rather small hall and, more important, for the breath capacity of the instrumentalists themselves.)

Of the three modern works, by Berezowsky, Sanders, and Poulenc, it was only the last one, a skittish Sonata in three movements which had much artistic merit, the other two being excellent vehicles for the showing off of technique. The twentieth century came rather badly out of this concert. Its contributions sounded completely trivial after the massive splendours of Gabrieli's antiphonal "Canzon septimi toni No. 1" and the solemn polyphony of Bonelli's Toccata from the same epoch, the turn of the seventeenth century in Venice.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. 2.

Extract from

The Birmingham Post

Date 28 AUG 1956

(SEE INFORMATION OVERLEAF)

TV AND RADIO

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By Our Correspondent

B.B.C. cameras to-day visit the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, to televise part of the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch. The solo artist, Isaac Stern, will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto. From the King's Theatre, Edinburgh, Third Programme listeners will hear the Hamburg State Opera production of Oedipus Rex, an opera-oratorio after Sophocles by Igor Stravinsky and Jean Cocteau.

More light entertainment on B.B.C. television comes from the National Radio Show with Arenascope presenting Ladies First!, an entertainment by women from the Services, sport and show business. Guest artists are June Birch and June Robinson.

A special film will be screened of last night's fight for the British Heavyweight Championship between Johnny Williams and Joe Erskine. In a late-night session of jazz in the relaxed manner, from the Gosta Green studio, Dill Jones will make his first appearance for nearly two years when he introduces his guest stars in Relax, Look and Listen.

Raymond Baxter, who has had many sensational and interesting experiences during his years as a commentator, is to be heard in a new series of programmes entitled There's a Sound in the Sky. The three weekly programmes will deal with Baxter's journey from this country to North America with a flight of Viscounts. First stop was Iceland, where the aircraft refuelled before going to Greenland. There he made recordings, then went on to Canada, New York and Washington.

A radio portrait of Christine Granville is to be presented by R. D. Smith in the Home Service. The Polish Countess Sharbek was one of the most remarkable figures of the last war and was known in Britain as Christine Granville. She was awarded the George Cross and Croix de Guerre. The groups she established after being parachuted into enemy-occupied territory remained intact. When working for British organisations she rescued three agents from Gestapo death cells.

The story of the greatest feat in the history of deep sea salvaging is the theme of a feature programme The Egypt's Gold in the Home Service. It is written by David Scott and tells how in May, 1922, the Egypt, carrying a cargo of gold coin and bullion, was wrecked in the Bay of Biscay and sank in seventy fathoms of water. It tells how the salvage ship Artiglio, belonging to a Genoese company, was provided with special equipment and a team of highly skilled divers; it also describes the difficulties which had to be overcome before the first coins and bullion were successfully brought to the surface ten years after the Egypt sank. F. B.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from the

Evening Chronicle
NEWCASTLE UPON TYNE

Date
(See information overleaf)

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Bristol Evening World

TV AND RADIO

Boston Symphony Goes to Russia

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra is off to Russia and TV viewers will have a chance tonight to see them before they go.

The orchestra, which is taking part in the Edinburgh Festival, will be before the cameras tonight at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh.

Tonight they are performing Beethoven's Violin Concerto under the leadership of Charles Munch. The soloist will be Isaac Stern.

It will be the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra has performed before the TV cameras at Edinburgh.

Two years ago they were televised with the Orchestra Nationale de la Radiodefusion Francaise. Now the Boston Orchestra is making a five-weeks tour of European centres in their 75th anniversary season.

During their tour they will visit the USSR to give a series of concerts in the main Soviet cultural centres.

LOOKING-IN LAST NIGHT . . .

THE Chataway series "Away from it All," which finished last night, has been a success, without doubt.

Apart from its serious investigating theme, a lot of credit must go to the actual filming of the remote spots that it visited.

Some of the shots were quite enthralling—the film of the Welsh hill farms and their surroundings springs to mind as the best example.

If the series became more of a travelogue than a probe as it went on, it was surely because once the main advantages or disadvantages of the remote life had been stated—that was that.

Chataway pretty well got the same answers everywhere.

But that side of the programme wasn't plugged too hard—and they lost nothing by it.

THE BULLETIN
Wed. Aug 29 1956

Sound and Serenity From Boston

The record for having given the shortest concert at any Festival was established yesterday morning when the Boston Brass Ensemble played for 50 minutes in the Freemasons' Hall, Edinburgh. the music by Gabrieli and and Bonelli made a thrilling sound.

But the sonata for horn, trumpet and trombone by Poulenc sounded, as usual, like an 18th century composition gone a bit off, while two short contemporary American works demonstrated the virtuosic ability of these members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Roar of Applause

Virtuosity was also the characteristic of the concert which the orchestra gave in the Usher Hall in the evening, under Charles Munch.

In urgency and forcefulness of expression, it left the work of Piston and Creston, heard earlier in the week, far behind.

No one could possibly wish for a finer performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto than that which Isaac Stern gave. Pure-toned, serene, and spacious, it justly earned him a roar of an ovation.

Then Munch gave us an unforgettable performance of the endearing Symphony No. 2 of Schumann, in which the much over-stressed defects of orchestration disappeared beneath dynamic rhythmic drive and playing of the very highest order. M. L.

Berwick Journal

The pomp of echoing brass

NOVEL sounds filled the Freemasons' Hall yesterday when the seven-man Boston Brass Ensemble—members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—gave a brief concert of ancient and modern music for brass instruments.

Normally I prefer this sort of thing in the open-air but the Boston group, led by principal trumpet Roger Voisin, achieved a surprising delicacy in the small hall excellently balanced.

Two sixteenth century Italian pieces for double brass choirs—echoing and answering each other from opposite sides of the stage—had an impressive effect of pomp and splendour.

Surely it was cheating, though, to use two groups of soloists, saving each other's breath, in a sparkling modern sonata by the French composer Francis Poulenc, intended for three soloists alone.

Scrappy notes in the programme told listeners precious little about the music itself. But the performance left no doubt that the players are expert in technique and gifted artists whom it was a pleasure to hear.

NOEL GOODWIN.

A Le Mans race in miniature

By JUNE BIRSON

TELEVISION screens become the setting for a Le Mans Motor race in miniature tomorrow. The idea is Mr. Peter Dimmock's.

He has devised it for a special edition of Sportsview from the National Radio Show tomorrow night.

The programme is not likely to break any speed records—the track will be only 120 feet—but it is planned to reproduce Le Mans conditions.

"The drivers will do a proper Le Mans running start, drive the few feet to the pits and then be given set tasks," says Peter.

Racing managers and mechanics who normally accompany drivers to the French event will be in the pits.

The drivers? Mike Hawthorn will be there in a Jaguar and Tony Brooks with an Aston Martin.

OCCASIONS like the Edinburgh Festival are when television justifies itself, offering millions the opportunity of seeing something which would otherwise be the privilege of only a few.

Tonight's tit-bit is a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is celebrating its 75th anniversary with a five-week tour, including a trip to Russia after Edinburgh.

Soloist with the orchestra is Isaac Stern, who was on television last year.

BOSTON BRASS ENSEMBLE

"Venice Preserved"

By Our Music Critic

Wind ensembles have been heard here before, and military bands are forever stamping up and down the Castle Esplanade. A brass ensemble of trumpets, trombones, and tuba is however, a new experience for the Freemasons Hall and, for a limited duration, a pleasant one. The seven or eight Boston Symphony players who form the Ensemble are the supreme exponents of their particular instruments, and they are also well aware of the risk of overstaying their welcome. Hence the programme yesterday morning was not too long, just about an hour and made up of a number of short pieces. (That was out of consideration for the audience in a rather small hall and, more important, for the breath capacity of the instrumentalists themselves.)

Of the three modern works by Berezowsky, Sanders, and Poulenc, it was only the last one, a skittish piece in three movements which had much artistic merit, the other two being excellent vehicles for the showing of technique. The twentieth century came rather badly out of this concert. Its contributions sounded completely flat after the massive splendours of Gabrieli's antiphonal "Canzon settimo toni No. 1" and the solemn polyphony of Bonelli's Toccata from the same epoch, the turn of the seventeenth century in Venice.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from

" THE SCOTSMAN "
EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf.)

FESTIVAL NOTES

'CURTAIN' HAS NOT FALLEN ON MUSIC

By PETRONIUS

Isaac Stern, a cheerful soul, a sound thinker, and a convinced believer in the unifying influence of music, gave high praise to the musical sensitivities of his native Russia when he was speaking yesterday about the visit he paid to the Soviet Union this year. Russia, incidentally, had changed a lot since he was last there—but not nearly so much as Mr Stern had, for he was only ten months old when he was taken from the country of his birth to the United States, and had not been back since.

Mr Stern moved into Russia with his fiddle just after Sir Arthur Bliss and the other members of the British cultural group were moving out.

"The Russians," he said to those of us who were in the Press Bureau yesterday morning, "are an essentially musical people. They have a love and understanding for classical music, and are very sensitive to musical phrases, quite apart from the ordinary reaction to brilliant playing which is standard in all countries. I found their feeling for the quality of music very warming, and through these contacts with Western countries they are at long last becoming part of the fabric of international affairs."

Mr Robert Ponsonby, artistic administrator of the Festival, introducing artists at the Press Bureau.

In the coming month, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is here just now, will visit Russia, and Mr Stern pointed out that it will be the first foreign orchestra to arrive in the Soviet Union since the revolution.

There was a sad side to his visit, despite the very evident pleasure which the Russians took in music. He found that their instruments were of poor quality, with the result that they could not play as well as their abilities might enable them to. Their orchestras were not up to international class. "But this exchange is extremely important," he said with emphasis. "Propaganda is a weapon that has a tendency to act like a boomerang, but music is a thing which (I'm not casting aspersions on anyone here) can't be twisted by the Press."

RUSSIANS AND BARTOK

One thing in which the Russians, apparently, are in the same boat as a good many people in this country is in their reaction to modern music. The contemporary music of Russia is not "contemporary" as the word is used in Western countries, but is based on folk melodies. "When they heard Bartók's First Sonata," he said, "they were absolutely bewildered, and said they would have to hear it again before deciding—a remark I've heard in other countries!"

I must, in rounding off this brief summary of a delightful half hour of reminiscence and repartee, place on record one of the most diplomatic replies I have ever heard. Somebody, following the deadly line of inquiry which we journalists are to given to following, asked: "Whom do you think is the greatest violinist to-day?" and Mr Stern unhesitatingly answered, "Well, I don't mind being called the second-greatest, but I'm not going to say who the greatest is, because they are all my friends!"

During the forenoon I met Mr Ian Hunter, who is now in the same position as Mr Rudolf Bing, and can watch the Festival, which he did so much to create, continuing to grow. He looked upon it rather with the eye of a parent who knew the boy would do well. But he was doubtful about the proposal to build an Edinburgh Opera House. The two things he viewed with misgiving were the difficulty of raising enough money to build it, and the effect upon the existing theatres.

DANISH CORNER

A little corner of Denmark, where one can sip lager and munch smörrebröd in its infinity of variations, opened in Edinburgh yesterday, quietly and without fuss. True, Mr Eric Schacke, the Danish Consul-General, was there and so was two-thirds of Petronius, but there were no speeches, no ceremonies. The smörrebröd was swallowed and the long glasses of lager drained; and everyone agreed that was an excellent and symbolic way of inaugurating the venture.

This latest contribution to cosmopolitanism is the Denmark Room of the Albyn, situated at the west end of Queen Street. Visitors are guided to it from the main entrance by the delicately witty murals of Don Portinger, and the Danish atmosphere is achieved by the kind of characteristic contemporary architecture which Denmark does so well.

No Dane designed it, but the ubiquitous Basil Spence and Partners, with one of its most attractive features a vaulted ceiling of pitch pine. One wall has been stripped to the stonework; the others are of contrasting colours. The furnishings are Danish.

For the preparation of the smörrebröd a 25-year-old girl has been flown in from Denmark, and the more knowledgable, epicurean section of Petronius confirmed the view that she clearly knows her job.

THEATRE NOT BIG ENOUGH

Mr Robert Ponsonby, the artistic administrator, said yesterday that a large proportion of the bookings for "The Anatomist" at the Gateway had come from overseas and English visitors. More Edinburgh people would have liked to see this production but the theatre was not big enough to accommodate all who have asked for tickets.

James Gibson, producer of "The Anatomist," told the audience in the Press Bureau that a man invited as a guest to the dress rehearsal had asked him at the end why blood had not been seen flowing down the stairs after the murder. Was it because the performance was only a dress rehearsal? The man was convinced that the last time he had seen the play blood had flowed down the stair. Mr Gibson was at a loss at first to understand, but later he learned that the guest had been referring to a performance of an old melodrama "Burke and Hare."

CHARACTER OF DR KNOX

Was Dr Knox really a sinister criminal? Tom Fleming does not take that view after a study both of the historical Knox and of Bridie's character in preparation for his interpretation of the part at the Gateway. To him Knox was another man who lived before his time. Mr Fleming regards Dr Knox as a man who had a profound belief in God and who sought God in a relentless search for truth. The trouble was that he was not over careful in the methods he chose to find the truth.

Incidentally, Mr Fleming rehearsed from the start wearing a patch over his left eye so as to accustom himself to judging distances with only one eye. In making his character wear a patch, James Bridie was departing a little from historical fact. The real Dr Knox wore glasses to compensate for a damaged left eye.

Furthermore, if loss of one eye creates problems of vision for Mr Fleming his task must still be only half as difficult as that of John Westbrook in "Samson Agonistes," which is being produced in Edinburgh Academy. He has to act with both eyes closed!

Lennox Milne is enjoying playing Amelia Dishart in "The Anatomist!" It was a part which had always appealed to her, she said, largely because it was so different from the "dominating" female rôles in which she was frequently cast.

An enthusiast for "Scottish" theatre, Miss Milne gave her views on it at some length. "We have had a preponderance of historical plays because present-day Scotland does not have enough dramatic conflict, the kind of thing which made Ireland's Abbey Theatre possible." She added, however, that an increasing number of better plays about contemporary Scotland by Scottish playwrights was now coming forward.

When I suggested to her that South Uist might provide the theme for a new play, she said that one had already been written. I gather also that she considered it a good one.

Asked if the Gateway team were aiming at becoming Scotland's national theatre, Miss Milne replied, "We would be very proud to be part of it."

LAST-MINUTE ENTRY

A company who decided to come to the Festival only a fortnight ago are the Cambridge University Actors, who open to-night at the Masonic Hall, Forth Street, in Ben Johnson's "The Alchemist." Most of them have been touring Germany in a Cambridge Uriversity Players' production of "Othello."

Last week they gave three open-air performances of "The Alchemist" in Cambridge, the proceeds being sufficient to pay for the Edinburgh venture. "The weather was frightful," David Buck, who plays Epicure Mammon, told me, "but no one in the audience walked out. They simply hoisted their umbrellas."

All the same, the company thought that open-air presentation might be too much for Edinburgh, and wisely sought to book a hall. They were offered, in spite of the imminence of the Festival, a choice of two, and selected the Masonic Hall as the more suitable. It will be an open stage production, with seats all round the movable scaffolding dais.

On Saturday, to the consternation of the company, their producer, Henry Burke, received a telegram recalling him to the R.A.F. Bruce Cleave, who plays Abel Drugger, has taken over production.

A racy play, it has been made racier by script cutting. Delivery will be at high speed, and there will be no interval. An innovation is the insertion of an excerpt from "Hamlet," with no prizes offered for spotting it. It was decided to substitute, at the part where Dol Common goes insane, the scene of Ophelia's madness.

As the hall is required for other purposes, there will be no performances next Monday or Tuesday, but this suits the company admirably. They want to perform at the Festival, but they also want to see others perform.

FESTIVAL-TASTERS

Among experienced Festival-tasters in Edinburgh just now, perhaps none are more qualified to pronounce an opinion on this year's European Festivals than the 42 members of the New York Music Study Group, who flew in last week and will fly out in their chartered aircraft to-day.

Miss Katherine E. Griffith, Assistant Professor of Music at Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana, a member of the group (of whom about half are teachers), told me their tour began at the beginning of July, and they had been at the festivals at Amsterdam, Paris, Aix-en-Provence, Bayreuth, and Salzburg before coming to Edinburgh. "Edinburgh," she said (quite obviously meaning it), "seems to me to be the best of them all."

ISAAC STERN by COIA

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the

EVENING DISPATCH

Page 6—Edinburgh Evening News, Wednesday, August 29, 1956

UNION PREPARE FOR CLYDE 'BLACK

Wed Aug 29 1956

GLASGOW HERALD,

A EUROPEAN REMIERE

pland Ode

N COPLAND'S com-tions probably get the
are of the perform-f serious American this country. Even at ave had to wait a matter er of a century to hear honic Ode, which was ormed by the Boston
Orchestra in America in given pride of place in mme for their concert er Hall, Edinburgh, last striking work in many is in five sections, mainly from a short

e which is modified and in ingenious fashion.
ploits the resources of chestra to good effect, are varied, his rhythms
ase with jazz ante-re alive and often nd there is always en in the quieter
With Charles Münch
the orchestra gave it
ing performance.

t

s Second Symphony getic affair. There was drive in the three ements, an almost tement which was propriate. The slow vas notable for the oodwind playing.
as performance of Violin Concerto was c Stern. His playing was marked by its poetic phasing, its e, and its extreme

J. D.

USIASM IN

DS TO IANCE

on living in the porary creation is e and beauty of a n Concerto?

the music—serene,
rtless; everything in ce and fashioned with
nity and restraint.

ral support under the
of Dr Charles Munch
n exquisite sense of plause at the close of ement indicated how he capacity audience

he melodious spell

ING WOODWINDS

ison with the concerto obvious personality rest was of secondary

t began with the first erformance of Aaron mphonic Ode. This is shows clear traces of r's earlier preoccupa-
e possibilities of jazz.
rhythms and lively
m the percussion kept the audience alert
y merely heightened of again looking back or what followed.
cluding item was Second Symphony.
energy imparted to it
h made it an exhilar-
l as immaculate affair.
oncerto, it was dis-
y a shining texture enchant-odwinds.

[68]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the
EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf.)

Brass group play with rare warmth

Regular visitors to the Freemasons' Hall morning recitals underwent an exciting and memorable experience yesterday, when the Boston Brass Ensemble, an offshoot of the Symphony Orchestra, gave a recital of little-known music.

Founded four years ago by the orchestra's first trumpet, Roger Voisin to encourage interest in music for a select group of brass instruments, the Ensemble is well known in America. This was, however, its first appearance in Britain.

As has already been discovered at the Usher Hall this week, the section is characterised by brilliance of tone and precision of attack. But when playing chamber-style they have also a warmth and mellowness rarely found in brass instruments.

AMUSING

Opening their programme with two Italian works composed around 1600—the Canzon Septimi Toni No. 1 by Giovanni Gabrieli and the Toccata of Aurelio Bonelli — the group came quickly up to date with an amusing Sonata by the French composer Poulenc.

Hardly great music, it was, none the less, admirably suited to the magnificent technique of the players.

Two items of contemporary American music concluded the recital. In the first, Quintet in B flat by Sanders, several effective styles of writing are employed, and the Boston men were quick to take advantage of them, showing their dedicated artistry to excellent effect.

Berezowsky's Suite for seven instruments, which followed, received possibly the best performance of all, however. It is an exciting, if shallow, work, and could scarcely have provided a better vehicle for this astounding Ensemble.

N. G.

Wed Aug 29, 1956

GLASGOW HERALD,

A EUROPEAN PREMIERE

Copland Ode

AARON COPLAND'S compositions probably get the lion's share of the performances of serious American music in this country. Even at that, we have had to wait a matter of a quarter of a century to hear his Symphonic Ode, which was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in America in 1932 and given pride of place in the programme for their concert in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night.

It is a striking work in many ways. It is in five sections, stemming mainly from a short basic phrase which is modified and expanded in ingenious fashion. Copland exploits the resources of a large orchestra to good effect, his textures are varied, his rhythms (in this case with jazz antecedents) are alive and often exciting, and there is always vitality, even in the quieter moments. With Charles Münch conducting the orchestra gave it an exhilarating performance.

Excitement

Schumann's Second Symphony was an energetic affair. There was tremendous drive in the three quick movements, an almost febrile excitement which was entirely appropriate. The slow movement was notable for the immaculate woodwind playing.

A glorious performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto was given by Isaac Stern. His playing throughout was marked by its exquisitely poetic phasing, its ravishing tone, and its extreme sensibility.

J. D.

ENTHUSIASM IN

MAGIC BOW ADDS TO BOSTON BRILLIANCE

No wonder, broadly speaking, we go on living in the musical past. Where in music of contemporary creation is there anything to compare with the shape and beauty of a masterpiece such as the Beethoven Violin Concerto?

The Boston Symphony Orchestra had Isaac Stern as their soloist in a performance of this great and enduring favourite at their concert in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night.

It was a partnership that came as near to perfection in fulfilling the ideals of the concerto as anything that has been heard at the Edinburgh Festival.

There have been many sensitive and refined interpretations of the Beethoven Violin Concerto in Edinburgh during recent years and at other Festivals.

Some have been concerned more with the emotional effects of the music than was the case last night.

What was heard from the Boston players and from the magic bow of Isaac Stern was an exposition of virtuosity which emphasised the poetry, grace, and nobility of the music and attempted to put no more romanticism into the music than actually belongs to it.

SERENE AND EFFORTLESS

For a violinist of Isaac Stern's tremendous technique, the actual notes in a work such as the Beethoven Violin Concerto are a matter of comparative simplicity. His brilliant cadenzas gave clarity to every note, and were played with an unfailing beauty of rhythm and tone.

But what mattered most to make this performance one not quickly to be forgotten was his general approach to the music—serene, dignified, effortless; everything in its proper place and fashioned with discerning dignity and restraint.

The orchestral support under the conductorship of Dr Charles Munch established an exquisite sense of artistic unity.

Mistimed applause at the close of the first movement indicated how completely the capacity audience came under the melodious spell.

ENCHANTING WOODWINDS

By comparison with the concerto with its obvious personality interest, the rest was of secondary appeal.

The concert began with the first European performance of Aaron Copland's Symphonic Ode. This is music which shows clear traces of the composer's earlier preoccupation with the possibilities of jazz. Its complex rhythms and lively jangle from the percussion department kept the audience alert but for many merely heightened the pleasure of again looking back to the past for what followed.

The concluding item was Schumann's Second Symphony. The vibrant energy imparted to it by Dr Munch made it an exhilarating as well as immaculate affair. Like the concerto, it was distinguished by a shining texture of string tones and some enchanting phrases from the woodwinds.

Page 6—Edinburgh Evening News, Wednesday, August 29, 1956

UNION PREPARE FOR CLYDE 'BLACK

[68]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the
EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf)

Brass group play with rare warmth

Regular visitors to the Freemasons' Hall morning recitals underwent an exciting and memorable experience yesterday, when the Boston Brass Ensemble, an offshoot of the Symphony Orchestra, gave a recital of little-known music.

Founded four years ago by the orchestra's first trumpet, Roger Voisin to encourage interest in music for a select group of brass instruments, the Ensemble is well known in America. This was, however, its first appearance in Britain.

As has already been discovered at the Usher Hall this week, the section is characterised by brilliance of tone and precision of attack. But when playing chamber-style they have also a warmth and mellowness rarely found in brass instruments.

AMUSING

Opening their programme with two Italian works composed around 1600—the Canzon Septimi Toni No. 1 by Giovanni Gabrieli and the Toccata of Aurelio Bonelli—the group came quickly up to date with an amusing Sonata by the French composer Poulenc.

Hardly great music, it was, none the less, admirably suited to the magnificent technique of the players.

Two items of contemporary American music concluded the recital. In the first, Quintet in B flat by Sanders, several effective styles of writing are employed, and the Boston men were quick to take advantage of them, showing their dedicated artistry to excellent effect.

Berezowsky's Suite for seven instruments, which followed, received possibly the best performance of all, however. It is an exciting, if shallow, work, and could scarcely have provided a better vehicle for this astounding Ensemble.

N. G.

Wed Aug 29 1956

GLASGOW HERALD,

A EUROPEAN PREMIERE

Copland Ode

AARON COPLAND'S compositions probably get the lion's share of the performances of serious American music in this country. Even at that, we have had to wait a matter of a quarter of a century to hear his Symphonic Ode, which was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in America in 1932 and given pride of place in the programme for their concert in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night.

It is a striking work in many ways. It is in five sections, stemming mainly from a short basic phrase which is modified and expanded in ingenious fashion. Copland exploits the resources of a large orchestra to good effect, his textures are varied, his rhythms (in this case with jazz antecedents) are alive and often exciting, and there is always vitality, even in the quieter moments. With Charles Münch conducting the orchestra gave it an exhilarating performance.

Excitement

Schumann's Second Symphony was an energetic affair. There was tremendous drive in the three quick movements, an almost febrile excitement which was entirely appropriate. The slow movement was notable for the immaculate woodwind playing.

A glorious performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto was given by Isaac Stern. His playing throughout was marked by its exquisitely poetic phasing, its ravishing tone, and its extreme sensibility.

J. D.

ENTHUSIASM IN

MAGIC BOW ADDS TO BOSTON BRILLIANCE

No wonder, broadly speaking, we go on living in the musical past. Where in music of contemporary creation is there anything to compare with the shape and beauty of a masterpiece such as the Beethoven Violin Concerto?

The Boston Symphony Orchestra had Isaac Stern as their soloist in a performance of this great and enduring favourite at their concert in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night.

It was a partnership that came as near to perfection in fulfilling the ideals of the concerto as anything that has been heard at the Edinburgh Festival

There have been many sensitive and refined interpretations of the Beethoven Violin Concerto in Edinburgh during recent years and at other Festivals.

Some have been concerned more with the emotional effects of the music than was the case last night

What was heard from the Boston players and from the magic bow of Isaac Stern was an exposition of virtuosity which emphasised the poetry, grace, and nobility of the music and attempted to put no more romanticism into the music than actually belongs to it.

SERENE AND EFFORTLESS

For a violinist of Isaac Stern's tremendous technique, the actual notes in a work such as the Beethoven Violin Concerto are a matter of comparative simplicity. His brilliant cadenzas gave clarity to every note, and were played with an unfailing beauty of rhythm and tone.

But what mattered most to make this performance one not quickly to be forgotten was his general approach to the music—serene, dignified, effortless; everything in its proper place and fashioned with discerning dignity and restraint.

The orchestral support under the conductorship of Dr Charles Munch established an exquisite sense of artistic unity.

Mistimed applause at the close of the first movement indicated how completely the capacity audience came under the melodious spell

ENCHANTING WOODWINDS

By comparison with the concerto with its obvious personality interest, the rest was of secondary appeal.

The concert began with the first European performance of Aaron Copland's Symphonic Ode. This is music which shows clear traces of the composer's earlier preoccupation with the possibilities of jazz. Its complex rhythms and lively jangle from the percussion department kept the audience alert but for many merely heightened the pleasure of again looking back to the past for what followed

The concluding item was Schumann's Second Symphony. The vibrant energy imparted to it by Dr Munch made it an exhilarating as well as immaculate affair. Like the concerto, it was distinguished by a shining texture of string tones and some enchanting phrases from the woodwinds.

Page 6—Edinburgh Evening News, Wednesday, August 29, 1956

UNION PREPARE FOR CLYDE 'BLACK

WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 26 1956

Snarfe

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the
EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf)

Great Beethoven by Stern and the Boston

Probably America's most talented and versatile composer, Aaron Copland has done a great deal for music in his country over the past 30 years. Few, indeed, would deny that he, more than any other musician in the States has upheld the banner of the "moderns" with unflagging zeal and complete faith.

It was fitting, therefore, that the Boston Symphony Orchestra—continuing their policy of playing national work at all the concerts of their British tour—should include one of his major pieces, the Symphonic Ode, in their third festival programme at the Usher Hall last night.

Given its first European performance on this occasion, the Ode was originally written in 1929 but renovated and improved last year. It has no "programme" as we know it, for Copland wishes us to find out its significance for ourselves, and is dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky whose connection with the Boston players is almost legendary.

TYPICAL

In many ways it is very typical of the composer and many an echo of "Appalachian Spring" can be detected in it. But it is also arresting and fresh and there is a brilliance about the scoring which cannot be denied.

Since the orchestra has been so much associated with the Ode in one or other of its forms, it is not surprising that the performance, conducted by Charles Munch, reached and almost surpassed the standard set on Sunday night.

Of Isaac Stern's glorious and unforgettable reading of the Beethoven violin concerto which followed, little need be written for no words could adequately describe its full import. Suffice it to say that the Festival has seldom if ever heard the like either from a soloist or an accompanying orchestra.

CHANGE OF MOOD

With the interval came a change of mood the Boston turning their attention to the Second Symphony of Schumann. And, on listening to an exciting account of this nature, it is difficult to understand why the work has never achieved popularity.

Had Schumann been alive to hear it this time, he might not have agreed with the Munch treatment of his score—but he would certainly have been carried away by its dazzling assurance.

N. G.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
DAILY HERALD, London.

29 AUG 1956

Bad planning here, BBC

FROM Billy Cotton, BBC television switched last night to Beethoven. The change was outrageously abrupt, writes Andrew Smith.

Billy's "Wakey Wakey!" has its own distinctive pep. But anything less likely to put viewers in the mood for Beethoven's violin concerto, televised from Edinburgh, is unimaginable.

Soloist Isaac Stern, who played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made the work glow.

To sandwich it between Billy Cotton and Arenascope is a strong argument for letting the BBC have its Second Programme.

Some musical ups-and-downs

Aaron Copland, the Hollywood film music composer, gave to Edinburgh Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night, the honour of the first European performance of his Symphonic ode.

It is a fascinating collection of musical up-and-downs with suggestions of an oriental flavour about it.

SCOTTISH DAILY EXPRESS
Aug. 29, 1956

THIS WAS STERN AT HIS BEST

By PERCY CATER

ISAAC STERN'S playing, with Charles Münch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of the Beethoven Violin Concerto, was the high point of last night's Usher Hall concert.

The concerto, of course, has a long history of virtuosic treatment, and present-day musicians have heard it according to many fine artists. Stern's performance seemed to me of an almost incomparable fluency and grace.

The music was not presented as an august discourse, though it had dignity and shapeliness. The soloist communicated it to us as a lyrical work of fine freedom and constantly mounting splendours.

The violin sang through the first and second movements, with silvery tone of subtle nuance

Brilliant

The cadenza had fleetness and fire, with the ring and the flourish of certainty in the multiple stopping.

The finale was the right mixture of gusto and sentiment. The rondo is Beethoven in his unbuttoned humour, but lest the heartiness become tedious there are moments of reflection before the brilliant close.

Aaron Copland's Symphonic Ode, which was written more than 25 years ago for the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary and revised for the seventy-fifth—why didn't this prolific composer write a new piece?—was given its first European performance.

Prediction is, of course, always dangerous, but I do not foresee any rush to add this to the European repertoire.

Despite the liveliness—not very convincing—to which the piece works up the music seems mainly sombre and tense.

Lovable music

Copland appears much concerned with linear processes, but anyway, the Ode strikes me as not big enough for the architecture.

The orchestra's tribute to the Schumann centenary year was affecting. If the No. 2 Symphony were always played with something like this sympathy and this talent it might well become a favourite. It is lovable music.

International Press-cutting Bureau
184 Strand. London W.C.2.

EXTRACT FROM
The Yorkshire Post
LEEDS
29 AUG 1956
Date .....

Music—classic & comic on TV

By our television correspondent,
JOHN MARSHALL

There could not be two more different groups of musicians than Billy Cotton and his Band and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yet the BBC last night televised them one after the other, with a remarkable degree of success in both cases, and with no noticeable strain on the nerves when bridging the gap between broad comedy and serious music.

The Cotton Band were appearing at the Radio Show and served up much their usual agreeable mixture. The remarkable mind-reading magician, Koran, has become a regular feature of these shows, and always manages to produce a variation of his baffling powers.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra were televised direct from the Usher Hall, on the Edinburgh Festival. The cramped conditions prevented the cameras from being as distractingly mobile as in the studio, but this made it possible to concentrate fully on the performance.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Eastern Daily Press, Norwich

TV and Radio

THE INTRUSIVE EYE

THAT TELEVISION has not yet mastered the art of presenting full-scale orchestral concerts was clearly demonstrated last night in the broadcast from the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. Possibly the art is one that never will be mastered, because it looks insuperable. Producers can only eliminate as many disadvantages as possible and leave it at that.

In last night's programme from the Edinburgh Festival, Isaac Stern, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, played Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D. The concert was presented for television by Noble Wilson, who wisely decided not to let the camera flit hither and thither at will but to let it rest for nearly all the time on the soloist. If one cannot see the whole scene at once, which is obviously impossible on so small a screen, this is the next best thing.

Unfortunately, the camera was so sited that the soloist occupied only half the screen, and an anonymous but distinguished-looking 'cellist held the other half, giving a faint suggestion of a duet.

The main trouble in televising concerts is that the audience's sense of proportion is automatically thrown out of gear. The eye always dominates the ear when the balance should be the other way round. But because something cannot be done perfectly that does not mean that it should not be done at all. Last night's Concerto was superbly played and undoubtedly and deservedly must have delighted many viewers.

R. G. W.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from the
EVENING DISPATCH
EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf)

2 CITY GIRLS IN TV LADIES' NIGHT

By JOHN WATT

Ladies First, one of the programmes from that other British "Festival," the National Radio Show at Earl's Court, London, proved to be the highlight of last night's tele-viewing. It also showed how versatile is the woman of to-day.

Two Edinburgh families would be scanning the screen carefully to see their daughters participate in this latest version of the Arenascope series. Marion Bloomfield contested the final of the TV Sportsgirl competition, and Margaret Loumgair was in the W.R.A.F. team of P.T. girls who gave a wonderful display of graceful exercises.

The 40 minutes of entertainment by women of the Services, the sporting world, and show business, was given a good send-off by the Dagenham Girl Pipers. The applause that greeted them showed how popular is the Scottish brand of music over the Border.

Entertainment of a different type was given by the women rally drivers in a wheel-changing contest, and by Mrs V. D. S. Williams in a perfect demonstration of show horse-riding.

Hats off to the ladies—it was a good all-round show.

Another "winner" from Earl's Court was Billy Cotton's Wakey, Wakey show. From start to finish there was never a dull moment. I liked best the musical comedy Alpine act, and the delicious, precision dancing of the Leslie Roberts girls.

Sandwiched in between these two samples of light entertainment was a bit of culture from our own Festival—an extract from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in, to quote announcer Mary Malcolm, "an Usher Hall that was packed from ceiling to floor." It seemed to be an appreciative audience to judge by the applause given to Isaac Stern for his rendering of Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D Major.

It was also a well-behaved audience, as far as the viewer could tell. In all the 40 minutes of the telecast I heard only one cough at the wrong time.

It was a delight to listen last night to Stern's playing, and to watch the intense feeling he put into the performance. Here, I think, viewers score over the live audiences in that they are given many close-up shots of orchestra and artist. That can also be a disadvantage, of course. There are some who feel that the visual effort has the effect of breaking the spell cast by the artist.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Evening News, London

FROM BOXING TO BEETHOVEN

IT LOOKS TO ME
by Leslie Ayre

LIKE the weather, the evening's viewing was "mixed"—and, like the weather, most of it was such as to demand a brisk dash for cover. So little was there to induce a prolonged stay that the varied impressions of the evening, many of them of the wildest nature, might best be conveyed in something by Salvador Dali.

The BBC's two best offerings, quite different in character but each good of its kind, were the boxing film and the Beethoven Violin Concerto from Edinburgh, the producer of the latter mercifully refraining from camera antics and clearly conceding that Isaac Stern, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Beethoven might be able to say something unaided.

A peculiar affair called "Ladies First" from Earls Court was compered by Irene Handl in a manner apparently intended to be diverting but which kept slipping out of character. Messrs. Murdoch and Horne, looking understandably bewildered, assisted Miss Handl in this macabre gimmick.

The ITA planners, perhaps unconvinced that "Topper," "I'm Not Bothered" and "My Wildest Dream" would convey a sufficiently surrealistic atmosphere, threw in stock-car racing, a pursuit exceeded only by professional wrestling in fatuous dullness.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from the
Evening Chronicle
NEWCASTLE UPON TYNE
Date.....
(See information overleaf)

TV COMMENTARY

VIEWING went from the sublime to the ridiculous, or rather vice versa, for the Billy Cotton Band Show was followed by a 45-minute Beethoven concert. Each was first rate.

The concert, from Edinburgh festival, featured the Boston Symphony Orchestra with violinist Isaac Stern as soloist.

The Billy Cotton Show excelled itself for presentation from the Radio Show. There were none of the usual gags, with members of the band dressed in skirts.

If the all-women show was aimed at showing the fairer sex partaking in varied activities it proved its point. But as an entertainment it flopped.

—J.N.B.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Star, London

TELEVIEWS

● THE BBC's Arenascope toast to The Ladies was a very mixed cocktail ranging from the Dagenham Girl Pipers to a dainty exhibition of well-schooled horsewomanship.

This all-woman show linked by the most puerile of scripts had several good items, culminating in carwomanship in which Pat Moss and Sylvia Peters beat Sheila Van Damm and Carole Carr. But I couldn't help noticing that it was designed and produced by men—and who's heard of camerawomen?

A pretty girl, as Billy Cotton demonstrated in his usual gay show, is like a melody.

But you'll generally find that it is men who display the girl, compose the melody and eventually bring it to life with a violin, as Isaac Stern did with a Beethoven concerto, an Edinburgh Festival excerpt which featured the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Even in this famous symbol of the woman-emancipated West I noticed men outnumbered women 20 to one.

C. F.

BEETHOVEN CONCERTO
Stern with Boston Orchestra

BY OUR MUSIC CRITIC

Festival bores still talk about Menunin's playing of Beethoven's Violin Concerto in the Usher Hall a few years ago, a performance dedicated to the memory of Thibaud. Isaac Stern played the same work again last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Münch, not, as far as I know, in memory of anything at all. But it was of the calibre to raise a new generation of "do-you-rememberers," among whom the present writer would be happy to enrol himself.

In his performance, as in his manner, Mr. Stern is without affectation, and the concerto was recreated yesterday with fewer interpretative glosses than one can ever normally dare to expect. But it was not therefore in any way cold or impersonal. Faultless purity of tone, allied with wonderful shapeliness of phrasing and a golden serenity of mood inclined it towards the world of song as much as to that of instrumental music.

Some passages came straight from Elysium—the tender re-statement of the main theme immediately after the first movement's cadenza (itself a subject worthy of comment), the dialogue between soloist and pizzicato strings in the Larghetto, and the marvellous freshness and delicacy of the Finale. And these were but three examples.

Münch and the orchestra had distinguished themselves hardly less than Isaac Stern in the concerto, as they were to do again after the interval in Schumann's C major Symphony No. 2, given a most spectacular performance. It sounded as if the platform party were determined to salvage for good the rather mediocre reputation of this work. They made out a compelling case for it, marred only by a point of balance in the slow movement, the submerging of the wind beneath the opulence of string tone. That also happened occasionally in the first movement of the Concerto.

EUROPEAN PREMIERE

Aaron Copland's Symphonic Ode, which was having its European première, was a disappointment. Perhaps one expected too much from so considerable a musical luminary, but this rehash of a piece written in 1929 for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Orchestra was on first acquaintance unlikable and rather dull. The actual sound of it, more especially of the slow bits, had some merit, and the general design was clear, but the trend of the composer's thought was hard to follow. Copland, according to the programme note, explained in 1932: "It is not an ode to anything other than the particular spirit to be found in the music itself. What that particular spirit is, is not for me to say." Deliberately misconstruing him, I am bound to say that I can't either.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
THE TIMES
LONDON
30 AUG 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCH[illegible] FESTIVAL CON[illegible]

FROM OUR MUSIC CR[illegible]

EDINBURGH, AUG. 29

The Boston Orchestra is to be commended for putting American works into their programmes, for we ought to hear something of what is being written in a country where there is a vast amount of music making. Nor should we be disappointed if little of significance emerges—it takes gallons of milk to make a pint of cream. Aaron Copland is a composer who has encouraged us to hope for more than he gave us in his arid Symphonic Ode—Stravinsky has much to answer for.

This was another work with specially close associations with this particular orchestra, and it was conducted by Mr. Charles Munch with an appearance of conviction at the third of the Boston concerts at the Usher Hall last night.

The gl[illegible] Stern's s[illegible] violin co[illegible] orchestra[illegible] delicate [illegible] neither [illegible] apparent, [illegible] skilful a[illegible] in spirit [illegible] exquisite [illegible] phrase w[illegible] is not s[illegible] of delica[illegible] He [illegible] Schuman[illegible] making i[illegible] rich to[illegible] orchestra[illegible] he certain[illegible] lusciousn[illegible] characteri[illegible] Koussevit[illegible] and the f[illegible]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from The
LIVERPOOL DAILY POST
Date [illegible] 1956

AT THE FESTIVAL

The old stagers are taking the laurels

By A. K. Holland

EDINBURGH, Tuesday.

RAIN has certainly not stopped play at the Edinburgh Festival but it has done everything possible to damp spirits. The depressing conditions of the past two days have not however prevented crowds from flocking to performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and enthusiasm was undiminished for the concert conducted by the octogenarian Pierre Monteux.

My feeling is that so far it is the old stagers who have scored most of the points at this year's festival.

Monteux is not so demonstrative a conductor as much that he has a quiet control of the orchestra and an authority that brings an even finer tone out of the ensemble than the more strenuous methods of Munch. He opened with the Second Symphony of Paul Creston, a fifty-year-old American composer of Italian descent, whose actual name apparently is Guttoveggio.

* * *

THIS is a symphony only by a long stretch of the imagination. It consists of two movements that are supposed to represent the two basic elements of music namely song and dance. The song comes in for long stretches of unison playing by the full orchestra on which a set of variations are superimposed.

The second part uses much the same basic material but in new rhythmic disguises suggesting the dance. It seemed a very unsatisfactory structural basis because the ear could not appreciate the formal relationships that are supposed to exist between the two movements which do not in fact form a sufficient contrast as for example Schubert's two movements in the Unfinished Symphony do.

* * *

BARTOK'S Concerto for Orchestra is, if not one of his finest works is at any rate one of his most entertaining and meretricious. Monteux gave us a finely articulated account of the impressive if unequal score.

The best thing of the evening was undoubtedly the well balanced calm and judicious performance of Schubert's C Major 'The Great' Symphony which displayed the orchestra in its best light as a superb body of technicians with a magnificent groundwork of tone in every department.

Just how good the brass section for instance is we were able to appreciate this morning when they gave a chamber recital of works by old Italian masters with some modern pieces by Poulenc and others. Even in the resonant Freemasons Hall they sounded like glorified organ-reeds rather than crude brass.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
THE SCOTSMAN
EDINBURGH
Date .....
(See information overleaf.)

SECOND BOSTON CONCERT
Pierre Monteux

BY OUR MUSIC CRITIC

It is an annual Festival phenomenon—the chameleon knack that orchestras have of altering their style and actual quality of tone to suit their different conductors. The most extreme case was provided by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra last year, when it suffered more than a sea-change on switching over from Ormandy's to Hindemith's baton. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was perfectly recognisable on Monday night when it was playing for that veteran expatriate French conductor, Pierre Monteux, instead of for Münch, but there were unmistakable differences of emphasis. Sunday's concert had been one of incisive brilliance, virtuosity, and excitement.

Monday's was one of penny plain sobriety, a smoother, more classical "line" and a slightly more relaxed approach. The results were duller and in some ways more musical.

It depended on the sort of works up for performance. Given those Boston instrumentalists, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra could, and should, have been stupendous, whereas it emerged as a decent, thoroughly competent piece of playing of an overrated composition. On the other hand, there were some thrilling passages in the great C major Symphony of Schubert which ended the Usher Hall programme. The Finale was, however, a disappointment, as it is apt to be unless the conductor is making very long-term plans, and has set in motion a gigantic ground rhythm.

The evening's novelty was a two-movement symphony (No. 2, Op. 35) by the American composer, Paul Creston, who describes it as "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music—song and dance." Mr Creston née Guttoveggio is Sicilian by blood, and there is a warmly lyrical impulse mixed up with the barbed-wire impressionism of the "Introduction and Song." "The Interlude and Dance" have a rather taking, brash, rhythmic vigour, suggestive of some "programme" which does not in fact exist.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Evening News, London

FROM BOXING TO BEETHOVEN

IT LOOKS TO ME
by Leslie Ayre

LIKE the weather, the evening's viewing was "mixed"—and, like the weather, most of it was such as to demand a brisk dash for cover. So little was there to induce a prolonged stay that the varied impressions of the evening, many of them of the wildest nature, might best be conveyed in something by Salvador Dali.

The BBC's two best offerings, quite different in character but each good of its kind, were the boxing film and the Beethoven Violin Concerto from Edinburgh, the producer of the latter mercifully refraining from camera antics and clearly conceding that Isaac Stern, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Beethoven might be able to say something unaided.

A peculiar affair called "Ladies First" from Earls Court was compered by Irene Handl in a manner apparently intended to be diverting but which kept slipping out of character. Messrs. Murdoch and Horne, looking understandably bewildered, assisted Miss Handl in this macabre gimmick.

The ITA planners, perhaps unconvinced that "Topper," "I'm Not Bothered" and "My Wildest Dream" would convey a sufficiently surrealistic atmosphere, threw in stock-car racing, a pursuit exceeded only by professional wrestling in fatuous dullness.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from the
Evening Chronicle
NEWCASTLE UPON TYNE

Date .....
(See information overleaf)

TV COMMENTARY

VIEWING went from the sublime to the ridiculous, or rather vice versa, for the Billy Cotton Band Show was followed by a 45-minute Beethoven concert. Each was first rate.

The concert, from Edinburgh festival, featured the Boston Symphony Orchestra with violinist Isaac Stern as soloist.

The Billy Cotton Show excelled itself for presentation from the Radio Show. There were none of the usual gags, with members of the band dressed in skirts.

If the all-women show was aimed at showing the fairer sex partaking in varied activities it proved its point. But as an entertainment it flopped.

—J.N.B.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Star, London

TELEVIEWS

● THE BBC's A[illegible] toast to The Ladies w[illegible] a very mixed cocktail ranging from the Dagenham Gi[illegible] Pipers to a dainty exhibi[illegible] of well-schooled horsewomanship.

This all-woman show linked by the most puerile of scripts and several good items, culminating in earwomanship in which Pat Moss and Sylvia Peters beat Sheila Van Damm and Carole Carr. But I could[illegible] help noticing that [illegible] designed and produced by men—and who's [illegible] cameraw[illegible]?

A pretty girl, as B[illegible] demonstrated in [illegible] gay show, is like a melody.

But you'll generally find [illegible] is men who display [illegible] compose the melody [illegible] eventually bring it to life [illegible] a violin, as Isaac Stern did with a Beethoven concerto [illegible] Edinburgh Festival [illegible] which featured the Bo[illegible] Symphony Orchestra.

Even in this famous [illegible] the woman-emanc[illegible] I noticed men outnumbered women 20 to one.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from The
LIVERPOOL DAILY POST
Date 1956

AT THE FESTIVAL

The old stagers are taking the laurel

By A. I[illegible]

RAIN has certainly not [illegible] Festival but it has do[illegible] spirits. The depressing co[illegible] have not however preven[illegible] performances of the Bost[illegible] enthusiasm was undiminished [illegible] the octogenarian Pierre Mon[illegible]

[illegible] machine in China. And [illegible] and larger involves treatment by salves and confections) made largely from herbs) and is termed herbal medicine. The second involves the puncture by needles or the application of heat at certain established points on the body surface, and is known as acupuncture. It is common, but not invariable, that a traditional doctor should practice both skills.

The outstanding difference between Western and Chinese medicine is that the first makes understanding of disease its prime task, while the second concentrates upon learning in remedy, and is not so much concerned about how a particular complaint should arise, or why a particular remedy should meet it.

In this respect, the Chinese herbalist is not much different from the Western physician of two centuries ago. In 200 years, however, the Western physician has become a different animal, and has moved from the ranks of the priesthood into those of science. The herbalist and acupuncturist still stick rigidly to techniques

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
THE TIMES
LONDON

30 AUG 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S THIRD FESTIVAL CONCERT

FROM OUR MUSIC CRITIC

4767

EDINBURGH, AUG. 29

The Boston Orchestra is to be commended for putting American works into their programmes, for we ought to hear something of what is being written in a country where there is a vast amount of music making. Nor should we be disappointed if little of significance emerges—it takes gallons of milk to make a pint of cream. Aaron Copland is a composer who has encouraged us to hope for more than he gave us in his arid Symphonic Ode—Stravinsky has much to answer for.

This was another work with specially close associations with this particular orchestra, and it was conducted by Mr. Charles Munch with an appearance of conviction at the third of the Boston concerts at the Usher Hall last night.

The glory of this concert was Mr. Isaac Stern's superlative playing of Beethoven's violin concerto. It provided a test for the orchestra's ability to produce really delicate playing and a true pianissimo, neither of which had been previously apparent. It seems strange that with so skilful a band of players something nearer in spirit and in quality to Mr. Stern's exquisite purity of tone and refinement of phrase was not forthcoming—Mr. Munch is not sufficiently exacting in this matter of delicacy.

He managed, however, to play Schumann's second symphony without making it sound thick while exploiting the rich tonal ensemble which is this orchestra's special care and concern, and he certainly brought it to life. Vitality and lusciousness of tone, indeed, are the chief characteristics so far revealed in Koussevitzky's old orchestra but subtlety and the finer shades are to seek.

BEETHOVEN CONCERTO

Stern with Boston Orchestra

BY OUR MUSIC CRITIC

Festival bores still talk about Menunin's playing of Beethoven's Violin Concerto in the Usher Hall a few years ago, a performance dedicated to the memory of Thibaud. Isaac Stern played the same work again last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Münch, not, as far as I know, in memory of anything at all. But it was of the calibre to raise a new generation of "do-you-rememberers," among whom the present writer would be happy to enrol himself.

In his performance, as in his manner, Mr. Stern is without affectation, and the concerto was recreated yesterday with fewer interpretative glosses than one can ever normally dare to expect. But it was not therefore in any way cold or impersonal. Faultless purity of tone, allied with wonderful shapeliness of phrasing and a golden serenity of mood inclined it towards the world of song as much as to that of instrumental music.

Some passages came straight from Elysium—the tender re-statement of the main theme immediately after the first movement's cadenza (itself a subject worthy of comment), the dialogue between soloist and pizzicato strings in the Larghetto, and the marvellous freshness and delicacy of the Finale. And these were but three examples.

Münch and the orchestra had distinguished themselves hardly less than Isaac Stern in the concerto, as they were to do again after the interval in Schumann's C major Symphony No. 2, given a most spectacular performance. It sounded as if the platform party were determined to salvage for good the rather mediocre reputation of this work. They made out a compelling case for it, marred only by a point of balance in the slow movement, the submerging of the wind beneath the opulence of string tone. That also happened occasionally in the first movement of the Concerto.

EUROPEAN PREMIERE

Aaron Copland's Symphonic Ode, which was having its European première, was a disappointment. Perhaps one expected too much from so considerable a musical luminary, but this rehash of a piece written in 1929 for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Orchestra was on first acquaintance unlikable and rather dull. The actual sound of it, more especially of the slow bits, had some merit, and the general design was clear, but the trend of the composer's thought was hard to follow. Copland, according to the programme note, explained in 1932: "It is not an ode to anything other than the particular spirit to be found in the music itself. What that particular spirit is, is not for me to say." Deliberately misconstruing him, I am bound to say that I can't either.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
" THE SCOTSMAN "
EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf.)

SECOND BOSTON CONCERT

Pierre Monteux

BY OUR MUSIC CRITIC

It is an annual Festival phenomenon—the chameleon knack that orchestras have of altering their style and actual quality of tone to suit their different conductors. The most extreme case was provided by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra last year, when it suffered more than a sea-change on switching over from Ormandy's to Hindemith's baton. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was perfectly recognisable on Monday night when it was playing for that veteran expatriate French conductor, Pierre Monteux, instead of for Münch, but there were unmistakable differences of emphasis. Sunday's concert had been one of incisive brilliance, virtuosity, and excitement.

Monday's was one of penny plain sobriety, a smoother, more classical "line" and a slightly more relaxed approach. The results were duller and in some ways more musical.

It depended on the sort of works up for performance. Given those Boston instrumentalists, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra could, and should, have been stupendous, whereas it emerged as a decent, thoroughly competent piece of playing of an overrated composition. On the other hand, there were some thrilling passages in the great C major Symphony of Schubert which ended the Usher Hall programme. The Finale was, however, a disappointment, as it is apt to be unless the conductor is making very long-term plans, and has set in motion a gigantic ground rhythm.

The evening's novelty was a two-movement symphony (No. 2, Op. 35) by the American composer, Paul Creston, who describes it as "an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music—song and dance." Mr Creston née Guttoveggio is Sicilian by blood, and there is a warmly lyrical impulse mixed up with the barbed-wire impressionism of the "Introduction and Song." "The Interlude and Dance" have a rather taking, brash, rhythmic vigour, suggestive of some "programme" which does not in fact exist.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from Eastern Daily Press, Norwich

29

TV and Radio

INTRUSIVE EYE

AT TELEVISION has not yet mastered the art of presenting scale orchestral concerts was [illegible] demonstrated last night in [illegible] broadcast from the Usher Hall, [illegible]burgh. Possibly the art is one [illegible] never will be mastered, [illegible]use it looks insuperable. Pro[illegible]rs can only eliminate as many [illegible]vantages as possible and leave [illegible] that.

[illegible] last night's programme from the [illegible]burgh Festival, Isaac Stern, with [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible]ucted by Charles Munch, playe[illegible] [illegible]hoven's Violin Concerto in D [illegible] concert was presented for tele[illegible]n by Noble Wilson, who wisely [illegible]ded not to let the camera fl[illegible]er and thither at will but to [illegible]est for nearly all the time on the [illegible]ist. If one cannot see the whole [illegible]e at once, which is obviously [illegible]ossible on so small a screen, this [illegible]he next best thing.

[illegible]nfortunately, the camera was so [illegible] that the soloist occupied only [illegible] the screen, and an anonymous [illegible] distinguished-looking 'cellist held [illegible] other half, giving a faint sugge[illegible] of a duet.

[illegible] main trouble in televi[illegible]ncerts is that the audience's se[illegible] proportion is automatically thr[illegible] of gear. The eye alw[illegible]minates the ear when the bal[illegible]ould be the other way round. [illegible]cause something cannot be [illegible]erfectly that does not mean th[illegible]ould not be done at all. [illegible]ght's Concerto was superbly p[illegible] undoubtedly and deservedly [illegible]ve delighted many viewers.

R. G.

THE YORKSHIRE

The Yorkshire Post

TELEPHONES:
LEEDS ...../32701 (22 lines)
LONDON ... FLE 9003 (8 lines)

QUARTERLY SUBSCRIPTION RATES:
BRITISH ISLES 26/-, FOREIGN 22/9
(Postage included).

LEEDS, THURS., AUG. 30, 1956

A memorable performance by Isaac Stern

From ERNEST BRADBURY

EDINBURGH, Wednesday

Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux are sharing the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week, and last night it was again Munch's turn to take charge in a programme of Copland, Beethoven and Schumann. Part of the concert was televised.

In the event, it was the oldest work in the programme, Beethoven's Violin Concerto, that made the greatest appeal, and the newest work, Copland's "Symphonic Ode," a revised version of a piece written in 1929, that was least satisfactory.

The reasons for this were not only inherent in the composition itself. There is about the playing of the BSO, more than we suspected on Sunday night, and at least in the Usher Hall, a brash, steely quality which is extremely hard on the ears. It seems to be a peculiarly American quality, for we have heard it before in the playing of the Philadelphia Orchestra and in performances by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under Mitropoulis.

Strident brass

The brass, in particular, seems unwarrantably strident, and when this was added last night to the thundering battery of a particularly uninhibited percussion section, the effect was noisy, unmusical even, in the extreme.

At the height of Copland's racket, in the final climax, I was privileged for the first time in a concert hall to see a lady put her fingers firmly in her ears; and I was reminded of Bernard Shaw's remark on the occasion of a similar occurrence: "The lady was quite right."

The Ode—to nothing in particular, according to the composer—had a certain resolute quality, chiefly an understandable desire for orchestral display, since the work was written with the BSO in mind, and a certain tightness of form that was rather more impressive, in the end, than the somewhat self-conscious thematic material. Only in the quieter sections, episodes with a certain pastoral charm, was there a hint of the real Copland, whose chiefly lyrical talents are here submerged and almost smothered by the weight of his orchestral mass.

Munch, his arms gyrating like windmill sails and working himself up to moments of positive frenzy, certainly inspired the players to give all they had got, which in the end proved rather too much for most of us.

But in the Concerto we were in another world, thanks to the genius of Isaac Stern. It is not possible to praise his performance too highly, though, equally, it is not easy to put into words just where the magic lay. The quality of tone which distinguishes his every note has already been insisted upon; it never failed him even in the fireworks of the most dazzling cadenza I have ever heard. And the ethereal beauty of his line when the orchestra joined him again—this was a timeless moment that memory itself will never wholly recapture. Genius, artistry, call it what you will, the supreme blessedness of the creative performer, belong to Isaac Stern.

I think I have been tempted before to call him the greatest violinist in the world, but I do so now, throwing caution to the wind. We shall remember last night's playing till we go to the grave.

A Schumann symphony

After the interval we had the rare opportunity—appropriate in this year—of hearing Schumann's so-called 2nd Symphony, the least known of the four. It has all the Schumann weaknesses and some of the ineffable Schumann merits, mainly in the slow movement which the composer pretended was an Adagio but which is in fact a sublime Romance.

In the Scherzo (as improved by Mendelssohn) and the enjoyable if laborious outer movements Munch's interpretation (I suspect the playing was too fast) gave a rough and boisterous exuberance to the music which did no harm and in fact brought a highly respectable gloss to a composition which is not, after all, without charm.

At the morning concert we had further opportunity to hear some half dozen of the Boston brass players alone in a recital of music by Gabrieli, Bonelli, Poulenc and two very indifferent American composers. The 16th Century works were the choice pieces in this programme and the playing was, very naturally, remarkably efficient. Still, since we know a thing or two about brass in Yorkshire, I cannot frankly imagine the more gifted members of some of our crack bands admitting that this playing, for all its worth, was anything special to write home about.

COPLAND'S REVISED "SYMPHONIC ODE"

And Brass Chamber Music

From Colin Mason

EDINBURGH, WEDNESDAY.

The third of the American works brought to the Edinburgh Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the Symphonic Ode of Aaron Copland, with which Charles Munch opened last night's concert. From this most gifted of American composers it was a disappointment, and his evident affection for it, which led him to revise it last year for the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary, 26 years after its composition, is difficult to understand. It is in five sections, alternately slow and fast, becoming successively more compressed until the two tempi are finally merged. The slow sections are an exciting orchestral sound, sometimes like Stravinsky and often strikingly like Britten (the extent of whose debt to Copland is a subject worth attention). But the musical content even of these slow sections amounts to little more than a succession of much-repeated impressive gestures, and the unconnected and tritely perky quick sections between them are still poorer in thematic invention and incident. On the showing of this version, the original could hardly have been worth revising, and Copland would have been better employed in writing a completely new work—of which the occasion was surely worthy. As a study in orchestral sound, the Boston Symphony was the orchestra to make the most of it, and this they did, but it was not enough to give much musical satisfaction.

Earlier in the day, a group of players from the orchestra's brass section had given a chamber concert at the Freemasons' Hall, with works by Poulenc and two presumably American composers named Sanders and Berezowsky (no closer identification was provided in the programme note). The pieces were all, as far as could be judged, of very slight musical content, which is probably inevitable in such works. Chamber music for brass instruments is like Dr Johnson's women preachers, such an oddity in itself that the critical sensitivity is numbed in simple wonder. All that is required for it to please is that it should be euphonious. This these pieces were, and fascinatingly varied, too, in the euphony, with almost as many different kinds of texture and tone quality as a string quartet is capable of. Played with marvellous smoothness and lightness by this Boston ensemble, led by their brilliant principal trumpeter, Roger Voisin, they made, if not a very substantial musical experience, an agreeable tickling of the ear for an hour or so.

THE GUARDIAN
MANCHESTER THURSDAY
AUGUST 30 1956

COMEDY. (Whi. 2578.) M.-F. 8. Th. 2.30. Sat. 5. 8.15. 1 2

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH AND MORNING POST

DAILY TELEGRAPH—June 29, 1855
MORNING POST—November 2, 1772
[Amalgamated October 1, 1937]

THURSDAY, AUGUST 30, 1956

COPLAND'S ODE FAILS TO GRIP

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Münch gave the first European performance in Usher Hall on Tuesday of Aaron Copland's Symphonic Ode, originally written for the orchestra's 50th anniversary and revised last year for its 75th. A brilliant showpiece for the players, it scarcely shows up the best of Copland.

The material is fragmentary, re-emphasised throughout the work's five sections with a declamatory vigour that does not conceal its poverty in action. Even the rhythmic intricacies do not grip.

Complex, unevenly stressed figures are built up in a welter of unexpected accents that obviously suggest Stravinsky but have less genuine momentum than one bar from his pen. The performance was superb.

Isaac Stern's playing of Beethoven's violin concerto was supremely beautiful of tone, and smoothly and lovingly phrased. Even if the accompaniment seemed undisturbed from its concentration on sheer tonal lustre and virtuosity, it was impossible not to be carried away by Stern's performance. J. W.

MUSIC BY BRASS ENSEMBLE

FOUR-CENTURY SPAN

A single insuperable difficulty keeps concerts for brass instruments only mercifully rare—the choice of a programme. The concert given by the Brass Ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Freemasons' Hall followed what is in fact almost the only possible pattern—the 16th century Venetian succeeded immediately by the "silly symphonists" of the 1920s and their subsequent imitators.

Giovanni Gabrieli and Bonelli showed the players' impeccably smooth tone, the admirable chording of the ensemble and the neat balancing of the two antiphonal choruses The silliness of Poulenc's trio has at least a period flavour. But suites by the Americans Sanders and Berezowsky followed the formula with little to distinguish them individually M. C.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Daily Telegraph, London
30 AUG 1956

Edinburgh Festival

SUPERB BRAHMS UNDER MONTEUX

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

The high point of a superb concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux at the Usher Hall last night was the towering account of Brahms's third symphony.

Slow tempos, with music held in a strong but by no means unrelenting grip, were contributory to the impact. But they did not wholly explain the deep, memorable satisfaction of the performance.

Though Monteux maintained the drive and tension magnificently, his spacious, tender handling showed a sympathetic awareness of the quality implied in the constant leaning towards flat keys.

Robert Casadesus was excellent in César Franck's Symphonic Variations. He was undaunted by the ferocious difficulties of technique and touch in Ravel's left hand piano concerto.

An unnecessary, impoverished festival overture by Isadore Freed and a brassy account of Strauss's unsatisfactorily constructed "Rosenkavalier" suite framed the concert unworthily.

MYRA HESS RECITAL

Beethoven Sonatas

New names crowd the Edinburgh Festival programme, but the public regard for the constant and the well-loved was shown by the size of the audience for Myra Hess's Beethoven recital at the Freemasons' Hall yesterday morning.

A few mishaps did not detract from her strongly coloured playing of the D major sonata, Op. 10, No. 3. She invested the introspective Largo with a noble melancholy and reproduced vividly the cheerful gestures and squall-like rages of the rondo.

After a charming apology for nervousness—not a little reassuring in a veteran artist—she delivered a performance of the Appassionata sonata that caught her up in its own forceful progress to the extent, unfortunately, of causing her fingers to smother the pounding rhythm of the climactic coda. J. W.

EDINBURGH ROUND-UP

Rainy Season in Scotland No Obstacle To the Boston Symphony's Success

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS

EDINBURGH.

EDINBURGH'S tenth international festival, the opening of which was graced by the presence of Queen Elizabeth, has proved its most successful, artistically and financially. It also has been its wettest.

"Best sellers" this year have included the five concerts by the Boston Symphony, the season by the Sadler's Wells Ballet (all Britain is ballet-drunk these days) and the performances of "The Magic Flute" by the Hamburg State Opera.

The Boston Symphony has lifted critics and public to a plane of reckless rapture. "Never heard anything like it" has been a common remark after each concert as we fought for our umbrellas, mackintoshes and overshoes before plunging once more into the blinding rains.

More than one critic pronounced it to be the finest orchestra in existence, and most agreed that it played better than the New York Philharmonic-Symphony last year. The Manchester Guardian even mentioned several other world-famous orchestras and proceeded to demonstrate how superior the Boston was, and why.

Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux offered us a provocative contrast in conducting. Munch, we felt, was very much the showman, demonstrating the virtuosity of a magnificent creation. "Come, challenge us," he seemed to say. "Ask for the impossible and see how easily we perform it."

Monteux, on the other hand, adopted a style less exciting and seemed more deeply concerned with the spirit and marrow of the music itself, following tradition where tradition was right even if, by doing so, he gave us no surprises. Adverse criticism was aimed chiefly at the brass. "They ough to listen to some of Britain's crack brass bands," said a Scottish conductor to me.

The Hamburg State Opera has been handicapped by the British audience's obstinacy in liking what it knows and avoiding what it doesn't. Hence, full houses for "The Magic Flute," but only moderate attendances at Cornelius' "The Barber of Baghdad" and Stravinsky's "Oedipus" and "Mavra."

But the blame is not entirely the audience's. Even with embarrassingly long intervals, the Cornelius and Stravinsky performances could not be stretched till much later than 9 o'clock; and the Briton—particularly the North Briton—likes a full evening's value for his money. Also, these works lack the universality of really great opera.

Sir Thomas Beecham conducted the orchestra in a week of concerts, his programs including an overture "Edinburgh," specially written for the tenth festival by Sir Arthur Bliss, Master of the Queen's Musick, and conducted by the composer. It is a lively work in true festival spirit.

The Scottish National Orchestra, the B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain and the Vienna Hofmusikkapelle also gave concerts, and each day—often twice a day—there were instrumental and vocal recitals in the Freemasons' Hall.

Bach Series

Outstanding among these were the Bach recitals by Rosalyn Tureck. Here was music delivered with a full heart and a clear head. Wisely she did not attempt to make the modern piano sound like a harpsichord but reveled in its full tone to give ever-increasing point and power to Bach's intricate patterns.

The present fanatical cult for Mozart in Britain (it was Handel in the nineteenth century) has caused Bach to recede slightly in our minds. Recitals like this, full of obvious affection as well as scholarship, may help to bring him nearer to us again.

Two events bothered native critics: "The Miraculous Mandarin," a ballet danced by the Sadler's Wells Company to music by Béla Bartók, and telling an "obscene and disgusting" story of an underworld in which prostitutes decoyed men to their deaths; and the After Dinner Opera Company from America presenting Meyer Kupferman's "In a Garden," Mark Bucci's "Sweet Betsy from Pike" and Theodore Chanler's "The Pot of Fat."

Some rather rude remarks were made about these operas and their performers. "The Pot of Fat," telling of the marriage of a cat and mouse, was received more cordially than the other two, but it was the general opinion that such works failed to flourish when transplanted outside America.

These, however, were spots on the sun—or perhaps, recalling the weather, it would be fitter to call them unusually murky rainclouds. In nearly all other respects this festival was a splendid crown to ten years of achievement.

THE YORKSHIRE

The Yorkshire Post

TELEPHONES:
LEEDS ...../32701 (22 lines)
LONDON ..... FLE 9693 (8 lines)
QUARTERLY SUBSCRIPTION RATES:
BRITISH ISLES 26/-, FOREIGN 22/9
(Postage included).
LEEDS, THURS., AUG. 30, 1956

A memorable performance by Isaac Stern

From ERNEST BRADBURY

EDINBURGH, Wednesday

Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux are sharing the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week, and last night it was again Munch's turn to take charge in a programme of Copland, Beethoven and Schumann. Part of the concert was televised.

In the event, it was the oldest work in the programme, Beethoven's Violin Concerto, that made the greatest appeal, and the newest work, Copland's "Symphonic Ode," a revised version of a piece written in 1929, that was least satisfactory.

The reasons for this were not only inherent in the composition itself. There is about the playing of the BSO, more than we suspected on Sunday night, and at least in the Usher Hall, a brash, steely quality which is extremely hard on the ears. It seems to be a peculiarly American quality, for we have heard it before in the playing of the Philadelphia Orchestra and in performances by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under Mitropoulis.

Strident brass

The brass, in particular, seems unwarrantably strident, and when this was added last night to the thundering battery of a particularly uninhibited percussion section, the effect was noisy, unmusical even, in the extreme.

At the height of Copland's racket, in the final climax, I was privileged for the first time in a concert hall to see a lady put her fingers firmly in her ears; and I was reminded of Bernard Shaw's remark on the occasion of a similar occurrence: "The lady was quite right."

The Ode—to nothing in particular, according to the composer—had a certain resolute quality, chiefly an understandable desire for orchestral display, since the work was written with the BSO in mind, and a certain tightness of form that was rather more impressive, in the end, than the somewhat self-conscious thematic material. Only in the quieter sections, episodes with a certain pastoral charm, was there a hint of the real Copland, whose chiefly lyrical talents are here submerged and almost smothered by the weight of his orchestral mass.

Munch, his arms gyrating like windmill sails and working himself up to moments of positive frenzy, certainly inspired the players to give all they had got, which in the end proved rather too much for most of us.

But in the Concerto we were in another world, thanks to the genius of Isaac Stern. It is not possible to praise his performance too highly, though, equally, it is not easy to put into words just where the magic lay. The quality of tone which distinguishes his every note has already been insisted upon; it never failed him even in the fireworks of the most dazzling cadenza I have ever heard. And the ethereal beauty of his line when the orchestra joined him again—this was a timeless moment that memory itself will never wholly recapture. Genius, artistry, call it what you will, the supreme blessedness of the creative performer, belong to Isaac Stern.

I think I have been tempted before to call him the greatest violinist in the world, but I do so now, throwing caution to the wind. We shall remember last night's playing till we go to the grave.

A Schumann symphony

After the interval we had the rare opportunity—appropriate in this year—of hearing Schumann's so-called 2nd Symphony, the least known of the four. It has all the Schumann weaknesses and some of the ineffable Schumann merits, mainly in the slow movement which the composer pretended was an Adagio but which is in fact a sublime Romance.

In the Scherzo (as improved by Mendelssohn) and the enjoyable if laborious outer movements Munch's interpretation (I suspect the playing was too fast) gave a rough and boisterous exuberance to the music which did no harm and in fact brought a highly respectable gloss to a composition which is not, after all, without charm.

At the morning concert we had further opportunity to hear some half dozen of the Boston brass players alone in a recital of music by Gabrieli, Bonelli, Poulenc and two very indifferent American composers. The 16th Century works were the choice pieces in this programme and the playing was, very naturally, remarkably efficient. Still, since we know a thing or two about brass in Yorkshire, I cannot frankly imagine the more gifted members of some of our crack bands admitting that this playing, for all its worth, was anything special to write home about.

COPLAND'S REVISED "SYMPHONIC ODE"

And Brass Chamber Music

From Colin Mason

EDINBURGH, WEDNESDAY.

The third of the American works brought to the Edinburgh Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the Symphonic Ode of Aaron Copland, with which Charles Munch opened last night's concert. From this most gifted of American composers it was a disappointment, and his evident affection for it, which led him to revise it last year for the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary, 26 years after its composition, is difficult to understand. It is in five sections, alternately slow and fast, becoming successively more compressed until the two tempi are finally merged. The slow sections are an exciting orchestral sound, sometimes like Stravinsky and often strikingly like Britten (the extent of whose debt to Copland is a subject worth attention). But the musical content even of these slow sections amounts to little more than a succession of much-repeated impressive gestures, and the unconnected and tritely perky quick sections between them are still poorer in thematic invention and incident. On the showing of this version, the original could hardly have been worth revising, and Copland would have been better employed in writing a completely new work—of which the occasion was surely worthy. As a study in orchestral sound, the Boston Symphony was the orchestra to make the most of it, and this they did, but it was not enough to give much musical satisfaction.

Earlier in the day, a group of players from the orchestra's brass section had given a chamber concert at the Freemasons' Hall, with works by Poulenc and two presumably American composers named Sanders and Berezowsky (no closer identification was provided in the programme note). The pieces were all, as far as could be judged, of very slight musical content, which is probably inevitable in such works. Chamber music for brass instruments is like Dr Johnson's women preachers, such an oddity in itself that the critical sensitivity is numbed in simple wonder. All that is required for it to please is that it should be euphonious. This these pieces were, and fascinatingly varied, too, in the euphony, with almost as many different kinds of texture and tone quality as a string quartet is capable of. Played with marvellous smoothness and lightness by this Boston ensemble, led by their brilliant principal trumpeter, Roger Voisin, they made, if not a very substantial musical experience, an agreeable tickling of the ear for an hour or so.

THE GUARDIAN
MANCHESTER THURSDAY
AUGUST 30 1956

COMEDY. (Whi. 2578.) M.-F. 8. Th. 2.30. Sat. 5. 8.15. 1 2

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH AND MORNING POST
DAILY TELEGRAPH—June 29, 1855
MORNING POST—November 2, 1772
[Amalgamated October 1, 1937]
THURSDAY, AUGUST 30, 1956

COPLAND'S ODE FAILS TO GRIP

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Münch gave the first European performance in Usher Hall on Tuesday of Aaron Copland's Symphonic Ode, originally written for the orchestra's 50th anniversary and revised last year for its 75th. A brilliant showpiece for the players, it scarcely shows up the best of Copland.

The material is fragmentary, re-emphasised throughout the work's five sections with a declamatory vigour that does not conceal its poverty in action. Even the rhythmic intricacies do not grip.

Complex, unevenly stressed figures are built up in a welter of unexpected accents that obviously suggest Stravinsky but have less genuine momentum than one bar from his pen. The performance was superb.

Isaac Stern's playing of Beethoven's violin concerto was supremely beautiful of tone, and smoothly and lovingly phrased. Even if the accompaniment seemed undisturbed from its concentration on sheer tonal lustre and virtuosity, it was impossible not to be carried away by Stern's performance. J. W.

MUSIC BY BRASS ENSEMBLE

FOUR-CENTURY SPAN

A single insuperable difficulty keeps concerts for brass instruments only mercifully rare—the choice of a programme. The concert given by the Brass Ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Freemasons' Hall followed what is in fact almost the only possible pattern—the 16th century Venetian succeeded immediately by the "silly symphonists" of the 1920s and their subsequent imitators.

Giovanni Gabrieli and Bonelli showed the players' impeccably smooth tone, the admirable chording of the ensemble and the neat balancing of the two antiphonal choruses. The silliness of Poulenc's trio has at least a period flavour. But suites by the Americans Sanders and Berezowsky followed the formula with little to distinguish them individually. M. C.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Daily Telegraph, London
30 AUG 1956

Edinburgh Festival

SUPERB BRAHMS UNDER MONTEUX

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

The high point of a superb concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux at the Usher Hall last night was the towering account of Brahms's third symphony.

Slow tempos, with music held in a strong but by no means unrelenting grip, were contributory to the impact. But they did not wholly explain the deep, memorable satisfaction of the performance.

Though Monteux maintained the drive and tension magnificently, his spacious, tender handling showed a sympathetic awareness of the quality implied in the constant leaning towards flat keys.

Robert Casadesus was excellent in César Franck's Symphonic Variations. He was undaunted by the ferocious difficulties of technique and touch in Ravel's left hand piano concerto.

An unnecessary, impoverished festival overture by Isadore Freed and a brassy account of Strauss's unsatisfactorily constructed "Rosenkavalier" suite framed the concert unworthily.

MYRA HESS RECITAL

Beethoven Sonatas

New names crowd the Edinburgh Festival programme, but the public regard for the constant and the well-loved was shown by the size of the audience for Myra Hess's Beethoven recital at the Freemasons' Hall yesterday morning.

A few mishaps did not detract from her strongly coloured playing of the D major sonata, Op. 10, No. 3. She invested the introspective Largo with a noble melancholy and reproduced vividly the cheerful gestures and squall-like rages of the rondo.

After a charming apology for nervousness—not a little reassuring in a veteran artist—she delivered a performance of the Appassionata sonata that caught her up in its own forceful progress to the extent, unfortunately, of causing her fingers to smother the pounding rhythm of the climactic coda. J. W.

EDINBURGH ROUND-UP

Rainy Season in Scotland No Obstacle To the Boston Symphony's Success

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS

EDINBURGH.

EDINBURGH'S tenth international festival, the opening of which was graced by the presence of Queen Elizabeth, has proved its most successful, artistically and financially. It also has been its wettest.

"Best sellers" this year have included the five concerts by the Boston Symphony, the season by the Sadler's Wells Ballet (all Britain is ballet-drunk these days) and the performances of "The Magic Flute" by the Hamburg State Opera.

The Boston Symphony has lifted critics and public to a plane of reckless rapture. "Never heard anything like it" has been a common remark after each concert as we fought for our umbrellas, mackintoshes and overshoes before plunging once more into the blinding rains.

More than one critic pronounced it to be the finest orchestra in existence, and most agreed that it played better than the New York Philharmonic-Symphony last year. The Manchester Guardian even mentioned several other world-famous orchestras and proceeded to demonstrate how superior the Boston was, and why.

Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux offered us a provocative contrast in conducting. Munch, we felt, was very much the showman, demonstrating the virtuosity of a magnificent creation. "Come, challenge us," he seemed to say. "Ask for the impossible and see how easily we perform it."

Monteux, on the other hand, adopted a style less exciting and seemed more deeply concerned with the spirit and marrow of the music itself, following tradition where tradition was right even if, by doing so, he gave us no surprises. Adverse criticism was aimed chiefly at the brass. "They ough to listen to some of Britain's crack brass bands," said a Scottish conductor to me.

The Hamburg State Opera has been handicapped by the British audience's obstinacy in liking what it knows and avoiding what it doesn't. Hence, full houses for "The Magic Flute," but only moderate attendances at Cornelius' "The Barber of Baghdad" and Stravinsky's "Oedipus" and "Mavra."

But the blame is not entirely the audience's. Even with embarrassingly long intervals, the Cornelius and Stravinsky performances could not be stretched till much later than 9 o'clock; and the Briton—particularly the North Briton—likes a full evening's value for his money. Also, these works lack the universality of really great opera.

Sir Thomas Beecham conducted the orchestra in a week of concerts, his programs including an overture "Edinburgh," specially written for the tenth festival by Sir Arthur Bliss, Master of the Queen's Musick, and conducted by the composer. It is a lively work in true festival spirit.

The Scottish National Orchestra, the B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain and the Vienna Hofmusikkapelle also gave concerts, and each day—often twice a day—there were instrumental and vocal recitals in the Freemasons' Hall.

Bach Series

Outstanding among these were the Bach recitals by Rosalyn Tureck. Here was music delivered with a full heart and a clear head. Wisely she did not attempt to make the modern piano sound like a harpsichord but reveled in its full tone to give ever-increasing point and power to Bach's intricate patterns.

The present fanatical cult for Mozart in Britain (it was Handel in the nineteenth century) has caused Bach to recede slightly in our minds. Recitals like this, full of obvious affection as well as scholarship, may help to bring him nearer to us again.

Two events bothered native critics: "The Miraculous Mandarin," a ballet danced by the Sadler's Wells Company to music by Béla Bartók, and telling an "obscene and disgusting" story of an underworld in which prostitutes decoyed men to their deaths; and the After Dinner Opera Company from America presenting Meyer Kupferman's "In a Garden," Mark Bucci's "Sweet Betsy from Pike" and Theodore Chanler's "The Pot of Fat."

Some rather rude remarks were made about these operas and their performers. "The Pot of Fat," telling of the marriage of a cat and mouse, was received more cordially than the other two, but it was the general opinion that such works failed to flourish when transplanted outside America.

These, however, were spots on the sun—or perhaps, recalling the weather, it would be fitter to call them unusually murky raincloud. In nearly all other respects this festival was a splendid crown to ten years of achievement.

H ROUND-UP

Scotland No Obstacle . Symphony's Success

HEN WILLIAMS

"They ough to listen to some of Britain's crack brass bands," said a Scottish conductor to me.

The Hamburg State Opera has been handicapped by the British audience's obstinacy in liking what it knows and avoiding what it doesn't. Hence, full houses for "The Magic Flute," but only moderate attendances at Cornelius' "The Barber of Baghdad" and Stravinsky's "Oedipus" and "Mavra."

But the blame is not entirely the audience's. Even with embarrassingly long intervals, the Cornelius and Stravinsky performances could not be stretched till much later than 9 o'clock; and the Briton—particularly the North Briton—likes a full evening's value for his money. Also, these works lack the universality of really great opera.

Sir Thomas Beecham conduct- chestra in a week of concerts, his programs including an overture "Edinburgh," specially written for the tenth festival by Sir Arthur Bliss, Master of the Queen's Musick, and conducted by the composer. It is a lively work in true festival spirit.

The Scottish National Orchestra, the B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain and the Vienna Hofmusikkapelle also gave concerts, and each day—often twice a day—there were instrumental and vocal recitals in the Freemasons' Hall.

Bach Series

Outstanding among these were the Bach recitals by Rosalyn Tureck. Here was music delivered with a full heart and a clear head. Wisely she did not attempt to make the modern piano sound like a harpsichord but reveled in its full tone to give ever-increasing point and power to Bach's intricate patterns.

The present fanatical cult for Mozart in Britain (it was Handel in the nineteenth century) has caused Bach to recede slightly in our minds. Recitals like this, full of obvious affection as well as scholarship, may help to bring him nearer to us again.

Two events bothered native critics: "The Miraculous Mandarin," a ballet danced by the Sadler's Wells Company to music by Béla Bartók, and telling an "obscene and disgusting" story of an underworld in which prostitutes decoyed men to their deaths; and the After Dinner Opera Company from America presenting Meyer Kupferman's "In a Garden," Mark Bucci's "Sweet Betsy from Pike" and Theodore Chanler's "The Pot of Fat."

Some rather rude remarks were made about these operas and their performers. "The Pot of Fat," telling of the marriage of a cat and mouse, was received more cordially than the other two, but it was the general opinion that such works failed to flourish when transplanted outside America.

These, however, were spots on the sun—or perhaps, recalling the weather, it would be fitter to call them unusually murky cinclouds. In nearly all other respects this festival was a splendid crown to ten years of achievement.

A Brilliant Left Hand

The astonishing results that can be achieved on the piano with the left hand alone were demonstrated by Casadesus last night, at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, when, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux, he gave a brilliant account of Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand.

Part of a double bill, it followed an enjoyingly vigorous and unsentimental performance of Franck's Symphonic Variations.

Of the purely orchestral items, the "Festival Overture" of American professor-composer Isidore Freed was neither better nor worse than the average run of pieces which set out to be pompously, self-consciously ceremonial.

There was a spacious dignity about Monteux's reading of Brahm's Symphony No. 3, although a tendency to favour over-leisurely paces resulted in the dignity descending to slugginess.

M. L.

plan Ther under and r certain prepari their n
M of J said coul be p
and them
"Firr ships v accoun already
And, c would arrange
One launch senger fitted Clyd anothe ment these a

RONIUS

When it was suggested that his style of conducting was undemonstrative, Mr Monteux replied that he was one of the old school. "Strauss hardly moved and he gave some good performances. After all," he concluded with a twinkle, "the conductor should conduct the orchestra, not the audience."

Mrs Olga Koussevitsky—the second Mrs Koussevitsky—told us yesterday how her late husband, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor for 25 years of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came to create the Koussevitsky Music Foundation, which is doing so much to sponsor composition of music all over the world.

He instituted the Foundation in memory of his first wife Natalie, who died in 1942, said Mrs Koussevitsky, adding that she was herself a niece of Natalie. In 1949 he created a second endowment in the Library of Congress and the two funds now co-operated, producing an annual income of around 4000 dollars for commissioning new works.

NOT A KOPEK

Mrs Koussevitsky disclosed that when Serge was a young man in St Petersburg, he wrote a piece called "Andante Cantabile," which a publisher accepted. For that composition, which is still played from time to time, neither Serge Koussevitsky nor any of his relatives received one kopek.

That made him want to do something to protect composers. Several years later he was able to make a start by founding a publishing house in Berlin which protected Russian composers who were not covered by the Berne convention.

After the war Serge Koussevitsky made his reputation and fortune in the United States. From 1924 to 1949 he was the principal conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is playing to enraptured audiences in Edinburgh this week. Among the first works which his foundation assisted was the opera "Peter Grimes" by the English composer, Benjamin Britten.

Mr Koussevitsky emphasised that commissioning new works was not in itself a complete service to composers. It was essential also that the works be performed and recorded so that they could become known.

This is one service to new composers which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is performing admirably. In every concert of the present tour they are including a contemporary American item.

How they are succeeding in "popularising" new music was revealed by Mr Henry Cabot, president of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who accompanied Mrs Koussevitsky. Several of the pieces they commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary in 1931 are now established in the orchestral repertoire of the world, for example, works by Bartok, Honegger, and Prokofiev.

FESTIVAL BACKSTAGE

THERE IS A GOOD REASON FOR THAT BOSTON 'BAN'

WHY have the Boston Symphony Orchestra banned members of the public from their rehearsals? Their veteran conductor, Pierre Monteux, gives a very good reason—"You invite people into your dining-room, not into your kitchen."

It has been the custom hitherto at the Edinburgh Festival for visiting symphony orchestras at their morning rehearsals in the Usher Hall to admit, by special invitation, a certain number of "outsiders," comprising, in the main, music critics and friends. This year, however, the "Boston" have set a new fashion by rehearsing in strict privacy, a departure which has caused not a little disappointment on the part of students of musical techniques.

Maestro Monteux explained yesterday that this has been a practice on the part of the orchestra for a number of years now. He recalled an experience of his own in Paris, when he was rehearsing before members of the public. An uninformed visitor was later heard to criticise him, and his musicians, for a certain amount of "raggedness" and a great deal of repetition in certain passages. A rehearsal audience, too, could be a source of embarrassment to the conductor and to those under his baton for, in order to gain perfection, it might be frequently necessary for the maestro to take to task not only, say, the brass or string section, but individual musicians who had not fully grasped the interpretation of their score.

★

THE rehearsals ban, one must point out, is not altogether a complete one. While "at home" in the United States, an "open" rehearsal is held every month. These are arranged specially for music students, who are admitted at a greatly reduced fee to give them an opportunity of hearing really good music which would otherwise be beyond the capacity of their pockets. The proceeds of such rehearsals are devoted to the Boston members' pensions fund. According to M. Monteux, the musicians participating in the scheme enjoy greater social security than any other group of musicians in the world. On retirement they are entitled to 2500 dollars a year—half of their normal salary.

M. Monteux is a mere 81 years of age, and he is a man possessing not only a homely sense of humour but a sprightliness which belies his years. He has the reputation of being a conductor who controls his musicians with the minimum of movement or gesture. Asked to comment on this, he replied, with a merry twinkle in his eye: "After all, you are conducting an orchestra not an audience!"

CONDUCT

Pierre Monteux, conductor emeritus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who, despite his 81 years, wields the baton at many of the orchestra's 75th anniversary performances, is one of the youngest-looking octogenarians I have seen. Diminutive, tubby, and profoundly cheerful, he has a full head of black hair than would be the envy of many a man of 30.

When he faced his audience at the Festival Press Bureau yesterday he warned them they should not expect too much. "It is very difficult for me to speak in English because I don't speak it very well," he said. "And so early in the morning my mind is still asleep."

It was suggested that he might prefer to talk sitting down. Mr Monteux shrugged and smiled amiably, replying "Already when I stand up I am not very much, but when I sit down you will not see anything."

Audiences at the Festival, he thought, were wonderfully appreciative. "Generally the first performance goes a little down: that is not so here." Asked if he could sense the reaction of an audience while he was conducting, he replied that when the soft passages were played the stillness of the audience was a sure indication of how they were taking it.

BEAUTIFUL ACOUSTICS

The acoustics of the Usher Hall he described as "very beautiful," but difficult for rehearsals. "It was the same in Boston, but I had a curtain put across the middle of the hall; because otherwise the music goes 'wah, wah, wah, wah'" (indicating with his hands the reverberations of sound.) In some empty halls the echoes were so bad that it was almost impossible to rehearse.

During the present tour he will be conducting in Moscow, a city he has not visited since 1928. Then, he recalled, he conducted the orchestra of the Conservatoire—a memorable occasion. "They were all fighting among themselves, and I had to turn my back and say, 'When you have finished fighting I will go on with the rehearsal.' It was a terribly undisciplined orchestra, but they played very well."

Page 4—Edinburgh Evening News, Thursday, August 30, 1956

Evening News
An Independent Newspaper
THURSDAY, August 30, 1956

icultural Society's three-day aut
Lady Banks, the Lady Provost,

CASADESUS THE MASTER —EVEN WITH ONE HAND

The Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night belonged to Robert Casadesus, the French pianist, who conquered orchestra and audience alike with his playing in Franck's Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra and in Ravel's Concerto for Piano (Left Hand) and Orchestra.

He gave superb performances in both works, tender and lyrical in the Franck, crisp and scintillating in the Ravel. In particular, the cadenza in the Ravel was unsurpassable.

For once, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Pierre Monteux, did not quite achieve the faultless unity that one has come to expect from their earlier concerts.

Because of their rarity, the occasional dubious notes from the horns and the one or two uncertain entries struck home with all the greater emphasis.

The performance of Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F major, however, rose above such faults. Here the orchestra demonstrated its rich string tones, its mellow brass, and its delicate touch in the pianissimo passages, with Mr Monteux achieving a dynamic beat that drove the music along with all the irresistible force of retribution in a Greek tragedy.

The programme opened with the evening's American work, the Festival Overture by Isadore Freed, making ingenious use of a trumpet fanfare to set its mood, and closed with the Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier," by Strauss.

The Glasgow Herald August 30, 1956.

The sun rises to-day at 6.16 a.m. and sets at 8.18 p.m. The moon rose yesterday at 11.20 p.m. and sets to-day at 4.41 p.m.

LIGHTING-UP PERIOD FOR VEHICLES
9.18 p.m.-5.18 a.m.
HIGH WATER AT

GLASGOW	7.07 a.m.	7.17 p.m.
GREENOCK	6.43 a.m.	7.03 p.m.

USHER HALL CONCERT

Casadesus Excels

THE American work (there is one on each of the programmes which the Boston Symphony Orchestra are giving in the Usher Hall) came first in last night's concert. It was a Festival Overture by Isadore Freed, who studied both in America and Paris and numbers symphonies, operas, and chamber music among his compositions. His Festival Overture uses in plenty the paraphernalia of the festive occasion (the trumpets and side drums) and is a closely enough knit little work, but, at least in last night's performance, it seemed to be lacking in the festival spirit and indeed sounded conscientious rather than spirited.

Eve's Circle

A HUNDRED men and a girl—well almost. Principal flautist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, would qualify for this title if it were not for her friend, harpist Olivia Luetcke, being there as the score demands to keep her company on the platform among all those men.

Her unusual Christian names are family ones, and occasionally lead to misunderstandings in correspondence and over the phone.

She is holding down a tough job in a highly competitive, male orchestral world. Four years now with the orchestra, she likes her job immensely. This is her first time overseas with the Boston.

She studied the flute in Chicago (she was born near there), Philadelphia and Rochester, New York, under famous teachers like Liegl, Kincaid (of Scots descent) and Mariano.

As a youngster, she was in Edinburgh just before the war and remembers also a lovely time she had in Ullapool and near Loch Maree.

"Edinburgh people are so friendly and very, very helpful," she told me. "I don't remember the flowers before, but do tell the people responsible for the city's floral displays that they are worth all the effort. They are lovely."

★

her hair.

LIGHT BROWN

I HASTEN to correct the optical illusion under which I referred to MME. OLGA KOUSSEVITZKY'S hair as white.

When I first met her, at an evening reception, she was wearing a semi-transparent headdress. Yesterday it was a chic little cocktail hat, perched on light-brown hair, and she looked rather younger than on the previous occasion.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY'S widow told me she had known her late husband for 41 years before they married, in America. They first met in Paris.

A Brilliant Left Hand

The astonishing results that can be achieved on the piano with the left hand alone were demonstrated by Casadesus last night, at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, when, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux, he gave a brilliant account of Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand.

Part of a double bill, it followed an enjoyingly vigorous and unsentimental performance of Franck's Symphonic Variations.

Of the purely orchestral items, the "Festival Overture" of American professor-composer Isidore Freed was neither better nor worse than the average run of pieces which set out to be pompously, self-consciously ceremonial.

There was a spacious dignity about Monteux's reading of Brahm's Symphony No. 3, although a tendency to favour over-leisurely paces resulted in the dignity descending to slugginess.

M. L.

FESTIVAL BACKSTAGE

THERE IS A GOOD REASON FOR THAT BOSTON 'BAN'

WHY have the Boston Symphony Orchestra banned members of the public from their rehearsals? Their veteran conductor, Pierre Monteux, gives a very good reason—"You invite people into your dining-room, not into your kitchen."

It has been the custom hitherto at the Edinburgh Festival for visiting symphony orchestras at their morning rehearsals in the Usher Hall to admit, by special invitation, a certain number of "outsiders," comprising, in the main, music critics and friends. This year, however, the "Boston" have yet a new fashion by rehearsing in strict privacy, a departure which has caused not a little disappointment on the part of students of musical techniques.

Maestro Monteux explained yesterday that this has been a practice on the part of the orchestra for a number of years now. He recalled an experience of his own in Paris, when he was rehearsing before members of the public. An uninformed visitor was later heard to criticise him, and his musicians, for a certain amount of "raggedness" and a great deal of repetition in certain passages. A rehearsal audience, too, could be a source of embarrassment to the conductor and to those under his baton for, in order to gain perfection, it might be frequently necessary for the maestro to take to task not only, say, the brass or string section, but individual musicians who had not fully grasped the interpretation of their score.

★

THE rehearsals ban, one must point out, is not altogether a complete one. While "at home" in the United States, an "open" rehearsal is held every month. These are arranged specially for music students, who are admitted at a greatly reduced fee to give them an opportunity of hearing really good music which would otherwise be beyond the capacity of their pockets. The proceeds of such rehearsals are devoted to the Boston members' pensions fund. According to M. Monteux, the musicians participating in the scheme enjoy greater social security than any other group of musicians in the world. On retirement they are entitled to 2500 dollars a year—half of their normal salary.

M. Monteux is a mere 81 years of age, and he is a man possessing not only a homely sense of humour but a sprightliness which belies his years. He has the reputation of being a conductor who controls his musicians with the minimum of movement or gesture. Asked to comment on this, he replied, with a merry twinkle in his eye: "After all, you are conducting an orchestra, not an audience!"

not merely ink, but pitch

CONDUCTOR EMERITUS

Pierre Monteux, "conductor emeritus" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who, despite his 81 years, wields the baton at many of the orchestra's 75th anniversary performances, is one of the youngest-looking octogenarians I have seen. Diminutive, tubby, and profoundly cheerful, he has a full head of black hair than would be the envy of many a man of 30.

When he faced his audience at the Festival Press Bureau yesterday he warned them they should not expect too much. "It is very difficult for me to speak in English because I don't speak it very well," he said. "And so early in the morning my mind is still asleep."

It was suggested that he might prefer to talk sitting down. Mr Monteux shrugged and smiled amiably, replying "Already when I stand up I am not very much, but when I sit down you will not see anything."

Audiences at the Festival, he thought, were wonderfully appreciative. "Generally the first performance goes a little down: that is not so here." Asked if he could sense the reaction of an audience while he was conducting, he replied that when the soft passages were played the stillness of the audience was a sure indication of how they were taking it.

BEAUTIFUL ACOUSTICS

The acoustics of the Usher Hall he described as "very beautiful," but difficult for rehearsals. "It was the same in Boston, but I had a curtain put across the middle of the hall; because otherwise the music goes 'wah, wah, wah, wah'" (indicating with his hands the reverberations of sound.) In some empty halls the echoes were so bad that it was almost impossible to rehearse.

During the present tour he will be conducting in Moscow, a city he has not visited since 1928. Then, he recalled, he conducted the orchestra of the Conservatoire—a memorable occasion. "They were all fighting among themselves, and I had to turn my back and say, 'When you have finished fighting I will go on with the rehearsal.' It was a terribly undisciplined orchestra, but they played very well."

H ROUND-UP

Scotland No Obstacle Symphony's Success

HEN WILLIAMS

"They ough to listen to some of Britain's crack brass bands," said a Scottish conductor to me.

The Hamburg State Opera has been handicapped by the British audience's obstinacy in liking what it knows and avoiding what it doesn't. Hence, full houses for "The Magic Flute," but only moderate attendances at Cornelius' "The Barber of Baghdad" and Stravinsky's "Oedipus" and "Mavra."

But the blame is not entirely the audience's. Even with embarrassingly long intervals, the Cornelius and Stravinsky performances could not be stretched till much later than 9 o'clock; and the Briton—particularly the North Briton—likes a full evening's value for his money. Also, these works lack the universality of really great opera.

Sir Thomas Beecham conductchestra in a week of concerts, his programs including an overture "Edinburgh," specially written for the tenth festival by Sir Arthur Bliss, Master of the Queen's Musick, and conducted by the composer. It is a lively work in true festival spirit.

The Scottish National Orchestra, the B. B. C. Scottish Orchestra, the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain and the Vienna Hofmusikkapelle also gave concerts, and each day—often twice a day—there were instrumental and vocal recitals in the Freemasons' Hal

Bach Series

Outstanding among these were the Bach recitals by Rosalyn Tureck. Here was music delivered with a full heart and a clear head. Wisely she did not attempt to make the modern piano sound like a harpsichord but reveled in its full tone to give ever-increasing point and power to Bach's intricate patterns.

The present fanatical cult for Mozart in Britain (it was Handel in the nineteenth century) has caused Bach to recede slightly in our minds. Recitals like this, full of obvious affection as well as scholarship, may help to bring him nearer to us again.

Two events bothered native critics: "The Miraculous Mandarin," a ballet danced by the Sadler's Wells Company to music by Béla Bartók, and telling an "obscene and disgusting" story of an underworld in which prostitutes decoyed men to their deaths; and the After Dinner Opera Company from America presenting Meyer Kupferman's "In a Garden," Mark Bucci's "Sweet Betsy from Pike" and Theodore Chanler's "The Pot of Fat."

Some rather rude remarks were made about these operas and their performers. "The Pot of Fat," telling of the marriage of a cat and mouse, was received more cordially than the other two, but it was the general opinion that such works failed to flourish when transplanted outside America.

These, however, were spots on the sun—or perhaps, recalling the weather, it would be fitter to call them unusually murky rainclouds. In nearly all other respects this festival was a splendid crown to ten years of achievement.

RONIUS

When it was suggested that his style of conducting was undemonstrative, Mr Monteux replied that he was one of the old school. "Strauss hardly moved and he gave some good performances. After all," he concluded with a twinkle, "the conductor should conduct the orchestra, not the audience."

Mrs Olga Koussevitsky—the second Mrs Koussevitsky—told us yesterday how her late husband, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor for 25 years of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came to create the Koussevitsky Music Foundation, which is doing so much to sponsor composition of music all over the world.

He instituted the Foundation in memory of his first wife Natalie, who died in 1942, said Mrs Koussevitsky, adding that she was herself a niece of Natalie. In 1949 he created a second endowment in the Library of Congress and the two funds now co-operated, producing an annual income of around 4000 dollars for commissioning new works.

NOT A KOPEK

Mrs Koussevitsky disclosed that when Serge was a young man in St Petersburg, he wrote a piece called "Andante Cantabile," which a publisher accepted. For that composition, which is still played from time to time, neither Serge Koussevitsky nor any of his relatives received one kopek.

That made him want to do something to protect composers. Several years later he was able to make a start by founding a publishing house in Berlin which protected Russian composers who were not covered by the Berne convention.

After the war Serge Koussevitsky made his reputation and fortune in the United States. From 1924 to 1949 he was the principal conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is playing to enraptured audiences in Edinburgh this week. Among the first works which his foundation assisted was the opera "Peter Grimes" by the English composer, Benjamin Britten.

Mr Koussevitsky emphasised that commissioning new works was not in itself a complete service to composers. It was essential also that the works be performed and recorded so that they could become known.

This is one service to new composers which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is performing admirably. In every concert of the present tour they are including a contemporary American item.

How they are succeeding in "popularising" new music was revealed by Mr Henry Cabot, president of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who accompanied Mrs Koussevitsky. Several of the pieces they commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary in 1931 are now established in the orchestral repertoire of the world, for example, works by Bartok, Honegger, and Prokofiev.

GA ST 30, 1956. DUTH AFRICA

, AUGUST 30, 1956.

Page 4—Edinburgh Evening News, Thursday, August 30, 1956

Evening News
An Independent Newspaper
THURSDAY, August 30, 1956

icultural Society's three-day aut
Lady Banks, the Lady Provost,

CASADESUS THE MASTER —EVEN WITH ONE HAND

The Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night belonged to Robert Casadesus, the French pianist, who conquered orchestra and audience alike with his playing in Franck's Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra and in Ravel's Concerto for Piano (Left Hand) and Orchestra.

He gave superb performances in both works, tender and lyrical in the Franck, crisp and scintillating in the Ravel. In particular, the cadenza in the Ravel was unsurpassable.

For once, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Pierre Monteux, did not quite achieve the faultless unity that one has come to expect from their earlier concerts.

Because of their rarity, the occasional dubious notes from the horns and the one or two uncertain entries struck home with all the greater emphasis.

The performance of Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F major, however, rose above such faults. Here the orchestra demonstrated its rich string tones, its mellow brass, and its delicate touch in the pianissimo passages, with Mr Monteux achieving a dynamic beat that drove the music along with all the irresistible force of retribution in a Greek tragedy.

The programme opened with the evening's American work, the Festival Overture by Isadore Freed, making ingenious use of a trumpet fanfare to set its mood, and closed with the Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier," by Strauss.

The Glasgow Herald August 30, 1956.

The sun rises to-day at 6.16 a.m. and sets at 8.18 p.m. The moon rose yesterday at 11.20 p.m. and sets to-day at 4.41 p.m.

LIGHTING-UP PERIOD FOR VEHICLES
9.18 p.m.-5.18 a.m.
HIGH WATER AT

GLASGOW	7.07 a.m.	7.17 p.m.
GREENOCK	6.43 a.m.	7.03 p.m.

USHER HALL CONCERT

Casadesus Excels

THE American work (there is one on each of the programmes which the Boston Symphony Orchestra are giving in the Usher Hall) came first in last night's concert. It was a Festival Overture by Isadore Freed, who studied both in America and Paris and numbers symphonies, operas, and chamber music among his compositions. His Festival Overture uses in plenty the paraphernalia of the festive occasion (the trumpets and side drums) and is a closely enough knit little work, but, at least in last night's performance, it seemed to be lacking in the festival spirit and indeed sounded conscientious rather than spirited.

Eve's Circle

A HUNDRED men and a girl—well almost. Principal flautist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, would qualify for this title if it were not for her friend, harpist Olivia Luetcke, being there as the score demands to keep her company on the platform among all those men.

Her unusual Christian names are family ones, and occasionally lead to misunderstandings in correspondence and over the phone.

She is holding down a tough job in a highly competitive, male orchestral world. Four years now with the orchestra, she likes her job immensely. This is her first time overseas with the Boston.

She studied the flute in Chicago (she was born near there), Philadelphia and Rochester, New York, under famous teachers like Liegl, Kincaid (of Scots descent) and Mariano.

As a youngster, she was in Edinburgh just before the war and remembers also a lovely time she had in Ullapool and near Loch Maree.

"Edinburgh people are so friendly and very, very helpful," she told me. "I don't remember the flowers before, but do tell the people responsible for the city's floral displays that they are worth all the effort. They are lovely."

★

her hair.

LIGHT BROWN

I HASTEN to correct the optical illusion under which I referred to MME. OLGA KOUSSEVITZKY'S hair as white.

When I first met her, at an evening reception, she was wearing a semi-transparent headdress. Yesterday it was a chic little cocktail hat, perched on light-brown hair, and she looked rather younger than on the previous occasion.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY'S widow told me she had known her late husband for 41 years before they married, in America. They first met in Paris.

[72]

EVENING DISPATCH, Friday, August 31, 1956

The Scotsman - Aug 30 '56

FESTIVAL NOTES

A BACK-ROOM BOY SETS THE PITCH

By PETRONIUS

Even a Festival has its back-room boys—those people upon whom the spotlight never rests, for the simple reason that they are behind the scenes, ensuring the show's success. One of them, for example, is Mr C. Charlton, the representative of Steinway & Sons, who guards the two Steinway pianos (one in the Usher Hall and the other in the Freemasons' Hall) as a custodian guards crown jewels. Indeed, his job is more difficult; for no one ever suggests altering the facets of crown jewels, but many people suggest altering the pitch of the Festival pianos, and that is a thing which Mr Charlton, quite rightly, will not allow.

I am no expert, and although I knew that two pianos are brought to Edinburgh specially for the Festival, I didn't know that a Keeper of the Festival Pianos (for I feel that I can call him by no lower title) came with them. I had a talk with Mr Charlton yesterday, and I gather that the pitch of the pianos, the inviolability of which he is here to maintain, has often been threatened.

Madam Koussevitsky chatting with Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Press Bureau.

This question of piano pitch, of course, is only of interest to persons with trained ears. But anyone who read the letters to the Editor in yesterday's issue of "The Scotsman" will be aware that such persons exist; for there was a short note in our columns yesterday from an inquirer who wanted to know if Beethoven would have approved of the pitch of the piano upon which Dame Myra Hess played his three sonatas in the Usher Hall last Sunday afternoon. It was really because of that letter that a friend very kindly put me in touch with Mr Charlton and thereby opened to me a world of conflict.

THE TRUTH ABOUT PITCH

I have heard Sir Thomas Beecham say that all Festivals are bunk, and I now know that the idea that everything is harmonious in the world of music (even if you eliminate all contemporary compositions) is also bunk. The sad truth is that there is a divergence of opinion about this thing called pitch.

You and I have heard about "concert pitch," innocently thinking it was something upon which everybody was agreed. From Mr Charlton I learned the truth. As far as Beethoven is concerned, I gather that his piano compositions ceased to be played on instruments tuned to the pitch of Beethoven's day at least 60 years ago. Had Beethoven been able to return to earth as a young man this might have pained him: had he returned to earth as he was when, in middle age, he left it, the alteration would have been unnoticed by his poor deaf ears. But I rather suspect that even experts might argue that the alteration of the piano's pitch from about C 512 in Beethoven's time to C 523⅓ to-day is a thing that need not alter the acceptability of the sonatas at all—and would not even be noticed by many musically-minded people

These hieroglyphics, I freely confess, are new to me, and I hope I have their numbers right. They mean the number of vibrations per second which produce the note one octave above middle C. The pitch (and, of course, the number of vibrations) was raised about 1896, and again in the early 'twenties, since when British Standard Pitch has remained unchanged at C 523⅓.

But let it not be imagined that all is sweet agreement. Far from it. There are something like ten pitches, and Mr Charlton goes about with tuning forks tuned to about five of them. The Royal Society of Arts, Kneller Hall, the Americans, the French—all have higher pitches than British Standard Pitch.

From time to time American or Continental orchestras coming to the Edinburgh Festival have wanted Mr Charlton to tune his piano to their pitch. But a piano takes a long time to settle in to a new pitch, and rather than subject his Steinways to such an unsettled life, Mr Charlton puts his foot firmly down and insists upon the instruments of the orchestra being brought down to the piano's pitch—this being quite easy, except for the oboe, which can't be altered. At least once, if not much oftener, the fact that the oboe was tuned to a different pitch from the rest of the orchestra wasn't noticed —or at any rate wasn't commented upon —by anybody.

So you see, in musical matters, the Mountain does really come to Mahomet, when Mahomet's name is Charlton. And meanwhile, my hands have touched, not merely ink, but pitch.

CONDUCTOR EMERITUS

Pierre Monteux, "conductor emeritus" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who, despite his 81 years, wields the baton at many of the orchestra's 75th anniversary performances, is one of the youngest-looking octogenarians I have seen. Diminutive, tubby, and profoundly cheerful, he has a full head of black hair than would be the envy of many a man of 30.

When he faced his audience at the Festival Press Bureau yesterday he warned them they should not expect too much. "It is very difficult for me to speak in English because I don't speak it very well," he said. "And so early in the morning my mind is still asleep."

It was suggested that he might prefer to talk sitting down. Mr Monteux shrugged and smiled amiably, replying "Already when I stand up I am not very much, but when I sit down you will not see anything."

Audiences at the Festival, he thought, were wonderfully appreciative. "Generally the first performance goes a little down: that is not so here." Asked if he could sense the reaction of an audience while he was conducting, he replied that when the soft passages were played the stillness of the audience was a sure indication of how they were taking it.

BEAUTIFUL ACOUSTICS

The acoustics of the Usher Hall he described as "very beautiful," but difficult for rehearsals. "It was the same in Boston, but I had a curtain put across the middle of the hall; because otherwise the music goes 'wah, wah, wah, wah'" (indicating with his hands the reverberations of sound.) In some empty halls the echoes were so bad that it was almost impossible to rehearse.

During the present tour he will be conducting in Moscow, a city he has not visited since 1928. Then, he recalled, he conducted the orchestra of the Conservatoire—a memorable occasion. "They were all fighting among themselves, and I had to turn my back and say, 'When you have finished fighting I will go on with the rehearsal.' It was a terribly undisciplined orchestra, but they played very well."

When it was suggested that his style of conducting was undemonstrative, Mr Monteux replied that he was one of the old school. "Strauss hardly moved and he gave some good performances. After all," he concluded with a twinkle, "the conductor should conduct the orchestra, not the audience."

Mrs Olga Koussevitsky—the second Mrs Koussevitsky—told us yesterday how her late husband, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor for 25 years of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came to create the Koussevitsky Music Foundation, which is doing so much to sponsor composition of music all over the world.

He instituted the Foundation in memory of his first wife Natalie, who died in 1942, said Mrs Koussevitsky, adding that she was herself a niece of Natalie. In 1949 he created a second endowment in the Library of Congress, and the two funds now co-operated, producing an annual income of around 4000 dollars for commissioning new works.

NOT A KOPEK

Mrs Koussevitsky disclosed that when Serge was a young man in St Petersburg, he wrote a piece called "Andante Cantabile," which a publisher accepted. For that composition, which is still played from time to time, neither Serge Koussevitsky nor any of his relatives received one kopek.

That made him want to do something to protect composers. Several years later he was able to make a start by founding a publishing house in Berlin, which protected Russian composers who were not covered by the Berne convention.

After the war Serge Koussevitsky made his reputation and fortune in the United States. From 1924 to 1949 he was the principal conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is playing to enraptured audiences in Edinburgh this week. Among the first works which his foundation assisted was the opera "Peter Grimes" by the English composer, Benjamin Britten.

Mr Koussevitsky emphasised that commissioning new works was not in itself a complete service to composers. It was essential also that the works be performed and recorded so that they could become known.

This is one service to new composers which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is performing admirably. In every concert of the present tour they are including a contemporary American item.

How they are succeeding in "popularising" new music was revealed by Mr Henry Cabot, president of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who accompanied Mrs Koussevitsky. Several of the pieces they commissioned for the orchestra's 50th anniversary in 1931 are now established in the orchestral repertoire of the world, for example, works by Bartok, Honegger, and Prokofiev.

[redacted]

Robert Casadesus

...merican composer, Isadore Freed, which opened the programme.

The overture, based on five themes, is vigorous, vital, full of life. It courses along like a great river which meets and overcomes many obstacles on its way and n to Ravel's Piano Concerto for n a low grumble that gradually it is an insistant protest. Then . . dramatic, indignant.

THE FESTIVA

NCERTO GHLIGHT

absorbes a few trickling tributaries . . . one perhaps from Milk Wood, for it reminded me of "Kiss me, or give me a penny, Gwenny . . ." from Dylan Thomas's masterpiece.

After Freed's overture, which received only moderate applause, although the playing could hardly be faulted, there came Brahms's Symphony No. 3 in F major. This is a great love song; soft, gentle, lyrical, roused to passion; happy, but with a heavy thread of sadness.

The second movement may have been taken too slowly, and the final movement too loudly for the taste of some people; but I enjoyed the Monteux interpretation.

Before the Ravel Concerto, Casadesus gave a delicate rendering of the Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Cesar Franck.

The concert — all interesting, well-balanced fare — ended with the Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier," by Richard Strauss. Here the Boston players mislaid the easy-flowing rhythm one expects from the music of Vienna, though they did well enough where noise, or volume, rather than movement, was the predominant feature.

This brings me to one of two direct criticisms I want to make about a wonderful concert. The first concerns the orchestra — some of the brass was guilty of an occasional harshness. The second concerns members of the audience who flick noisily through scores and miss, I suspect, a lot of the beauty of the music. I wish they would just listen.

C. Y.

SERENE BRAHMS BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Pierre Monteux

The Scotsman Aug 30 '56

The policy of including in each of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts a work by a contemporary American composer is so admirable that one would wish a similar policy adopted everywhere. It does, however, have a minor drawback, for when, as at last night's Usher Hall concert, the overall standard of performance is so high as to be almost irreproachable, the critic is more than likely to pick on something new and relatively unknown, simply for lack of anything else to criticise. In the event, the last work which I would have wished to be omitted from the programme was the "Festival Overture," by Isadore Freed, which prompted these reflections.

It was a work of distinctive and attractive character, with an excellence of musical invention that distinguishes it from the rank and file of American compositions, and an adherence, grateful to the ear, to a recognisable tonality. This should have made possible a more consistent development of the thematic material, but unfortunately, after an arresting start, the composer seemed to have difficulty in bridging the gap before the next tune arrived, resorted to a process well known to examinees as "waffling," and failed to present the work as a unified whole.

The Brahms third symphony is a work poised between the romantic and classic view of life. Pierre Monteux, as one would expect, leaned, in his interpretation, strongly towards the latter. It was not a performance which had me on the edge of my seat, but one that is slowly sinking in, having its effect more as an experience of a seen and understood truth than as an immediately felt emotion. The four movements stand in the memory like monoliths, serene and indestructible.

Amongst the other vivid impressions of this evening of music, and high on the list, comes the playing of Robert Casadesus of the Cesar Franck "Symphonic Variations" and the Ravel concerto for the left hand, both definitive performances of a kind that one is privileged to have heard. One of the most wonderful sounds I have ever heard from a piano (that mundane instrument), a sound that needs a poet to describe it, was evoked in the cadenza of the Ravel concerto, and, indeed, it seems that whatever music he is playing, on whatever piano, the sound that he makes is his own, distinctive, and beautiful.

O. S.

SCOTTISH DAILY MAIL, Thursday, August 30, 1956

★ LAST NIGHT AT THE FESTIVAL ★

Casadesus brings off a fine double

By PERCY CATER

ROBERT CASADESUS, who may almost be called this year's Festival pianist, did a double-turn at the Usher Hall last night. Within a few minutes after playing, as a mere prelude, Franck's Symphonic Variations he was back to show, in Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand, that your virtuoso can do far more with one hand than most of us can do with two.

Ravel wrote the work for Paul Wittgenstein, the Austrian pianist, who lost his right arm in World War I. Since then many able-bodied artists have found it a fascinating piece.

It is of prodigious difficulty. It employs all sorts of ingenuity

TIGHT BINDING

EVENING DISPATCH, Friday, August 31, 1956

English Electric P-1 for R.A.F.

From Our Own Reporter

LONDON, Wednesday

A new version of the English Electric P-1 fighter is removed from the secret list. Designated the P-IB, it is a fully supersonic fighter and a logical successor to the two P-IA reesarch prototypes which have completed several hundred hours' flying in the past two years.

Twenty pre-production P-1s now being built are of this new type and will be powered by two Rolls-Royce Avon jet engines with re-heat. Each will be assigned to proving a particular facet of supersonic flying. One, for example, will deal with radar, another with auto-pilot, and another with armament.

This indicates a new approach to the complex problem of developing advanced aircraft. The Minister of Supply has said that the P-1 will follow the Hunter and Javelin into service with the R.A.F.

An early version of the aircraft is expected to be seen in the air at the Society of British Aircraft Manufacturers' Farnborough show next week.

The P-1 is Britain's first fully supersonic fighter, capable of breaking the sound barrier in level flight or a climb (writes an agency air correspondent.)

With the addition of reheat (a device for boosting thrust by spraying fuel into the incandescent exhaust gases), its speed should be substantially raised.

Sir George Nelson, head of the English Electric Group, has stated that service pilots have found the P-1 pleasant to had a talk with Mr Charlton yesterday, and I gather that the pitch of the pianos, the inviolability of which he is here to maintain, has often been threatened.

Madam Koussevitsky chatting with Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Press Bureau.

This question of piano pitch, of course, is only of interest to persons with trained ears. But anyone who read the letters to the Editor in yesterday's issue of "The Scotsman" will be aware that such persons exist; for there was a short note in our columns yesterday from an inquirer who wanted to know if Beethoven would have approved of the pitch of the piano upon which Dame Myra Hess played his three sonatas in the Usher Hall last Sunday afternoon. It was really because of that letter that a friend very kindly put me in touch with Mr Charlton and thereby opened to me a world of conflict.

THE TRUTH ABOUT PITCH

I have heard Sir Thomas Beecham say that all Festivals are bunk, and I now know that the idea that everything is harmonious in the world of music (even if you eliminate all contemporary compositions) is also bunk. The sad truth is that there is a divergence of opinion about this thing called pitch.

You and I have heard about "concert pitch," innocently thinking it was something upon which everybody was agreed. From Mr Charlton I learned the truth. As far as Beethoven is concerned, I gather that his piano compositions ceased to be played on instruments tuned to the pitch of Beethoven's day at least 60 years ago. Had Beethoven been able to return to earth as a young man this might have pained him: had he returned to earth as he was when, in middle age, he left it, the alteration would have been unnoticed by his poor deaf ears. But I rather suspect that even experts might argue that the alteration of the piano's pitch from about C 512 in Beethoven's time to C 523⅓ to-day is a thing that need not alter the acceptability of the sonatas at all—and would not even be for the protection of French Nationals, to station a contingent of French troops in Cyprus. The British Government had agreed, the statement said.

A Reuter report from Algiers yesterday said that according to usually reliable sources French air units based in Algeria had been moved to Cyprus.

France's largest cruiser, the De Grasse (8000 tons), left Brest last night for Toulon, where she will become flagship of the French Navy's Mediterranean Squadron, according to Reuter.

The liner Pasteur, reported to be bound for Algiers and thence to Cyprus, was still loading at Marseilles last night.

SUPPORT ASKED FOR SUEZ PLAN

Appeal Issued by Mr Eisenhower

WASHINGTON Wednesday.—President Eisenhower issued a statement today asking every country which believed "in international justice and conciliation to support the five-Power plan for the future of the Suez Canal.

The President expressed pleasure at Colonel Nasser's decision to meet the five-nation committee and to hear the proposal for international control of the canal.

Mr Eisenhower said in the statement that it was of great significance that 18 of the 22 countries which attended the conference agreed upon the conditions contained in the five-Power plan.

These countries represented 95 per cent of shipping traffic through the canal, he said. The proposed conditions

So you see, in musical matters, the Mountain does really come to Mahomet, when Mahomet's name is Charlton. And meanwhile, my hands have touched, not merely ink, but pitch.

CONDUCTOR EMERITUS

Pierre Monteux, "conductor emeritus" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who, despite his 81 years, wields the baton at many of the orchestra's 75th anniversary performances, is one of the youngest-looking octogenarians I have seen. Diminutive, tubby, and profoundly cheerful, he has a full head of black hair than would be the envy of many a man of 30.

When he faced his audience at the Festival Press Bureau yesterday he warned them they should not expect too much. "It is very difficult for me to speak in English because I don't speak it very well," he said. "And so early in the morning my mind is still asleep."

It was suggested that he might prefer to talk sitting down. Mr Monteux shrugged and smiled amiably, replying "Already when I stand up I am not very much, but when I sit down you will not see anything."

Audiences at the Festival, he thought, were wonderfully appreciative. "Generally the first performance goes a little down: that is not so here." Asked if he could sense the reaction of an audience while he was conducting, he replied that when the soft passages were played the stillness of the audience was a sure indication of how they were taking it.

BEAUTIFUL ACOUSTICS

The acoustics of the Usher Hall he described as "very beautiful," but difficult for rehearsals. "It was the same in Boston, but I had a curtain put across the middle of the hall; because otherwise the music goes 'wah, wah, wah, wah'" (indicating with his hands the reverberations of sound.) In some empty halls the echoes were so bad that it was almost impossible to rehearse.

During the present tour he will be conducting in Moscow, a city he has not visited since 1928. Then, he recalled, he conducted the orchestra of the Conservatoire—a memorable occasion. "They were all fighting among themselves, and I had to turn my back and say, 'When you have finished fighting I will go on with the rehearsal.' It was a terribly undisciplined orchestra, but they played very well."

EVENING DISPATCH, Thursday, August 30, 1956

THE FESTIVA

ONE-HAND CONCERTO WAS HIGHLIGHT

Close your eyes and listen to Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand. It starts with a low grumble that gradually becomes more articulate until it is an insistant protest. Then comes the entry of the piano . . . dramatic, indignant.

Robert Casadesus

There follows a surge of music full of surprises; sometimes sinister, sometimes mischievous and jazzy. You expect apache dancers, and M. Hulôt arrives on holiday. But, above all, if you have still your eyes closed, you will marvel that such power and range could come from the left hand only.

The concerto was written by Ravel for an Austrian pianist who lost his right hand in the First World War. Played by Robert Casadesus, it was the highlight of the concert given in the Usher Hall last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Pierre Monteux.

M. Monteux, an octogenarian, gave what can best be described as a youthful interpretation of the Festival Overture, by the contemporary American composer, Isadore Freed, which opened the programme.

The overture, based on five themes, is vigorous, vital, full of life. It courses along like a great river which meets and overcomes many obstacles on its way and absorbes a few trickling tributaries . . . one perhaps from Milk Wood, for it reminded me of "Kiss me, or give me a penny, Gwenny . . ." from Dylan Thomas's masterpiece.

After Freed's overture, which received only moderate applause, although the playing could hardly be faulted, there came Brahms's Symphony No. 3 in F major. This is a great love song; soft, gentle, lyrical, roused to passion; happy, but with a heavy thread of sadness.

The second movement may have been taken too slowly, and the final movement too loudly for the taste of some people; but I enjoyed the Monteux interpretation.

Before the Ravel Concerto, Casadesus gave a delicate rendering of the Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Cesar Franck.

The concert — all interesting, well-balanced fare — ended with the Suite from "Der Rosenkavalier," by Richard Strauss. Here the Boston players mislaid the easy-flowing rhythm one expects from the music of Vienna, though they did well enough where noise, or volume, rather than movement, was the predominant feature.

This brings me to one of two direct criticisms I want to make about a wonderful concert. The first concerns the orchestra — some of the brass was guilty of an occasional harshness. The second concerns members of the audience who click noisily through scores and miss, I suspect, a lot of the beauty of the music. I wish they would not listen.

C. Y.

SERENE BRAHMS BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Pierre Monteux

The policy of including in each of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts a work by a contemporary American composer is so admirable that one would wish a similar policy adopted everywhere. It does, however, have a minor drawback, for when, as at last night's Usher Hall concert, the overall standard of performance is so high as to be almost irreproachable, the critic is more than likely to pick on something new and relatively unknown, simply for lack of anything else to criticise. In the event, the last work which I would have wished to be omitted from the programme was the "Festival Overture," by Isadore Freed, which prompted these reflections.

It was a work of distinctive and attractive character, with an excellence of musical invention that distinguishes it from the rank and file of American compositions, and an adherence, grateful to the ear, to a recognisable tonality. This should have made possible a more consistent development of the thematic material, but unfortunately, after an arresting start, the composer seemed to have difficulty in bridging the gap before the next tune arrived, resorted to a process well known to examinees as "waffling," and failed to present the work as a unified whole.

The Brahms third symphony is a work poised between the romantic and classic view of life. Pierre Monteux, as one would expect, leaned, in his interpretation, strongly towards the latter. It was not a performance which had me on the edge of my seat, but one that is slowly sinking in, having its effect more as an experience of a seen and understood truth than as an immediately felt emotion. The four movements stand in the memory like monoliths, serene and indestructible.

Amongst the other vivid impressions of this evening of music, and high on the list, comes the playing of Robert Casadesus of the Cesar Franck "Symphonic Variations" and the Ravel concerto for the left hand, both definitive performances of a kind that one is privileged to have heard. One of the most wonderful sounds I have ever heard from a piano (that mundane instrument), a sound that needs a poet to describe it, was evoked in the cadenza of the Ravel concerto, and, indeed, it seems that whatever music he is playing, on whatever piano, the sound that he makes is his own, distinctive, and beautiful.

O. S.

SCOTTISH DAILY MAIL, Thursday, August 30, 1956

★ LAST NIGHT AT THE FESTIVAL ★

Casadesus brings off a fine double

By PERCY CATER

ROBERT CASADESUS, who may almost be called this year's Festival pianist, did a double-turn at the Usher Hall last night. Within a few minutes after playing, as a mere prelude, Franck's Symphonic Variations he was back to show, in Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand, that your virtuoso can do far more with one hand than most of us can do with two.

Ravel wrote the work for Paul Wittgenstein, the Austrian pianist, who lost his right arm in World War I. Since then many able-bodied artists have found it a fascinating piece.

It is of prodigious difficulty. It employs all sorts of ingenuity

TIGHT BINDING

INFORMATION OBSCURED

SCOTTISH DAILY EXPRESS THURSDAY AUGUST 30 1956

HER ... BLUNDERED'

Meet the people from over the seas . . . and then have a seat in the stalls

THE OLD LADY FROM BOSTON IS A STAR GUEST

MY FESTIVAL DIARY
by OLGA STRINGFELLOW

THOUGHT I'd have a word with some of the ...ival visitors from afar ...d it turned out to be ...even better idea than imagined.

...cause through it, I met ...of the most charming ...I ever hoped to meet ...weet old lady from ... Massachusetts, who ...today.

...name is Mrs. Desmond ...—"my husband used to ...spent half his life spell-...his name to people"—and ...been coming to Scot-...for years.

...is a fine-boned little ...with greying hair, clear ...eyes, and a carriage a ...in would be proud of. ...does not wear glasses; she ...perfect hearing.

...Y ORCHESTRA ... and my life'

...bolt upright in a stiff-...chair, dressed com-...in black with a pretty ...seed-pearl brooch at ...at, she told me:

...ve come over here to ...the Boston Symphony ...a. Since my husband ...was half English, half ...they are my life. I call ...orchestra—I started ...regularly to their sym-...concerts when I was 12 ...old.

...ve often played the ...accompaniment for ...of the orchestra when ...e given solo recitals.

...Colonel Higginson ...he was the man who ...the orchestra 75 years ...was a very wealthy ...he loved music—he ...the orchestra for many ...till he died. He would ...to know what heights ...e reached today."

...they leave here, Mrs. ...will follow—first to ...where she is taking ...Mr. Trenchard Cox, ...of the Victoria and ...Museum, and Mr. ...president of Trinity ...Oxford, to hear "her"

...so proud of my ...you see—I take as many people as I can to it. And afterwards, I'm off to Paris and Chartres, where they are going to play in the Cathedral. It should be a wonderful experience—I should not like to miss it."

And I am sure the orchestra would not like to miss that wonderful little audience of one, whose lifelong admiration for them has carried her half-way around the world.

...And the men are the star players

By NOEL GOODWIN

FRENCH pianist Robert Casadesus brought off a brilliant double feat at a mainly French - American concert in the Usher Hall last night.

As soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Pierre Monteux, he gave a glittering performance of the Symphonic Variations by Cesar Franck which stripped the stale tarnish off the music.

He followed this with Maurice Ravel's Concerto for the left hand alone, originally written to the order of a one-armed pianist, and a more distinguished piece than many two-hand concertors.

Fantastically difficult to play, it requiries the left hand to travel up and down the full length of the keyboard, often at speed and with plenty of complicated finger work.

M. Casadesus, his right hand firmly tucked away on his knee, not only showed virtuoso technique, but with the help of clever pedalling put a variety of mood and expression into the music.

In accompaniment to this the Boston players provided some of the best orchestral playing of the evening, with string tone that had a bite on its mellow sound and crisp woodwind.

Cheers and farewell

By GILBERT COLE

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra played itself out of the Edinburgh Festival last night on the magnificent, ear-splitting finale of Debussy's "La Mer."

Conductor Charles Munch and his fine orchestra were called on again and again to stand and acknowledge storms of applause in the Usher Hall as full-blooded as those conjured up in Debussy's picture of the sea in its many moods.

British soloist Clifford Curzon joined them in a performance of the Schumann Concerto which had all the delicacy and precision it demands. For moderns there w as Honegger's Fifth Symphony, a jagged work full of brilliant orchestration, swift c hanges of mood and guaranteed to keep any audience at the peak of its listening powers.

Scottish Daily Express · Aug 31

Times Aug 31

1956.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ENDS FETE SERIES

Orchestra Gives Program in Edinburgh—Curzon Is Heard as Piano Soloist

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS
Special to The New York Times.

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Aug. 30—The Boston Symphony Orchestra took leave of the Edinburgh International Festival tonight with Debussy's symphonic sketches, "La Mer," which ended the orchestra's final program.

Inevitably, Edinburgh's astonished rapture at the virtuosity of this magnificent ensemble had cooled a little since Sunday. "These players can do anyhing," we said at the first concert. "These players can do anything except touch our hearts," we said at the last.

Perhaps this amendment is slightly unfair; perhaps the players had no ambition to touch our hearts. Apart from Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the programs have contained little music capable of profound emotional disturbance. Even Schubert's C major Symphony, which can be pathetic in its splendid youthful confidence, was more or less left the other night to play itself.

But the "no heart" criticism is one frequently aimed over here at orchestras more efficient than our own. Our own orchestras touch our hearts through the axiom that to err is human; and we console ourselves by reflecting that the bitter struggle for perfection must leave behind an after-taste of its bitterness. Certainly one cannot help suspecting that the Boston Orchestra sometimes regards virtuosity as an end in itself instead of a means to spiritual satisfaction.

With that one reservation, we can admire the trail of glory left here in its wake; and Debussy's impressions of that sea that might have been his by adoption (he very nearly became a professional sailor) put the final flourish to a varied and exciting program.

Schumann's Piano Concerto has been described as behaving like a perfect lady in whatever company she found herself. Tonight, both Clifford Curzon and the orchestra under Charles Munch treated her very chivalrously. True, there were occasional tugs of will when one wanted more rubato or speed than the other, but on the whole it was a crisp and sharply rhythmical performance with no sentimental playing.

"Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky," by Howard Hanson, which began the concert, is one of those "occasional pieces" that appeal more through the occasion than because of their strictly musical values. It is gravely beautiful; the kind of music Matthew Arnold might have written if he had been a composer. Curiously enough, some of its phraseology reminded one listener at least of the "Turandot" of Puccini—who was not even distantly related to Matthew Arnold.

Honegger's Sixth Symphony is tragic in essence and there are certain spiky phrases that reminded us tonight of the gray, tapering towers of Edinburgh. In that symphony the playing of the strings particularly had a shining solemnity that may have made parts of the work sound more eloquent than they really were. They may not have touched our hearts, but they certainly stirred our imagination.

Modern music is the forte of the Boston

This wonderful Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Usher Hall last night demonstrated anew their tremendous all-round talents in a quite varied programme with modern music clearly their special forte.

Heading their programme was a first performance in Europe of Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of my Friend, Serge Koussevitzky," Op. 44, composed for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra, which proved to be an expressive, noble work, utterly worthy of its dedication.

Honegger's Symphony No. 5, written for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, also proved to be an excellent vehicle for the skill of these fine Transatlantic players. It must be one of the strangest of works for the tympanisth, for he has to keep alert and play but one solitary note once at the end of each movement, a strange and possibly humorous touch about a symphony certainly not otherwise brimming over with fun, for the general import is strong and brooding, even at times violent. But the ideas are worth while and the instrumentation masterly—"right up the street," so to speak, of that virtuosic band.

WARMTH AND GLOW

The Schumann Piano Concerto was of more controversial success, and it is not too easy to lay a finger on the cause, for Clifford Curzon matches the Boston men in world-wide reputation. He did not quite live up to it last night, however, being much less than note perfect early on as his view, perhaps rather more Teutonic, was being brought into focus with that of conductor Münch, who seemed to be of a mind to take a more suave line. The joint performance clicked together fortunately in time to give the necessary warmth and glow to the last two movements, but, alas, at some small cost.

"La Mer," however, ended the concert with all the triumph possible, for there is enough of the best Debussy about it to call forth the delicacy, and the drive, of the finest of orchestras.

D. H.

The Glasgow Herald August 31, 1956.

COU

...lay at ...ets at ...moon ... and ...n.

LIGHTING-UP PE...
9.15 p.m
HIGH ...
GLASGOW .....
GREENOCK .....

OR PULL DOWN

HOMAGE TO A MUSICIAN

THE concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night was entitled "Homage to Koussevitzky," under whose distinguished direction the orchestra used to perform. Appropriately, the opening work was an elegy written in his memory by Howard Hanson, to which was added Honegger's Fifth Symphony, one of the many works written for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The demands of the Honegger were amply met by the orchestra and their present conductor, Charles Münch. Its surrealism seemed to be much to their taste and one can hardly doubt that Honegger would have been delighted with the way his work was played. Similarly, there was great clarity in the delivery of the counterpoint of the elegy.

Clifford Curzon was the soloist in Schumann's Piano Concerto.

The remaining work was Debussy's "La Mer." It was played with virtuosity, but greater imagination in other performances have thrown more of the salt spray in one's face.

G. C. M.

MENTAL PROBLEMS OF STUDENTS

Orchestra's "Homage" Programme

The concert at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, was labelled "Homage to Koussevitzky."

Not only was Serge Koussevitzky famous as a conductor, but he performed wonders in the cause of furthering the knowledge of contemporary music on an international basis.

Two of the works in this programme were composed for the Koussevitzky Foundation, and both, as it happened, received the best performances of the evening.

MOVING WORK

Howard Hanson's "Elegy," the one truly American work of the concert, was receiving its first performance in Europe and proved to be an acceptable and moving work, always interesting but never violently daring.

Honegger's Symphony No. 5, the last which he wrote, was, on the other hand, strident and searching, even striving and struggling to a finale which was tinged with that civilized vulgarity of which only the Latin temperament is capable.

This was a superb performance, but Debussy's "La Mer," though technically brilliant, lacked the refinement which is the hallmark of that composer.

Schumann's Piano Concerto, in which Clifford Curzon was the soloist, was quite frankly disappointing. There were lovely moments, but the real warmth of romantic feeling was absent and all in all it did not add up to the right total.

D. G.

THE BULLETIN Fri. Aug 31, 1956

[74]

SCOTTISH DAILY MAIL, Friday, August 31, 1956

...T THE FESTIVAL

LA MER—a grand finale

By D. L. HARPER

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra and its principal conductor, Charles Münch, were given a tumultous farewell after a brilliant performance of Debussy's "La Mer," which completed their Festival programme and ended last night's concert in the Usher Hall.

Final impressions being as important as the first, Münch spared nothing of driving and striving to give a vivid portrayal of Debussy's sonorous spray-laden seascape.

And no less emphatic was their rendering of Symphony No. 5 by Honegger—the composer who loved engines.

To achieve the violently mechanical rhythms and unlubricated dissonances, the wide-armed Münch furiously hammered and semaphored and roused everything the Bostonians could give.

Elsewhere, however, the evening had its disappointments. The Schumann Piano Concerto had no more than a cursory performance, though the notable British pianist, Clifford Curzon, was soloist.

American composers have not been outstanding at this Festival, and the first European performance of Howard Hanson's "Elegy" was no exception.

TODAY

THE SCOTSMAN Friday Aug. 31, 1956

HOMAGE TO KOUSSEVITZKY

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's last concert in this Festival was fittingly given in homage to Koussevitzky, one of the greatest conductors of this century, who played a great part in making this orchestra one of the finest in the world. It was fitting that the programme should include three 20th century works, in view of Koussevitzky's avowed sympathy with the continuing and developing problems of modern composers.

The first work in last night's Usher Hall concert was indeed directly relevant to this subject; the "Elegy to the memory of my friend, Serge Koussevitsky," op. 44, by Howard Hanson, which also served as the evening's ration of American music. It was, to me, more expressive of noble memories of the living man ,than of grief at his death, and impressed me not only as a sincerely felt tribute, but also as a well conceived and executed composition.

The outstanding event of the evening was the Symphony No. 5 (Di tre re) by Honegger. He is a composer who has had to pay a high price for a few youthful "jeux d'esprit" ("Pacific 231," for instance), and is now, slowly, being recognised as a major figure in European music. This symphony is, beyond all shadow of doubt a great work, with the truly symphonic impetus that sweeps the listener in a straight line from first note to last. It was written for the Koussevitzky Foundation, and thus had a direct connection with the Boston Orchestra, who introduced it and have made it particularly their own. Their playing in this work was incredible and indescribable--Roger Voisin's trumpet, whatever one may feel about it in other works, was an experience I shall not easily forget, indeed, the whole brass section made a quite indelible impression.

That the performance of the Schumann piano concerto by Clifford Curzon should be a little overshadowed is a pity, but perhaps inevitable. Certainly the orchestra carried away all the honours last night, and even in this concerto one could not but help noticing the little accompanying figures being time and time again brought to life in a way that one rarely hears in the routine performances that we get every few months.

Debussy's Symphonic Sketches, "La Mer," which ended the concert, may not be in the least symphonic, but they are one of the finest pieces of orchestral sound ever conceived. Charles Münch once again brought every detail of the score to life, handling his brilliant, marvellously flexible orchestral palette in such a way as to almost convince me that this was great music.

O. S.

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra attended a reception given by the Festival Society in the City Chambers, Edinburgh, last night. In this group (left to right) are Lord Provost Sir John G. Banks, chairman of the Society; Madame Koussevitzky, whose late husband was conductor of the orchestra; Isaac Stern, the violinist; and the Lady Provost. ("News" photo.)

Evening News
An Independent Newspaper
FRIDAY, August 31, 1956

AN, FRIDAY, AUGUST 31, 1956. THE SCOTSMAN

AMERICAN ORCHESTRA'S FAREWELL CONCERT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night, at the concluding concert of their visit. The conductor was Charles Münch and the soloist Clifford Curzon.

~~Evening News Aug. 31~~

FAREWELL CHEERS FOR THE BOSTON

One could almost smell the tang of salt spray swirling through the air following a performance of Debussy's "La Mer" with which work the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr Charles Munch sounded their Festival farewell at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh, last night.

This work, symphonic in form, portrays the sea in all its moods and the "bravos" which greeted its completion were fair justice to its brilliant execution.

Two contemporary works were included in the programme which was dedicated to Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony. They were Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of my Friend Serge Koussevitsky" and Honneger's Fifth Symphony.

The "Elegy," a lyrical work receiving its European premiere, was accorded the applause it deserved.

The moods of the Honnegar Symphony are both violent and subtle.

This work, too, was given a first-rate performance. The only disappointment was some lack of feeling in Schumann's Piano Concerto in A Minor in which the soloist was Clifford Curzon.

Throughout the concert Dr Munch exerted an almost hypnotic influence on the orchestra. It was a notable farewell from a great orchestra.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Circ. D. 526,215 - S. 1,146,860
AUG 31 1956

BOSTON SYMPHONY ENDS FETE SERIES

Orchestra Gives Program in Edinburgh—Curzon Is Heard as Piano Soloist

By STEPHEN WILLIAMS
Special to The New York Times.

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Aug. 30—The Boston Symphony Orchestra took leave of the Edinburgh International Festival tonight with Debussy's symphonic sketches, "La Mer," which ended the orchestra's final program.

Inevitably, Edinburgh's astonished rapture at the virtuosity of this magnificent ensemble had cooled a little since Sunday. "These players can do anyhing," we said at the first concert. "These players can do anything except touch our hearts," we said at the last.

Perhaps this amendment is slightly unfair; perhaps the players had no ambition to touch our hearts. Apart from Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the programs have contained little music capable of profound emotional disturbance. Even Schubert's C major Symphony, which can be pathetic in its splendid youthful confidence, was more or less left the other night to play itself.

But the "no heart" criticism is one frequently aimed over here at orchestras more efficient than our own. Our own orchestras touch our hearts through the axiom that to err is human; and we console ourselves by reflecting that the bitter struggle for perfection must leave behind an after-taste of its bitterness. Certainly one cannot help suspecting that the Boston Orchestra sometimes regards virtuosity as an end in itself instead of a means to spiritual satisfaction.

With that one reservation, we can admire the trail of glory left here in its wake; and Debussy's impressions of that sea that might have been his by adoption (he very nearly became a professional sailor) put the final flourish to a varied and exciting program.

Schumann's Piano Concerto has been described as behaving like a perfect lady in whatever company she found herself. Tonight, both Clifford Curzon and the orchestra under Charles Munch treated her very chivalrously. True, there were occasional tugs of will when one wanted more rubato or speed than the other, but on the whole it was a crisp and sharply rhythmical performance with no sentimental playing.

"Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" by Howard Hanson, which began the concert, is one of those "occasional pieces" that appeal more through the occasion than because of their strictly musical values. It is gravely beautiful; the kind of music Matthew Arnold might have written if he had been a composer. Curiously enough, some of its phraseology reminded one listener at least of the "Turandot" of Puccini—who was not even distantly related to Matthew Arnold.

Honegger's Sixth Symphony is tragic in essence and there are certain spiky phrases that reminded us tonight of the gray, tapering towers of Edinburgh. In that symphony the playing of the strings particularly had a shining solemnity that may have made parts of the work sound more eloquent than they really were. They may not have touched our hearts, but they certainly stirred our imagination.

Contemporary Arts

The Edinburgh Festival

ROYAL attendance apart, the tenth Festival has begun with no special flourishes; the ruling committee, of course, must strain every nerve to find something remarkable every year, without beginning to think of birthday celebrations. That is the trouble with a show like Edinburgh's, which must always try to go one better for fear of people saying it has gone one worse; and which, being international, wants the steady perennial ballast that keeps Salzburg and Bayreuth on an even keel. There is much to be said for putting a local product well in the centre; but—leaving out the Tattoo and such memorable bits of Caledonian nonsense as the March of the Thousand Pipers—there has been none since The Three Estates.

One of the consequences (or would it happen anyway?) is Edinburgh's feeling, however gratifyingly the profits roll in, that these three weeks are a good time to be out of town; those remaining contributing to the neat sociological illustration that daily separates the sheep from the goats on the Mound. There, in the Royal Scottish Academy, the rooms devoted to the Braque show are full of gaudy jeans, horsetails and urchin-cuts, beards, and arty talk in a fine variety of language and accent; while a hundred yards off, in the National Gallery, tweeds and town clothes move steadily round the Raeburn bicentenary collection, exchanging family gossip and looking from time to time at the walls where, in high-waisted gowns, brown broadcloth, or the superabundant tartanry of Scott's romantic revival, the pillars of the Northern Athens show them features hearty, vigorous, a little self-satisfied, almost identical with their own.

The Braque exhibition is an example of the trouble high-flying internationalism can land in. For five years the Festival has been working through the greatest of the Impressionists and their successors, and now the supply is beginning to run out. Degas to Renoir to Cézanne to Gauguin to Braque is an unexceptionable sequence; indeed, in this inclusive panorama of all M. Braque's 'periods,' from Fauve and Cubist to his latest paintings, small landscapes oddly like Christopher Woods, it is possible to see a kind of summing-up of the whole thing, if not by a gigantic artist, by a most accomplished one. This is much the largest and most carefully prepared show of Braque's work Britain has had; to most of us who knew chiefly his embroidered marble table-tops, pears and jugs, the demonstration of his development is a handsome surprise. Furthermore, M. Braque was recently made an honorary Scottish Academician. It is all very appropriate, but it cannot be said to have the excitement of earlier shows; and there remains the horrid question, What next?

★

In the Assembly Hall—which has also appeared recently to be digging itself into a rut—there has been an attempt this year to find something new, and at the same time to add a little national festivity to internationalism. Pleasure of Scotland, which has occupied the apron stage and come romping down the aisles during the first week, seemed originally a quite quixotically unchancy enterprise: an organised ceilidh, and on such a scale and in such a place, is a series of contradictions in terms. Nevertheless, George Scott-Moncrieff's experiment comes off with astonishing success: jumping over incongruities and awkwardnesses with a kind of insouciant warm-heartedness that by the end draws even a polyglot audience of visitors into some sort of communion with the performers; and presenting a number of things, the fruit of diligent searching in far places and in the archives of the School of Scottish Studies, which it would be rewarding to come across anywhere. Out of context, no doubt, and much of it quite alien: but you need not have any Gaelic to be moved by the harsh, strong, lamentable sound of a song from Uist or by the heroic declamation of an Ossianic legend (this, one tells oneself, is what Homer ought to sound like); there is a superb shock in hearing, in a high, hard voice and a powerful north-eastern accent, the bitter song of the Two Brothers which we know from the Oxford Book of Ballads, but which the singer had from her mother and her grandmother before her.

★

Odd transplantation does not end in the Assembly Hall; Under Milk Wood in the Lyceum is odder still. How on earth it could be done was a puzzle from the beginning, rousing at least as much preliminary curiosity as the prospect of a new play. Now we know, it is a great deal better than certain black forebodings suggested—it is probably about as good as it could be—but it is still evidently a work of misplaced ingenuity. There is no doubt about the ingenuity: Michael Trangmar's set, equipped with a great variety of little niches, booths, grottoes, curtained recesses, furniture that slides in and out, crams pretty nearly all of Dylan Thomas's Llareggub (the reversible name is boldly spelt correctly in the programme) on the stage; the huge company directed by Douglas Cleverdon and Edward Burnham industriously and skilfully animate it. But the town and its inhabitants, wrapped in their spring-dream, exist already, perfectly living in the one unquestionable masterpiece that has been written for voices alone; to add sight to hearing is at the best unnecessary, at the worst distracting and vulgarising: presenting, with a nudge and a wink, What the Butler Saw to illustrate poetry. This is not to say that things don't look right. Most of them do (although Donald Houston, an all-too-visible Narrator, was a bit conspicuous as he larked about the scenery). Buddug-Mair Powell, for instance, is just my idea of Mrs. Cherry Owen; so is T. H. Evans my Reverend Eli Jenkins. But I don't want to see them at all; I don't even want to see Diana Maddox's delectable Polly Garter. I have been taught already to see with my ears.

Under Milk Wood is, of course, one of the Festival's exports, clearly labelled for transport to London and perhaps New York, where if it reaches more people than the broadcasts did it will, I suppose, justify itself, like Shakespeare on the screen. The other official offering of the first week—the Gateway Theatre's Anatomist—is very much for home consumption: of all Bridie's plays the one that truly belongs to Edinburgh. The Gateway company give it a rattling good show (some particularly spirited acting by Lennox Milne and Mary Helen Donald as the ladylike sisters in the New Town, and a regular Captain Hook of a Dr. Knox from Tom Fleming, receiving his 'subjects' for dissection in the Old). For purposes of comparison with this early Bridie there is the Edinburgh University Dramatic Society's very late, if not latest, one, The Baikie Charivari, admirably produced in the elegant little theatre in Adam House: a curious object-lesson in the inventiveness and fertility of Bridie, and of the fundamental want of seriousness which rarely allowed him to carry a play, or an argument, to a conclusion.

The University production belongs, of course, to the Fringe, of which there will be more to say later; leaving it in the meantime with the observation merely that it appears to be as thickly ciliate and strenuously stirring as usual.

CHRISTOPHER SMALL

Stravinsky

Two varieties of one-upmanship have been prominent in the general critical response to the Hamburg Opera Company's production (the first on the stage in Britain) of Stravinsky's Œdipus Rex. The one, prevalent among those who were just reaching adult consciousness in the late Twenties, is a patronising coolness, a grudging admission of 'a certain impressiveness' about it, mixed with something to the effect of its being 'awfully Twentyish,' delivered as though that finally disposed of it. It is much the same response as the same generation made to The Threepenny Opera, like an uncertain Form Two at school, trying to impress the new boys.

The other one-up gambit came from those of us who had seen it before, especially the first performance or the Stravinsky-Cocteau performance in Paris four years ago, and took care always to drag in the comparison, usually to the disadvantage of Hamburg.

The game, fortunately, has more or less played itself out now. It is true that the Hamburg performance was vocally indifferent, far inferior to the Paris one or to any of the recorded versions. But the work is sufficiently familiar now for us to consider each performance on its merits, in relation to the work alone, and for there to be no special superiority in having seen it before. And it is true that Œdipus Rex is very Twentyish, but these are no longer the Thirties, when the Twenties were in disgrace. Twentyishness is no longer a legitimate object of criticism, it is an historical fact, a movement that was, and what we now have to decide is not whether or not the movement was valid, since it has passed into history, but which of its products are the enduring ones.

Œdipus is certainly one of these, possibly Stravinsky's greatest work of that period, not excluding the Symphony of Psalms. Just how great is proved by how much knocking about it will stand. It makes its tremendous emotional impact however inadequately done—on the gramophone, as an oratorio, as an opera, or, as it ideally should be done, as something between the two. Having survived the middle years of anti-Stravinsky reaction, it has gone on since the war, even in this tight little island, steadily gaining ground, until it has at last reached the stage. Having done that, it will certainly survive the Hamburg singing and the bitchy reception it has had here. The time is ripe now for Covent Garden to do it. They will hardly be able to surpass Teo Otto's magnificent designs or Rennert's production, but they should be able to sing it better, and to put it in a stronger double-bill—possibly with The Nightingale. Here it was coupled

THE

22, Tudor

SUNDAY

Music and

Boston in

By PETER

"DON'T look at the brass. They need no encouragement," was Richard Strauss's advice to young conductors. Heaven knows what he would have thought about the Boston Symphony Orchestra's trumpeters. They raise their bells aloft with the uninhibited fervour of a Louis Armstrong and with a strident, rasping shriek, more reminiscent of a fire alarm than a musical instrument, mercilessly hack their way through the m[illegible] score. Even in a [illegible] of the two or three great [illegible]n orchestras by saying that [illegible] of course, splendid in their [illegible]y way and no doubt well [illegible]o raucous contemporary [illegible] that they are really not [illegible] interpretation of the staple [illegible] indisive beat of this astonishing [illegible] what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: lous Mandarin (Covent wards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old [illegible]DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play dipus Rex (Assembly [illegible]AY: The Legend of the [illegible]pire).

The harmony of the [illegible]

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the [illegible]

[illegible] 1956 Spectator

with Mavra, which although musically much better and prettier than it sounded at Edinburgh, sung even more deplorably than Œdipus, is too slight to be worth the trouble.

Besides the two Stravinsky works, the Hamburg Company has also given the first stage performance here for many years of Cornelius's Barber of Baghdad, which is musically attractive throughout and has two or three very witty pieces. Adroitly produced by Rennert, and with a gay set by Alfred Siercke, it was mildly pleasing, and I, like many others, was glad to see it once (I did so twice in fact), but it is not a work that most of us will miss if we never see it again.

These Hamburg productions have been the most interesting part of the festival, but the most satisfying has been the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose stunning performances have set us a new standard in orchestral playing, as far ahead of anything else to be heard as a three-minute mile. The cult of orchestral glamour is in general one of the most detestable features of current musical life, depressing evidence of the widespread and totally unmusical obsession with performance instead of music. But to hear the Boston is to have to join the philistine mob for an evening, and to exult, while it lasts at least, in the sheer miraculous perfection of the playing.

On top of this they have brought a modern American work for each of their five programmes, including symphonies by Creston and Piston, Copland's Symphonic Ode (a revision of a very early work), and smaller works by Freed and Hanson. Except that all these composers are rather senior, they have made a kind of Cheltenham Festival of American music here, and although there has been nothing of startling originality or importance among the works, they have given some pleasure and have added greatly to the interest and merit of the Boston programmes.

COLIN MASON

London Ballet

THE two ballet companies now on view in London reveal many intriguing things to the observer who is not committed to a belief that dancers of only one nation can perform ballet fully and correctly. 'Festival Ballet,' at the Royal Festival Hall, has, on paper, one of the best balanced repertoires of any major company in Europe; it has some truly wonderful dancers just now and, properly matched, these assets should be both pulling in the cash-paying public and, further, pleasing the dance aficionados who like to believe that now and then they are present at unique occasions.

The transient visitors are American Ballet Theatre, giving a two-week showing at Covent Garden as the first leg of a Europe-wide tour under American-financed auspices—i.e., 'showing the flag' as surely as the Sadler's Wells Ballet does on its European and American visits. This company has changed its dancing personnel almost completely since it was first seen here in 1946; then, it was the first really big-scale company to come out of America in this century, and it was able to show Europe that the monopoly not only of splendid dancing but also of imaginative choreography and novel décor was no longer in the hands of European ballets.

The raison d'être of 'Festival Ballet' giving two successive performances last week of Swan Lake: Act 2 and Giselle, was to launch in London a French aspirant to these leading roles: and, to strike a fair balance with both the casual public and the dance-followers, the casts were reversed so that familiar dancers were seen on the alternate nights. Giselle—like Hamlet—has by now been not merely performed excessively but subjected to so many revisions, interpolations, re-readings of the mime and gesture, that—more than any other ballet extant—it must differ from what was first danced in 1841. So, provided the dancer appears to have a comprehension of the character and a certain skill as both dancer and mime, we can find something of interest in any performance above a level of incompetence.

This subconscious toleration helps this particular ballet all the time; if Miss X is a fine dancer but a grimly awful actress, we don't feel altogether cheated; and if her mad scene is effective, then we are willing to overlook her too-cautious dance endeavours in Act 2. It is rare indeed that a Giselle is totally pleasing—effortless as a dancer and convincing as the witless peasant maid of the opening scene; and each and every one of the twenty-odd seen here since 1945 has not succeeded in giving two consecutive performances of equally balanced parts. Madame Ulanova does not yet know what a hard row she will have to hoe when the Bolshoi Ballet appears later in the year.

In the Swan Lake: Act 2 Mlle Josette Clavier was simply inept, both failing to give the complete visual satisfaction that should come from the refined academics of the pure dancing and also failing to emerge from her own character for one second; rarely has a Swan Princess so lacked both the regal and avian qualities. Her Giselle, though unconventional to the point of intolerable eccentricity in

Why are tape recorders so widely used?

Well now, take a cross section of the community . . .

For the family a tape recorder provides an album in sound; Father's speech at John's wedding, baby's first words, little Susan's "recitation", all the family memories.

The music lover, whether he is a teenage jazz fan or a mature Beethoven lover, finds that Grundig provides his music perfectly,—and economically. He changes his taped music library to suit his changing taste simply by recording new sound on the existing tape.

The singer or instrumentalist finds that a Grundig improves his technique, provides accompaniments that are always available, unvarying in pitch and tempo.

The lawyer uses his Grundig to take complicated statements from witnesses, the doctor to record telephone messages from his patients when he is on his rounds. The business man's Grundig—during the week records dictation, conferences, and telephone calls—and goes home with him for the week-end.

Language teachers use Grundigs; speech therapists, psychiatrists, public figures, teachers, actors and artists, even children at school.

The truth is that all kinds of people use Grundig tape recorders for reasons as varied as the varied walks of life in any cross section of the community.

Model TK.5
Price 52 gns.
including microphone
Attractive H.P. terms

★★★ WRITE NOW FOR A COPY OF THIS FREE FOLDER

GRUNDIG (GREAT BRITAIN) LTD., DEPT. SP.
Advertising & Showrooms: 39/41 NEW OXFORD ST, LONDON, W.C.1
Sales Dept. & Works: KIDBROOKE PARK ROAD, LONDON, S.E.3

Name .....

Address .....

(Electronics Division, Gas Purification and Chemical Co. Ltd.) GD285

some respects, was a whole piece; I found her wonderful and appalling at moments, in both aspects of the character. She has a hard, Latin look which turned her into a gipsy-like personality in her scene of madness, which she acted with a house-stilling intensity. In the graveyard scene, where she appears as a wraith haunting her seducer, the dancing was intelligently understood but not effortlessly projected—and the illusion of total ease is essential if the silly story is to make any point.

One must not probe into the reasons why Mlle Clavier was so presented, considering the weight of some of the ballerina talents in the company. Belinda Wright, partnered understandably and carefully by Anton Dolin, had made a splendid performance out of it—against her natural bent, one would have thought, for she is a brilliant classical executant—a dancer first and foremost, not a mime.

★

After these wonders the impact of the Americans was altogether quieter. The style of Les Sylphides (by now as much due for a long retirement from programmes as is Giselle) is unbelievably clean, delicate, inhuman—so much so that in place of the delight one should experience in its pristine lyricism, one could only wonder at the marvellous discipline which braced the dancers against one of the keenest but coldest audiences they will ever have to face. It was all meticulous, calculated, with the formally exquisite patterns unfolding in an inevitable logic and power—but untouched by any sort of human sensation. This may be the absolute value of American use of the classical balletic mode; they know exactly how to absorb its technical ferocities of physical movement and balance and controlled, alert stasis; but the temperament does not enable them to use this apparatus as a sort of transparent substance through which the human creature boldly thrusts out.

Of purely American material, the folklorist narrative of Lizzie Borden (Fall River Legend) is too physically agonising to be made into good stage dancing. Agnes de Mille's choreographic method is a mingling of classicism (with large chunks of meaningfulness laid on it) and the freer forms of American social dancing, and to this is added the Stanislavskian super-realism of Lizzie's acting—contorted face, clenching and grasping gestures, violent jerks and twists of the body. The balance is not struck and, instead of being moved, we are put off by the prolonged violences.

Their topical Fancy Free (later, the film On The Town) is dead right: exuberant, boastful, oozing with the sophisticated charm of the Modern American Miss and her dog-faithful boy friends. These and other ballets were carried off by some stunning dancing from the top-liners, most notably Nora Kaye, Ruth Ann Koesun, John Kriza and Erik Bruun.

A. V. COTON

Awful Child

THE BAD SEED. (Warner.)

As a novel and play The Bad Seed was first-class melodrama, no more probable, no less worthy than The Castle of Otranto or Witness for the Prosecution. And the film, which comes to London shortly, though modified in its ending by Hollywood censorship, is just as powerful. The 'seed,' and dominant character of the film, is an eight-year-old American girl, Rhoda, who turns out to be a psychopathic killer. She has a background that on the surface is excessively normal, like a story in the Saturday Evening Post. Dad is away in the army, and mom, kind and harassed, copes bravely. Sure, she's a little worried about Rhoda's sulks at not winning a school medal for penmanship. But that's just a phase. Then the medal-winner is found drowned at the school picnic, and one of the most horrifying film revelations in years is on. This is horror the more effective because it restrains its field to 'things of every day.' The murderess is played with jaunty, frightening aplomb by eleven-year-old Patty McCormack. Her ice-cold cunning, beneath a veneer of home-loving affection, is monstrous to watch, excellent to applaud. The motivation of her anti-social behaviour is laid at the door of heredity: though psychiatrists and biologists may laugh at this, it is dramatically plausible, which is the chief thing with a thriller of this kind. Warner Brothers and Mervyn LeRoy, the director, are to be congratulated on their intelligent handling of the story; the new ending is a creditable compromise between the original work and the censor. In the acting, Miss McCormack is stoutly aided by Nancy Kelly, as her mother, and by Henry Jones, a drooling janitor. But it is Patty McCormack's film. Though gossip should ordinarily have no place in these columns, I feel compelled to reveal that Miss McCormack's off-screen habits are collecting dresses for her dolls and playing baseball with the neighbourhood boys. These details seem very important after watching her act. The director also feels that the audience needs some reassurance, for at the end of the film, after the final fade-out, a voice keeps us in our seats, and then we watch each member of the cast, now smiling and normal again, take bows. This seems no worse than an actor in the theatre revealing at curtain-call that he was not really killed by Macduff. Warner's haven't the same motives as the actor, of course, and one hopes this isn't a practice they are going to extend to many films, but to me the bows didn't seem at all ridiculous, as some have found them.

DAVID STONE

Marching Song

SOME weeks ago I asked a member of the BBC's drama department, who was complaining about the chronic shortage of plays suitable for television, whether they had considered John Whiting's Marching Song. They had, I was told: but rejected it as unsuitable. Evidently the BBC had second thoughts; and I hope the failure of Sunday's production of the play will not be held to justify those who rejected it in the first instance. True, television could not create the theatre's illusion of being trapped in an overheated glass-house. But that would not have mattered—in fact, did not matter. The failure lay elsewhere.

The BBC's television plays have recently reached a high standard; but again and again, on sound as well as on vision, they are spoiled by grotesque miscasting. Casts appear to be chosen by people who have either not read the play or who have read it and misunderstood it. So it was with Marching Song. The chief character is a beaten general, released from captivity to stand trial for war guilt. He is a man possessed with a demon: a part, say, for a Paul Scofield. But the BBC gave it to Patrick Barr, an amiable, comfortable actor, on whose shoulder disconsolate maidens would delight to weep, but utterly incapable of suggesting dæmonic possession. The part of his mistress, who has been waiting for him all the years only to find he does not love her, is by no means easy; but it enabled Diana Wynyard in the stage version to give a notable study in disintegration. On TV Faith Brook could summon no more emotion at the shattering of her life than she might have expressed at the shattering of a favourite vase. Worst of all was the choice of the girl for the part of Dido. Dido (it is made clear in the dialogue) is not pretty; she has had her face scarred in a bar-room brawl; but she has the wisdom of the garret, if not of the gutter—with its attendant attractiveness. On the stage, Dido was exactly caught in a fine performance by Penelope Munday (who has not, I think, appeared in the West End since, more's the pity). On television, Dido was presented as a pretty, well-groomed little moppet fresh from finishing school. She was charming; but she was not Dido.

For the production to succeed when the three main characters, through no fault of their own, are carving against the grain of the play was too much to expect. But what possible excuse can there be for such miscasting? Were suitable players not available? In that case there can be little excuse for proceeding with the production. I am one of those who thought Marching Song a fine play; and even those who thought it misfired, I believe, would agree that it stood out from the ordinary ruck of West End productions. If it was worth doing on TV, it was worth waiting until it could be done properly.

I am glad to see that John Whiting is soon to have a chance to show in a new play that the fate of his earlier ones has been too bad to be true. In any case, it must be put to the BBC drama department's credit balance that they attempted Marching Song at all.

From commercial television's drama departments we have less to be thankful for. Or have they been merged with Variety? A few months ago the two London contracting companies announced what sounded a noble scheme to co-operate in producing full-length plays on Monday nights; and some good things came out of it. I do not know what has gone wrong; but this week we were given a burlesque of an Edgar Wallace thriller, funny enough in patches, but the sort of joke that cannot be stretched to fill an hour and a half. Still, at least it was a play. The previous Monday the programme which proudly styles itself Play of the Week was a film.

BRIAN INGLIS

The Spectator

SEPTEMBER 3, 1831

WE are happy to find that the Steam-boat Bill is not to be allowed to pass through the House of Commons quite so smoothly as its author imagined it would. . . . It may afford some notion of the reasoning powers of the advocates of the pending bill, to specify two of its provisions,—1st, steam-boats are not to proceed at a greater rate than six miles in the hour against tide; 2nd, they are limited to three miles in the hour with tide. Now the tide at London Bridge runs six miles in the hour, or thereabouts. Either, therefore, a steam-boat is to stand stock still when the tide is against her, and to "back" at the rate of three miles when it is with her; or she is to go twelve miles against tide and nine miles with it;—and this by a bill for regulating the velocity of steam-boats! Oh! Alderman WOOD! enlighten thy absolute wisdom by a weekly perusal of the Mechanics' Magazine.

THE OBSER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, Lonc
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER

Music

Boston i

By PET

"DON'T look at the b
They need no encou
ment," was Richard Stra advice to young conduc Heaven knows what he would thought about the Boston
phony Orchestra's trumpeters.
raise their bells aloft with the inhibited fervour of a Louis strong and with a strident, ra shriek, more reminiscent of a fire alarm than a musical instrument, mercilessly hack their way through the m
only of the two or three great n orchestras by saying that
of course, splendid in their ny way and no doubt well
o raucous contemporary t that they are really not interpretation of the staple

the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet incisive beat of this astonishing what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

TO-MORROW: Cloud-
(New Lindsey). TUESDAY:
lous Mandarin (Covent
wards Zero (St. James's).
Timon of Athens (Old
DAY: A River Breeze

TO-MORROW: Ram
Ballet (Empire); Village
Fanny's First Play
dipus Rex (Assembly
AY: The Legend of the pire).

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's

Festival Society in the City
ovost Sir John G. Banks, nductor of the orchestra;
" photo.)

News
wspaper
1, 1956

ion (he very nearly became fessional sailor) put the flourish to a varied and ng program.
umann's Piano Concerto een described as "having perfect lady in whatever any she found here. To-both Clifford Curzon and orchestra under Charles n treated her very cavalr-
. True, there were tugs of will when d more rubato or he other, but on the s a crisp and nical performance
ental playing.
egy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, rd Hanson, which oncert, is one of sional pieces" that through the occasion
se of their strictly
. It is gravely beautiful nd of music Matthew might have written been a composer.
enough. some of eology reminded one least of the "Turandot"
i—who was not even related to Matthew

egger's Sixth Symph
gic in essence and rtain spiky phrases
led us tonight of the ng towers of Edinbu
t symphony the play strings particularly ing solemnity that made parts of the more eloquent than were. They may not d our hearts, but they stirred our imagina

Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitsky and Charles Munch

In the background Charles River Embankment in the home-town of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, where the series of " Esplanade Concerts " is held.

SEPT. 1956
Vol. 11. No. 8.

1/6

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

Boston in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

DONT look at the brass. They need no encouragement," was Richard Strauss's advice to young conductors. Heaven knows what he would have thought about the Boston Symphony Orchestra's trumpeters. They raise their bells aloft with the uninhibited fervour of a Louis Armstrong and with a strident, rasping shriek, more reminiscent of a fire alarm than a musical instrument, mercilessly hack their way through the most opulent scores. Even in a city of the two or three great orchestras by saying that they are, of course, splendid in their flashy way and no doubt well suited to raucous contemporary music but that they are really not up to interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

M. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet incisive beat of this astonishing [illegible] what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- [illegible] (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: [illegible] Mandarin (Covent [illegible] Towards Zero (St. James's). [illegible]: Timon of Athens (Old [illegible] THURSDAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram [illegible] Ballet (Empire); Village [illegible] Tammy's First Play [illegible] Oedipus Rex (Assembly [illegible] THURSDAY: The Legend of the [illegible] (Empire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra[illegible] A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba[illegible] by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat[illegible] splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no [illegible] festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci[illegible] or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh[illegible] A film has already been shown of Canadian S[illegible] the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of [illegible] opera. On the stage, [illegible] part and parcel of a comprehensive [illegible] musical [illegible]

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be [illegible] if even wider powers in practice.

[illegible] important attributes in the Convention and to allow [illegible] would incline the Egyptian government to accord it [illegible] tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt hereself [illegible] our through the United Nations with the participa[illegible] President and that the whole thing had been worked [illegible] functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian [illegible] per[illegible] "technical", that it had an Egyptian [illegible] functions were "technical", that it had been worked [illegible] President and that the whole thing had been worked [illegible] our through the United Nations with the participa[illegible] tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt hereself [illegible] would incline the Egyptian government to accord it [illegible] important attributes in the Convention and to allow [illegible] it even wider powers in practice.

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be [illegible] part and parcel of a comprehensive [illegible] musical [illegible] opera. On the stage, [illegible] the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of [illegible] opera. On the stage, [illegible] musical [illegible]

The New Statesman and Nation, [illegible] in status, that its [illegible] who [illegible]

The fact that Government, in [illegible] [illegible] "technical", that it had an Egyptian [illegible] [illegible] functions were "technical", that it had been worked [illegible] President and that the whole thing had been worked [illegible] our through the United Nations with the participa[illegible] tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt hereself [illegible] would incline the Egyptian government to accord it [illegible] important attributes in the Convention and to allow [illegible] it even wider powers in practice.

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be [illegible] part and parcel of a comprehensive [illegible] musical [illegible] opera. On the stage, [illegible] the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of [illegible] opera. On the stage, [illegible] musical [illegible]

The harvest of the forest is given many fo[illegible]

THE ROWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMI[illegible]
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus[illegible]

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1930 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the miniatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

riproduzione con brio

only Hi-Fi can reproduce the full brilliance and subtleties of the original performance

As the concert grand is to an old upright so is Hi-Fi to all other forms of reproduction. If music means more to you than just a catchy tune, alla marcia to Imhofs.

P.S. Molto Informazione in Imhofs Hi-Fi catalogue Write, phone or call in for your copy today.

IMHOFS

Alfred Imhof Limited,
112-116 New Oxford Street, London, W.C.1
Telephone: Museum 7878 (20 lines)

THE ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

145th Season, 1956-57 — 8 Concerts, WEDNESDAYS at 8 p.m.

ROYAL FESTIVAL HALL

OCTOBER 17	NOVEMBER 14	DECEMBER 12	JANUARY 16
FEBRUARY 13	MARCH 13	APRIL 10	MAY 8

Conductors:

SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart. — RUDOLF KEMPE
JOSEF KRIPS — RAFAEL KUBELIK
SIR MALCOLM SARGENT — BRUNO WALTER

Soloists will include:

PIATIGORSKY — ALEXANDER YOUNG
MONICA SINCLAIR — ROWLAND JONES

GOTTLOB FRICK

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

AWARD OF GOLD MEDAL of the Society to DR. BRUNO WALTER will be made at the concert conducted by him with R.P.O. on 8th May. The Gold Medal will be presented by SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Works in the Series include:

Cello Concerto (British Premiere) — —	William Walton
Symphonia Serena (1st concert performance in London)	Hindemith
Athalie Overture (1st performance) — —	Martin
Three Frescoes (1st performance in Great Britain) —	Martinu

First Concert of the Season: October 17, at 8 p.m.

Symphonic Poem, Macbeth, Op. 23 —	Richard Strauss
Incidental Music, Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme
Dance of the Seven Veils (Salome) —
Symphonic Poem, Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Subscription (8 concerts) 88/- to 34/- Single tickets 12/6, 10/6, 8/6, 6/-, 5/-

Subscription tickets on sale to members of the R.P.S. reserved until 15 September

Prospectus now available

Subscription tickets, and single tickets for First Concert Only, available to the public on September 17 from Hall (WAT 3191), Chappell's, 50 New Bond Street, W.1. (MAY 7600), The R.P.S., 4 St. James's Square, S.W.1. (TRA 2585) and usual agents.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

...ton in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...(he very nearly became ...ssional sailor) put the ...urish to a varied and ... program.

...ann's Piano Concerto ... described as behaving ...erfect lady in whatever ... she found herself. To... ...th Clifford Curzon and ...hestra under Charles ...reated her very chival... ...True, there were occa... ...gs of will when one ...more rubato or speed ...other, but on the whole ... crisp and sharply ...l performance with no ...al playing.

... to the Memory of My ...rge Koussevitzky," by ...Hanson, which began ...ert, is one of those ...al pieces" that appeal ...ough the occasion than ...f their strictly musical ...It is gravely beautiful; ... of music Matthew Ar... ...ht have written if he ...n a composer. Curi... ...hough, some of its ...gy reminded one listen... ...st of the "Turando" of ...-who was not even dis... ...elated to Matthew Ar...

...ger's Sixth Symphony ...c in essence and there ...tain spiky phrases that ...d us tonight of the gray, ... towers of Edinburgh. ... symphony the playing ...strings particularly had ...ng solemnity that may ...ade parts of the work ...more eloquent than they ...were. They may not have ...our hearts, but they cer... ...stirred our imagination.

...look at the brass. ...need no encourage... Richard Strauss's ... young conductors, ...s what he would have ...ut the Boston Sym... ...ra's trumpeters. They ...his aloft with the un... ...our of a Louis Arm... ...ith a strident, rasping ... reminiscent of a fire ...farm than a musical instrument, ...mercilessly hack their way through ...the m... ...ity of the two or three great ...n orchestras by saying that ... of course, splendid in their ...y way and no doubt well ...o raucous contemporary ...t that they are really not ... interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi generally, that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet ...beat of this astonishing ... what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

...irst Nights

... — TO-MORROW: Cloud- ...New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ...ous Mandarin (Covent ...wards Zero (St. James's). ... Timon of Athens (Old ...AY: A River Breeze

... — TO-MORROW: Ram ...Ballet (Empire); Village ... Fanny's First Play ...dipus Rex (Assembly ...Y: The Legend of the ...pire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

If so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra... A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba... by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat... splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no ... festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci... or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh... A film has already been shown of Canadian S...

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of the opera. On the stage, a compact and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-East musical.

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice.

important attributes in the Convention and to allow would incline the Egyptian government to accord it tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, out through the United Nations with the participa- president and that the whole thing had been worked functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian ...ly ...; that its status, that its ...

The New Statesman and Nation, ...

The fact that government, in ...

who ...

...ories ...nt in ...an, ...

...

...

the things that money can't buy

. . . come into your home with a STEINWAY

You cannot measure, in pounds and pence, the overtones of value in a Steinway. There is the glory of tone that uplifts listeners; the power the Steinway has to enrich the home, to release tensions and calm cares; and the pleasure you have in creating pleasure. Above all, there is the gentle authority the Steinway holds for the child, pointing beyond distractions of the gadget age to strength and sufficiency in things of beauty. Values like these do not come automatically. The Steinway, which depreciates so little over the years, is an investment in the inner wealth that life shares so abundantly with those who look for its treasure.

STEINWAY

The Piano of International Fame

STEINWAY & SONS, STEINWAY HALL, 1 & 2 ST. GEORGE ST., HANOVER SQ., LONDON, W.1. Tel: MAYfair 6641 NEW YORK & HAMBURG

CMST 36

THE

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

1956—1957 SEASON

AT THE

ROYAL ALBERT HALL

Thursday, October 18 at 7.30.
ELIJAH
(Mendelssohn)

Thursday, November 29 at 7.30.
MASS IN D
(Beethoven)

Wednesday, December 19 at 7.30
Friday, December 21 at 7.30
Saturday, December 22 at 2.30 and again at 7.30
CAROLS
(four concerts)

Saturday, January 5 at 2.30
MESSIAH
(Handel)

Thursday, January 31 at 7.30.
REQUIEM
(Verdi)

Thursday, April 11 at 7.30
HYMN OF JESUS
(Holst)
and REQUIEM
(Fauré)

Good Friday, April 19 at 2.30
MESSIAH
(Handel)
In its entirety

AT THE

ROYAL FESTIVAL HALL

Ash Wednesday Evening,
March 6
THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS
(Elgar)

(At the invitation of the British Broadcasting Corporation).

THE PROSPECTUS giving full details as to soloists, seat prices, booking dates, etc., is now available. Apply with 2d. stamp to Box Office, Royal Albert Hall.

SEASON TICKETS for the Royal Albert Hall Series (which ensure a seat at the afternoon Carol Concert), are on sale at the Royal Albert Hall Box Office from August 13th.

NEW MEMBERS

There are a few vacancies in each part. Rehearsals every Monday from 24th September. Apply to me NOW, enclosing S.A.E., stating age, past and present choral activities, and whether 1st or 2nd S.A.T. or B. A good voice and a good sight reading ability are essential.

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY
ROYAL ALBERT HALL, LONDON, S.W.7.

L. G. PATIENT
SECRETARY

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

If so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra
A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no
festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci
or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh
A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of co opera. On the stage, [illegible] of a comprehensive Middle-East musical [illegible]
A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice.
important attributes in the Convention and to allow would incline the Egyptian government to accord it tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, out through the United Nations with the participa- president and that the whole thing had been worked functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian [illegible] "non-governmental", in status, that its

The New Statesman and Nation, [illegible]

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aust

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "every-one visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the mainatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

Music and Musicians

...on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...ook at the brass. ...eed no encourage- Richard Strauss's young conductors, what he would have the Boston Sym- ...a's trumpeters. They ...s aloft with the un- ...ur of a Louis Arm- ...n a strident, rasping ...eminiscent of a fire ...n a musical instrument, ...ck their way through ...score. Even in a ...ority of the two or three great ...n orchestras by saying that ... of course, splendid in their ...y way and no doubt well ...o raucous contemporary ...t that they are really not ... interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather leisurely tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] score [illegible] what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

...irst Nights

...— To-morrow: Cloud- ...New Lindsey). Tuesday: ...ous Mandarin (Covent ...wards Zero (St. James's). ... Timon of Athens (Old ...day: A River Breeze

...— To-morrow: Ram ... Ballet (Empire); Village ... Fanny's First Play ...ipus Rex (Assembly ...y: The Legend of the ...pire).

...n (he very nearly became ...ssional sailor) put the ...ourish to a varied and ... program.

...ann's Piano Concerto ...n described as behaving ...erfect lady in whatever ...y she found herself. To- ...oth Clifford Curzon and ...hestra under Charles ...reated her very chival- ...True, there were occa- ...gs of will when one ...more rubato or speed ...other, but on the whole ...a crisp and sharply ...l performance with no ...al playing.

... to the Memory of My ...rge Koussevitzky," by ... Hanson, which began ...ert, is one of those ...al pieces" that appeal ...ough the occasion than ...of their strictly musical ...It is gravely beautiful; ... of music Matthew Ar- ...ght have written if he ...n a composer. Curi- ...hough, some of its ...ogy reminded one listen- ...st of the "Turandot" of ...—who was not even dis- ...related to Matthew Ar-

...ger's Sixth Symphony ...c in essence and there ...tain spiky phrases that ...d us tonight of the gray, ...g towers of Edinburgh. ...t symphony the playing ... strings particularly had ...ing solemnity that may ...nade parts of the work ...more eloquent than they ...were. They may not have ...d our hearts, but they cer- ... stirred our imagination.

[76]

Just published

LEIGHTON LUCAS

CONCERT CHAMPÊTRE

for VIOLIN and ORCHESTRA

Duration 17 minutes Materials on hire

Violin and Piano

Price 12/6 net

As performed at the Promenade Concerts, London, with tremendous success, by Louis Kaufman

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.

11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1

Founded 1853

AUGENER'S FOR MUSIC

18 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1

(Near Oxford Circus)

Monday till Friday - 9 a.m. till 5 p.m.
Saturday - - - 9 a.m. till 1 p.m.

AUGENER Ltd. stock a large selection of serious music from the catalogues of most of the principal publishers, both English and foreign. In addition customers will find the comprehensive collection of

AUGENER'S EDITION

THE BRITISH EDITION OF CLASSICAL & MODERN MUSIC

CATALOGUES SENT ON REQUEST

AUGENER LTD., 18, Great Marlborough Street, LONDON, W.1

Scala Theatre

CHARLOTTE STREET, W.1 (near Goodge Street Station)

EVENINGS at 7.30 p.m. MATINEE at 2.30 p.m.

THE ENGLISH OPERA GROUP

General Manager: Basil Douglas

presents its Tenth Season

SEPTEMBER 26th — OCTOBER 6th

Repertory:

RUTH
(World premiere of a new opera by Lennox Berkeley)

VENUS and ADONIS
(John Blow)

SAVITRI
(Gustav Holst)

FACADE
(Sitwell–Walton)

THE TURN OF THE SCREW
(Benjamin Britten)

Tickets: 17/6, 15/-, 12/6, 10/-, 7/6, 5/-. Box Office: MUSeum 5731

Until booking opens on September 10th, apply for details to LANgham 3146

(he very nearly became ssional sailor) put the urish to a varied and program.

ann's Piano Concerto described as behaving erfect lady in whatever she found herself. To-th Clifford Curzon and hestra under Charles reated her very chival-True, there were occa-gs of will when one more rubato or speed other, but on the whole a crisp and sharply l performance with no al playing.

to the Memory of My rge Koussevitzky," by Hanson, which began ert, is one of those al pieces" that appeal ough the occasion than of their strictly musical It is gravely beautiful; of music Matthew Ar-ght have written if he n a composer. Curi-hough, some of its ogy reminded one listen-st of the "Turandot" of who was not even dis-related to Matthew Ar-rger's Sixth Symphony c in essence and there tain spiky phrases that d us tonight of the gray, g towers of Edinburgh. t symphony the playing strings particularly had ing solemnity that may nade parts of the work more eloquent than they were. They may not have d our hearts, but they cer-stirred our imagination.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass. ced no encourage-Richard Strauss's young conductors what he would have the Boston Sym-'s trumpeters. They aloft with the un-r of a Louis Arm-a strident, rasping reminiscent of a fire musical instrument, back their way through score. Even in a ority of the two or three great n orchestras by saying that of course, splendid in their y way and no doubt well to raucous contemporary t that they are really not interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

M. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

irst Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- New Lindsey). TUESDAY: lous Mandarin (Covent wards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play dipus Rex (Assembly Y: The Legend of the pire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

If so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra[illegible] A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba[illegible] by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat[illegible] splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no [illegible] festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci[illegible] or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh[illegible] A film has already been shown of Canadian S[illegible] the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of opera. On the stage, [illegible] part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-East musical [illegible] A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice.

The New Statesman and Nation, [illegible] The fact that it was governmental, in status, that its functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian president and that the whole thing had been worked out through the United Nations with the participation of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, would incline the Egyptian government to accord it important attributes in the Convention and to allow

The harvest of the forest is given many fo[illegible]

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT[illegible]

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus[illegible]

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lost, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

WIGMORE HALL

People's Concerts Ltd.

(Chairman : Cyril W. Black, J.P., M.P.)

presents a series of

NINE CONCERTS

by the

Leslie Jones Orchestra

(Leader : Dennis East)

Conductor :

LESLIE JONES

SEPT. 20	DEC. 14	MAR. 8
OCT. 15	JAN. 11	APR. 12
NOV. 30	FEB. 8	MAY 3

at 7.30 p.m.

Soloists include :

PATRICK PIGGOTT (Piano)

ANDRE NAVARRA (Cello)

ELIZABETH FRETWELL (Soprano)

GWYDION BROOKE (Bassoon)

ROSS PRATT (Piano)

LEON GOOSSENS (Oboe)

Tickets : 9/-, 6/- and 3/-

All numbered and reserved from Wigmore Hall (WEL 2141) and Agents.

Management :

ANTHONY ADAMS LTD.

KING GEORGE'S HALL

Adeline Place, Gt. Russell St. W.C.1
(2 min. Tottenham Court Road Station)

DAVIS-REYNOLDS OPERA CLUB

presents

(by arrangement with Universal Edition)

FOR FOUR NIGHTS

WED., SEPT. 19th to SAT., SEPT. 22nd at 7.30 p.m.

First complete performance in England

DON PEDRO RETURNS

Opera in 3 acts by

MOZART

(Erismann)

BEN URI ORCHESTRA

Conductor : Geoffrey Corbett
Producer : Sumner Austin

Tickets : £1.1.0, 10/6, 7/6, 5/- obtainable from 38a, Abercorn Place, St. John's Wood, N.W.8 (CUN 2813) and at Box Office on nights of performances

Just Published

THEME FROM THE FILM

REACH FOR THE SKY

For Piano Solo by

JOHN ADDISON

PRICE 2s. 6d.

This inspiring film, which many believe to be the finest ever made in this country, tells the story of Douglas Bader and is based on the book by Paul Brickhill.

The music is, we firmly believe, worthy of the subject and has been recorded by the R.A.F. Central Band, Sidney Torch and his Orchestra and Billy Cotton and his Band.

FRANCIS, DAY & HUNTER, Ltd.

Educational Department

16 SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.1

Sadler's Wells Theatre

Rosebery Avenue EC1 — Evenings 7 pm

SADLER'S WELLS OPERA

SEASON 1956/57

Opens 13 September with a new production of

MARTHA FLOTOW

Conductor LEO QUAYLE
Producer and Designer POWELL LLOYD

Booking opens 27 August (Mailing List 20 August)

MAILING LIST Subscribers (3/6 per year) may book seats one week in advance of the general public. For details please write to the Mailing List Department, Sadler's Wells Theatre, Rosebery Avenue, EC1

ROYAL ALBERT HALL

HENRY WOOD PROMENADE CONCERTS

BBC presents 62nd Season

Nightly (Suns. excepted) at 7.30 until 15 Sept.

BBC SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
HALLE ORCHESTRA
LONDON PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

Conductors :

SIR MALCOLM SARGENT
BASIL CAMERON
SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI
SIR ADRIAN BOULT

Assistant Conductor :

JOHN HOLLINGSWORTH

Tickets : 8/6, 6/-, 4/-, from Hall (KEN 8212) and usual Agents.

2,000 Promenade 2/6 available nightly at doors. Except for last night.

NEW ERA CONCERTS

Music Director RICHARD AUSTIN

TENTH BIRTHDAY SEASON

ROYAL FESTIVAL HALL

Wednesdays at 8 on :

October 3rd,	1956	January 30th,	1957
,, 31st	,,	February 27th,	,,
November 28th,	,,	March 27th,	,,

Orchestras : ROYAL PHILHARMONIC, LONDON SYMPHONY

Conductors : RICHARD AUSTIN, JAROSLAV KROMBHOLC (Prague) REMUS TZINCOCA (U.S.A.) ROZHDESTVENSKY (U.S.S.R)

Soloists : VLADIMIR ASHKENAZY (U.S.S.R.) GARY GRAFFMAN (U.S.A.) NATHAN MILSTEIN, ANDRE NAVARRA, JULIUS KATCHEN, TOSSY SPIVAKOVSKY

Choir : GOLDSMITHS' CHORAL UNION

Works to be given during the season include :
Symphony No. 3 (Roussel) ; Symphony No. 1 (1st perf.) (Robert Still) ; Pacific 231 (Honegger) ; Violin Concerto (Bartok) ; Les Noces (for 4 Solo Singers, Choir, 4 Pianos and Percussion) (Stravinsky)

FORM YOUR GROUP NOW

For programmes, scheme for 25% reduction in prices for Groups of five or more, send s.a.e. to the Secretary, New Era Concert Society Ltd., Excel House, Excel Court, Whitcomb Street, W.C.2 (TRA 6745)

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at nburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies slobbering pavements make a sad frame for festival. From time to time we are whirled f the murk by Great Art, that most efficient ar hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of opera. On the stage it is a comprehensive Middle-East musical part and parcel of a Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice.

The New Statesman and Nation

The fact that government, in status, that its functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian president and that the whole thing had been worked out through the United Nations with the participation of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, would incline the Egyptian government to accord it important attributes in the Convention and to allow

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

Music and Musicians

...on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...ok at the brass. ...eed no encourage- Richard Strauss's ...oung conductors, what he would have the Boston Sym- ...'s trumpeters. They ...s aloft with the un- ...r of a Louis Arm- ...a strident, rasping ...eminiscent of a fire ...musical instrument, ...merciless hack their way through ...score. Even in ...ability of the two or three great ...n orchestras by saying that ...of course, splendid in their ...y way and no doubt well ...o raucous contemporary ...t that they are really not ...interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductors rather than with orchestra. for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

M. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet massive beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

...n (he very nearly became ...ssional sailor) put the ...ourish to a varied and ... program.

...ann's Piano Concerto ...n described as behaving ...erfect lady in whatever ...y she found herself. To- ...oth Clifford Curzon and ...hestra under Charles ...reated her very chival- ... True, there were occa- ...ugs of will when one ...more rubato or speed ... other, but on the whole ... a crisp and sharply ...al performance with no ...tal playing.

... to the Memory of My ...erge Koussevitzky," by ... Hanson, which began ...ert, is one of those ...al pieces" that appeal ...rough the occasion than ... of their strictly musical ... It is gravely beautiful; ...l of music Matthew Ar- ...ght have written if he ...n a composer. Curi- ...hough, some of its ...logy reminded one listen- ...ast of the "Turandot" of ...—who was not even dis- ...related to Matthew Ar-

...ger's Sixth Symphony ...ic in essence and there ...tain spiky phrases that ...ed us tonight of the gray, ...g towers of Edinburgh. ...t symphony the playing ... strings particularly had ...ing solemnity that may ...made parts of the work ... more eloquent than they ... were. They may not have ...ed our hearts, but they cer- ... stirred our imagination.

...irst Nights

... To-morrow: Cloud- ... New Lindsey). Tuesday: ...lous Mandarin (Covent ...wards Zero (St. James's). ... Timon of Athens (Old ...day: A River Breeze

... To-morrow: Ram ... Ballet (Empire); Village ... Fanny's First Play ...dipus Rex (Assembly ...y: The Legend of the ...pire).

76

HINRICHSEN

TWO NEW BOOKS

ready end of September

JOHN GAY AND THE BALLAD OPERA

THE BEGGAR'S OPERA

by

G. Handley-Taylor & F. Granville Barker with a Prologue by Sir A. P. Herbert and an Appreciation by John Drinkwater, Christopher Fry and Sir Arthur Bliss :
" Through all the Employments of Life "
also
Sections on Pepusch and Hogarth
Cast Lists—Sources—Bibliography
Reproduction of the 52 Beggar's Opera Playing Cards (1727)
Fourteen Caricatures by Powys Evans
130 rather unusual Illustrations
Price between 10/- to 15/-

THE EIGHTH MUSIC BOOK

" The Organ of Bach " and " Silbermann "
by William L. Sumner
" The Organ Music of Bach," including :
A Grading System, The Tempo of Bach's Organ Works, The BWV Numbers,
The Nicknames of the Organ Fugues.
" A Clarified and Annotated Organ Music Guide."
27 Plates—37 pages of actual Music Bibliographies Specifications—A Glossary of Bach's Organ Stops
Price 25/-

HINRICHSEN EDITION LTD.
BACH HOUSE, 10-12 BACHES STREET, LONDON, N.1
(Old Street Underground Station, City Road, Brunswick Place)
CLErkenwell 1638, 1639

London Musical Events

Editorial Office:
13 Heath Drive, Hampstead, London, N.W.3. HAMpstead 1315
Advertising & Publishing Offices:
25 Haymarket, London, S.W.1. TRAfalgar 5777

VOL. 11 No. 8 Established 1946 SEPTEMBER, 1956

Plans for the future at Covent Garden

AT the conclusion of the Opera Season at Covent Garden, a number of plans for the future were announced by the General Administrator. These include the first performance of Janacek's " Jenufa " in England, a new production of " Die Meistersinger " and, if financial conditions allow, the first stage performance in England of Berlioz's " Les Troyens." In addition, it was stated that the Cycles of " Der Ring des Nibelungen " will take place next year in the early autumn, thus allowing time for the preparation of a more interesting summer season. The latter is an eminently sensible decision and one which we have been strongly advocating for some considerable time. London's visitors from overseas are always potential customers for opera and an interesting programme during the period in which foreigners flock into this country is likely to lead to full houses and a full contribution to the exchequer. The choice of " Jenufa " is to be commended, as the opera has been warmly welcomed in many countries and, but for the indisposition of Rafael Kubelik, it would have been heard at an earlier date. Equally interesting is the probability of hearing Berlioz's great work for the first time on the operatic stage. " Die Meistersinger " is certainly due for revival and one of its main points of interest is the fact that, with the exception of the rôle of Hans Sachs, which will be sung by an American, the selected cast is entirely British. This should silence for a while those who refuse to acknowledge that Britain can produce operatic voices. Whether a new production of this opera is necessary is another matter. It is true that the sets at present in use go back to the period before the first world war, but is this a matter of great importance ? It would surely be better to spend the money involved on some opera which has never been staged here previously. Dallapiccola's " Ill Prigioniero " and " Volo di Notte," Prokofiev's " The Love of Three Oranges," Orff's " Antigone," Liebermann's " Penelope " and Strauss's " Die Frau ohne Schatten " are worthy of consideration in view of the fact that they have been received with favour in other countries. It is only by having novelties forced upon them that the public can be aroused from its condition of apathy and conservatism. As the General Administrator rightly observed " New productions are the life-blood of an operatic company." Let us hope that this policy will, for the future, be vigorously pursued and that we may be given the opportunity of bringing ourselves more up-to-date with the trend of contemporary operatic composition.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

...ton in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...ook at the brass. ...eed no encourage- ... Richard Strauss's ...young conductors, ...what he would have ... the Boston Sym- ...'s trumpeters. They ...aloft with the un- ...r of a Louis Arm- ...a strident, rasping ...eminiscent of a fire ...musical instrument, ...merciless hack their way through ...score. Even in a ...of the two or three great ...orchestras by saying that ...of course, splendid in their ...ny way and no doubt well ...to raucous contemporary ...t that they are really not ...interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi, certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet massive beat of this astonishing ... what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

...irst Nights

... TO-MORROW: Cloud- ...(New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ...lous Mandarin (Covent ...wards Zero (St. James's). ...Timon of Athens (Old ...DAY: A River Breeze

... TO-MORROW: Ram ...Ballet (Empire); Village ...Fanny's First Play ...dipus Rex (Assembly ...AY: The Legend of the ...pire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra... A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba... by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in ... Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat... splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no ... festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci... or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh...

A film has already been shown of Canadian S...

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of co... opera. On the stage, however, Middle East ... musical ... part and parcel of a comprehensive ...

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be ... even wider powers in practice.

... important attributes in the Convention and to allow ... would incline the Egyptian government to accord it ... tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, ... out through the United Nations with the participa- ... president and that the whole thing had been worked ... functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian ... The New Statesman and Nation, ... The fact that government, in status, that its ...

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lost, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

The harvest of the forest is given many fo...

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT...
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus...

Diary of Events

SATURDAY, 1 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
HALLE ORCHESTRA
Conductor: SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI
Viennese Music includes:
Overture, Rosamunde .. .. Schubert
German Dances .. Schubert-Webern
Polka .. .. .. Schubert-Tausky
Serenata Notturna, for Strings and Timpani (K.239) .. Mozart
Symphony No. 36, in C (The Linz) (K.425).. .. .. Mozart

OPERA AND BALLET

Royal Festival Hall, at 2.30 and 8
FESTIVAL BALLET
Coppelia
Covent Garden, at 7.30
AMERICAN BALLET THEATRE
Theme and Variations—A Streetcar Named Desire—Rodeo, etc.

MONDAY, 3 SEPTEMBER

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
LONDON PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Conductor: SIR ADRIAN BOULT
Soloists: JOAN SUTHERLAND, JEAN POUGNET, FREDERICK RIDDLE
Overture, Idomeneo .. .. Mozart
Aria, Martern aller arten (Il Seraglio) .. .. .. Mozart
Sinfonia Concertante in E flat, for Violin, Viola and Orchestra (K.364) .. .. Mozart
Symphony No. 41, in C (K.551) (Jupiter) .. .. .. Mozart
Symphonic Study, Falstaff .. Elgar

KABI LARETEI

Kabi Laretei, the Swedish pianist, returns after two years to give recitals at King's Lynn and Wigmore Hall, to broadcast and televise with the B.B.C. Northern Orchestra, and to play the Grieg Concerto six times with the Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra. She will give the first performance at her London recital of a Sonata by her young compatriot Maurice Karkoff.

OPERA AND BALLET

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
FESTIVAL BALLET
Swan Lake (Act II)—Coppelia

TUESDAY, 4 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
LONDON PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Conductor: SIR ADRIAN BOULT
Soloists: DAME MYRA HESS, GEORGE MALCOLM
Overture, Der Freischütz .. Weber
Symphony No. 1, in C .. Beethoven
Pianoforte Concerto in A minor Schumann
Harpsichord Concerto Frank Martin
Symphonic Fragments, Daphnis and Chloe (Second Series) .. Ravel

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Les Sylphides—The Miraculous Mandarin (1st perf. in London)—The Lady and the Fool
Royal Festival Hall, at 8
FESTIVAL BALLET
Swan Lake (Act II)—Coppelia

WEDNESDAY, 5 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor: SIR MALCOLM SARGENT
Soloists: RALPH HOLMES, GERVASE DE PEYER
Polonaise (Eugene Onegin) Tchaikovsky
Violin Concerto in D .. Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 6 in B minor (Pathétique) .. .. Tchaikovsky
Concerto for Clarinet and Strings (1st public perf. in London) Alan Hoddinott
Symphonic Variations .. .. Dvorák

OPERA AND BALLET

Royal Festival Hall at 2.30 and 8
FESTIVAL BALLET
Swan Lake (Act II)—Coppelia
Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Le Lac des Cygnes

THURSDAY, 6 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
B.B.C. CHORUS
B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor: SIR MALCOLM SARGENT
Soloists: JENNIFER VYVYAN, PAMELA BOWDEN, ALEXANDER YOUNG, JAMES MILLIGAN, HARRIET COHEN
Suite No. 3, in D .. .. Bach
Pianoforte Concerto No. 1, in D minor .. .. Bach
Cantata No. 80, Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott .. .. Bach
Motet, Sing ye to the Lord (Conducted by Leslie Woodgate) Bach
Organ Solo, Toccata and Fugue in D minor .. .. .. Bach

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Les Sylphides—The Miraculous Mandarin—Coppelia (Act III)
Royal Festival Hall, at 8
FESTIVAL BALLET
Swan Lake (Act II)—Coppelia

FRIDAY, 7 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductors: SIR MALCOLM SARGENT, JOHN HOLLINGSWORTH
Soloists: FLORENCE HOOTON, CLIFFORD CURZON
Serenade, Eine Kleine Nachtmusik (K.525) .. .. Mozart
Pianoforte Concerto No. 27, in B flat (K.595) .. .. Mozart
Symphony No. 7, in A .. Beethoven
Concert Suite for Violoncello and Orchestra .. .. Alan Bush (1st public perf. in London) (Conducted by the Composer)
Overture, Satyricon .. John Ireland

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Les Sylphides—Birthday Offering—The Lady and the Fool
Royal Festival Hall, at 8
FESTIVAL BALLET
Gala performance in celebration of the sixth anniversary of London's Festival Ballet. Guest Artist: Alicia Markova

JOHN PIPER

John Piper a founder-member of the English Opera Group — which was formed in December, 1946—is a world-famous artist and is working in close co-operation with the Opera Group.

SATURDAY, 8 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY
Conductor: SIR MALCOLM SARGENT
Soloists: JACQUELINE DELMAN, HERVEY ALAN, MOURA LYMPANY
Overture, The Barber of Seville Rossini
Prélude à l'Aprés-midi d'un Faune Debussy
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2, in G minor .. .. Saint-Saëns
Hiawatha, Part II .. Coleridge-Taylor
Suite, Casse Noisette .. Tchaikovsky
Scherzo, for Pianoforte and Orchestra .. .. .. Litolff
Polovtsian Dances (Prince Igor) Borodin

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden, at 2.30 and 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Le Lac des Cygnes
Royal Festival Hall, at 2.30 and 8
FESTIVAL BALLET
Swan Lake (Act II)—Coppelia

MONDAY, 10 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
LONDON PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Conductor: BASIL CAMERON
Soloists: ILSE HOLLWEG, ANDRE GERTLER
Symphony No. 35, in D (Haffner) (K.385) .. .. Mozart
Recit. and Rondo, Mia speranza adorata (K.416) .. .. Mozart
Violin Concerto No. 3, in G (K.216) .. .. .. Mozart
Symphony No. 40, in G minor (K.550) .. .. .. Mozart
Symphony .. .. William Walton

OPERA AND BALLET

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

...on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...ok at the brass. ...eed no encourage- ... Richard Strauss's ... young conductors ... what he would have ... the Boston Sym- ...'s trumpeters. They ... aloft with the un- ...r of a Louis Arm- ... a strident, rasping ...eminiscent of a fire ... a musical instrument, ... their way through ... score. Even in a ... of the two or three great ... orchestras by saying that ... of course, splendid in their ...y way and no doubt well ... to raucous contemporary ...t that they are really not ... interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet ... beat of this astonishing ... Although Koussevitsky has shown what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

...irst Nights

... TO-MORROW: Cloud- ... (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ...lous Mandarin (Covent ...wards Zero (St. James's). ... Timon of Athens (Old ...DAY: A River Breeze

... TO-MORROW: Ram ... Ballet (Empire); Village ... Fanny's First Play ...dipus Rex (Assembly ...AY: The Legend of the ...pire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra... A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba... by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in ... Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat... splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no ... festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci... or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh... A film has already been shown of Canadian S...

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of ... opera. On the stage, hence ... musical ... part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-East ... A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be ... even wider powers in practice. ... important attributes in the Convention and to allow ... would incline the Egyptian government to accord it ... ion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, ... out through the United Nations with the participa- ... president and that the whole thing had been worked ... functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian ... The fact than government, in status, that its ...

The New Statesman and Nation

The harvest of the forest is given many fo...

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT...
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus...

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play, and "every-one visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

BENJAMIN BRITTEN

The world-famous composer Benjamin Britten is a founder-member of the English Opera Group which will present its Tenth Season at the Scala Theatre from September 26th—October 6th. It is hoped that he will conduct his successful opera "The Turn of the Screw."

TUESDAY, 11 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
LONDON PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Conductor: BASIL CAMERON
Soloists: JANOS STRAKER, IRIS LOVERIDGE, CHARLES SPINKS Concerto for Orchestra, with Organ .. .. Handel-Harty
Violoncello Concerto .. .. Prokofiev
Symphony No. 5, in E flat .. Sibelius
Nights in the Gardens of Spain, for Pianoforte and Orchestra Falla
Symphonic Poem, Le Chasseur Maudit .. .. .. Franck

Wigmore Hall, at 7.30
CYRIL SZALKIEWICZ (Piano Recital)

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Le Lac des Cygnes

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

WEDNESDAY, 12 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
LONDON PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Conductor: BASIL CAMERON
Soloist: CLIFFORD CURZON
Overture, Armida .. .. Haydn
Symphony No. 102, in B flat .. Haydn
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2, in B flat .. .. Brahms
Symphony No. 1, in C minor .. Brahms

OPERA AND BALLET

Royal Festival Hall, at 2.30 and 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Les Patineurs—The Miraculous Mandarin —The Lady and the Fool

THURSDAY, 13 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor: SIR MALCOLM SARGENT
Soloist: DAME MYRA HESS
Overture, Le Carnaval romain .. Berlioz
Pianoforte Concerto No. 20, in D minor (K.466) .. .. Mozart
A London Symphony .. Vaughan Williams
Symphonic Variations (1st perf. in London) .. .. Iain Hamilton
Symphonic Poem, Till Eulenspiegel .. .. Strauss

OPERA AND BALLET

Sadler's Wells, at 7
MARTHA

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Noctambules—Symphonic Variations—The Miraculous Mandarin

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

FRIDAY, 14 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY
B.B.C. CHORAL SOCIETY
Conductors: SIR MALCOLM SARGENT, JOHN HOLLINGSWORTH
Soloists: PAULINE BROCKLESS, NORMA PROCTER, WALTER MIDGLEY, OWEN BRANNIGAN, WATSON FORBES
Fantasia and Fugue in C minor Bach-Elgar
Symphony No. 9, in D minor (Choral) .. .. .. Beethoven
Viola Concerto .. .. John Greenwood (1st perf. in London)
Symphonic Poem, The Happy Forest .. .. .. Bax

OPERA AND BALLET

Sadler's Wells, at 7
TOSCA

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Les Sylphides—The Miraculous Mandarin —The Lady and the Fool

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

SATURDAY, 15 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Albert Hall, at 7.30
Henry Wood Promenade Concert
B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductors: SIR MALCOLM SARGENT, BASIL CAMERON
Soloists: CONSTANCE SHACKLOCK, EILEEN JOYCE Overture, Tannhauser .. .. Wagner
Symphonic Poem, Le Rouet d'Omphale .. .. Saint-Saëns
Symphonic Variations, for Pianoforte and Orchestra .. Franck
Symphony No. 7, in C .. .. Sibelius
March, Pomp and Circumstance No. 1, in D .. .. Elgar
Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Purcell .. Benjamin Britten
(a) Sea Songs .. .. arr. Henry Wood
(b) Rule Britannia .. .. Arne
Jerusalem .. .. .. Parry

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden, at 2.30 and 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Les Patineurs—Giselle

Royal Festival Hall, at 2.30 and 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

Sadler's Wells, at 7
MARTHA

MONDAY, 17 SEPTEMBER

OPERA AND BALLET

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

TUESDAY, 18 SEPTEMBER

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Les Patineurs—Giselle

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

ERIC CROZIER

Eric Crozier a founder-member of the English Opera Group wrote the libretto of Lennox Berkley's latest Opera "Ruth" which will receive its first performance at the Scala Theatre on 2nd October.

PETER PEARS

Peter Pears, the well-known tenor is associated with the English Opera Group since its foundation. He will appear in many operas produced during the Season at the Scala Theatre and he has a leading part in Lennox Berkley's new opera "Ruth."

WEDNESDAY, 19 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Wigmore Hall, at 7.30
MIRIAM BURTON (Soprano)
GERALD MOORE (Piano)

OPERA AND BALLET

Royal Festival Hall, at 2.30 and 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

Sadler's Wells, at 7
MARTHA

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET

King George's Hall, at 7.30
Davis-Reynold Studio
DON PEDRO RETURNS (Mozart)

THURSDAY, 20 SEPTEMBER

OPERA AND BALLET

Sadler's Wells, at 7
LA TRAVIATA

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET

King George's Hall, at 7.30
Davis-Reynold Studio
DON PEDRO RETURNS .. .. Mozart

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

FRIDAY, 21 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Wigmore Hall, at 7.30
MEHLI MEHTA (Violin)
GERALD MOORE (Piano)

OPERA AND BALLET

Sadler's Wells, at 7
MARTHA

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET

King George's Hall, at 7.30
Davis-Reynold Studio
DON PEDRO RETURNS .. .. Mozart

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

(he very nearly became sional sailor) put the
urish to a varied and
program.
ann's Piano Concerto
described as behaving
erfect lady in whatever
she found herself. To-
th Clifford Curzon and
hestra under Charles
reated her very chival-
True, there were occa-
gs of will when one nore rubato or speed
other, but on the whole
crisp and sharply
l performance with no
al playing.
to the Memory of My rge Koussevitzky," by
Hanson, which began
ert, is one of those
al pieces" that appeal
ough the occasion than
of their strictly musical
It is gravely beautiful;
of music Matthew Ar-
ght have written if he
n a composer. Curi-hough, some of its
ogy reminded one listen-st of the "Turandot" of
who was not even dis-
related to Matthew Ar-

ger's Sixth Symphony
c in essence and there tain spiky phrases that
ed us tonight of the gray,
g towers of Edinburgh.
t symphony the playing
strings particularly had ing solemnity that may
made parts of the work
more eloquent than they were. They may not have ed our hearts, but they cerstirred our imagination.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass.
eed no encourage-
Richard Strauss's
young conductors.
what he would have
the Boston Sym-
's trumpeters. They aloft with the un-
r of a Louis Arm-
a strident, rasping
eminiscent of a fire
musical instrument,
their way through score. Even in a
of the two or three great
n orchestras by saying that
of course, splendid in their
hy way and no doubt well
to raucous contemporary
t that they are really not interpretation of the staple
classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi throughout, that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet impulsive beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud-
New Lindsey). TUESDAY:
lous Mandarin (Covent
wards Zero (St. James's).
Timon of Athens (Old
DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram
Ballet (Empire); Village
Fanny's First Play
dipus Rex (Assembly
AY: The Legend of the pire).

76]

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra
A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in
Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no
festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci
or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh
A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of co opera. On the stage, hours musical
A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice.

The New Statesman and Nation
The fact that non-governmental, in status, that its functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian president and that the whole thing had been worked out through the United Nations with the participation of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, would incline the Egyptian government to accord it important attributes in the Convention and to allow

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aust

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

SIR FRANCIS CASSEL

Sir Francis Cassel will appear as solo pianist with the London Philharmonic Orchestra on September 16th at the Royal Albert Hall.

SATURDAY, 22 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Wigmore Hall, at 7.30
SCOTTISH JUNIOR SINGERS
Conductor: AGNES DUNCAN

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden, at 2.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET

Royal Festival Hall, at 2.30 and 8
RAM GOPAL Indian Dance Company

Sadler's Wells, at 7
TOSCA

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Les Patineurs—Symphonic Variations—Birthday Offering

King George's Hall, at 7.30
Davis-Reynold Studio
DON PEDRO RETURNS (Mozart)

SUNDAY, 23 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Wigmore Hall, at 3
KAREN KEYS, Piano Recital

Royal Festival Hall, at 7.30
SAXON STATE ORCHESTRA OF DRESDEN
Conductor: RUDOLF KEMPE
Overture, Leonore No. 3 .. Beethoven
Symphonic Poem, Death and Transfiguration .. .. Strauss Symphony No. 2 in D .. Brahms

MONDAY, 24 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor: CHARLES MUNCH
Symphonic Poem, Don Juan .. Strauss
Symphony No. 6 .. Walter Piston
Symphony No. 3 in E flat (Eroica) .. .. .. Beethoven

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
The Miraculous Mandarin—Symphonic Variations—The Firebird

TUESDAY, 25 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Wigmore Hall, at 7.30
PATRICIA GRANT LEWIS, Piano Recital

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Conductor: PIERRE MONTEUX
Overture L'Italiana in Algeri .. Rossini
Symphony No. 2 .. Paul Creston
Suite, Der Rosenkavalier .. Strauss
Symphony No. 3 in F .. .. Brahms

OPERA AND BALLET

Sadler's Wells, at 7
THE MARRIAGE OF FIGARO

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
The Miraculous Mandarin—Symphonic Variations—The Firebird

WEDNESDAY, 26 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Wigmore Hall, at 7.30
THOMAS BROCKMAN, Piano Recital

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
ROYAL PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Conductor: ROYALTON KISCH
Soloist: ERIC HEIDSIECK
Overture, Rosamunde .. .. Schubert
Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat (Emperor) .. .. .. Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 in C minor .. Brahms

21, Holland Park, W.11, at 8.15
ALEXIS KLIGERMAN, Piano Recital

OPERA AND BALLET

Sadler's Wells, at 7
LA TRAVIATA

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET

Scala Theatre, at 7.30
ENGLISH OPERA GROUP
Turn of the Screw

THURSDAY, 27 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Wigmore Hall, at 7.30
JULIAN BREAM (Guitar)

Penrhyn Rooms, Upper Richmond rd, East Sheen, at 8
Barnes Music Club
CYRIL SMITH, PHYLLIS SELLICK, Two Pianos Recital

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
ROYAL PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Conductor: HERBERT MENGES
Soloists: MOISEIWITSCH, DENNIS BRAIN
Overture, Oberon .. .. Weber
Piano Concerto in A minor .. Schumann
Horn Concerto No. 1 in E flat Strauss
Symphony No. 2 in D minor Dvorák

OPERA AND BALLET

Sadler's Wells, at 7
MARTHA

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET

Scala Theatre, at 7.30
ENGLISH OPERA GROUP
Venus and Adonis—Savitri—Facade

FRIDAY, 28 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

All Soul's Church, Langham Pl., W.1, at 12.45
LOTTIE KREBS, Piano Recital
Mozart, Busoni

Wigmore Hall, at 7.30
GLYN TOWNLEY, Piano Recital

21, Holland Park, W.11, at 8.15
POPI OMOURLOGLOU, Piano Recital

OPERA AND BALLET

Sadler's Wells, at 7
CAVALERIA RUSTICANA
I PAGLIACCI

Covent Garden, at 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET

Scala Theatre, at 7.30
ENGLISH OPERA GROUP
Turn of the Screw

SATURDAY, 29 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Wigmore Hall, at 3
JOSEPH BEARZATTI, Tenor
Song Recital

Wigmore Hall, at 7.30
JAMES GIBB, Piano Recital

Royal Festival Hall, at 8
B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
B.B.C. CHORUS
B.B.C. CHORAL SOCIETY
Conductor: OTTO KLEMPERER
Soloists: ANNY SCHLEMM, GRACE HOFFMAN, ANTON DERMOTA, JOSEPH GREINDL Mass in D (Missa Solemnis) .. Beethoven

OPERA AND BALLET

Covent Garden, at 2.30 and 7.30
SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
Les Patineurs—Noctambules—Birthday Offering

Sadler's Wells, at 7
THE MARRIAGE OF FIGARO

Scala Theatre, at 7.30
ENGLISH OPERA GROUP
Turn of the Screw

SUNDAY, 30 SEPTEMBER

CONCERTS

Royal Festival Hall, at 3
NIEDZIELSKI, Piano Recital
Schumann Programme

Wigmore Hall, at 3
KABI LARETEI, Piano Recital
Bach, Mozart
Waltzes, Op. 39.. .. .. Brahms
Woodcuts, Op. 65 .. .. Bentzon
Fantasy in C, Op. 17 .. .. Schumann

Victoria and Albert Museum, at 8
BOYD NEEL ORCHESTRA
Director: THURSTON DART
Soloists: THURSTON DART, GRANVILLE JONES
Programme includes:
Harpsichord Concerto in F major .. .. J. C. Bach
Violin Concerto in E major .. J. S. Bach
Symphony in F major .. .. Boyce

Royal Festival Hall, at 7.30
ROYAL PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Conductor: HERMAN LINDARS
Soloist: JORGE BOLET
Tchaikovsky Programme: Overture, 1812; Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor; Symphony No. 5 in E minor

Programmes and times subject to alteration. Please see Daily Press.

31st Season

LONDON JUNIOR
and
SENIOR ORCHESTRAS

Conductor: ERNEST READ, C.B.E.

REHEARSALS are held in the DUKE'S HALL, ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC (by kind permission)

Fridays, 6-8 p.m. from Sept. 28th (L.J.O.)
Saturdays, 2-4 p.m. from Sept. 29th (Senior)

AUDITIONS by appointment Sept. 24th and 25th

CONCERTS in ROYAL ALBERT HALL, ROYAL FESTIVAL HALL and DUKE'S HALL

JUNIOR ORCHESTRA is mainly for young amateur Players aged 17-25

SENIOR ORCHESTRA is for Teachers and Students of Music; young Professional Players and a few experienced Amateurs. MUSIC FOR REHEARSAL COVERS AN EXTENSIVE REPERTOIRE AND MANY OPPORTUNITIES ARE GIVEN FOR CONCERTO PLAYING

Apply: The Secretary, 151 King Henry's Road, London, N.W.3. PRI 3020

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass. ed no encourage- Richard Strauss's young conductors. what he would have the Boston Sym- 's trumpeters. They aloft with the un- r of a Louis Arm- a strident, rasping reminiscent of a fire musical instrument, their way through score. Even in a n orchestras by saying that of course, splendid in their hy way and no doubt well to raucous contemporary t that they are really not interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather [illegible] tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: alous Mandarin (Covent wards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play dipus Rex (Assembly AY: The Legend of the pire).

(he very nearly became sional sailor) put the urish to a varied and program.
ann's Piano Concerto described as behaving erfect lady in whatever she found herself. To- th Clifford Curzon and hestra under Charles reated her very chival- True, there were occa- gs of will when one nore rubato or speed other, but on the whole crisp and sharply performance with no al playing.
to the Memory of My rge Koussevitzky," by Hanson, which began ert, is one of those al pieces" that appeal ough the occasion than of their strictly musical It is gravely beautiful; of music Matthew Ar- ght have written if he n a composer. Curi- hough, some of its logy reminded one listen- ast of the "Turandot" of who was not even dis- related to Matthew Argger's Sixth Symphony ic in essence and there tain spiky phrases that ed us tonight of the gray, g towers of Edinburgh. t symphony the playing strings particularly had ing solemnity that may made parts of the work more eloquent than they were. They may not have ed our hearts, but they cer- stirred our imagination.

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

If so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh A film has already been shown of Canadian S the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of opera. On the stage, [illegible] musical [illegible] part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle East A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice.

The New Statesman and Nation [illegible] The fact that non-governmental, in status, that its [illegible] functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian president and that the whole thing had been worked out through the United Nations with the participation of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, would incline the Egyptian government to accord it important attributes in the Convention and to allow

THE ROWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

The harvest of the forest is given mainly fo

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "every-one visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some Impressions...

by C·B·REES

Charles Munch

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, on its second European tour, is celebrating its seventy-fifth anniversary, and will be heard at the Edinburgh Festival, in London, in Ireland, and also at several important Continental centres, including Leningrad and Moscow. It is the first American orchestra to visit Russia. It will be conducted by its regular conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, and a guest conductor, Pierre Monteux.

CHARLES MUNCH was born in Strasbourg in 1891, studied the violin at the Conservatoire there, and later in Berlin with Carl Flesch. Subsequently he was leader of the Gewandhaus Orchestra, made his début as a conductor in Paris in 1933. When Cortot founded the Paris Philharmonic Orchestra, Munch assumed its direction, and quickly established a reputation for the presentation of unusual programmes and for his brilliant advocacy of new works. He took over the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1949 after the retirement of Koussevitzky, who had cast his spells in Boston for twenty-five years. And the great traditions of one of the greatest orchestras in the world were soon felt to be in sure and skilful hands.

Charles Munch is an impressive, unloquacious personality, with his head of white hair, his serious, intellectual face which lights up into a delightful smile, his lined forehead, bespeaking concentrated thinking and artistic intensity. I had the privilege of first meeting him when he came to conduct the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra when it was at its war-time base in Bedford. It was immediately obvious that to him the music was everything. He had no prima donna poses or tantrums. He does not seek to linger in the sensations and glories of the occasion. It was a high enterprise and an arduous responsibility to succeed a virtuoso like Koussevitzky. He had to establish himself, for at that time Boston was, musically, Koussevitzky, and Koussevitzky was Boston. Steadily, with unflagging honesty, and without meretricious showmanship, his influence and power grew. He too, was a dedicated artist. His modesty and simplicity, and, of course, his profound musicality made more and more friends. He did not and does not cultivate the limelight; he plays the music.

In private he is warm and gentle. His talk is cultured, widely informed, positive but undogmatic. In the train at Bedford station, en route for London, I was listening to him when he suddenly craned his head to look at something on the platform. At that moment a porter slammed the door of the compartment and caught the famous conductor a resounding crack on the forehead. It almost laid him out, and I am sure that that was one of the most painful journeys he had ever had. He made as light as possible of it, talked to us with a somewhat wry smile, for he must have been in considerable pain, and recreated the impression he cannot help making of being a great gentleman as well as a great conductor.

His book, "I am a Conductor," published in 1955, provides a finely revealing insight into the man and the musician. In it he says little about himself, but much about music and the task—and the honour and responsibility—of interpreting it. It is full of magnificent wisdom. His attitude towards criticism is significant. "I know that, critic or conductor, man is not infallible . . . I for one have been assassinated many times, but I am still among the living. In any case, I have an absolutely inflexible rule never to retort to a criticism. . . In the end it is the public who writes our history . . . there is only one valid, certain, effective way to keep its favour: to practise our art with frankness and joy and to love music more than anything else in the world." That is Munch: from the heart.

Pierre Monteux

PIERRE MONTEUX, born in Paris in 1875, is better known to us here than his distinguished colleague. He founded and conducted the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris, also the Concerts Berlioz. Before the first world war and on returning from it he conducted Diaghilev's Russian Ballet, eloquently espoused the cause of French music (and of Russian), was at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, and was also for a time conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1936 he went to take charge of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, and since, has travelled the world giving glowing performances with the leading orchestras. Like Munch, his motto, as an interpreter, can be fittingly described as suaviter in modo, fortiter in re. Short, stocky, compact, he is a permanent and convincing repudiation of the calendar which—it is a way with calendars—makes him out to be now eight-one. Absurd!

Every time one sees him he looks, if anything, younger. Cheerful, smiling, gracious, he exudes a sense of enjoying his job. If his moustache, which gives him something of the appearance of a character in the famous war cartoons of Bairnsfather, is white, his hair is black. I think he is rather proud of that. He once told me with real concern that some people imagine that he dyes it. He looked at me as if he were discussing a suggestion of sacrilege. He went further, and in the conductor's room in the studio, commanded me to rub my hand in it to prove the infamy of the innuendo. Which I promptly did.

Orchestral players like his quiet methods. He does not manufacture storms; they are unnecessary. Master of

Pierre Monteux

Charles Munch

(he very nearly became ...sional sailor) put the ...urish to a varied and ... program.

...ann's Piano Concerto ... described as behaving ...rfect lady in whatever ... she found herself. To... ...th Clifford Curzon and ...estra under Charles ...eated her very chival... ...rue, there were occa... ...gs of will when one ...ore rubato or speed ...ther, but on the whole ... crisp and sharply ... performance with no ...l playing.

... to the Memory of My ...rge Koussevitzky," by ...ianson, which began ...rt, is one of those ...l pieces" that appeal ...ugh the occasion than ...f their strictly musical ...t is gravely beautiful; ... of music Matthew Ar... ...ht have written if he ...n a composer. Curi... ...hough, some of its ...gy reminded one listen... ...st of the "Turandot" of ... who was not even dis... ...elated to Matthew Ar...

...ger's Sixth Symphony ...c in essence and there ...tain spiky phrases that ...ed us tonight of the gray, ...g towers of Edinburgh. ...t symphony the playing ... strings particularly had ...ing solemnity that may ... made parts of the work ... more eloquent than they ... were. They may not have ...ed our hearts, but they cer... stirred our imagination.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

...on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...ok at the brass. ...ed no encourage... Richard Strauss's ...oung conductors, what he would have ... the Boston Sym... ...'s trumpeters. They ... aloft with the un... ...r of a Louis Arm... ... a strident, rasping ...eminiscent of a fire ... musical instrument, ... their way through ... score. Even in a ...ority of the two or three great ...n orchestras by saying that ... of course, splendid in their ...hy way and no doubt well ... to raucous contemporary ...t that they are really not ... interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather [illegible] tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

TO-MORROW: Cloud... (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ...lous Mandarin (Covent ...wards Zero (St. James's). ...Timon of Athens (Old ...DAY: A River Breeze

TO-MORROW: Ram ... Ballet (Empire); Village ... Fanny's First Play ...dipus Rex (Assembly ...AY: The Legend of the ...mpire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather; dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra... A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba... by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat... splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no ... festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci... or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh...

A film has already been shown of Canadian S...

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of comic opera. On the stage, however, it is even wider powers in practice.

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be important attributes in the Convention and to allow would incline the Egyptian government to accord it tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, out through the United Nations with the participa... president and that the whole thing had been worked functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian ...

The fact that non-governmental, in status, that its ...

The New Statesman and Nation, ...

The harvest of the forest is given making fo...

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMI...

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus...

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "every-one visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the bass pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some his task, whether in the opera house or on the concert platform, using a long baton, reminiscent of Sir Henry Wood's, he speaks softly, wastes no time, gives the instrumentalists the freedom "within the law" they need, does not collect the applause to cherish it, and walks off at the end with a calm sense of faithful achievement. His tastes are catholic and his interpretations are distinguished by clarity, precision, and great beauty of tone. Even after a long and strenuous concert, he appears to be the least fatigued of all the performers. His gestures are communicative, not flamboyant; he does not, as it were, use six strokes where two will do. He assumes competence and enthusiasm in the orchestra, and would hate to have to beat the players on the head in order to get what he wants. And about what he wants there is no doubt.

Monteux wears his vast experience lightly. He creates confidence at once. The orchestra at once knows that he knows. He is one of a team with them. I have never known him make a gesture or adopt an attitude to raise the eyebrows of the audience. It is for the music to create the excitement, not the gesticulatory baton. Again, like Munch, he is a man and musician to whom the term "civilised" can be aptly applied. Music is a civilised art, a matter of culture, and to be practised with natural integrity.

In many talks I had with Constant Lambert on conductors and conducting, the name of Monteux was always cropping up, and Lambert never failed to express his admiration of a man whom he regarded as one of the great maestros of our time.

Musicians of the calibre of Munch and Monteux give noble and unrelaxing service to the art to which they devote their lives, and to the public who are grateful debtors to their genius. The seventy-fifth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have added lustre, and its tour of Europe heightened enjoyment for all who hear it by the ministrations of two such eminent, sensitive and finely-grained artists as Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux.

SIR WILLIAM WALTON

Sir William Walton has written a new work entitled "Johannesburg Festival Overture," commissioned by the South African city for its Festival celebrating its 70th anniversary. Sir Malcolm Sargent is to fly to South Africa to conduct the world-première of this work on September 25th, when it will be played by the South African Broadcasting Corporation Symphony Orchestra. The first English performance will be by the Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra under Efrem Kurtz in November, and London will hear it for the first time in January 1957, when Sir Malcolm Sargent will present it under the auspices of the B.B.C. The work, which is published by Oxford University Press, is described as "gay and unproblematical," and employs fragments of native African melodies.

COVENT GARDEN SADLER'S WELLS BALLET

The Sadler's Wells Ballet is to give a short season from September 4th-29th before it leaves on a provincial tour, prior to its season at the Bolshoi Theatre, Moscow.

A new one-act ballet, "The Miraculous Mandarin," with choreography by Alfred Rodrigues and music by Bela Bartok, is to have its first London performance on the opening night of the season, Tuesday, September 4th. Elaine Fifield and Michael Somes will dance the leading rôles. Other parts will be danced by Alexander Grant, Ray Powell, Pirmin Trecu, Desmond Doyle and Ronald Hynd.

There are to be four performances of Frederick Ashton's newest ballet, "Birthday Offering," created for the 25th Anniversary of the Sadler's Wells Ballet and dedicated to Dame Ninette de Valois.

ARGEO QUADRI

Born in Como, Argeo Quadri spent his youth in Milan, where he studied piano, organ and composition at the Conservatory. He always intended taking up conducting as a profession and began his operatic career at the Carlo Felice Theatre in Genoa. Subsequently he conducted in Trieste, Turin, Venice, Florence, Naples and at La Scala, Milan. He acted as assistant to many of the greatest conductors, including Arturo Toscannini, Antonio Guarnieri, Gino Marinuzzi and Victor de Sabata, his repertory including the works of Verdi, Puccini, Donizetti, Bellini, Massenet, Wagner and others. He is equally at home as a symphonic conductor, in which capacity he has appeared all over Europe and in South America. His taste is catholic and, while he delights in playing the classics, he is also very interested in contemporary music. He is well-known as a recording artist, having made many recordings for the Westminster Company, both in London and Vienna, and for the Italian branch of H.M.V. in Milan. His Westminster recordings include "Don Pasquale" and a complete set of the Concerti Grossi of Corelli. He is hoping to form an orchestra to take round Europe in a series of concerts comprising the twelve Concerti Grossi of Corelli and the six of Geminiani.

Argeo Quadri made his first public appearance in England in July last at Covent Garden, where he directed performances in Italian of "Rigoletto" and "Tosca." He conducted performances of "La Traviata" in the Verdi celebrations at Bussato, the great composer's birthplace, in 1955, and this year he is directing "La Fanciulla del West" and "Madam Butterfly" in the Puccini celebrations at Viareggio. He has himself written much music, including works for chamber ensemble and symphonic poems, but these works are for his own edification and not for publication. His wife is also a musician, formerly a professional pianist, and his chief interests, apart from music, are in literature and astronomy.

NICOLA FILACURIDI

Nicola Filacuridi, one of Italy's most promising young tenors, was born in Alexandria, Egypt, of Italian parents.

Coming of a family of engineers, he himself studied engineering in Athens and

(continued on page 44)

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

If so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather; dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra[illegible] A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba[illegible] by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat[illegible] splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no [illegible] festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci[illegible] or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh[illegible] A film has already been shown of Canadian S[illegible] the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of [illegible] opera. On the stage, [illegible] musical [illegible] part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle East [illegible] A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be [illegible] even wider powers in practice. [illegible] important attributes in the Convention and to allow [illegible] would incline the Egyptian government to accord it [illegible] tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, [illegible] out through the United Nations with the participa- [illegible] president and that the whole thing had been worked [illegible] functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian [illegible] status, that its [illegible]

The New Statesman and Nation, [illegible]

The fact than-governmental, in [illegible] [illegible] "technical", that it had an Egyptian [illegible] functions were [illegible] the whole thing had been worked [illegible] out through the United Nations and Egypt herself, [illegible] tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, [illegible] would incline the Egyptian government to accord it [illegible] important attributes in the Convention and to allow [illegible] in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

The harvest of the forest is given many fo[illegible]

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT[illegible]
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus[illegible]

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened

Music and Musicians

[illegible]on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

[illegible] (he very nearly became [illegible]ssional sailor) put the [illegible]ourish to a varied and [illegible] program.

[illegible]ann's Piano Concerto [illegible] described as behaving [illegible]erfect lady in whatever [illegible] she found herself. To[illegible]oth Clifford Curzon and [illegible]hestra under Charles [illegible]reated her very chival[illegible] True, there were occa[illegible]ugs of will when one [illegible] more rubato or speed [illegible] other, but on the whole [illegible] a crisp and sharply [illegible]al performance with no [illegible]al playing.

[illegible] to the Memory of My [illegible]rge Koussevitzky," by [illegible] Hanson, which began [illegible]ert, is one of those [illegible]al pieces" that appeal [illegible]rough the occasion than [illegible] of their strictly musical [illegible] It is gravely beautiful; [illegible] of music Matthew Ar[illegible]ght have written if he [illegible]en a composer. Curi[illegible] enough, some of its [illegible]logy reminded one listen[illegible]ast of the "Turando" of [illegible] who was not even dis[illegible] related to Matthew Ar[illegible]

[illegible]gger's Sixth Symphony [illegible]ic in essence and there [illegible]rtain spiky phrases that [illegible]ed us tonight of the gray, [illegible]g towers of Edinburgh. [illegible]t symphony the playing [illegible] strings particularly had [illegible]ning solemnity that may [illegible] made parts of the work [illegible] more eloquent than they [illegible] were. They may not have [illegible]ed our hearts, but they cer[illegible]y stirred our imagination.

[illegible]ok at the brass. [illegible]ed no encourage[illegible] Richard Strauss's [illegible]oung conductors, [illegible] what he would have [illegible] the Boston Sym[illegible]'s trumpeters. They [illegible] aloft with the un[illegible] of a Louis Arm[illegible] a strident, rasping [illegible]minisсent of a fire [illegible] a musical instrument, [illegible] back their way through [illegible]jority of the two or three great [illegible]n orchestras by saying that [illegible], of course, splendid in their [illegible]hy way and no doubt well [illegible] to raucous contemporary [illegible]ut that they are really not [illegible] interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

[illegible] — To-morrow: Cloud- [illegible] (New Lindsey). Tuesday: [illegible]ulous Mandarin (Covent [illegible]wards Zero (St. James's). [illegible] Timon of Athens (Old [illegible]day: A River Breeze

[illegible] — To-morrow: Ram [illegible] Ballet (Empire); Village [illegible] Fanny's First Play [illegible]edipus Rex (Assembly [illegible]ay: The Legend of the [illegible]mpire).

COMPOSERS' FORUM

Subject : SYMPHONIC VARIATIONS

Composer : IAIN HAMILTON

IN the composition of my "Symphonic Variations" and of my Violin Concerto I was confronted with one of the fundamental problems of creative work—the degree of subjectivity or objectivity of attitude. If one is writing, for example a string quartet or a symphony, it will be expressive of certain cross-currents of feeling and emotion which in the process of creation will be absorbed into the whole and these subtle factors will give life and meaning to what would otherwise by nothing but a mere writing of notes or a creation of sound for its own sake. This expressive force underlies all great art, whether primitive or highly developed.

There is no need for the nature of these feelings to be divulged. We do not need to know what affected the great masters during the composition of their works to be able to appreciate them no matter how interesting such knowledge may be. The fact that they were great artists allows one to assume that their experience of life in connection with their great sensitivity and perception led them through the whole gamut of emotional impact and intensity of living. Biographically details of this may be interesting, but in relation to the music itself it is not of essential importance.

When, however, one is expressing something which is at once more subjective, as when one is allied to the use of words in a text, or for instance when one divulges, if only generally, circumstances which had a direct bearing on the creation of the work, then quite another problem is encountered.

My "Symphonic Variations" were composed as a commemoration of certain feats of incomparable courage and endurance during the last war. These may remain anonymous for no doubt everyone has his own knowledge of those who at a given moment in their lives have done something so immeasurably fine as to raise man, ironical as it may be, above the holocaust of his own creation. Any such act of true heroism is of undying stimulus to a creative and imaginative mind. In my Violin Concerto I wished to make a tribute to the memory of my Father, and this again raised the problem of a more definite kind of expression than if no such intention on my part had been divulged.

In the reaction away from 19th Century romanticism the expressive or subjective function of musical creation was by many considered a weak tendency at a time of accelerated experiment. No great art of any kind, however, is devoid of an expressive power—from the earliest times it has been its very raison d'etre. This subjectivity did during the 19th century, however, get completely out of hand, and 20th century composers have almost without exception been concerned with a return to form and a sense of inner organisation which lay at the root of the greatness of so much of the music of the classical tradition. They wished music once more to be allowed to stand on its own, free from the unnecessary hindrances of the sister arts; free from any shadow of the Gesamtkunstwerk. Hindemith, Stravinsky and Webern, to mention only three of the great figures of our time, have found inspiration in the attitude of musicians from the 15th to the 18th centuries. This reaction away from the 19th is obvious in composers who wish to balance the fire and freedom of creative thought with the more organised forces of form and logic. This balance is of course the core of any great work of any period—form and content held in balance and the free interplay of each stimulating the other consciously or unconsciously in creator and listener.

One may find perfect examples of this in works from such diverse periods as those of Bach and Stravinsky, where but to take a single example from each—the B minor Mass and the Symphony of Psalms—one finds a burning and devout sense of true religious feeling allied to meticulous craftsmanship and inner logic of incredible and miraculous complexity. Neither hinders the other. Equally in the Hindemith Symphony in E flat and in the "Eroica" one meets a heroic intensity allied to a fine classical sense of form which makes each work, if in entirely different ways, far more satisfying than the "Heldenleben" of Strauss for all its other splendours. The too great subjectivity of this last piece is as ruinous to it as is the formal precision allied to a wonderful fire the very strength of the same composer's "Till Eulenspiegel."

This relaxation of form and excess of content brought music to the nadir of a sickly romanticism and morbidity in which every aspect of self-pity, introspection and unhealthiness was explored to the full. After music of this kind, how refreshing it is to turn to the clean texture and crystal precision of Stravinsky, the rock-like power of Hindemith, or the exhilaration of Bartok! These composers have managed to control their emotions without allowing them to shatter the form at the precise moment when a certain retention of formal elements is essential to underlie the most furious moments of creative energy. Beethoven can express the tremendous human drama of "Fidelio" without disregarding a most superbly logical tonal and thematic structure. The Quartet "Mir ist so wunderbar" moves us no less because of the inner organisation of its music—it does not get in the way, it aids incomparably the intangible expressive beauty of that most profound of pieces.

If therefore in the composition of a Violin Concerto written in memory of someone one allowed this very fact of inspiration to outweigh the musical sense of the work then it would be lacking in proportion. If one chooses to express oneself within the form of a concerto then the composition of a good concerto in itself is of first importance—this will be a more sincere tribute than a work in which subjectivity has overridden its bounds and made havoc of the musical meaning of the work itself. No amount of extramusical explanations will excuse or cover an ill-conceived or ill-constructed piece no matter how fine some of its content may be.

For this reason I felt that any detailed information about the dedication of my "Symphonic Variations" to a hero, about the quotation from Schubert or about the words "de profundis clamavi" written in the score at the climax of the slow movement—any details about these things seem unimportant and they do not help the clarification of anything which is of purely musical importance but serve rather to side-track it. A great part of the wonder of music always rests in its intangibility; the infinite shades of subtlety of expression and sensitivity. This allied to an inner logic does, at its best, produce the work of genius. A realisation of this fact is in itself of great value to any creative artist. A realisation of this in his work is something to which only the truly great can attain. They leave us a legacy of great worth from which we may unceasingly learn and at which we may unceasingly wonder.

(he very nearly became sional sailor) put the
urish to a varied and
program.
ann's Piano Concerto
described as behaving rfect lady in whatever
she found herself. To-
th Clifford Curzon and estra under Charles eated her very chival-
true, there were occa-
s of will when one ore rubato or speed
ther, but on the whole
crisp and sharply
performance with no
playing.
to the Memory of My ge Koussevitzky," by Hanson, which began rt, is one of those l pieces" that appeal ugh the occasion than f their strictly musical
it is gravely beautiful;
of music Matthew Ar-
ht have written if he
n a composer. Curi-ough, some of its
gy reminded one listen-
st of the "Turandot" of
—who was not even dis-
related to Matthew Ar-
ger's Sixth Symphony
e in essence and there
tain spiky phrases that
ed us tonight of the gray,
g towers of Edinburgh.
t symphony the playing
strings particularly had ing solemnity that may
made parts of the work
more eloquent than they were. They may not have
ed our hearts, but they cerstirred our imagination.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass.
ed no encourage-
Richard Strauss's
oung conductors.
what he would have
the Boston Sym-
's trumpeters. They aloft with the unr of a Louis Arm-
a strident, rasping
miniscent of a fire
a musical instrument, herself back their way through ority of the two or three great
n orchestras by saying that
, of course, splendid in their
hy way and no doubt well
to raucous contemporary ut that they are really not interpretation of the staple
classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The whole-hive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud-
(New Lindsey). TUESDAY:
ulous Mandarin (Covent
wards Zero (St. James's).
Timon of Athens (Old
DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram
Ballet (Empire); Village
Fanny's First Play
dipus Rex (Assembly
AY: The Legend of the
mpire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra
A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in
Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no
festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acc
or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh
A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of comic opera. On the stage, [illegible] part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-East musical settlement on these lines should be [illegible] it even wider powers in practice.

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be [illegible] important attributes in the Convention and to allow [illegible] would incline the Egyptian government to accord it [illegible] tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, [illegible] out through the United Nations with the participa- [illegible] president and that the whole thing had been worked [illegible] functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian [illegible]

The New Statesman and Nation, [illegible]
The fact that [illegible]-governmental, in status, that its [illegible]

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

The English Opera Group 1946—1956

"The Turn of The Screw"
Jennifer Vyvyan, David Hemmings, Olive Dyer

WHEN a young company with great ambitions reaches the tenth year of its existence, it is time to look back and see to what extent its ambitions have been achieved. In December, 1946, the English Opera Group was formed by Benjamin Britten, Eric Crozier and John Piper who, affirming their belief in opera as an art form, said at the time: "We believe the time has come when England, which has never had a tradition of native opera, but has always depended on a repertory of foreign works, can create its own operas. Opera is as much a vital means of artistic expression as orchestral music, drama, and painting. The lack of it has meant an impoverishment of English artistic life. We believe the best way to achieve the beginnings of a repertory of English operas is through the creation of a form of Chamber Operas requiring small resources of singers and players, but suitable for performances in large or small opera houses or theatres."

At that time, they had already presented to the public such an opera with such a company during the previous summer, when John Christie gave, at Glyndebourne, the first performances of Britten's "The Rape of Lucretia," which met with much success. From this company was formed the English Opera Group who, for their first season in 1947, gave, again at Glyndebourne, the first performances of Britten's "Albert Herring," together with further performances of "The Rape of Lucretia." Since then, in spite of continual and ever-increasing financial difficulties, the plan has grown and developed. The Group has commissioned and performed six original British operas, and new versions of three ballad-operas. It has given more than seven hundred performances of operas, in addition to sound and television broadcasts and gramophone recordings; presented concerts in London and the provinces; and, in 1949, stimulated the first Aldeburgh Festival and the launching of the Opera School.

Although a great deal of the Group's work has naturally been done in the United Kingdom, it has been a regular and welcome visitor abroad, in Germany, France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Italy, and Scandinavia, to mention a few. In 1954, "The Turn of the Screw," which many consider Benjamin Britten's finest work in the operatic field and which is the synthesis of all the original intentions of the company's founders, received its world premiére at the Venice Festival, since when it has been given all over the continent with unprecedented success, culminating in the recent triumph at this year's Paris Festival. "The Turn of the Screw" will again be heard in London during the Group's coming season at the Scala Theatre: it will be conducted on various occasions by Benjamin Britten himself and by Charles Mackerras. The cast will include Jennifer Vyvyan, Peter Pears, Arda Mandikian, Olive Dyer, and David Hemmings, all in their original parts, as well as Lotte Medak, and some performances by a new Governess (Emerentia Scheepers), Flora (Maria Zeri), and Quint (Raymond Nilsson).

Lennox Berkeley's latest opera, "Ruth," with a libretto by Eric Crozier, will receive its first performances at the Scala Theatre during the season. The cast will include Anna Pollak, Peter Pears, Una Hale, April Cantelo and Thomas Hemsley; it will be produced by Peter Potter, designed by Ceri Richards, and conducted by Charles Mackerras. To "Ruth" and "The Turn of the Screw," completing the season, will be added the charming 17th century masque-opera by John Blow, "Venus and Adonis," which, in a new realisation by Imogen Holst, has been designed by Duncan Grant; the producer is Clifford Williams, and the casts include Heather Harper, Maria Zeri, April Cantelo and Thomas Hemsley; "Savitri," by Gustav Holst, with Arda Mandikian in the name part, Peter Pears as Satyavan, and Thomas Hemsley as Death; and "Facade," the delightful entertainment with poems by Dame Edith Sitwell and music by Sir William Walton.

This anniversary season at the Scala Theatre will open on September 26th, and, while closing the doors on its first decade, it will see the English Opera Group looking forward to new and greater ambitions.

COLIN GRAHAM

"Venus and Adonis"

Heather Harper and Thomas Hemsley

Photo: Julie Hamilton

ENGLISH OPERA GROUP
The company at Glyndebourne in 1947, when Britten's "Albert Herring" and "The Rape of Lucretia" were performed. Sitting: (left to right) Eric Crozier, Nancy Evans, Frederick Ashton, Benjamin Britten, Joan Cross, Peter Pears, Gladys Parr, Anne Sharp. Those standing include: Betsy de la Porte, Frederick Sharp, Norman Lumsden, Anne Wood, Lesley Duff, William Parsons, Roy Ashton, Margaret Ritchie, Richard Lewis.

(he very nearly became sional sailor) put the
urish to a varied and
program.
ann's Piano Concerto
described as behaving
erfect lady in whatever
she found herself. To-
th Clifford Curzon and
hestra under Charles
reated her very chival-
True, there were occa-
gs of will when one more rubato or speed
other, but on the whole
a crisp and sharply
l performance with no
al playing.
to the Memory of My
rge Koussevitzky," by Hanson, which began
ert, is one of those
al pieces" that appeal
ough the occasion than
of their strictly musical
It is gravely beautiful;
of music Matthew Ar-
ght have written if he
n a composer. Curi-
ough, some of its
logy reminded one listen-ast of the "Turandot" of
who was not even dis-
related to Matthew Ar-

gger's Sixth Symphony
ic in essence and there rtain spiky phrases that
ed us tonight of the gray,
g towers of Edinburgh.
t symphony the playing the strings particularly had ning solemnity that may
made parts of the work
more eloquent than they were. They may not have
ed our hearts, but they cer-
y stirred our imagination.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass.
ced no encourage-
Richard Strauss's
young conductors,
what he would have
the Boston Sym-
's trumpeters. They aloft with the unr of a Louis Arm-
a strident, rasping
eminiscent of a fire
musical instrument,
their way through score. Even in a
ority of the two or three great
n orchestras by saying that
of course, splendid in their
hy way and no doubt well
to raucous contemporary
t that they are really not interpretation of the staple
classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra. for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather [illegible] tempi, certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud-
(New Lindsey). TUESDAY:
lous Mandarin (Covent
wards Zero (St. James's).
Timon of Athens (Old
DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram
Ballet (Empire); Village
Fanny's First Play
dipus Rex (Assembly
AY: The Legend of the
mpire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra
A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in
Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no
festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci
or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh
A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of c[illegible]
opera. On the stage, [illegible]
musical [illegible]
A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-Eastern it even wider powers in practice.
important attributes in the Convention and to allow would incline the Egyptian government to accord it
tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself,
out through the United Nations with the participapresident and that the whole thing had been worked functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian [illegible] "non-governmental", in status, that its
The fact than governmental, in status, that its

The New Statesman and Nation, [illegible]

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the mainatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

76

Festival Ballet

at the Royal Festival Hall

By G. B. L. WILSON

THERE has rarely been an empty seat in the Festival Hall during this fifth London season of the Festival Ballet. This is as it should be, for the Company is a fine one and is appreciated as much in London as it is on its tours abroad. Their success should greatly help them to recover from the deplorable financial straits in which they recently found themselves. The Company was originaly formed as a frame to display Alicia Markova and Anton Dolin, but, when Markova left, the troupe was able to stand (or rather, dance) on its own feet, with only occasional help from "guest stars"—in fact many of its guest artists have been more of a liability than an asset.

For the most part the repertoire is classical. Not only is this a box-office necessity ("Swan Lake" is still the most popular ballet in England), but it suits the "English style" of the dancers. This season's two novelties, however, have been in the modern idiom and neither, alas, completely successful. "Homage to a Princess" was produced in Monte Carlo as part of the wedding celebrations, and was first seen in London on July 11th. Michael Charnley's choreography is, of course, "modern," and the ballet has an amusing opening with the men poised motionless in awkward attitudes, as in the children's game of "Statues." Anita Landa enters and they come to life as she touches them. After that little of note happens. There is a delicate duet between John Gilpin and Belinda Wright, but the ballet never gets into its stride and has little connexion with the pounding, strident music of Stan Kenton, while André Levasseur's costumes have none of the elegance of his work for the Sadler's Wells Ballet ("La Péri" or "Birthday Offering"). The ballet only comes to life in flashes—when Anita Landa comes on the stage. She alone appears to have any feeling for the music, and as she struts jauntily about the stage, her eyes flashing, we feel that we are having a glimpse of what the choreographer intended for his wedding piece.

The other novelty was more interesting—"Les Deux Errants," devised by Wolfgang Brunner, one of the Company's dancers, to music by a jazz-player, Bill Russo. It is "contemporary," which nowadays means that it is about "mixed-up" people—like the rôles of the late James Dean, like John Osborne's play, "Look Back in Anger," and like so much in literature and art this year.

What are "mixed-up" people, that we hear so much about them? Apparently they are people of slightly subnormal mentality who consequently cannot cope with the increasing complexities of modern life. To cover up this lack of comprehension or adaptability they assume an aggressive or quarrelsome air, they feel that the world is against them and they carry a heavy chip on their shoulders. In turn, this attitude brings out all that is best in women—their maternal instinct, their sympathy and their touching, selfless devotion. All this is dramatically shown in the ballet, which had, as its best feature, a Steinberg-like decor by Dan Snyder, in which the difficulties of life were played by vague, camouflaged dancers who merged into the scenery—with a real coup-de-théâtre when the hero is first entangled in them. Much more should have been made of this ingenious idea—it could have made a masterpiece of a work which is, nevertheless, intensely interesting. Belinda Wright, as always, was delightful in her rôle, but the ballet meant little until the choreographer himself took over the part of the "mixed-up hero." Then, in a flash, Wolfgang Brunner made us see what was in his mind when he created this rather terrifying study of our times. And if one asks why we have not heard about "mixed-up" people before, it is probably because until recently they were happily digging ditches, ploughing fields and emptying dustbins. Nowadays they are operating capstan lathes and painting abstract pictures—and their unaccustomed salaries and leisure have taken them out of their proper milieu. Automation is a pressing necessity to our civilization.

Finally to the chief delights of the season. Harald Lander's "Etudes" is, without any doubt, the most exhilarating and pleasing ballet in the world today—and Toni Lander is among the greatest dancers to be seen anywhere. She is beautiful, seductive, feminine and utterly charming—but with a technical facility which takes one's breath away. When she raises her eyes to look at her partner, it is like the sun coming out from behind a cloud. And her partners are the brilliant John Gilpin and the young Dane, Flemming Flindt, already a rival to Gilpin himself. In Lander's "Napoli," too, these three dancers show ballet at its very best, and one notices with pleasure the emergence of the Australian, Marilyn Burr, as a ballerina, and the progress since last season of Joyce Lyndon, Estella Nova, Dianne Richards and Diane Westerman. One's only regret is that a version of "Spectre de la Rose" is being given in which the worst possible taste is being shown in the man's costume. In fact, the costume now hardly exists at all, and one wonders if, next season, they will begin to undress the girl also.

Later in the season Josette Clavier appeared in the classical ballets as guest artist, and Harald Lander's version (the version of the Royal Danish Ballet) of "Coppelia" was to be presented.

Mr. Arnold Haskell is on holiday and will resume his regular contributions on his return.

"The Nutcracker" Foreground: Belinda Wright and John Gilpin

THE OBSERVER

· 1791 ·

22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4

Fleet Street 9991

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass. eed no encourage- Richard Strauss's oung conductors, what he would have the Boston Sym- s trumpeters. They aloft with the un- r of a Louis Arm- a strident, rasping eminiscent of a fire a musical instrument, ack their way through ority of the two or three great n orchestras by saying that , of course, splendid in their hy way and no doubt well to raucous contemporary t that they are really not o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather [illegible] tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: dous Mandarin (Covent wards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play dipus Rex (Assembly AY: The Legend of the mpire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of [illegible] opera. On the stage, [illegible] part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle East musical [illegible]

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be [illegible] even wider powers in practice.

The fact that it was [illegible] that its [illegible] functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian president and that the whole thing had been worked out through the United Nations with the participation of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, would incline the Egyptian government to accord it important attributes in the Convention and to allow it even wider powers in practice.

The New Statesman and Nation

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

Glyndebourne Festival—II

"Die Zauberflöte"

"DIE ZAUBERFLÖTE" has not figured in the Glyndebourne programme since 1937, and its restoration to the repertory, in a new production by Carl Ebert, with designs by Oliver Messel, was looked forward to with eager anticipation. Unfortunately, the results did not entirely come up to expectation for a variety of reasons. "Die Zauberflöte" is one of the most difficult of all operas to make convincing, and neither the décor nor the costumes seemed to solve all the problems involved. Again, Vittorio Gui is an admirable conductor of Opera in Italian, but "Die Zauberflöte" is as different as could be possibly imagined from "Le Nozze di Figaro" and requires a completely different approach. This approach was not sufficiently appreciated by the Conductor, who tended to sentimentalise the music and who adopted a tempo so slow that at times it became almost intolerable. Notable examples of this were the "Padlock" Quintet in the first act and the March of the Priests which opens the second act. Nor was the casting of the opera, particularly as regards the hero and heroine, altogether happy. Ernst Haefliger, who sang Tamino, possesses a voice of ample proportions, but it is tight in the upper register and he is stiff in his acting. Pilar Lorengar looked lovely as Pamina, but her singing could be likened to a mountain stream, clear but cold as ice. Pamina, more so, perhaps, than any of Mozart's heroines, should touch the heart of the listener, but, in this instance, she left one unmoved. Sarastro, on the other hand, was splendidly portrayed by Frederick Guthrie, an American from the State Opera, Vienna. A magnificent figure of a man, with a fine bass voice, he was one of the big successes of the evening. Geraint Evans's Papageno we already know from his appearances at Covent Garden: it is an endearing interpretation and he appeared to be quite unaffected by the transfer from English to German. Mattiwilda Dobbs's Queen of the Night is also familiar, and once again she sung the rôle accurately and dramatically. The voices of Joan Sutherland, Cora Canne Meijer and Monica Sinclair blended charmingly as the Three Ladies, Kevin Miller was a humorous Monostatos, Naida Labay a sprightly Papagena, and Thomas Hemsley a commendably distinct Speaker. The first performance, it must be recorded, took place amid intermittent thunderstorms, which may have had some effect upon the production, but there were odd sounds from time to time from the orchestral pit and the scenic effects did not always behave with the customary Glyndebourne smoothness.

It was a great pleasure to hear "Cosi fan Tutte" again after an interval of two seasons. This opera has always been one of Glyndebourne's happiest presentations, and this year's performance, beautifully sung and humorously acted, was in no way inferior to its predecessors. Sena Jurinac was once again available to give her superb interpretation of the rôle of Fiordiligi. She was in splendid voice and her performances of "Come Scoglio" and "Per pieta" were real tours de force. Nan Merriman's mezzo-soprano voice blended well with that of Sena Jurinac in the duets, and her Dorabella was one of the best we have encountered at Glyndebourne. Elena Rizzieri was a delicious Despina, full of mischief and joie de vivre, and her performance, coupled with that of Susanna in "Le Nozze di Figaro," marked her out as one of the biggest successes of this year's season. Richard Lewis and Sesto Bruscantini, returning to the parts of Ferrando and Guglielmo, sang and acted with pathos and humour, as the occasion demanded, and Ivan Sardi, a newcomer, was a first-rate Don Alfonso. The concerted numbers, which constitute such an important item in this work, were sung to perfection under the spirited direction of Vittorio Gui, and Rolf Gerard's simple, but effective, sets were again used. Carl Ebert's production is inclined to exaggeration of the comic business, but this was small matter in a performance which sparkled from beginning to end. The Orchestra was at the top of its form and made a valuable contribution to the success of the evening.

GEORGE MONTAGU

ROYAL AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY CONCERT IN ST. JAMES'S PALACE

H.R.H. The Princess Royal was present on July 23rd when the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, under its conductor Arthur Davison, gave a concert in the State Apartments of St. James's Palace. The concert was organised by the Overseas League. The soloists were Winifred Scott, Canadian pianist, and Rohan de Saram, the young Singhalese 'cellist.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

...on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...ok at the brass. ...eed no encourage- ... Richard Strauss's ...oung conductors ... what he would have ... the Boston Sym- ...'s trumpeters. They ... aloft with the un- ...r of a Louis Arm- ... a strident, rasping ...miniscent of a fire ... a musical instrument, ...hack their way through ...were. Even in a ...ority of the two or three great ...an orchestras by saying that ..., of course, splendid in their ...hy way and no doubt well ... to raucous contemporary ...ut that they are really not ...o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet ...beat of this astonishing ... and shown what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- ...(New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ...ulous Mandarin (Covent ...owards Zero (St. James's). ... Timon of Athens (Old ...DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram ... Ballet (Empire); Village ... Fanny's First Play ...edipus Rex (Assembly ...DAY: The Legend of the ...mpire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra... A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba... by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat... splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no ... festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci... or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh... A film has already been shown of Canadian S...

The harvest of the forest is given many fo...

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT...

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus...

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of co... opera. On the stage, hung of a comprehensive Middle-East musical ... part and parcel of a ...

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be ... it even wider powers in practice.

... important attributes in the Convention and to allow would incline the Egyptian government to accord it ... tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, out through the United Nations with the participa... president and that the whole thing had been worked ... functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian ... The fact that governmental, in status, that its ...

The New Statesman and Nation, S...

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "every-one visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

OXFORD MUSIC

For the City of Johannesburg's 70th Anniversary

SIR WILLIAM WALTON

has been commissioned to write

JOHANNESBURG FESTIVAL OVERTURE

The world premiere will be conducted by Sir Malcolm Sargent, in Johannesburg on 25 September. The British premiere will be given by the Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra under Efrm Kurtz on 13 November, and the first performance in London will be on 23 January, by Sir Malcolm Sargent and the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra.

A complete brochure of Sir William Walton's works is available on request.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
Music Department
44 CONDUIT STREET, LONDON, W.1

Published in commemoration of the Schumann centenary

Schumann
and the Romantic Age
by Marcel Brion

(Translated by Geoffrey Sainsbury)

'A remarkable achievement' — RICHARD CHURCH

Marcel Brion, the well-known French critic and novelist has written a most important critical analysis of Schumann and his position in the cultural world of that time

Recommended by the Book Society

Illustrated 21s.

Collins

book review

LISZT, by Walter Beckett. Dent.

This is one of the shortest, and one of the more disappointing, of the Master Musicians series. Using the acknowledged authorities, Walter Beckett (Mus.D., Dublin) has compiled rather a skilful 80-page account of the Abbé's colourful life, and has produced a little original material from the diary of John Orlando Parry, the comic singer of the concert party with which Liszt toured Ireland in 1840-1, and from Dr. Sgambati of Rome, whose father was a Liszt pupil. But why should the author find it "amazing" that Liszt could have a passionate love affair at the age of 58?

The 50-page account of the music is less satisfactory. In the space it can hardly be anything but perfunctory: but again and again Walter Beckett conveys the impression that he has no sympathy with, little enjoyment of—almost, one feels, little understanding of—Romantic music. Liszt's method of thematic transformation ("quite a speciality of his own") is dismissed in two derogatory sentences ("whether it produces any effect of unifying the music is very doubtful, and certainly successful instances of its employment are rare"). There is muddled thinking. Berlioz's music "is often so theatrical that it seems more suited to the operatic than the concert stage." Again and again one has the impression of someone trying hard to be fair, trying hard to find something nice to say, but secretly disapproving of it all.

There are the usual valuable appendices of the series, but the catalogue of works is much less thorough than Searle's one in Grove. Walter Beckett knows that compositions are no longer ascribed to Salvator Rosa, but not that the Campo Santo frescoes are no longer ascribed to Orcagna.

A.P.

HANS VON BULOW AND RICHARD STRAUSS — Correspondence, edited by Willi Schuh and Franz Trenner. Boosey and Hawkes. 10s. 6d.

Despite the fact that Richard Strauss has been dead for six years, very little has been written about him in England. While awaiting a full and authoritative study, anything which throws further light on one of the most eminent of twentieth century German composers is of interest. Hans von Bülow acted as Strauss's mentor from the start of his career and this series of letters between the two musicians covers the period 1884-1893. To an English reader, the younger composer's use of superlatives and his unctuous manner must be distasteful, but, as Anthony Gishord who has made the translation states in the preface, these characteristics are less objectionable in the original German.

A.P.

New Music

Reviewed by Andrew Porter

RICORDI

Ricordi have most splendidly answered our plea for miniature scores of the Mozart symphonies, by producing 49 of them, either available separately at prices varying between 2s. 6d. for the

(he very nearly became sional sailor) put the
urish to a varied and
program.
ann's Piano Concerto
described as behaving
erfect lady in whatever
she found herself. To-
th Clifford Curzon and
hestra under Charles
reated her very chival-
True, there were occa-
gs of will when one
more rubato or speed
other, but on the whole
a crisp and sharply
al performance with no
al playing.
to the Memory of My
rge Koussevitzky," by Hanson, which began
ert, is one of those
al pieces" that appeal
ough the occasion than
of their strictly musical
It is gravely beautiful;
of music Matthew Ar-
ight have written if he en a composer. Curi-hough, some of its
logy reminded one listen-last of the "Turandot" of
—who was not even dis-
related to Matthew Ar-

gger's Sixth Symphony
ic in essence and there ertain spiky phrases that ded us tonight of the gray, ng towers of Edinburgh.
at symphony the playing strings particularly had ning solemnity that may
made parts of the work
more eloquent than they ly were. They may not have ched our hearts, but they cer-ly stirred our imagination.

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass.
ced no encourage-
Richard Strauss's
oung conductors
what he would have
the Boston Sym-
's trumpeters. They aloft with the un-
of a Louis Arm-
a strident, rasping
minisceent of a fire
musical instrument,
back their way through score. Even in a
of the two or three great an orchestras by saying that
, of course, splendid in their
hy way and no doubt well
to raucous contemporary ut that they are really not o interpretation of the staple

classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

M. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet massive beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud-
(New Lindsey). TUESDAY:
ulous Mandarin (Covent
wards Zero (St. James's).
Timon of Athens (Old
DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram
Ballet (Empire); Village
Fanny's First Play
edipus Rex (Assembly DAY: The Legend of the mpire).

76]

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

If so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra
A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in
Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no
festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci
or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh
A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of c opera. On the stage, hence musical part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle East
A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be
it even wider powers in practice.
important attributes in the Convention and to allow
would incline the Egyptian government to accord it
tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself,
out through the United Nations with the participa-
president and that the whole thing had been worked functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian
The fact that non-governmental, in status, that its
The New Statesman and Nation

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE ROWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

Hutchinson's

Ready September 17:

HARMONY

Peter Wishart

The author shows by examples chosen mostly from well-known classics how harmony is part and parcel of the time scale, tonality, rhythm and counterpoint of any piece of music, and must be studied in this light. The study of harmony on such lines renders quite unnecessary many of the "rules" and methods of harmonic study which have become accepted academic practice, and replaces these with what the author believes to be a more musical and useful approach to the whole subject

Illustrated 10s. 6d. net

University Library

shortest ones (K.16, K.22, K.134) and 6s. for what I suppose is the longest (K.319, No. 33 in B flat), or else beautifully bound and printed on India paper in two volumes, at 45s. a volume or 84s. the pair, boxed. Readers may be curious to know how the number 49 is reached. Einstein, in his revision of the Köchel Catalogue, listed 51 symphonies, including the Wind Sinfonia Concertante (pp. 944-5). The Ricordi edition includes all of these but four, namely K.E. 45b (K.Anh. 214), K.E. 74g (K.Anh. 216), K.E. 311a (K.Anh. 8), and K.E. 425a (K.444) which is No. 37 in G by Michael Haydn with introduction only by Mozart. This gives us a total of 47; Ricordi have brought it up to 49 by including the Violin and Viola Sinfonia Concertante (which Einstein listed under concertos), and K.120, a symphony in D consisting of the Overture and "Ballet of the Graces" from Ascanio in Alba (K.111, Nos. 1 and 2), and the presto Finale to the Overture (K.E.111a, K.120).

Just Published

Sopranos of Today — Harold Rosenthal

An exciting account of the careers of 25 of today's great soprano singers, enlivened with many personal touches and anecdotes, by the well-known editor of Opera Magazine. Illustrated with 40 magnificent pages of photographs and frontispiece 15s.

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF THE OPERA — David Ewen

The most complete one-volume reference book on opera ever published, this large, handsome volume contains over 25,000 operatic facts, more than 500 opera plots, thousands of names, terms and classified operatic information, together with pronunciation guide. No opera lover can afford to be without this book. 50s.

JOHN CALDER,
QUEEN'S HOUSE, LEICESTER SQ., W.C.2

I presume that the text of these symphonies is taken from the Gesamtausgabe; no editor is mentioned, and there are no editorial notes. Those who already own some miniature scores may hesitate before buying the bound volumes, but I should point out that there is a saving of £5 10s. in buying all 49 at a go, instead of separately. Now that so many of Mozart's early symphonies have been recorded, the desirability of this publication is evident.

RURAL CONDUCTOR'S SCHOOL

This School's 19th Annual Course for conductors and accompanists will be held from September 27th-30th, at the Holme, Bedford College, and the Y.W.C.A., 108, Baker Street, W.1.

"DON PEDRO RETURNS"

This Opera compiled by Erisman from a libretto by Dal Ponte and music by Mozart, will be presented for the first time in England by the Davis-Reynolds School of Singing at King George's Hall from September 19th-22nd. This work was abandoned by Mozart and some of the music was used in other works. It is published in its new form by Universal Edition. Sumner Austin will produce. Geoffrey Corbett will conduct the Ben-Uri Orchestra, and the cast comes from the Davis-Reynolds School.

"MARTHA" AT SADLER'S WELLS

The Sadler's Wells Opera Company will open their 1956/57 season on Thursday, September 13th, at Sadler's Wells Theatre, with a new production by Powell Lloyd of Von Flotow's "Martha." The opera, set in the Richmond of Queen Anne's day, will have designs by the producer. Leo Quayle will conduct.

June Bronhill in the title rôle will sing the well-known ballad, "The Last Rose of Summer." Included in the cast will be Anna Pollak, Rowland Jones, Denis Dowling and Howell Glynne, who rejoins the Company after an absence of several years.

Sketch for scene design by Powell Lloyd, Act II.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

If so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra
A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in
Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no
festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci
or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh
A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of opera. On the stage
musical
A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice.
important attributes in the Convention and to allow would incline the Egyptian government to accord it tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, out through the United Nations with the participa- president and that the whole thing had been worked functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian The fact that Egyptian-government, in status, that its

The New Statesman and Nation

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass. ed no encourage- Richard Strauss's oung conductors what he would have the Boston Sym- 's trumpeters. They aloft with the un of a Louis Arm- a strident, rasping minescent of a fire musical instrument, ck their way through ority of the two or three great an orchestras by saying that , of course, splendid in their hy way and no doubt well to raucous contemporary ut that they are really not o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Monteux adopted rather measured tempi, certainly that of the opening movement, but not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— To-morrow: Cloud- (New Lindsey). Tuesday: ulous Mandarin (Covent owards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old sday: A River Breeze

— To-morrow: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play edipus Rex (Assembly day: The Legend of the mpire).

(he very nearly became ssional sailor) put the ourish to a varied and program.

ann's Piano Concerto described as behaving erfect lady in whatever she found herself. To- oth Clifford Curzon and hestra under Charles treated her very chival- True, there were occa- ugs of will when one more rubato or speed other, but on the whole a crisp and sharply al performance with no tal playing.

to the Memory of My erge Koussevitzky," by Hanson, which began ert, is one of those al pieces" that appeal rough the occasion than of their strictly musical It is gravely beautiful; of music Matthew Ar- ight have written if he en a composer. Curi- though, some of its logy reminded one listen- east of the "Turandot" of who was not even dis- related to Matthew Ar-egger's Sixth Symphony tragic in essence and there ertain spiky phrases that ded us tonight of the gray, ing towers of Edinburgh. that symphony the playing the strings particularly had shining solemnity that may made parts of the work ound more eloquent than they ally were. They may not have touched our hearts, but they certainly stirred our imagination.

MOZART

A MOZART MINIATURE
Introducing: Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro".
Violin Concerto K.218.
Rondo K.386.
Mass in C Minor K.427.
"Don Giovanni" excerpts
Rondo K.485.
Soloists: VIENNA SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA conducted by Rudolf Moralt and Bernhard Paumgartner.
SBR 6200

introducing

PHILIPS favourite music series

RAVEL

La Valse Bolero
PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA conducted by Eugene Ormandy
SBR 6201

CORELLI

Christmas Concerto—
Concerti Grossi,
Op. 6, No. 5, Op. 6, No. 8.
I MUSICI.
SBR 6207

PHILIPS

PHILIPS Minigroove 33⅓ LONG-PLAYING RECORDS

PHILIPS ELECTRICAL LIMITED, Gramophone Records Division, Stanhope House, Stanhope Place, London, W.2

Philips are world renowned makers of radiograms, record players and record playing equipment incorporating the world famous Philips' "Featherweight" Pick-up.

(PG327)

RECORD REVIEW

Reviewed by George Montagu

OPERA

MOZART—"La Finta Semplice." PHILIPS ABL 3106-3107

Mozart wrote "La Finta Semplice" at the age of 12, and its main interest is as a "museum piece" and as an example of the extraordinary precociety of its composer. The libretto, arranged by Marco Coltellini from a comedy by Carlo Goldoni, is of the conventional type of the period, a tale of intrigue, disguise and misunderstandings—with the usual happy ending. Bernard Paumgartner directs his revised version of the opera with the Company from Salzburg which recently visited London. Dorothea Siebert sings prettily as Rosina, Walter Raninger, a promising young baritone, does well as Simone, and Alois Pernerstorfer is fairly effective as Cassandro. The singing of the other members of the cast is undistinguished. The dialogue is omitted and the recorded performance thus becomes, apart from the concerted finales, a succession of arias. The reproduction is good.

MOZART—Operatic Arias. DUCRETET-THOMSON DTL 93475.

Teresa Stich-Randall, American-born soprano of the Vienna State Opera, has received commendation for her performances as Nannetta in the recording of Verdi's "Falstaff," and in Mozart's Mass in C minor. In this recital, she sings the Countess's arias from "Figaro," Ilia's arias from "Idomeneo," Fiordiligi's arias from "Cosi fan Tutte," and Parmina's aria from "Die Zauberflöte." She is a very sensitive singer, and everything she does is artistically conceived. Her voice, however, is very light in texture and one feels that she should be singing Susanna rather than the Countess, and that both Ilia and Fiordiligi demand a voice of heavier calibre. Nevertheless, it is a disc which affords much pleasure by reason of the singer's frequently beautiful vocalisation.

RESPIGHI—"Vetrate di Chiesa." "Feste Romane." MERCURY MRL 2002.

The best and the worst of Respighi are to be found in these two works. Making use of an enormous orchestra, he is at his most blatant in his musical description of Roman Festivals throughout the ages, beginning with the sacrifice of the Christian Martyrs, in the Circus Maximus, and ending with the Epiphany celebrations in modern Rome. There is, however, a charming poetical touch in the serenade for mandoline, which occurs during the October Festival. Much the same may be said of "Vetrate di Chiesa," "San Michele Arcangelo" and "San Gregorio Magno" are noisy in the extreme, but there is much beauty in the peaceful "Fuga in Egitto" and "Mattutino di Santa Chiara." Both works are very well played by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, under Antal Dorati, and they are magnificently reproduced.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

F so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at dinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies nd slobbering pavements make a sad frame for ny festival. From time to time we are whirled ut of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient r hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when e emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of certain opera. On the stage, however, a complete and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-East musical settlement on these lines should be even wider powers in practice.

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be important attributes in the Convention and to allow

The New Statesman and Nation, s... that its ... status, that it had an Egyptian ... "technical", that it had been worked ... the whole thing the participa- ... President and that the United Nations with and Egypt herself, ... through the Soviet Union and India, the Egyptian government to accord it ... would incline the Convention and to allow ... importance attributes in the Convention and to allow ... refuse to comply with them or whose presence ... is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

The harvest of the forest is given making fo

THE HOWARTH PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

Music and Musicians

...on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...ok at the brass. ...ed no encourage- Richard Strauss's ...oung conductors. what he would have the Boston Sym- 's trumpeters. They aloft with the un ... of a Louis Arm- a strident, rasping ...miniscent of a fire musical instrument, back their way through ...ority of the two or three great ...an orchestras by saying that ..., of course, splendid in their ...hy way and no doubt well to raucous contemporary ...ut that they are really not ...o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet impulsive beat of this astonishing conductor—he has shown what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ulous Mandarin (Covent owards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play edipus Rex (Assembly DAY: The Legend of the mpire).

...(he very nearly became ...ssional sailor) put the ...ourish to a varied and program.

...ann's Piano Concerto ... described as behaving ...erfect lady in whatever ... she found herself. To- ...oth Clifford Curzon and ...hestra under Charles ...treated her very chival- True, there were occa- ...ugs of will when one more rubato or speed other, but on the whole a crisp and sharply ...al performance with no ...tal playing.

... to the Memory of My ...erge Koussevitzky," by Hanson, which began ...ert, is one of those ...al pieces" that appeal ...rough the occasion than of their strictly musical It is gravely beautiful; ...d of music Matthew Ar- ...ight have written if he ...en a composer. Curi- ...enough, some of its ...ology reminded one listen- ...east of the "Turandot" of ...—who was not even dis- related to Matthew Ar-

...egger's Sixth Symphony ...tragic in essence and there ...ertain spiky phrases that ...nded us tonight of the gray, ...ping towers of Edinburgh. In that symphony the playing ...the strings particularly had ...shining solemnity that may ...have made parts of the work ...ound more eloquent than they ...really were. They may not have ...touched our hearts, but they cer- ...tainly stirred our imagination.

TCHAIKOWSKY—"The Queen of Spades. DECCA LXT 4188-4192.

Of Tchaikowsky's ten operas, "Eugene Onegin" and "The Queen of Spades" alone have found their way into the repertory of opera-houses outside Russia. The latter, based on a story by Pushkin, is extremely effective as a stage work, and has been heard frequently at Covent Garden during the last few years. Decca have again enlisted the services of the Company of the National Opera, Belgrade, an ensemble which numbers among its members several excellent artists, specially among the lower voices, and the performance is, on the whole, satisfactory. Valerie Heybalova, who sings the part of the unhappy heroine, Lisa, possesses a big soprano voice, of no exceptional quality and shrill under pressure, but she puts plenty of dramatic force into her singing. Alexander Marinkovich, as Hermann, sings with conviction, and Melanie Bugarinovich, a fine artist, gives a clever study of the old Countess. In the subsidiary parts of Pauline, Tomsky and Yeletzky, Biserka Tzveych, Jovan Gligor and Dushan Popovich make useful contributions, and there is some spirited choral singing and good orchestral playing under the direction of Kreshimir Baranovich. The opera is vividly recorded.

BRITTEN—"The Little Sweep." DECCA LXT 5163.

This is the second part of Britten's highly successful "Let's Make an Opera." It is extremely well presented by the English Opera Group under the composer's spirited direction. David Hemmings, a clever boy actor and singer, plays the part of Sam, the little sweep, and the other principal characters are represented by Jennifer Vyvyan, April Cantelo, Nancy Thomas, Peter Pears and Trevor Anthony, supported by a group of children. The choruses in unison are sung by the Choir of Alleyn's School.

BERLIOZ—"Les Nuits d'été." "La Captive." "Le jeune Pâtre Breton." "Zaïde." PHILIPS NBL 5029.

Berlioz's exquisite settings of six poems by Théophile Gautier are sung by the American soprano, Eleanor Steber. Apart from a tendency to harden at the top in a big climax, the voice is beautiful and the interpretation full of artistry. "La Captive" is one of Berlioz's loveliest songs, a setting of a poem of Victor Hugo, "Le jeune Pâtre Breton" is in folk-song style and "Zaïde" is a lively Bolero. The sensitive orchestral accompaniments directed by Dimitri Mitropoulos, in the song-cycle, and by Jean Morel add to the charm of the disc.

PUCCINI—"Il Tabarro." H.M.V. ALP 1355.

"Il Tabarro," the first of Puccini's "Trittico," a trio of one-act operas designed for presentation in a single evening, is a sordid tale of the Grand Guignol variety. With his splendid sense of the stage, however, and his skill in writing appropriate music, Puccini has succeeded in producing a little work which has achieved considerable popularity. Especially charming are such touches of local colour as the organ-grinder, the ballad-singer and a pair of lovers bidding one another good-night. The opera has been recorded by the Company of the Rome Opera, directed by Vincenzo Bellezza, formerly well-known at Covent Garden. A young French soprano, Margaret Mas, although not yet the complete singer, shows promise as Giorgetta and Giacinto Prandelli is no better and no worse than the average contemporary Italian tenor as Luigi. The best performance is that of Tito Gobbi, a commanding figure as Michele, the barge-owner betrayed by his own wife.

GLUCK—"Orfeo ed Euridice." Act 2. H.M.V. ALP 1357.

This recording was taken from a broadcast of Gluck's opera directed by Arturo Toscanini in 1952. Toscanini makes a vivid contrast between the scenes in Hades and Elysium; the Dance of the Furies is terrific in its intensity, while the Elysian Ballet Music with its lovely flute melody is wonderfully serene. Nan Merriman sings the music of Orfeo with pathos and the Robert Shaw Chorale and N.B.C. Symphony Orchestra are very good. The small part of the Happy Shade is agreeably sung by Barbara Gibson and the reproduction is remarkably good considering the conditions under which it was made.

Rudolf Kempe

conducts

BRAHMS

GERMAN

REQUIEM

(Ein Deutsches Requiem) Op. 45

with DIETRICH FISCHER-DIESKAU

ELISABETH GRÜMMER

The Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra and The Choir of St. Hedwig's Cathedral, Berlin

ALPS 1351 25/9°
ALP 1352 39/7½°
Prices include tax

HIS MASTER'S VOICE

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

LP 33⅓ r.p.m. records

THE GRAMOPHONE COMPANY LIMITED (RECORD DIVISION), 8-11 GREAT CASTLE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass. ed no encourage- Richard Strauss's oung conductors, what he would have the Boston Sym- 's trumpeters. They aloft with the un of a Louis Arm- a strident, rasping minisceant of a fire musical instrument, back their way through score. Even in a ority of the two or three great an orchestras by saying that , of course, splendid in their shy way and no doubt well to raucous contemporary ut that they are really not o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

M. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet incisive beat of this astonishing conductor—and I think what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ulous Mandarin (Covent owards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old SDAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play edipus Rex (Assembly DAY: The Legend of the mpire).

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at nburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies slobbering pavements make a sad frame for festival. From time to time we are whirled of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of comic opera. On the stage, a compendious Middle East musical, and parcel of a comprehensive

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice.

important attributes in the Convention and to allow would incline the Egyptian government to accord it tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, out through the United Nations with the participa- president and that the whole thing had been worked functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian

The fact than government, in status, that its

The New Statesman and Nation

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

ORCHESTRAL

BLISS—A Colour Symphony. Introduction and Allegro. DECCA LXT 5170.

The Colour Symphony, written for the Gloucester Festival of 1922, was the last work of Sir Arthur Bliss prior to his departure for the United States, where he remained until 1925. In its four movements entitled "Purple," "Red," "Blue" and "Green," he expresses in music things associated in his own mind with the colours in question. At this time Bliss was avowedly experimenting in sonorities and the Symphony is both original and colourful. The Introduction and Allegro, written in 1926 after his return to England, was first played at a "Prom" and is more orthodox in conception. The composer himself directs the L.S.O. in well-recorded performances of both works.

SHOSTAKOVITCH—Symphony No. 9. PROKOFIEV—Symphonic Suite—"Lieutenant Kije." PHILIPS ABL 3117.

Written in 1945, Shostakovitch's 9th Symphony is in striking contrast with its two immediate predecessors and its portentous successor. It is a light-weight work in five movements, the last three of which follow one another without break. Apart from the second movement in which there is a quantity of solo work for woodwind, the general mood is one of uninhibited jollity. Efrem Kurtz gives a good and well-recorded performance with the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of New York. On the reverse, the same conductor directs the R.P.O. in Prokofiev's Suite from the film "Lieutenant Kije." In this instance, too, a lively performance is forthcoming.

STRAVINSKY—"Apollo Musagetes." "Renard." DECCA LXT 5169.

"Apollo Musagetes," ballet in two tableaux, received its first performance in concert form in Washington, U.S.A., in 1928. In it, Stravinsky resorts to that economy of means which was to be a feature of his future works. It is scored for strings only and use is made of the old type of dance, whereby the style and atmosphere of the work is, in the main, neo-classical. The strings of the Suisse-Romande Orchestra, under the sensitive direction of Ernest Ansermet, give a sonorous performance of this cool and dignified music. "Renard," a burlesque dance scene for orchestra and four male singers is based on a Russian folk-tale. It was first performed in Paris in 1922. It is a type of work which loses something without a stage setting, despite a good performance by the Swiss conductor and orchestra with Michel Sénéchal, Hugues Cuénod, Heinz Rehfress, and Xavier Despraz as soloists and Istvan Arato playing the important cimbalom part.

FRANCK—Symphonic Poem "Psyché." PHILIPS ABL 3114.

"Psyché" a Symphonic Poem in three parts and six sections, three of them choral, was written about the same time as the Symphony in D minor. It is sometimes played with the choral sections omitted and this is the first recorded version of the complete work. Whether the choral sections add to the significance of the work is a debateable point. The performance, however, by the Hague Philharmonic Orchestra and Netherlands Chamber Choir under Willem van Otterloo, is a sensitive one and the reproduction is all that could be desired.

VOCAL

MOZART—"Ah se in ciel." "Et incarnatus est." "Alleluia." DECCA LW 5247.

Mozart wrote the elaborate concert aria, "Ah se in ciel" for his sister-in-law, Aloysia, in 1788. "Et incarnatus est,' one of his most beautiful melodies, operatic rather than religious in style, comes from the C minor Mass, and "Alleluia" is the final movement of the motet, "Exultate, jubilate." The singer is Jennifer Vyvyan, who copes with the many difficulties of phrasing and coloratura in exemplary fashion.

They say

Prokofiev LIEUTENANT KIJÉ SUITE—Paris Conservatoire Orch.: LOVE OF THREE ORANGES SUITE—L.P.O. both cond. Sir Adrian Boult (Decca LXT 5119*): '. . . an excellent disc, . . .' (R.F.—'The Gramophone'—May, 1956.) 'A thoroughly desirable disc.' ('E.M.G. Monthly Letter'—May, 1956.) • R. Strauss DIE FRAU OHNE SCHATTEN—Vienna State Opera soloists, chorus and Orchestra/Karl Böhm (Decca LXT 5180-4*): 'These are certainly my records of the month.' (William Mann—'The Gramophone Record Review'—June, 1956.) 'A recording of outstandingly fine quality . . .' (John Warrack—'Daily Telegraph'—18th June, 1956.) • Rachmaninov PIANO CONCERTO NO. 2 IN C MINOR—Clifford Curzon/L.P.O./Sir Adrian Boult (Decca LXT 5178*): 'The balance is excellent . . . the recording quality is very fine, and altogether I would strongly recommend this disc.' (R.F.—'The Gramophone'—June, 1956.) 'Curzon proves himself a great virtuoso . . . the whole thing is brilliantly recorded.' ('E.M.G. Monthly Letter'—May, 1956.) Tchaikovsky CAPRICCIO ITALIEN—L.S.O./Anthony Collins (Decca LXT 5186): '. . . recording of a very high standard.' (M.M.—'The Gramophone'—June, 1956.); FRANCESCA DA RIMINI—L.S.O./Anthony Collins (Decca LXT 5186): '. . . considerably the most desirable version of the four available . . .' (M.M.—'The Gramophone'—June, 1956.) • 20TH CENTURY ENGLISH SONGS—Peter Pears/Benjamin Britten (Decca LW 5241): 'Peter Pears sings all these songs with intelligence and is very finely accompanied and recorded.' ('E.M.G. Monthly Letter'—May, 1956.)

* One of 'The Gramophone Record Review' Records of the Month selections.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass. ed no encourage- Richard Strauss's oung conductors what he would have the Boston Sym- 's trumpeters. They aloft with the un- of a Louis Arm- a strident, rasping miniscent of a fire musical instrument, ack their way through Even in a of the two or three great an orchestras by saying that , of course, splendid in their shy way and no doubt well to raucous contemporary ut that they are really not o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra. for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

M. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ulous Mandarin (Covent owards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old SDAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play edipus Rex (Assembly DAY: The Legend of the mpire).

n (he very nearly became essional sailor) put the ourish to a varied and program.

mann's Piano Concerto en described as behaving perfect lady in whatever y she found herself. To- both Clifford Curzon and chestra under Charles treated her very chival- True, there were occa- tugs of will when one more rubato or speed e other, but on the whole a crisp and sharply cal performance with no ntal playing.

y to the Memory of My Serge Koussevitzky," by Hanson, which began ncert, is one of those nal pieces" that appeal rough the occasion than of their strictly musical It is gravely beautiful; d of music Matthew Ar- might have written if he been a composer. Curi- enough, some of its eology reminded one listen- at least of the "Turandot" of ccini—who was not even dis- tantly related to Matthew Ar- old.

Honegger's Sixth Symphony is tragic in essence and there are certain spiky phrases that reminded us tonight of the gray, tapering towers of Edinburgh. In that symphony the playing of the strings particularly had a shining solemnity that may have made parts of the work sound more eloquent than they really were. They may not have touched our hearts, but they cer- tainly stirred our imagination.

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather; dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of comic opera. On the stage, bundle and parcel of a comprehensive Middle East musical revue, A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice. important attributes in the Convention and to allow would incline the Egyptian government to accord it tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, out through the United Nations with the participa- president and that the whole thing had been worked functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian [illegible] "non-governmental", in status, that its

The New Statesman and Nation

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play, and "every- one visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some pro- hibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

Photo: E.M.I.

Tullio Serafin

Tullio Serafin, born in 1878, is one of Italy's most distinguished operatic conductors. He has held appointments in the Augusteo, Rome, La Scala, Milan and the Opera House, Rome, and was one of those responsible for the foundation of the Florence Maggio Musicale. He has also conducted at Covent Garden and at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. For H.M.V. he has directed the recording of "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," and for Columbia of "La Forza del Destino," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Norma" and "Pagliacci."

SCHUBERT—Mass in G. BACH—"Komm, Jesu, Komm. BRAHMS—Three Songs. HMV ALP 1360.

The Robert Shaw Chorale, from the United States, created an excellent impression on its first English appearance a month or two back. Under the musicianly direction of Robert Shaw, it sang among other things, Schubert's early Mass in G which is here recorded. There is plenty of vigour in the singing, but the Choir is also capable of producing a real pianissimo when required. The three soloists, members of the Chorale, do their work well. Bach's Motet is also impressively sung and the three songs of Brahms, "Der Abend," "Nächtens" and "Zum Schluss," originally written for vocal quartet, are quite successful.

ELIZABETHAN LUTE SONGS. DECCA LW 5243.

A partnership of great artistic merit is formed by Peter Pears and Julian Bream in this recital of songs by Morley ,Dowland, Ford and Rosseter. The singer's superb sense of style and exemplary diction are perfectly matched by the beautiful playing of the young lute-player.

CONCERTOS

SHOSTAKOVITCH—Violin Concerto. PHILIPS ABL 3101.

Shostakovitch composed his Violin Concerto for David Oistrakh who gave its first performance in England in February last. Written in four movements, it is his first essay in full-scale concerto writing and it was immediately recognised as one of the most significant of contemporary works in this form. Oistrakh is again the soloist in this, the first recorded, performance, and he is accompanied by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York, under Dimitri Metropoulos. It is a magnificent performance, the soloist displaying amazing virtuosity in the second and fourth movements, and deep musical feeling in the first and third. The reproduction is on the same high level as the playing.

Jerome Hines

Jerome Hines, one of America's most distinguished baritones, is a member of the Company of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. During the Edinburgh Festival of 1953, he appeared as Nick Shadow in the first British stage performance of Stravinsky's opera "The Rake's Progress" and he sings the role of Baldassare in the Decca recording of Donizetti's "La Favorita."

Photo: Decca

THE "SUNDAY TIMES" CLASSICAL RECORD OF THE MONTH

"A magnificent new version of a much-recorded work . . . With renewed wonderment, the listener is propelled along one of the noblest of musical streams . . ."
FELIX APRAHAMIAN

"This is a great performance . . . one that comes one's way but very rarely. How wonderful to have it on a record.
TREVOR HARVEY in "THE GRAMOPHONE"

KLEMPERER

conducts the PHILHARMONIA ORCHESTRA
in a superb recording of
SYMPHONY NO. 3 ("EROICA") — BEETHOVEN
33CX1346

KLEMPERER conducts the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra in a performance of the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" at the Royal Festival Hall on September 29th.

COLUMBIA 33⅓ r.p.m. Long Playing Record
COLUMBIA GRAPHOPHONE CO. LTD., RECORD DIVISION, 8-11 GT. CASTLE ST., W.1

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

If so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still ra
A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in
Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no
festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci
or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh
A film has already been shown of Canadian S

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of co opera. On the stage, [illegible] part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-East musical [illegible]
A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be it even wider powers in practice.

The New Statesman and Nation, [illegible]

The fact that [illegible]-governmental, in status, that its [illegible] were "technical", that it had an Egyptian functions were [illegible] pressed and that the whole thing had been worked out through the United Nations with the participation of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, would incline the Egyptian government to accord it important attributes in the Convention and to allow it even wider powers in practice.

These fine [illegible] in the Convention and to allow [illegible] in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

The harvest of the forest is given many fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass. ed no encourage- Richard Strauss's oung conductors, what he would have the Boston Sym- 's trumpeters. They aloft with the un of a Louis Arm- a strident, rasping minescent of a fire musical instrument, back their way through score. Even in a ority of the two or three great an orchestras by saying that , of course, splendid in their hy way and no doubt well to raucous contemporary ut that they are really not o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Monteux adopted rather [illegible] tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— To-morrow: Cloud- (New Lindsey). Tuesday: ulous Mandarin (Covent owards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old sday: A River Breeze

— To-morrow: Ram Ballet (Empire): Village Fanny's First Play edipus Rex (Assembly day: The Legend of the mpire).

n (he very nearly became essional sailor) put the ourish to a varied and y program.

mann's Piano Concerto n described as behaving perfect lady in whatever y she found herself. To- both Clifford Curzon and chestra under Charles treated her very chival- True, there were occa- tugs of will when one more rubato or speed e other, but on the whole a crisp and sharply ical performance with no ntal playing.

y to the Memory of My Serge Koussevitzky," by Hanson, which began ncert, is one of those nal pieces" that appeal rough the occasion than of their strictly musical It is gravely beautiful; nd of music Matthew Ar- night have written if he been a composer. Curi- enough, some of its ology reminded one listen- r, at least of the "Turandot" of ini—who was not even dis- tly related to Matthew Ar-

Honegger's Sixth Symphony tragic in essence and there certain spiky phrases that reminded us tonight of the gray, tapering towers of Edinburgh. In that symphony the playing of the strings particularly had a shining solemnity that may have made parts of the work sound more eloquent than they really were. They may not have touched our hearts, but they certainly stirred our imagination.

CORELLI—Concerto Grosso No. 1 in D. VIVALDI—Concerto in A for Viola d'amore. Concerto in D minor. MARTINI—Piano Concerto in F. COL. 33CX1357.

The distinguished band of young Italian musicians, I Musici, here present four fine examples of early Italian music. Their performances are always characterised by the greatest artistry and both the unnamed soloists, and the orchestral players give of their best in this extremely well recorded disc.

BENJAMIN—Sonatina. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS—Sonata in A minor. DECCA LXT 5143.

Written in 1924, Arthur Benjamin's Sonatina for violin and piano is a charming lyrical work, showing obvious French influence. Vaughan Williams's Sonata, on the other hand, is one of the composer's most recent works—it was actually written in 1955—and, while it is not likely to achieve a place in musical history as one of his greatest achievements, it causes the listener to marvel at the vigour of the writing. It is dedicated to Frederick Grinke, the violinist in both works presented on this disc. His partners are Arthur Benjamin himself in the Sonatina and Michael Mulliner in the Sonata and each work is sensitively played and impeccably recorded.

INSTRUMENTAL

BOCCHERINI—Quintets in A, Op. 28, and F., Op. 41. No. 2 HMV ALP 1361.

It would be difficult to imagine anything more lovely than these graceful examples of 18th century Italian Chamber music played by the Boccherini Quintet. The string tone is as soft as silk and the ensemble is perfect. In addition to the two main works, a further movement from a Quintet is included on either side by way of encore.

BRAHMS—Sonata No. 3 in F minor, Op. 5. HMV ALP 1358.

Of Brahms's three Piano Sonatas, all early works, only the third has remained in the repertory. Of its five movements, the opening Allegro is almost orchestral in its vehement restlessness. It is followed by a deeply romantic slow movement which gives place to a powerful Scherzo. Next comes an Intermezzo, "Rückblick," which returns to material previously stated, and the work ends with a spirited Finale. Solomon gives a masterly interpretation, by turn forcefully dynamic and infinitely tender, and the piano tone is very clearly reproduced.

DVORAK—Trio in E minor. "Dumky." TELEFUNKEN LGM 53064.

The "Dumky" Trio is unorthodox in that it is entirely lacking in Sonata form, each of its six movements being made up of alternating fast and slow sections. This does not, as one would expect, make for monotony, as Dvorak's power of invention is such that he has always something of interest to say and he has provided splendid material for pianist, violinist and 'cellist. This performance by the Hansen Trio is an attractive one and fills an important gap in the library of recorded music.

THE OPERA SCHOOL

PRINCIPALS: JOAN CROSS, C.B.E :: ANNE WOOD
STAFF: Vilem Tausky :: George Foa
Peter Gellhorn :: Anthony Besch
Gladys Parr

Full dramatic training for the opera stage.
Gesture : Mime : Speech
Music and Acting Ensemble
Opera Rehearsal : Study of Roles.

Limited number of scholarships and bursaries available.
Full particulars from: The Opera School, Ltd., The de Walden Institute, Charlbert Street, London, N.W.8

Musical Survey

by George Montagu

OPERA

Covent Garden

This year's Italian season consisted of two stock operas, "Rigoletto" and "Tosca." In "Rigoletto," the title-rôle was sustained by Tito Gobbi who has earned a Continental reputation for his interpretation. Gobbi is undoubtedly a fine actor, and he gave a forceful performance which demonstrated both the evil and the pitiful aspects of the character. His voice is a big one, but is of no great beauty and he was not consistently in tune. By modern standards, however, his performance was a notable one. Hilde Gueden's Gilda was less satisfactory: her acting was mannered and she was far too sophisticated for the naive heroine. Vocally her style was German rather than Italian, and she left the impression that, while she is an admirable singer in many rôles, she was miscast on this occasion. As the Duke, Nicola Filacuridi was the most satisfactory, on the vocal side, of the three principals. He possesses a tenor voice of ample proportions, too ample, perhaps, for a purely lyrical rôle, but he had the good sense to keep it under control and he was particularly successful in "Parmi veder le lagrime." Barbara Howitt was a passionate Maddalena, and Frederick Dalberg, whose voice is scarcely dark enough for the part, sang Sparafucile. Argeo Quadri, who conducted, tended to make the orchestra too loud in some of the quieter passages, but his reading of the score was, on the whole, sympathetic. He adopted an unusually slow tempo for the closing duet of the third act which proved quite effective.

"Tosca" gave London the first opportunity of hearing on the operatic stage Zinka Milanov, the Yugoslav soprano, who has for many years been one of the "star" singers of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. She is a prima donna in the old tradition, both as regards appearance and style of acting. After an uncertain first act, she came into her own in the second act, and provided some beautiful singing—"Vissi d'arte" was exceptionally well done—and, if not a great Tosca dramatically, she gave satisfaction from the vocal point of view. Ferruccio Tagliavini's Cavaradossi has been heard here before on more than one occasion. He is no great actor and he indulges in the usual tricks of Italian tenors, such as holding on to his high notes and forcing his voice on occasion, but there is no mistaking the natural beauty of the voice when used with discretion. Scipio Colombo was a fairly satisfactory Scarpia and that excellent buffo Melchiore Luise, was a humorous Sacristan. Argeo Quadri took the opera at an unusually slow pace and was not too helpful to his singers, who frequently had to shout in their endeavour to make themselves heard above the orchestra. The entire performance gave the impression of having been hastily put together without adequate preparation.

The young South African soprano, Mimi Engela-Coertse, appearing for the first time as Olympia in "Tales of Hoffmann," gave a splendid interpretation of the mechanical doll. She managed the elaborate coloratura with great adroitness and gave further proof that the British Commonwealth is able to produce singers of a very high order. The other principals, Joan Sutherland, Amy Shuard, Barbara Howitt and Richard Lewis, were as previously, and all contributed in full measure to a well-integrated performance.

The season ended with a performance of "The Queen of Spades" with the same cast as previously and under the direction of Rafael Kubelik. Tchaik-

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

Entertainment

gh 1956

the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of co-

opera. On the stage, h

part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-East

A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be

it even wider powers in practice.

important attributes in the Convention and to allow

would incline the Egyptian government to accord it

tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself,

out through the United Nations with the participa-

president and that the whole thing had been worked

functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian

The New Statesman and Nation, s

The fact that government, in status, that its

there may be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "every-one visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the bass pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

The harvest of the forest is given making fo

THE ROWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

Music and Musicians

on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

ok at the brass. ed no encourage- Richard Strauss's oung conductors, what he would have the Boston Sym- 's trumpeters. They aloft with the un- r of a Louis Arm- a strident, rasping minisсent of a fire musical instrument, hack their way through ority of the two or three great an orchestras by saying that , of course, splendid in their hy way and no doubt well to raucous contemporary ut that they are really not o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi throughout, that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet [illegible] beat of this astonishing [illegible] had shown what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ulous Mandarin (Covent owards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play edipus Rex (Assembly DAY: The Legend of the mpire).

owsky's opera has developed into one of the Company's most successful productions to which Amy Shuard, Edith Coates, Monica Sinclair, Edgar Evans, Jess Walters and Otakar Kraus make excellent contributions. The smaller parts are all adequately filled and the choral singing and orchestral playing were of a high standard on this occasion.

Welsh National Opera

A week's season at Sadler's Wells opened with Verdi's opera "I Lombardi," which had not been heard in London within living memory. The libretto is a poor one and the chief characters create no interest whatsoever. The hero and heroine are colourless and the villain is quite unbelievably wicked. Musically, too, the work is insignificant, apart from some stirring choruses and a beautiful trio, "Qual volutta trascorrere," in the final act. Nevertheless we are grateful to the Welsh National Opera for giving us the opportunity of hearing a work which, in its day, aroused great patriotic enthusiasm in Italy. Rosina Raisbeck did her utmost with the thankless part of Giselda and, apart from a few edgy top notes, sang very well. Alfred Hallett displayed a pleasing lyrical tenor voice as her lover, Oronte, and Bryan Drake sang with conviction as the villainous Pagano. As his ineffectual brother, Arvino, Paul Asciak was vocally somewhat monotonous. The chorus produced some splendid singing and the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra gave of its best under the direction of Warwick Braithwaite.

"Nabucco," although actually produced a year before "I Lombardi," is a far more interesting work. The characters of Abigail and Zaccaria the High Priest are better defined than any in the latter opera, and Verdi has taken the opportunity of writing some interesting music for each. There are again some striking choruses, including the famous "Va, pensiero," in which the Jews lament their captivity. The cast was substantially the same as last year, with Charles Groves conducting. Ruth Packer gave an uneven performance as Abigail: her mezza-voce singing was beautifully managed, but in the many dynamic passages which the rôle entails, her voice was frequently hard and edgy. Hervey Alan again made a noble figure of the High Priest and sang his arias with dignity. The newcomers were Zoe Cresswell, a soprano who made an excellent impression as Fenena and who sang her aria in the final act with great tonal beauty, and Roderick Jones as Nabucco. The latter is to be commended for the remarkable clarity of his diction, but his voice was not always as steady as one could have wished. The choral singing was, as usual, an outstanding feature of the performance.

IF YOU ARE INTERESTED IN MUSIC

SOUND NEWS PRODUCTIONS

Members Assoc. Professional Recording Studios, Gt. Britain broadcasting (having your own broadcasts including TV sound recorded), recording on disc and tape, having your own tape-recording transferred on to Long-Playing records (10" LP 2 gns., 12" 3 gns.) in hiring a tape recorder for the week-end.

Write for detailed brochure to: SOUND NEWS PRODUCTIONS, 59 BRYANSTON ST., MARBLE ARCH, W.1 AMB 0091 and PAD 8376

RECITALS

José Kahan

A Mexican pianist, José Kahan, making his first English appearance at Wigmore Hall, was at his best in modern music, giving sensitive performances of Bloch's Poems of the Sea and some Mexican Dances by Ponce. He was less successful in the classics; his interpretation of Mozart's Sonata in B (K570) was mannered and sentimental and in Brahm's Handel Variations he adopted a kind of 18th century drawing-room attitude quite alien to the work in question.

Joseph Fuchs and Arthur Balsam

These two distinguished American artists have been playing the complete series of Beethoven's Violin and Piano Sonatas in the Festival Hall Recital Room. We were only able to hear the early Op. 12 No. 2 and the final Sonata, Op. 96, but this sufficed to confirm previous impressions that both as individuals and as a team, the standard of playing and interpretation is on a very high level.

Ina Biezunska

Polish born, but now resident in Israel, Ina Biezunska provided some competent, but unexciting, playing at Wigmore Hall. She was unable to infuse sufficient colour into Beethoven's Sonata Op. 31 No. 2 and Franck's Prelude, Chorale and Fugue to make them really interesting. A Suite by the Israeli composer, Kaminski, was of little moment.

Leslie Riskowitz

A South African pianist, Leslie Riskowitz, was heard to greatest advantage in Beethoven's "Les Adieux" Sonata and Rondo in G. His interpretation of Liszt's B minor Sonata had little poetry and was rather shapeless and Debussy's "Pour le piano" inclined to stodginess.

Raffi Petrossian

If Raffi Petrossian's musical sense were the equivalent of his technique, he might be a pianist of considerable attainments. As it is, his sole objects appear to be speed and virtuosity. He showed little understanding of Bach and Scarlatti and his performances of Liszt's Sonata and Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasy were tasteless and superficial.

Duo Langbein—Jones

Two Australian musicians, Brenton Langbein (violin) and Maureen Jones (piano) who are domiciled in Switzerland, made an excellent impression on their first London appearance at Wigmore Hall. Each is a highly proficient artist, the pianist, in particular, showing the keenest sensitivity in her playing, and the team work was exemplary. Mozart's Sonata in A. (E.526) and Brahm's Sonata in D. Minor formed the first half of the programme, the latter work bringing out the best in each player. Later, the whimsical spirit of Debussy's Sonata was captured with much success.

ROYAL OPERA HOUSE
COVENT GARDEN

The Royal Opera House, Covent Garden Ltd., in association with the Arts Council of Great Britain presents

THE SADLER'S WELLS BALLET
4th to 29th September

THE BOLSHOI BALLET
3rd to 27th October

Full details and prices from Box Office
COV 1066 (10 a.m.—7.30 p.m.)

Mikhail Sheyne

There was little pleasure to be derived from the playing of this Russian-born American pianist at Wigmore Hall. His slapdash methods resulted in numerous inaccuracies both in some Bach Chorales and a Chopin group which included the G minor Ballade and the B flat minor Sonata.

GLYNDEBOURNE OPERA AT LIVERPOOL

The Liverpool Philharmonic Society, in association with Liverpool Corporation, presents a short season of Glyndebourne Festival opera with the Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra at the Royal Court Theatre, Liverpool, during September. They will open the season on September 10th with "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Don Giovanni" and "Cenerentola" will follow.

THE SOCIETY OF WOMEN MUSICIANS

The Society of Women Musicians announce that the third biennial Award of the Walter Wilson Cobbett Memorial Prize has been made to Ruth Gipps, D.Mus., for a Sonata for Clarinet and Pianoforte. The adjudicators were Katharine Eggar, Chairman S.W.M., Dr. Gordon Jacob, Elizabeth Maconchy, Elizabeth Poston and Ivor Walsworth.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

Entertainment

1956

Music and Musicians

Boston in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

The harvest of the forest is given manny fo

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus

The New Statesman and Nation

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ulous Mandarin (Covent wards Zero (St. James's). Timon of Athens (Old DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play edipus Rex (Assembly AY: The Legend of the mpire).

76

LUNCH-TIME RECITALS

Bishopsgate Institute, E.C.2, at 1.5,
Tuesday, September 11th
DENIS MATTHEWS (Piano)
Tuesday, September 18th
ERIC PARKIN (Piano)
Tuesday, September 25th
ARCHIE CAMDEN (Bassoon)
JAN KERRISON (Piano)

THE LONDON JUNIOR AND SENIOR ORCHESTRAS

Under the excellent leadership of Ernest Read, the well-known London Junior and Senior Orchestras will commence their 31st Season on November 17th. On December 8th they will appear at the Festival Hall, and on December 13th at the Royal Albert Hall, where Handel's Messiah (Part I) and Carols for massed singing will be performed. Playing and Associate Membership are available. Further information: The Secretary, 151, King Henry's Road, Hampstead, N.W.3.

SUBSCRIPTION FORM

TO THE CIRCULATION MANAGER,
"LONDON MUSICAL EVENTS,"
25 Haymarket, London, S.W.1.

Please mail me TWELVE issues
SIX of "LONDON MUSICAL EVENTS"

from .....

I enclose Cheque or P.O. for 19s.
(Crossed) 9s. 9d.
(Delete where necessary)

Name .....

.....
(BLOCK LETTERS)

Address .....

.....

.....
(BLOCK LETTERS)

FILACURIDI Cont. from page 19

sang in his spare time. Finally, however, he made up his mind to pursue a musical career and made his way to Milan for serious study in 1948. He made his professional début at Savona as Alfredo in "La Traviata," a rôle in which he appeared shortly afterwards with great success in Trieste, in company with Margherita Carosio and Carlo Tagliabue. This was followed by an extensive tour of the principal cities of Spain as the Duke in "Rigoletto" and Count Almaviva in "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," his fellow-artists including Elisabetta Barbato, Alda Noni, Mario del Monaco and Gino Becchi. Returning to Italy, he sang in a number of provincial opera houses, and in 1950, he visited Rio de Janeiro, where he sang Rodolfo in "La Bohème" and Dimitri in "Boris Godunov." Back in Rome, he appeared as Maurice de Saxe in Cilea's "Adriana Lecouvreur" in the presence of the composer, by whom he was congratulated on his performance. From this time onward, he was engaged for the principal opera-houses of Italy, such as La Scala, Milan, the Fenice, Venice, the San Carlo, Naples, and the Maggio Musicale in Florence. He also sang in France and Belgium. He was selected to play the part of Pinkerton in the film version of "Madam Butterfly," and has sung in Television performances of "Adriana Lecouvreur," "La Traviata," and "Manon" in Italy. He visits Portugal each year as guest artist at the San Carlo, Lisbon, and he is due to appear in Milan, Rome and Naples next season. His first appearance in England was as the Duke in "Rigoletto" at Covent Garden in July last.

Nicola Filacuridi takes his singing very seriously and firmly believes that the true artist should make his voice subservient to himself and should not allow himself to become a slave to his voice. He is married and has a daughter, Danila, of four and a half. He is intensely interested in sport, and in boxing in particular and, when on holiday, keeps fit by swimming and playing tennis.

Printed in England by Thomasons Ltd., Cedar Press, Hounslow, on Aerocote supplied by VRG-Paper Ltd.
for Hadley Publicity and Publishing Co., Ltd. 25 Haymarket, London, S.W.1., England.
SOLE AGENTS: AUSTRALIA Gordon & Gatch (A'Asia) Ltd.
SOUTH AFRICA, Central News Agency Ltd.; Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, Messrs. Kingstons Ltd.
CONTINENTAL EUROPE, Nouvelles Messageries de la Presse Parisienne, 111 Rue Reaumur, Paris 2me.

LONDON MUSICAL CLUB
Director: ADELA HAMATON
President:
ADELINA DE LARA, O.B.E.

The
Rendezvous for Music-Lovers
Established 21 years
The accommodation includes a concert-room, lounge, dining-room, bedrooms and a fully-licensed bar.

	£	s.	d.
SUBSCRIPTION (p.a.)	2	2	0
STUDENTS under 21	1	1	0

PROSPECTUS & FIXTURE LIST on application
21, Holland Park, W.11
(PARk 7094 and 4440)

all about Music
ETUDE
the music magazine
. . . is America's favorite fine music magazine. It offers complete and authoritative coverage of the musical world. Excellent book and record reviews—timely feature articles—a junior department—the international scene—plus many specific departments and a generous section of music.
1 year $4.50 2 year $8
(including postage)
(published 10 times per year)
ETUDE the music magazine
Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, U.S.A.

Symphax
MUSIC TRACING PAPER
AND PRINTING SERVICE
For the reproduction of small or large quantities of music manuscript.
From an original prepared in black drawing ink on tracing paper already printed with the five line staff we can make any number of prints by means of our Unax Dyeline Process.
We shall be pleased to send further particulars on request.
HALL HARDING LTD
Incorporating The Drawing Office Supplies Ltd.
STOURTON HOUSE, DACRE STREET, LONDON, S.W.1
Telephone: ABBey 7141

Music and Musicians

...on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...ok at the brass. ...ed no encourage- ... Richard Strauss's ...oung conductors ... what he would have ... the Boston Sym- ...s trumpeters. They ... aloft with the un- ... of a Louis Arm- ... a strident, rasping ...miniscent of a fire ... musical instrument, ... back their way through ... were Even in a ...ority of the two or three great ...an orchestras by saying that ..., of course, splendid in their ...shy way and no doubt well ... to raucous contemporary ...ut that they are really not ...o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London. ... Monteux adopted rather measured tempi throughout that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet ... beat of this astonishing ... what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ...ulous Mandarin (Covent ...owards Zero* (St. James's). ... Timon of Athens (Old ...SDAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram ... Ballet (Empire); Village ... Fanny's First Play ...edipus Rex* (Assembly ...DAY: The Legend of the ...mpire).

...n (he very nearly became ...ofessional sailor) put the ... flourish to a varied and ...ting program.

...hmann's Piano Concerto ... been described as behaving ... a perfect lady in whatever ...mpany she found herself. To-... both Clifford Curzon and ... orchestra under Charles ... treated her very chival-... True, there were occa-... tugs of will when one ... more rubato or speed ... the other, but on the whole ... a crisp and sharply ...ical performance with no ...ental playing.

...y to the Memory of My ... Serge Koussevitzky," by ... Hanson, which began ...ncert, is one of those ...ional pieces' that appeal ... through the occasion than ... of their strictly musical ... It is gravely beautiful; ...nd of music Matthew Ar-... might have written if he ... been a composer. Curi-...ly enough, some of its ...raseology reminded one listen-... at least of the "Turando" of ...ccini—who was not even dis-...tly related to Matthew Ar-...old.

Honegger's Sixth Symphony ... tragic in essence and there ... certain spiky phrases that ...minded us tonight of the gray, ...tapering towers of Edinburgh. ... that symphony the playing ... of the strings particularly had ... shining solemnity that may ... have made parts of the work ... sound more eloquent than they ... really were. They may not have ... touched our hearts, but they cer-...tainly stirred our imagination.

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

...an and Nation, September 1, 1956

T... ...inment

If so far this hasn' ... Edinburgh, blame pa... and slobbering pavem... any festival. From ti... out of the murk by Gr... air hostess, but the exh... we emerge from the Ush... A drink, we murmur, but are promptly ba... by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat... splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no ... festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci... or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh... A film has already been shown of Canadian S...

...e of Berlioz. Extremely deft ... orchestration, it is thought ... and by some musicians from other ...es to be a neglected masterpiece of ... opera. On the stage, however, Midd... musical ... part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-East ... A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be ... even wider powers in practice. ... important attributes in the Convention and to allow ... would include the Egyptian government to accord it ... tion of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, ... out through the United Nations with the participa-... president and that the whole thing had been worked ... functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian ... The fact that it is administrative, in status, that is ...

The New Statesman and Nation, ...

The harvest of the forest is given many fo...

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT...
Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus...

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "every-one visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

Variations on a favourite theme each deliciously, unmistakably... Tobler

Take cherries and pineapples, almonds and walnuts, strawberries and honey and cream. Take the rarest, the finest, the sweetest of this world's confections and with them make Tobler Symphony — if you can. Tobler have their secrets and keep them. But the results are yours to enjoy in Tobler Symphony. Fifteen variations on a theme of sheer delight. Each deep in dessert chocolate. Each deliciously different. Each a triumph of the confectioner's art.

Tobler Symphony are the finest chocolates you can buy.

ask for Tobler Symphony CHOCOLATES

MAKERS OF THE FAMOUS TOBLERONE

TOBLERONE

THE OBSERVER · 1791 ·

22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4

Fleet Street 9991

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

...an and Nation, September 1, 1956

T... ...inment

If so far this hasn't ... Edinburgh, blame part... and slobbering paveme... any festival. From tim... out of the murk by Grea... air hostess, but the exhil... we emerge from the Ushe... A drink, we murmur, but ... promptly ba... by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in ... Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of wat... splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no ... festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by acci... or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywh... A film has already been shown of Canadian S...

of Berlioz. Extremely deft ... orchestration, it is thought ... and by some musicians from other ... to be a neglected masterpiece of ... opera. On the stage, hour ... part and parcel of a comprehensive Middle-East musical ... A Suez Canal settlement on these lines should be ... even wider powers in practice.

The fact that government, in status, that its ... functions were "technical", that it had an Egyptian president and that the whole thing had been worked out through the United Nations with the participation of India, the Soviet Union and Egypt herself, would incline the Egyptian government to accord it important attributes in the Convention and to allow

The New Statesman and Nation, ...

The harvest of the forest is given making fo...

THE BOWATER PAPER CORPORATION LIMIT...

Great Britain United States of America Canada Aus...

There must be No Photographs, No Dogs and No Betting. There may be No Play; and "everyone visiting the Oval is admitted subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Surrey County Cricket Club, which reserves the right to have removed from the ground any person who shall refuse to comply with them or whose presence is a source of danger or annoyance to others."

These regulations were amended and shortened in 1950 but lest, in the shortening, some prohibition might have been unwittingly omitted or some loophole to licentiousness uncovered, the authorised 1879 version remains posted beside the revised; and, so that no time may be lost between the devising of a new commandment and its promulgation, loudspeakers jut from the red-bricked pavilion through which the Surrey committee can tell the multitude to stop talking, keep off the grass or, for all I know, get its hair cut. The Oval is like the factory in Chaplin's Modern Times, where the minatory eye of the boss pierced even the lavatory walls. When I am there I feel the weight not only of 1879, but also of 1984.

On Monday this house of correction was more forbidding than ever when, threatened by the sky as well as by the Surrey committee, some

Music and Musicians

...on in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

...ok at the brass. ...eed no encourage... Richard Strauss's ...young conductors. ...what he would have ... the Boston Sym... ...'s trumpeters. They ... aloft with the un... ...r of a Louis Arm... ...a strident, rasping ...reminiscent of a fire ...musical instrument, ...hack their way through ...score. Even in a ...of the two or three great ...an orchestras by saying that ..., of course, splendid in their ...hy way and no doubt well ... to raucous contemporary ...ut that they are really not ...o interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

Mr. Monteux adopted rather [illegible] tempo [illegible] that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet massive beat of this astonishing [illegible] showed what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

— TO-MORROW: Cloud- (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: ...ulous Mandarin (Covent ...wards Zero (St. James's). ...Timon of Athens (Old ...DAY: A River Breeze

— TO-MORROW: Ram Ballet (Empire); Village Fanny's First Play ...edipus Rex (Assembly ...AY: The Legend of the ...mpire).

...ption (he very nearly became a professional sailor) put the final flourish to a varied and exciting program.

Schumann's Piano Concerto has been described as behaving like a perfect lady in whatever company she found herself. Tonight both Clifford Curzon and the orchestra under Charles Munch treated her very chivalrously. True, there were occasional tugs of will when one wanted more rubato or speed than the other, but on the whole it was a crisp and sharply rhythmical performance with no sentimental playing.

"Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky," by Howard Hanson, which began the concert, is one of those "occasional pieces" that appeal through the occasion than because of their strictly musical values. It is gravely beautiful; the kind of music Matthew Arnold might have written if he had been a composer. Curiously enough, some of its phraseology reminded one listener at least of the "Turandot" of Puccini—who was not even distantly related to Matthew Arnold.

Honegger's Sixth Symphony is tragic in essence and there are certain spiky phrases that reminded us tonight of the gray, tapering towers of Edinburgh. In that symphony the playing of the strings particularly had a shining solemnity that may have made parts of the work sound more eloquent than they really were. They may not have touched our hearts, but they certainly stirred our imagination.

he Festival Society in the City
Provost Sir John G. Banks, conductor of the orchestra;
photo.)

News
Newspaper
31, 1956

THE OBSERVER
· 1791 ·
22, Tudor Street, London, E.C.4
Fleet Street 9991
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1956

Music and Musicians

Boston in Edinburgh

By PETER HEYWORTH

"DON'T look at the brass. They need no encouragement," was Richard Strauss's advice to young conductors. Heaven knows what he would have thought about the Boston Symphony Orchestra's trumpeters. They raise their bells aloft with the uninhibited fervour of a Louis Armstrong and with a strident, rasping shriek, more reminiscent of a fire alarm than a musical instrument, mercilessly hack their way through the most opulent score. Even in a quiet orchestral tutti they stand out as though the remainder of the instruments were an off-stage band.

But in every other way it has been a most exhilarating experience to hear this great orchestra in a series of concerts at Edinburgh. The first impact on the listener is not, as with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, of mere brilliance, but of a wonderful freshness, zest and confidence that in truth seemed to come from a new world. I would certainly not be eager to break a lance for Charles Münch's interpretations of the classics, and he used far too heavy a string band for his performance of Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B Flat that opened his first concert. But there was about the playing a gusto and high spirits that seemed nearer to the spirit of old Haydn than one of those exquisitely phrased and pointed performances that we are asked to accept as authentic.

Of course, the merits of the Boston Orchestra amount to much more than mere vigour and virtuosity. Its heavy brass is superbly sonorous, and in the cool brilliance of its strings there is none of that harsh metal which disfigures some American orchestras. Above all, its French-style woodwind is quite superbly lucid, fluent and elegant, and the fluttering flutes have a haunting lyrical charm unsurpassed, in my experience, by any French players. Every department of this great orchestra was shown to fine advantage in the wonderfully luminous performance they gave under Pierre Monteux of Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Europeans rather like to take refuge from the evident technical superiority of the two or three great American orchestras by saying that they are, of course, splendid in their own flashy way and no doubt well adapted to raucous contemporary music, but that they are really not suitable to interpretation of the staple classics. The fault, I suggest, lies with conductor rather than with orchestra, for Monteux and the Boston Orchestra gave last Wednesday a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, a work which floored no less an interpreter of the classics than Bruno Walter on his recent visit to London.

M. Monteux adopted rather measured tempi—certainly that of the opening movement was not allegro con brio. The unobtrusive yet incisive beat of this astonishing veteran never, however, for one moment let the music flag, and in the space he provided for himself he gave the symphony, notably in the andante, a wonderful melodic surge. Time and again the details he revealed reminded one that the charge of thick orchestration, so often levelled at Brahms, should in justice be brought to the door of some of his interpreters. Only too often lucidity in music of this sort is won at the expense of richness of sound. But the utter clarity that Monteux brings to the most complex score is achieved not by tenuous texture but by minute attention to details of balance. Certainly this Brahms symphony was as rich and warm a performance as one could wish. The inner movements had a quality of light that I have heard equalled only by Toscanini, while for all their measured tread the outer pair had real symphonic stature and drive.

*

FOR the rest, the Boston Orchestra, again under Monteux, provided an exquisite accompaniment for Casadesus's brilliant playing of the Ravel left-hand Piano Concerto (a work in which those assertive trumpets were for once not too out of place); and together the same team almost succeeded in making Franck's Symphonic Variations enjoyable. Isaac Stern gave a tender and lyrical account of Beethoven's Violin Concerto, but Charles Münch's accompaniment was brilliant, vigorous and almost aggressively extrovert. The soft string chords that open the slow movement were played with such insensitive detachment that it was impossible to resist the impression that M. Münch (who in Dukas's "L'Apprenti Sorcier" had shown what an outstanding manipulator of orchestral sound he is) was profoundly bored with the whole affair.

But the great disappointment of the Boston concerts were the new American works they chose to introduce. Under Koussevitsky, Boston fought unceasingly for contemporary music. I cannot believe that had he still been the orchestra's conductor he would have chosen for a foreign tour works as vapid as the pieces by Piston, Paul Creston and Copland I sat through. Some of the English pieces that were recently taken to Russia might be thought to be taking the cold war rather far. But the American works that the Boston Orchestra are carrying round Europe are enough to shatter Nato. American music is not in such a dismal condition as these works might suggest.

First Nights

London. — TO-MORROW: Cloud-cuckooland (New Lindsey). TUESDAY: The Miraculous Mandarin (Covent Garden); Towards Zero (St. James's). WEDNESDAY: Timon of Athens (Old Vic). THURSDAY: A River Breeze (Phoenix).

Edinburgh. — TO-MORROW: Ram Gopal Indian Ballet (Empire); Village Wooing and Fanny's First Play (Lyceum); Oedipus Rex (Assembly Hall). THURSDAY: The Legend of the Taj Mahal (Empire).

[70]

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

The Arts and Entertainment

Edinburgh 1956

IF so far this hasn't seemed a vintage year at Edinburgh, blame partly the weather: dank skies and slobbering pavements make a sad frame for any festival. From time to time we are whirled out of the murk by Great Art, that most efficient air hostess, but the exhilaration wears off: when we emerge from the Usher Hall it is still raining. A drink, we murmur, but are promptly baulked by the licensing laws. Like the initiates in The Magic Flute, we must endure the trial of water—a splendid discipline, no doubt, but in no way festive.

Oedipus is our catchword; whether by accident or design, the grim old myth bobs up everywhere. A film has already been shown of Canadian Stratford's Sophoclean production, which is due to arrive in flesh and blood at the Assembly Hall during the final week. On the fringe, as we say, Cocteau's Machine Infernale has been enterprisingly staged by the University of Aberdeen, while the Hamburg State Opera presents, as the main item of a Stravinsky-Abend, the dry but decidedly impressive opera-oratorio which Cocteau and Stravinsky devised from the legend some thirty years ago. Since Oedipus Rex consists of a series of static tableaux, it is surprising that theatrical performance should add anything to its effect; but it does. What we see, brilliantly directed by Günther Rennert in the sombre setting of Teo Otto, is not so much drama or opera as religious ritual. The three principals—Oedipus, Creon and Jocasta—stand exposed on a high platform-altar, sternly masked and taloned, each in front of a massive, rough-cast pillar which also serves for entrance and exit; below, the chorus forms a square, stony hedge; and upon this compact and almost motionless pattern the pitiless blows of fate begin to fall. The spectacle is grandly appropriate. Expecting little in the way of action or movement, we are proportionately stirred when the long-held hieratic poses disintegrate and resolve into a fresh visual composition; for example, at the slow exit of Jocasta, although this involves no more than a slow turn sideways, a few halting steps and a dreadful folding of metallic hands across the throat. The only dubious item in a brilliant presentation is that which is taken over unchanged from the author's expressed intentions, namely the use of a narrator in white tie and tails; his [illegible] suggest the compère of an intimate revue.

In the music there are some pages which, like the narrator, now seem only fossilised 1927; but most of the score retains its cold strength, creating an implacable world strangely in keeping with Cocteau's Latinised text. Leopold Ludwig conducted with evident understanding of the music's character, though the timbres and rhythms which it requires come less easily to German than to French or American players. The outstanding members of a distinguished cast were the Jocasta of Maria von Ilosvay and the Tiresias of Arnold van Mill; but on the first night we had Oedipus without the King. Helmut Melchert showed by his spare gestures and by some highly expressive inflections that he had a secure grasp of the role; but a bad (? Edinburgh) cold made him almost incapable of singing it. Except for the pointless break between the two "acts", which seemed exactly like a stage hitch, this was the only drawback to a memorable performance. But the evening tailed off sadly with Mavra, a trivial little opera buffa of 1922, prettily decorated (again by Teo Otto), poorly sung, and acted in the rough and tumble style of a battalion concert party.

Besides The Magic Flute and a Salome which is still to come, Hamburg brought us another quasi-novelty in The Barber of Baghdad by Peter Cornelius. Cornelius was a Wagner disciple who wisely did not attempt to impose a Wagnerian scheme on his gentle, lyrical muse; his Barber (1858) suggests a Schumann whose texture has felt the aerating influence of Berlioz. Extremely deft in workmanship and orchestration, it is thought by all Germans and by some musicians from other countries to be a neglected masterpiece of comic opera. On the stage, however, its lack of both musical and dramatic verve becomes too apparent, and the general effect is that of a moderately jolly charade. In Act I we have to be content with the single joke of the barber's interminable loquacity; Act II brings a fresh joke—a lover shut up in a box and discovered apparently dead. Ah, say Barber addicts, but, when well acted and well sung, the little work can be delicious; to which I can only reply that I once saw it with Elisabeth Schumann as the heroine and Richard Mayr as the Barber, and that even then it scored no more than a minor success. Still, there are charming episodes in the score, such as the scene of the muezzin and the duet for the lovers in Act II; and the Hamburg performance, though weak on the female side, was neatly turned under Albert Bittner; it was moreover exceptionally strong in its two male principals, the clear-toned and personable tenor hero of Sandor Konya and the imposingly sonorous, smooth and reasonably funny Barber of Arnold van Mill.

Orchestrally, the first week was dominated by Sir Thomas Beecham and the Royal Philharmonic, the second by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its regular conductor, Charles Munch, and that genial veteran, Pierre Monteux. At the moment of writing, the latter has yet to give his first concert; but there has already been an interesting opportunity to compare British and Franco-American styles in both the classical and the romantic repertory. As an interpreter of Viennese Symphony, Sir Thomas scored an easy victory. He made Schubert's little No. 6 in C major seem almost a masterpiece by the rhythmic spontaneity and the lightly caressing touch with which he handled it; whereas Munch treated Haydn's No. 102 in B flat, a far greater work, as a mere precision showpiece, not caring how often the weight of violin tone might reduce the flute to inaudibility, and phrasing the sinuous curves of the Adagio with streamlined efficiency. This is the kind of playing, though brilliant in attack and sumptuous in sheer tonal quality, which sometimes disappoints us in the performances of the crack American orchestras. But how wonderful they can be at their best. Their opening concert ended with a Sorcerer's Apprentice which blazed and crackled with virtuosity, and there was also much superb playing in Strauss's Don Juan, though here the conductor's conception of the music lacked authority and tenderness. Beecham, at one of his concerts, gave a Don Quixote which penetrated to the heart of the marvellous score and was yet sadly unkempt in detail; one longed, in Strauss, to combine the virtues of the two orchestras. But what orchestra in the world could surpass the Royal Philharmonic's playing, under Sir Thomas, of the Sixth Symphony of Sibelius or Delius's In a Summer Garden?

A pleasant, and surprising, feature of the programmes has been the appearance of the 79-year-old Dohnanyi both as pianist and composer. With the B.B.C. Scottish Orchestra under Ian Whyte he gave a delightfully relaxed and easy performance of his popular Variations; more significant was the Piano Quintet in E flat minor which he played at one of the morning concerts with the New Edinburgh Quartet. Though written in a near-Brahmsian vein which was already anachronistic in 1919, the work can now be seen as a valuable addition to the small number of good piano quintets; its material is attractive and its structure both original and notably successful, with thematic recurrences which come off and do not merely suggest a tiring invention.

Some leading Edinburgh attractions which I have not yet mentioned—among them the superb Braque show, the new Bartok ballet and Under Milk Wood—will soon be visible in London and can therefore await discussion by my colleagues. Of the Canadian and Italian theatrical troupes, and of the new music performed during the Festival, I hope to offer some account next week.

The New Statesman and Nation, September 1, 1956

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544
SEP 2 1956

VARIETY Wednesday, September 5, 1956

Frances & Sam Goldwyn's Royal Welcome in London

London, Sept. 4.

Samuel Goldwyn, who arrived in London yesterday (Mon.) with Mrs. Goldwyn for the launching of "Guys and Dolls," is being feted

Canada, U. S. Lift Scot Fest's Level; Edinburgh Shooting for 300,000

By GORDON IRVING

Edinburgh, Sept. 4.

This Edinburgh Festival is, in U.S. parlance, "jumping". And American and Canadian influence is hypoing the standards, both legit and music-wise.

Stratford (Ont.) Festival Theatre troupe planed in direct from Montreal, opened with Shakespeare's "Henry V" in the ancient Assembly Hall apron stage, and is set to launch Sophocles' "Oedipus Rex" in the W. B. Yeats version tomorrow (Wed.). Boston Symphony, on another lap of world tour, has also arrived to raise the music level and garner top notices.

Rainy conditions have not dampened b.o. prospects. There's every sign the 1956 event will break records. Visitors to Edinburgh in the entire three weeks' stint are likely to pass the 300,000 mark, thus beating the 1955 record by over 20,000.

The Boston orch, in from Dublin, Eire, after a matinee performance, spent 32 hectic hours flying or sailing to Scotland and giving their opening of five festival concerts in the vast 3000-seat Usher Hall. It was a rush job. Customs officers examined instruments and baggage on the backstage while Dame Myra Hess played to a festival audience in front.

Orch's 85 instruments came direct by boat to Glasgow, and were rushed through by road to Edinburgh. Operation was so speeded up that customs men at Glasgow sealed the crates and cases to allow them to move to Edinburgh, then completed their look-see and a few minutes before a last-minute rehearsal.

As G. W. Rector, orch's assistant manager put it, "We really hustled."

Critics Praise Symph

The orch got generally good notices from assembled critics. Ian Goodwin, in Daily Express, said its music was "of an extraordinary

(Continued on page 18)

MUSIC IN THE AIR—Scottish music lovers crowd Usher Hall, Edinburgh, to hear Boston Symphony Orchestra in five-day appearance last week at International Music Festival. Throng was so great spectators were allowed in stage seats normally reserved for choral groups. Dr. Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux conducted.

THE SUNDAY TIMES, SEPTEMBER 2,

nburgh Festival

PLEASURE AND PAIN

By ERNEST NEWMAN

MY nine days in Edinburgh brought me various concert experiences, besides those of Beethoven, Delius, Sibelius, Strauss and Berlioz by Sir Thomas Beecham and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, that were a pure joy for their combination of imaginative understanding and technical finish.

The two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which I heard afforded experiences of quite another kind. The orchestra itself is a superb body, of splendid tone and faultless precision. But at its first concert, under Charles Münch, it gave us a series of performances which, if I am to be quite frank, exceeded in sheer noise anything I have ever before encountered anywhere else in a lifetime of concert-going: the volume was almost consistently so overpowering that for a good part of the time I had to listen with my fingers in my ears.

We were given what I suppose was a truly authentic performance of the sixth symphony of the American composer Walter Piston, a work well representative of the new spirit of American music, forthright, efficient, hard-hitting music that was always interesting, with a finale of splendid energy. But, at the risk of hurting the feelings of many good personal friends in Boston, I am bound to say that I have never heard worse performances of the Haydn symphony in B flat major, the Strauss "Don Juan" and "L'Apprenti Sorcier"; all were excessively and meaninglessly noisy, the Haydn in particular.

On the following evening, under a conductor of another calibre, the veteran Pierre Monteux, the orchestra showed us what it really can do in the way of more civilised playing in the great Schubert C major and the Bartok Concerto for Orchestra. Monteux also gave us an American work new to us, the second symphony of Paul Creston: here again we were conscious of a new national viewpoint, even though the overall meaning of the work rather evaded us. (Sir Thomas Beecham, by the way, had given us a new English work, Richard Arnell's "Orchestral Study: Landscapes and Figures," that left me with mixed feelings. It spread itself over a great space without, I thought, getting anywhere in particular.)

The performances of the Boston orchestra under Münch were rapturously received by the audience. The manifest contradiction between its opinion and mine of what had been served up to us puzzled me greatly for a day or two, until a chance remark by a valued friend from Boston seemed to me to solve the mystery. The artistic subject it opened out for me, however, is too big for treatment here.

Some good performances in the Freemasons' Hall by an accomplished choral body, the Renaissance Singers, under their conductor Michael Howard, gave us an interesting and informative introduction to some early English and Scottish sacred music, in particular an impressive Mass by Taverner and a fine Kyrie and Gloria by that prolific and always admirable composer Anon.

✦ ✦ ✦

THE operatic bag has been a mixed one. I could not hear all the Hamburg State Opera performances, which included "The Magic Flute" and "Salome": personally I would have much preferred them to give us one of the later Strauss operas.

The outstanding thing has been the Œdipus Rex": "Mavra," as I said last week, is hardly worth listening to today. The "Œdipus Rex" was well staged in a manner based on the original specification for it of Cocteau and the composer; the total effect was duly impressive, though one was as resentful as of old of incompetencies in the dramatic construction of the work created by the frequent resort to the "Speaker" to explain the past, present and future of the familiar action to us.

I had looked forward with particular interest to Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad"; this has been a particular favourite of mine for thirty years or more for its general charm and its many quiet subtleties of comic dramatic expression. I am aware that not everyone shares my view of it: some excellent people appear to be quite insensitive to its peculiar beauty and its quiet humour. We must just leave it at that, recognising with a sigh that it takes all sorts to make a world, even a musical one.

I hope, however, that no one making his first acquaintance with the delightful little opera in the King's Theatre the other evening will fall into the error of imagining that this performance was any more than three-eighths representative of it as it really is. The orchestral playing, under Albert Bittner, was harmlessly undistinguished. The one truly Cornelian figure in the performance was the Nureddin of Sandor Konya, a tenor with an agreeable voice and a polished vocal and histrionic style.

The Barber, Arnold van Mill, who had turned all the resources of his fine voice upon the Tiresias of "Œdipus Rex," was vocally very pleasing in the part, but he was never quite the immortal Barber of Cornelius's creation: Abul Hassan should actually be much fruitier in humour and more commanding in presence than this. The stage settings were of a paltry, gimcrack order, and the production was a mass of rather childish detail. Of the two female characters, the Bostina was completely disagreeable to the ear and the Margiana as vocally ineffective as she had been a few evenings before as the Parasha of "Mavra": the Hamburg people appear, indeed, to have in general woefully underrated our British taste in matters vocal.

"SALOME"

RICHARD STRAUSS'S "Salome," last of the offerings of the Hamburg State Opera at Edinburgh, was a performance of exceptional dramatic power and clarity. Taking the place of Christel Goltz, who was indisposed, Helga Pilarczyk depicted a naïve and petulant young Princess of Judea, a Salome whom Strauss himself would have surely approved and admired. Her dance was all the more exciting for being suggestive rather than gymnastic, and her voice, steady as well as accurate in pitch, proved equal to the score's most strenuous demands.

More impressive than the neurotically precise Herod of Peter Markwort or the sulky Herodias of Ericsdotter was the best-voiced assortment of Jews and Nazarenes heard for years. Their fugal ensemble also sufficed to reveal the stirring qualities of the conductor, Leopold Ludwig.

F. A.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 374,544

SEP 2 1956

VARIETY Wednesday, September 5, 1956

Frances & Sam Goldwyn's Royal Welcome in London

London, Sept. 4.

Samuel Goldwyn, who arrived in London yesterday (Mon.) with Mrs. Goldwyn for the launching of "Guys and Dolls," is being feted

Canada, U. S. Lift Scot Fest's Level; Edinburgh Shooting for 300,000

By GORDON IRVING

Edinburgh, Sept. 4.

This Edinburgh Festival is, in U.S. parlance, "jumping". And American and Canadian influence is hypoing the standards, both legit and music-wise.

Stratford (Ont.) Festival Theatre troupe planed in direct from Montreal, opened with Shakespeare's "Henry V" in the ancient Assembly Hall apron stage, and is set to launch Sophocles' "Oedipus Rex" in the W. B. Yeats version, tomorrow (Wed.). Boston Symphony, on another lap of world tour, has also arrived to raise the music level and garner top notices.

Rainy conditions have not dampened b.o. prospects. There's every sign the 1956 event will break records. Visitors to Edinburgh in the entire three weeks' stint are likely to pass the 300,000 mark, thus beating the 1955 record by over 20,000.

The Boston orch, in from Dublin, Eire, after a matinee performance, spent 32 hectic hours flying or sailing to Scotland and giving their opening of five festival concerts in the vast 3000-seat Usher Hall. It was a rush job. Customs officers examined instruments and baggage on the backstage while Dame Myra Hess played to a festival audience in front.

Orch's 85 instruments came direct by boat to Glasgow, and were rushed through by road to Edinburgh. Operation was so speeded up that customs men at Glasgow sealed the crates and cases to allow them to move to Edinburgh, then completed their look-see and a few minutes before a last-minute rehearsal.

As G. W. Rector, orch's assistant manager put it, "We really hustled."

Critics Praise Symph

The orch got generally good notices from assembled crix. Noel Goodwin, in Daily Express, said its music was "of an extraordinary

(Continued on page 18)

MUSIC IN THE AIR—Scottish music lovers crowd Usher Hall, Edinburgh, to hear Boston Symphony Orchestra in five-day appearance last week at International Music Festival. Throng was so great spectators were allowed in stage ~~seats normally~~ reserved for choral groups. Dr. Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux conducted.

THE SUNDAY TIMES, SEPTEMBER 2,

nburgh Festival

PLEASURE AND PAIN

By ERNEST NEWMAN

MY nine days in Edinburgh brought me various concert experiences, besides those of Beethoven, Delius, Sibelius, Strauss and Berlioz by Sir Thomas Beecham and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, that were a pure joy for their combination of imaginative understanding and technical finish.

The two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which I heard afforded experiences of quite another kind. The orchestra itself is a superb body, of splendid tone and faultless precision. But at its first concert, under Charles Münch, it gave us a series of performances which, if I am to be quite frank, exceeded in sheer noise anything I have ever before encountered anywhere else in a lifetime of concert-going: the volume was almost consistently so overpowering that for a good part of the time I had to listen with my fingers in my ears.

We were given what I suppose was a truly authentic performance of the sixth symphony of the American composer Walter Piston, a work well representative of the new spirit of American music, forthright, efficient, hard-hitting music that was always interesting, with a finale of splendid energy. But, at the risk of hurting the feelings of many good personal friends in Boston, I am bound to say that I have never heard worse performances of the Haydn symphony in B flat major, the Strauss "Don Juan" and "L'Apprenti Sorcier"; all were excessively and meaninglessly noisy, the Haydn in particular.

On the following evening, under a conductor of another calibre, the veteran Pierre Monteux, the orchestra showed us what it really can do in the way of more civilised playing in the great Schubert C major and the Bartok Concerto for Orchestra. Monteux also gave us an American work new to us, the second symphony of Paul Creston: here again we were conscious of a new national viewpoint, even though the overall meaning of the work rather evaded us. (Sir Thomas Beecham, by the way, had given us a new English work, Richard Arnell's "Orchestral Study: Landscapes and Figures," that left me with mixed feelings. It spread itself over a great space without, I thought, getting anywhere in particular.)

The performances of the Boston orchestra under Münch were rapturously received by the audience. The manifest contradiction between its opinion and mine of what had been served up to us puzzled me greatly for a day or two, until a chance remark by a valued friend from Boston seemed to me to solve the mystery. The artistic subject it opened out for me, however, is too big for treatment here.

Some good performances in the Freemasons' Hall by an accomplished choral body, the Renaissance Singers, under their conductor Michael Howard, gave us an interesting and informative introduction to some early English and Scottish sacred music, in particular an impressive Mass by Taverner and a fine Kyrie and Gloria by that prolific and always admirable composer Anon.

✦ ✦ ✦

THE operatic bag has been a mixed one. I could not hear all the Hamburg State Opera performances, which included "The Magic Flute" and "Salome"; personally I would have much preferred them to give us one of the later Strauss operas.

The outstanding thing has been the Œdipus Rex": "Mavra," as I said last week, is hardly worth listening to today. The "Œdipus Rex" was well staged in a manner based on the original specification for it of Cocteau and the composer; the total effect was duly impressive, though one was as resentful as of old of incompetencies in the dramatic construction of the work created by the frequent resort to the "Speaker" to explain the past, present and future of the familiar action to us.

I had looked forward with particular interest to Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad"; this has been a particular favourite of mine for thirty years or more for its general charm and its many quiet subtleties of comic dramatic expression. I am aware that not everyone shares my view of it: some excellent people appear to be quite insensitive to its peculiar beauty and its quiet humour. We must just leave it at that, recognising with a sigh that it takes all sorts to make a world, even a musical one.

I hope, however, that no one making his first acquaintance with the delightful little opera in the King's Theatre the other evening will fall into the error of imagining that this performance was any more than three-eighths representative of it as it really is. The orchestral playing, under Albert Bittner, was harmlessly undistinguished. The one truly Cornelian figure in the performance was the Nureddin of Sandor Konya, a tenor with an agreeable voice and a polished vocal and histrionic style.

The Barber, Arnold van Mill, who had turned all the resources of his fine voice upon the Tiresias of "Œdipus Rex," was vocally very pleasing in the part, but he was never quite the immortal Barber of Cornelius's creation: Abul Hassan should actually be much fruitier in humour and more commanding in presence than this. The stage settings were of a paltry, gimcrack order, and the production was a mass of rather childish detail. Of the two female characters, the Bostana was completely disagreeable to the ear and the Margiana as vocally ineffective as she had been a few evenings before as the Parasha of "Mavra": the Hamburg people appear, indeed, to have in general woefully underrated our British taste in matters vocal.

"SALOME"

RICHARD STRAUSS'S "Salome," last of the offerings of the Hamburg State Opera at Edinburgh, was a performance of exceptional dramatic power and clarity. Taking the place of Christel Goltz, who was indisposed, Helga Pilarczyk depicted a naïve and petulant young Princess of Judea, a Salome whom Strauss himself would have surely approved and admired. Her dance was all the more exciting for being suggestive rather than gymnastic, and her voice, steady as well as accurate in pitch, proved equal to the score's most strenuous demands.

More impressive than the neurotically precise Herod of Peter Markwort or the sulky Herodias of Ericsdotter was the best-voiced assortment of Jews and Nazarenes heard for years. Their fugal ensemble also sufficed to reveal the stirring qualities of the conductor, Leopold Ludwig.

F. A.

Festspiele in Edinb

I

burgh feiert sein zehntes Fest äussere Erfolg der Idee diese g recht gegeben. Zwischen Op rten, Kammermusik und Cho
nd Kunstausstellungen bleibt
, und das ist bloss ein Vorteil, er der Fall ist, der Regengott für seinen ganzen Jahresbed n vollstopfen, um sie danach wäre Edinburgh ein geeigne atürlich in einem opernarmen h das leidenschaftlichste Int schon einmal vor mehreren mburger Staatsoper
t. Der Spielplan der ersten
s «Zauberflöte», einen
t «Oedipus Rex» und «Mawra» Bagdad» von Cornelius nd der Letztgenannte bis
t lebendig und humorvoll ng von Albert Bittner mit talischer Finesse musiziert
n Hauptdarstellern (Sandor rnold von Mill als Barbier Margiana) hat diese lieb deutsche Spieloper damit, wie in einer repräsentativen des deutschen Sprachgebi Erfolg scheint das Experi

staltungen wieder einmal, form zur Diskussion gestellt Generation aufs neue die ob das gesprochene Wort s lässt. Mit Schönbergs tons «Fassade» und — we Nacht und Wind? — R
h Arden» wurde unter den de stilistischen Voraussetzungen riert, dass auf diesem Wege nen und das Ergebnis in ä
r an der Grenze des Peinlich er solchen Kalibers dorthin
bloss, wie naheliegend die ination ist.

hränkung baulicher Eingri erung der schädigenden Ei ge und sinngemässe Gestaltun licher Werke. Prof. Imre Orm «Grünflächengestaltung am s Sees mit ihren weltbekann seien zu einer riesigen Erhol en. Der Referent schilderte Methoden unter Wahrung
ge. Stadtgärtner Richard s den Kongress mit einem at unter dem Titel «Gemei er Landschaftsplan er die Aufgabe des Landscha
ngsglied zwischen Naturwi
Ingenieur und Wirtschafter eute bei den gewaltigen Ein t zu ganz besonderer Bedeut

Superglanz
n:
sel-Petrol-Konzentrat
entrat-Shampoo
eschäften
, Pratteln/BL
re
DIAL 5711
for an Ad Taker
Say "Charge It"

cottish mus… rs crowd Usher Hall, Edinburgh, to hear Boston Symphony Orchestra in five-day appearance last week estival. Thr… as so great spectators were allowed in stage ~~seats normally~~ reserved for choral groups. Dr. Charles x conducte…

THE SUNDAY TIMES, SEPTEMBER 2, …

nbu… gh Festival

PL… ASURE AND PAIN

By ERNEST NEWMAN

MY nine … in Edinburgh … ught me various … ert experiences, beside … e of Beethoven, Delius, … lius, Strauss and Berlioz … r Thomas Beecham and … Royal Philharmonic O… tra, that were a pure … for their combination … aginative understanding … technical finish.

The two conce… the Boston Symphony Orc… which I heard afforded … riences of quite another ki… he orchestra itself is a … body, of splendid tone a… ltless precision. But at … t concert, under Charles M… it gave us a series of perfo… es which, if I am to be … rank, exceeded in sheer … anything I have ever befo… countered anywhere else in … etime of …

orchestra showed us what it really can do in the way of more civilised playing in the great Schubert C major and the Bartok Concerto for Orchestra. Monteux also gave us an American work new to us, the second symphony of Paul Creston: here again we were conscious of a new national viewpoint, even though the overall expression. I am aware that not everyone shares my view of it: some excellent people appear to be quite insensitive to its peculiar beauty and its quiet humour. We must just leave it at that, recognising with a sigh that it takes all sorts to make a world, even a musical one.

I hope, however, that no one making his first acquaintance with

Helene Weigel

…lly photographed for THE SUNDAY TIMES by DOUGLAS GLASS

is hypoing the … legit and music-wi… Stratford (Ont.) … troupe planed in di… treal, opened with … "Henry V" in the … bly Hall apron stage … launch Sophocles … in the W. B. Yeats … row (Wed.). Bos… another lap of world … arrived to raise th… and garner top noti… Rainy conditions … ened b.o. prospects … sign the 1956 eve… records. Visitors to … the entire three w… likely to pass the … thus beating the … over 20,000.

The Boston orch, … lin, Eire, after a ma… ance, spent 32 hecti… or sailing to Scotla… their opening of five … certs in the vast 30… Hall. It was a rush … officers examined ins… baggage on the bac… Dame Myra Hess pla… ival audience in front … Orch's 85 instrume… rect by boat to Glasg… rushed through by r… burgh. Operation wa… up that customs men … sealed the crates and … low them to move t… then completed their … a few minutes before … rehearsal.

As G. W. Rector, or… manager put it, "We … tled."

Critics Praise

The orch got genera… tices from assembled … Goodwin, in Daily E… its music was "of an e…

(Continued on p…

Canada, U.S. Lift Scot Fest

Continued from page 2

vitality and notched the Festival standard up by several points." Critic of the Scotsman said Boston group is "one of the finest orchestras ever assembled. Like so many superior things, it comes from Boston. It is even going as far as Moscow. It is fairly sure to leave a trail of red-faced jealousy and unkind comparisons in its wake. Not deliberately. It just can't help it—Koussevitsky and Munch have made it that way. Its playing can only be described as prodigious, perhaps the best that will ever have been heard in the Usher Hall."

In the opening night audience were Britain's Princess Royal, the Lord Mayor of London, Lord and Lady Harewood, and Sir John Banks, civic boss of Edinburgh. Conductor was Charles Munch, and program featured Haydn's Symphony No. 102 and first European performance of the Sixth Symphony by Walter Piston, American composer.

Copland's Symphonic Ode was also given its European preem during five-day stint.

Ian Hunter, the Edinburgh Fest's artistic director from 1947 to 1955, returned here briefly for a few hours, flying in from Dublin with the Boston musicians. He is now managing director of concert promoters Harold Holt Ltd., and booked the Boston Symphony's current air trek through 14 countries.

When orch arrives in London Sept. 25, Hunter will have travelled 11,000 miles with them. Tour embraces Leningrad, Moscow and Prague behind the Iron Curtain.

Pierre Monteux, guest conductor with the Bostonians, planed in from Amsterdam after conducting a performance by the Concertgebouw orch. The 81-year-old maestro is making his Edinburgh Festival bow.

Stratford Rings Bell

Stratford (Ont.) thespers have put their best foot forward, and are considering the invitation to act here a top honor. They winged in to Prestwick in small hours of an August morning, with good wishes from top government officials and all arts-lovers in Canada. Tyrone Guthrie, guest director, and resident stager Michael Langham accompanied them.

Also here with the 65 Canadian players are Peter Bennett, managing director; Tom Patterson, director of planning, and Mary Jolliffe, publicity manager. Company is playing "Henry V" and "Odeipus Rex" on 10-day session.

Plane trip across by Trans-Canada was financed via the Toronto Star, and reportedly cost $25,000. Edinburgh Festival Society is covering accommodation costs. Company has several Scots, including hair stylist Nina Lawson, farmer's daughter from Carluke, Lanarkshire, and John Gardiner, former rep actor here.

Pushing for Opera House

Building of a modern opera house in Edinburgh is being talked over in festival music circles. Lack of suitable theatres and halls is causing headaches to both official and unofficial or "fringe" groups.

Finding a vacant hall in this Athens-like city is like searching for the famed haystack needle. Commercial legit and vaude houses are all occupied, and even old-world rooms in historic wynds or closes are taken over by revue groups.

Dr. Guntheir Rennert, artistic director of the Hamburg State Opera, advised organizers only to build an opera house if people are willing to spend much coin on the project. He said it cost about 5,000,000 marks to carry out post-war reconstruction of the Hamburg Opera House and create a new auditorium.

Dr. Rennert said Edinburgh has better atmosphere for fostering theatrical arts than Hamburg. In Germany, according to director, too much nervous business energy is expended.

On financial side, this year's Edinburgh Fest looks prosperous, though losses are again directly inevitable. Junket makes coin for city while at same time losing it on actual festival.

Losses have ranged from $33,000 in 1948 to $118,000 in 1951, Festival of Britain year, when New York Philharmonic - Symphony played here. Against this the city's rate-payers foot a yearly bill for $45,000, the balance being met from a fund supported by the Arts Council and individual citizens.

Edinburgh project was never meant to be a business undertaking but "an endeavor to provide a stimulus to establishing a new way of life centered on the arts." Top revenue results to public services, and shops and local firms smile at increased turnover of about $3,000,000 a week for the three weeks.

Italian legit group, Piccolo Teatro from Milan, ran into poor biz through plays being presented in Italian lingo. Demand for seats for foreign language productions is never great, and, last year, French drama "La Dame Aux Camelias" also got off to a slow start.

"Fringe" Gets Hypo

The festival "Fringe," assembly of unofficial plays, revues, concerts, parties and operas in small church and Masonic halls scattered over 10 miles of city and neighborhood, is bigger and more interesting this year. So many productions are now staged that press crix work overtime covering the top legit and music shows as well as these "little" sideshows, many of which reveal unexpected talent for vaude, legit and tv. Cabaret slant is being stressed more, a point which this scribe has hammered for years in this yearly roundup in VARIETY.

The "Fringe," in fact, is at last in the money. Front-of-house managers look happy, and casts can afford more than hard camp beds in dressing rooms. The smaller shows cater to a more general variety of tastes, with revue predominant. Local support is also strong for this section.

Four late-night revues achieve a generally high standard of entertainment, although the London artists featured in "Light and Shade" offer only so-so material, some of it already produced in earlier revues. Hit of the "Fringe" is the late-night revue presented in Gullan's Close by the Oxford Theatre Players, a witty, intimate show, with American actor Del Kolve, from Blair, Wis., shining in solo spots along with English actors Dennis Woolf and John Pole.

Cambridge U. students put on a revue in Portobello Town Hall, and others are staged by the Irish Players in the Regent Hall and the Aberdeen students in a Queen St. location.

"Fringe" legit side is growing so much that Donald Wolfit, established English actor, starring in "The Strong Are Lonely" in a sideshow hall, suggests encouragement of an international fringe. This would bring foreign drama groups from France and Germany to Edinburgh each year. He wants some kind of official blessing given to the unofficial shows via, say, publication of their wares in the recognized Festival Society program.

London Group Scores

Legit-wise, the London Club Theatre Group is drawing good houses to see their two new plays, "Twice Five," as they're called, in St. Mary's Hall. Philip Guard has authored the pieces. Sonia Dresdel is earning plaudits for a two-hour performance in Fraser Neal Players' production of "The Human Voice" and "Miss Julia," by Jean Cocteau and Strindberg, respectively.

The Dutch actress, Nel Oosthout, is presenting solo performance of "St. Joan" to mark the G. B. Shaw centenary year. She stages solo shows throughout the world in both Dutch and English, and will present "St. Joan" at the Fortune Theatre, London, Sept. 17 for a week.

The After Dinner Opera Co. from N. Y. is late starter at the fest, and creating much interest. Company of six is staging three one-act operas, each starting at 8:30 p.m. nightly. Members have paid their own fares for the 6,000-mile trek, and are taking only nominal salaries for the tour. They have taken over a large house and will feed themselves.

To pay for the trip singers Jeanne Beauvais and Francis Barnard took jobs in commercial theatre. Up to four days before sailing, they were appearing in "The Beggar's Opera" at the Sanders Memorial Theatre in Cambridge, Mass. Norman Myrvik, the tenor, accepted concert engagements; Lucille Burnham, the musical director, gave recitals, and Richard Flusser, founder and senior producer, wrote articles and produced tv plays as well as appearing on a money-prize tv quiz.

After Dinner company is the first off-Broadway group ever to visit the Edinburgh Festival. It opened here last Tuesday (28) and will run to end of festivities Sept. 8.

World press coverage of the 10th Edinburgh proceedings is also in the mood by being bigger than before. More than 450 scribes are around, from 35 countries. They are catered for admirably by press officials Bill Nicholson and Graham Cowie in topflight system of information and query-checking which has become a model for world fests. Cabling, typing and telephonic facilities are on hand in a vast hall where scribes can munch biscuits, drink gallons of coffee and consume beer and spirits.

Festival Edinburgh 1956 will pass into history as a culture spree without top stars, but with so much culture on tap that it can't all be consumed or digested without nervous exhaustion. Ancillary film festival has also clicked bigger than before.

Wednesday, September 5,

...Lift Scot Fest's Lev... ...urgh Shooting for 30...

By GORDON IRVI...

Edinburgh, S...

This Edinburgh Festiv... U.S. parlance, "jumping... American and Canadian ... is hyping the standard... legit and music-wise.

Stratford (Ont.) Festival ... troupe planed in direct fr... treal, opened with Shak... "Henry V" in the ancien... bly Hall apron stage, and ... launch Sophocles' "Oedip... in the W. B. Yeats version ... row (Wed.). Boston Symp... another lap of world tour ... arrived to raise the mu... and garner top notices.

Rainy conditions have ne... ened b.o. prospects. There ... sign the 1956 event wil... records. Visitors to Edin... the entire three weeks' ... likely to pass the 300,00... thus beating the 1955 re... over 20,000.

The Boston orch, in fo... lin, Eire, after a matinee ... ance, spent 32 hectic hou... ar sailing to Scotland an... their opening of five fest... certs in the vast 3000-se... Hall. It was a rush job. ... officers examined instrum... baggage on the backsta... Dame Myra Hess played ... ival audience in front.

Orch's 85 instruments ... rect by boat to Glasgow, ... rushed through by road ... burgh. Operation was so ... up that customs men at ... sealed the crates and cas... low them to move to E... then completed their look... a few minutes before a la... rehearsal.

As G. W. Rector, orch's ... manager put it, "We re... tled."

Critics Praise Sym...

The orch got generally ... tices from assembled c... Goodwin, in Daily Exp... its music was "of an ext...

(Continued on pag...

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CUTTING BUREAU

Basler Nachr.	(T.Ausg.)	Basel
" "	(F.Ausg.)	"
" Nationalztg.	(M.Bl.)	"
" "	(A.Bl.)	"
Berner Tagwacht		Bern
Luz.N.Nachrichten		Luzern
Motor-Reporter		Basel
Die Tat		Zürich
Neue Zürcher Nachr.		"
" " Ztg.		"
Lichtst.Volksbl.		Lichtenstein

(33) Datum:

Festspiele in Edinburgh

I

Edinburgh feiert sein zehntes Festival und bisher hat der äussere Erfolg der Idee dieser Mammut-Veranstaltung recht gegeben. Zwischen Oper und Symphoniekonzerten, Kammermusik und Chormusik, Theater, Ballett und Kunstausstellungen bleibt wenig Zeit zum Bummeln, und das ist bloss ein Vorteil, wenn, wie das heuer hier der Fall ist, der Regengott regiert. Könnte man sich für seinen ganzen Jahresbedarf mit Kunsteindrücken vollstopfen, um sie danach in Ruhe zu verdauen, so wäre Edinburgh ein geeigneter Platz.

Wie natürlich in einem opernarmen Lande, konzentriert sich das leidenschaftlichste Interesse auf die Oper. Wie schon einmal vor mehreren Jahren, gastiert die Hamburger Staatsoper unter Günter Rennert. Der Spielplan der ersten Woche umfasste Mozarts «Zauberflöte», einen Stravinsky-Abend mit «Oedipus Rex» und «Mawra» und den «Bar-bier von Bagdad» von Cornelius. Als Gesamteindruck stand der Letztgenannte bisher obenan. Von Rennert lebendig und humorvoll inszeniert, unter der Leitung von Albert Bittner mit Liebe und kammermusikalischer Finesse musiziert und mit drei vortrefflichen Hauptdarstellern (Sandor Konya als Nureddin, Arnold von Mill als Barbier, Melitta Muszely als Margiana) hat diese liebenswürdigste, originellste deutsche Spieloper damit, wie es scheint, zum erstenmal in einer repräsentativen Aufführung die Grenzen des deutschen Sprachgebiets überschritten und der Erfolg scheint das Experiment zu rechtfertigen. Nicht ganz so glücklich steht es um die «Zauberflöte»; die gleichfalls von Rennert inszenierte, von Rudolf Kempe dirigierte Aufführung hat künstlerisches Niveau, aber der Bühnenstil ist etwas zu gemischt, und was die Sololeistungen anbelangt, sind eigentlich bloss die Pamina der Elisabeth Grümmer und der Papageno des Horst Günter in jeder Hinsicht befriedigend. In den beiden Werken des Strawinsky-Abends findet die vielseitige Begabung Rennerts als Spielleiter dankbare Objekte, und beide sind damit zum erstenmal in diesem Lande auf der Bühne erschienen. «Oedipus Rex» ist ganz aufs statistische inszeniert, mit Masken, regungslosem Chor und statuenhaft beherrschter, sparsamer Bewegung der Protagonisten, unter denen die wunderschöne, ausdrucksvolle Altstimme der Maria von Ilosvay durch ihre natürliche, ununterdrückbare Wärme beinahe aus dem Stil fällt. Die Aufführung ist in szenischer wie in musikalischer Hinsicht — Leopold Ludwig dirigiert — aus einem Guss, die Wirkung von unmenschlicher, niederschmetternder Gewalt. Dazu wäre als zweite Hälfte des Abends ein adäquates Gegengewicht nötig, das nun leider «Mawra» nicht zu geben geeignet ist: Eine komische Situation ist noch keine Komödie, und dieser Schwankszene — mehr ist es nicht — fehlt es an jedem Spannungselement. Aber wie reizend ist das auf die Bühne gestellt und musiziert! Rennert inszeniert es als Puppenspiel mit der Farbigkeit eines Bilderbogens, und Ludwig bringt aus dem permanenten, etwas angestrengten Scherzo der Musik so viel heraus, als darin zu finden ist. Aber schliesslich bleibt dieser prätentiöse Scherz doch ein Hors-d'oeuvre und entlässt den Zuschauer ohne rechte Befriedigung.

Das Konzertprogramm hat diesmal, nicht ohne Glück, Persönlichkeiten in den Mittelpunkt des Interesses gestellt. Sir Thomas Beecham sieht alarmierend hinfällig aus, wenn er das Podium betritt und man merkt ihm an, dass er die Mitte der Siebzig überschritten hat. Aber wenn er den Taktstock ergreift, ist dieser immer streitbare, ganz und gar nicht ehrwürdige Veteran von faszinierender Straffheit und Jugendlichkeit, dabei ruhig und entspannt, ein Orchesterbeherrscher von stürmischem Elan und untrüglichem Gefühl für alle Feinheiten der Rhythmik und des Klanges. Und sein Orchester, das er geformt und erzogen hat, das Londoner Royal Philharmonic, kann, namentlich mit seinen grossartigen Holzbläsern, jeden Vergleich vertragen. Dafür muss man upon Harb...

on seine gelegentliche Schwäche für Drittklassiges Kauf nehmen: Er setzt sich für einen schwachen rlioz («Waverley»-Ouvertüre) mit der gleichen erzeugung ein wie für einen starken («Harold»-phonie) und zelebriert eine Symphonie von Bakirew mit der gleichen Begeisterung wie eine Brahms. Und in Beethovens «Neunter» f man sich auf allerhand Sonderbarkeiten gefasst chen, wird aber entschädigt durch ein Finale von ter hymnischer Breite und einer Vornehmheit des nges, wie ich sie bei diesem im vokalen Teil ständ überschrienen Stück selten erlebt habe. Dem s-Solisten dieser Aufführung aber, Kim Borg, f man ohne viel Risiko eine internationale Kare grössten Stils voraussagen: Da ist wieder einmal vokales und musikalisches Talent ersten Ranges.

In einem dieser Konzerte dirigierte Arthur Bliss ei seiner jüngsten Werke. Eine dem Edinburger stival aus Anlass seiner Zehnjahresfeier gewidmete verture «Edinburgh» darf man wohl, mit allem spekt für den in allem Handwerklichen immer erlegen gestaltenden Komponisten, als Gelegenheitserk abbuchen. Ungleich bedeutender ist sein Camli zugeeignetes und von ihm prächtig gespieltes olinkonzert, die wertvollste Neuheit dieser Woche. istreich in der Formlösung, immer anregend und rsönlich in der Erfindung, klar und durchsichtig im ang, dankbar für das Soloinstrument geschrieben, irde dieses Konzert die Aufmerksamkeit der Geiger rdienen.

Sir Thomas ist nicht der einzige berühmte Veteran eses Festes: Pierre Monteux kommt mit dem ostoner Orchester, und Ernst von Dohnányi t als Pianist seinen alten Zauber geübt, so wie er s Komponist von Charakter und überlegenem Könen seinen Rang in allem Wechsel der Zeiten beauptet hat. Er spielte mit dem Schottischen undfunkorchester unter Ian Whyte seine ariationen über ein Kinderlied, mit dem Edinurger Streichquartett sein Klavierquintett it Campoli Sonaten. Ein herrlicher Musiker, hat r mit neunundsiebzig Jahren seine alte, unvergleiche Anschlagskultur, Natürlichkeit und makellose auberkeit der Technik, und wenn er seine eigene usik spielt, so lebt sie und zeugt für einen, der ich nicht umbiegen und nicht unterkriegen lässt.

Im Rahmen der Kammerkonzerte wurde in zwei ... performed by the Melos Ensemble, with Gervase de Peyer as soloist. With its sustained lyrical flow and contrapuntal mastery, this is perhaps its composer's finest work; it scored a very great and well deserved success.

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE REGISTER
Circ. D. 23,142
SEP 8 1956

American Musicians Tour Europe

FOR THE FIRST TIME, the Boston Symphony orchestra was a part of the annual Edinburgh Festival, currently in its 10th season, during the orchestra's tour of 13 European countries this month. Five of the 27 concerts they will give abroad were played in Usher Hall in the Scottish capital.

The Boston Symphony was formally welcomed to the Edinburgh Festival by the Lord Provost of the city, the Rt. Honorable Sir John G. Banks.

In order to show Europe some of the work of outstanding contemporary American composers, each of the Symphony's 27 concerts in Europe will contain one American orchestral work. In Edinburgh the orchestra performed three works commissioned for its current, 75th anniversary season: Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky"; Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode"; and Walter Piston's "Symphony No. 6."

Following its five days in Edinburgh the Boston Symphony makes a swing through the Scandinavian capitals of Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki, then becomes the first American orchestra ever to visit Russia, giving two concerts in Leningrad and two in Moscow. Visits follow to Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London.

The Symphony's tour of Europe is being made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad. And America could not have a better "ambassador" than this great orchestra.

To Change the Subject

Post-C.S. Monitor Sept. 7, 56

Scots Rise to Defend Kilts ..... By Harold Hobson

Edinburgh

There has, it is said, been no rain in Sicily since May. This is hardly surprising to the American visitors to the Edinburgh Festival, for most of the rain available to Europe during a normal summer seems to have fallen on Princess Street and the Scott monument in the opening week of the annual celebrations.

The Iowa Girls' Pipe Band has been observed gazing up at the castle on its hill in the middle of the city, drenched to the skin. The members of this organization have aroused great interest in the city, and they have achieved the unique distinction of having a society formed—called Am Feile Beag—whose object is to protest against their wearing the kilt. This society, whose secretary has been writing letters to the Edinburgh papers, was established about four months ago, when first the rumors of the Iowa girls' impending visit to Edinburgh began to shake the foundations of its gray and ancient walls.

Having rested somewhat from pinching the Stone of Scone from Westminster Abbey, patriotic Scots began to brood on the subject of the kilt. For the kilt is a masculine garment, and Am Feile Beag felt, and feels, strongly that it should not be worn by girls, even by girls from Iowa. This, naturally, has brought the Iowa ladies prominently into the public eye, and they have probably had the best advertisement of any organization at present in Edinburgh.

Not that, in this matter of advertisement, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is far behind them. The public relations of this august body are handled by Walter Alford, and his management of them is regarded as a model by the newspapers of this city. His impromptu descriptions of the orchestra's tour through 13 countries are looked on almost with awe.

By the way, of the 105 members of the orchestra, 25 will be visiting the countries of their birth during their tour in Europe. Sixteen come from France, three from Russia, two from Czechoslovakia, two from Austria, and one each from Denmark and Germany.

Two members of the company, Doriot Anthony Dwyer (first flute) and Olivia Luetcke (second harp) are women. For some reason, surprise has been expressed that there are not more. After all, there are more than two in the Iowa Girls' Pipe Band.

It is a good thing for the finances of the festival that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not going to confine its attentions to Edinburgh only. This is what the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra did in 1951, with the result that the festival authorities had to pay the whole cost of bringing the orchestra over, a sum of £50,000 ($150,000). Happily, many European countries are joining Scotland in providing the Boston orchestra with its bread and butter, and a few hot dogs, on its present tour.

In its turn, the orchestra is gratified to be taking part in the biggest festival Edinburgh has yet had. This is the tenth festival, and there will be 164 performances of all kinds, in which 2,000 artists will participate. Some 250,000 visitors (besides the Iowa Girls' Pipe Band) are expected; and the sensible Scottish people are hoping they will spend £3,000,000.

London Times Sept 7, 1956

The Arts

...NS OF SOUND ...FROM MUSIC

...D NOTE-SPINNING

...USIC CRITIC

...l, their artistic value small, yet they ...rve a purpose that the pretentious orches...al work cannot serve. They are usually organized in simple forms and do not ramble; they sometimes have a title which precipitates their pervading emotion; they are often elegant; they serve as a flourish of ebullience at the end of a sober recital.

Sound-manipulation allied with sense is of course unobjectionable. When Tchaikovsky gives a section each to strings, wood and brass in the scherzo of his fourth symphony and Vaughan Williams similarly segregates whole movements for strings or wind and makes percussion dominant in the finale in his eighth symphony, they are using manipulations of sound for the exposition of musical ideas, or maybe their musical thought is even conditioned by the medium they have chosen. Certainly inspiration can be derived from the medium, as when an étude becomes a work of art (though it is not so much the sound as the technical problem of execution which is the composer's starting point in this type of composition).

It would seem then that this antithesis of sound and sense, of music and meaning, has to work on a sliding scale. In big music the sound is the medium for the meaning, note-spinning is not enough and clever scoring is no substitute for ideas. It is on this issue that value judgments are exercised: the manipulation of sounds and motifs, however ingenious, does not in itself make music

MEANS AND ENDS

On the other hand in the bonbons of organ music the thought need be no more than a focal pin-point for the sound. If the ear is tickled that is enough. Of a meringue it is only asked that it should be sweet and collapsible. Dr. Thalben Ball topped off his recital at Gloucester on Sunday with such meringues. But it is essential to observe the relationship of means and ends and not to invert them. The composer writing a commissioned show-piece for orchestra is easily misled into confusing his manipulations of sound with the ideas and impulses of true composition, but he deceives no one but himself. We still make value judgments in spite of logical positivists and Stravinskys and do not mistake manipulations for music.

...haps a little disappointing, though it would be unreasonable to expect that every new work should add something of value to the listener's experience and absurd to suppose that it must have in it the seeds of permanence. Indeed a high mortality rate is the only possible condition of musical health, for some music is only fit for its own generation —some indeed like Bliss's Edinburgh Overture for a single purpose or occasion—and for longer endurance rigorous selection is necessary, or all our backs will be broken under the weight of the accumulation. Still, six is a lot in one festival to be still-born—though Piston's symphony may be excepted as having some kick of life in it.

What was wrong with the whole lot of them was that they were manipulations of sound rather than music. The difference? If a philosopher could supply the answer to that the chief problem in musical aesthetics would be solved, criticism provided with a scale of measurement and the old dilemma about abstract and programme music buried for ever. But philosophy lately has been running away in the other direction and declaring that there are no value judgments. If, it now says, you did not like Mr. Copland's nor Mr. Arnell's nor Mr. Frankel's new piece for orchestra you need not like them, but you are not entitled to say there was anything wrong with them.

ON OTHER MEN'S WORKS

Few musicians would agree that this is a correct description of the facts. Musicians are extremely critical of each other, and though no doubt certain emotions such as liking and disliking enter into their judgments more than into the critics' and the audiences' judgments, still they can recognize in other composers' productions, if not in their own, that some compositions are good, strong, and real, while others are rubbish, weak and not real music, mere manipulations of sound. When faced with one of these bits of audible fretwork the critic takes refuge in the phrase "well written for the instrument" and implies that it is all sound and no sense. The aesthetic doctrine that music has no meaning beyond itself, that it is a construction in sound, that it does not or ought not to "express" anything, has had the authority of Stravinsky to make it fashionable. But Stravinsky has used the doctrine to cover up the extinction of his own powers of invention and it remains just as inadequate to account for musical values as it did when Hanslick first formulated it.

Having looked the problem boldly in the face let us dodge round it by considering some unlikely examples of music, in which the sound is more important than the sense. (There is an additional difficulty in this discussion because "sense" no longer means "given by sense perception" but "approved by the intellect," so that "senseless" (i.e., brainless) music is in fact music whose only appeal is to the senses, ear-tickling, as we call it). The literature of the organ contains at the other end of the repertory from the substantial music of Bach some fripperies which make play with the sound-effects of mixtures, mutations and fancy stops. Their intellectual value is

[78]

Veranstaltungen wieder einmal, das Melodram als Kunstform zur Diskussion gestellt. Es scheint, dass jede Generation aufs neue die Erfahrung machen muss, ob das gesprochene Wort sich mit Musik mischen lässt. Mit Schönbergs «Pierrot Lunaire», Waltons «Fassade» und — wer reitet so spät durch Nacht und Wind? — Richard Strauss' «Enoch Arden» wurde unter den denkbar verschiedensten stilistischen Voraussetzungen wieder einmal demonstriert, dass auf diesem Wege kein Neuland zu gewinnen und das Ergebnis in ästhetischer Hinsicht immer an der Grenze des Peinlichen ist. Dass sich Musiker solchen Kalibers dorthin verlocken lassen, zeigt bloss, wie naheliegend die Versuchung dieser Kombination ist. hg.

SYMPHONY BY ALWYN

The B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra's 1956-57 season of fortnightly symphony concerts on Wednesdays will open at the Festival Hall on October 10 and end on March 20. There will be 10 concerts in all, with the following conductors: Sir John Barbirolli, Mr. Pedro de Freitas Branco, Sir Malcolm Sargent, Mr. Rudolf Kempe, and Mr. Igor Stravinsky.

At the opening concert, to be conducted by Sir John Barbirolli, there will be a first performance of William Alwyn's Symphony No. 3 commissioned by the B.B.C. At the second concert, on October 24, Alan Rawsthorne's Concerto No. 2 for Violin and Orchestra will be given its first performance by Mr. Endre Wolf. Mr. Freitas Branco will conduct. The first performance in England of Villa-Lobos's Concerto for harp and orchestra will be given by Nicanor Zabaleta on November 21.

Mr. Stravinsky will conduct a programme of his own music on December 5, when the B.B.C. Chorus and the B.B.C. Choral Society will join the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra. The works will be Symphony in C; Symphony of Psalms, for chorus and orchestra; and "Pulcinella" (ballet in one act with three solo voices).

Wednesday, September 5,

. Lift Scot Fest's Lev
urgh Shooting for 30

By GORDON IRVI

Edinburgh, S
This Edinburgh Festiva
U.S. parlance, "jumping
American and Canadian is hypoing the standard
legit and music-wise.
Stratford (Ont.) Festival troupe planed in direct fr treal, opened with Shak
"Henry V" in the ancien bly Hall apron stage, and launch Sophocles' "Oedip
in the W. B. Yeats version row (Wed.). Boston Sympl another lap of world tour, arrived to raise the mus
and garner top notices.
Rainy conditions have n
ened b.o. prospects. There sign the 1956 event wil records. Visitors to Edinb
the entire three weeks' s
likely to pass the 300,00
thus beating the 1955 re
over 20,000.
The Boston orch, in fro
lin, Eire, after a matinee
ance, spent 32 hectic hou
or sailing to Scotland an their opening of five festi
certs in the vast 3000-se
Hall. It was a rush job.
officers examined instrum baggage on the backsta Dame Myra Hess played t
ival audience in front.
Orch's 85 instruments
rect by boat to Glasgow, rushed through by road burgh. Operation was so up that customs men at sealed the crates and cas low them to move to E
then completed their loo
a few minutes before a la rehearsal.
As G. W. Rector, orch's manager put it, "We re
tled."

Critics Praise Sym

The orch got generally
tices from assembled c Goodwin, in Daily Exp
its music was "of an ext
(Continued on pag

sn't

ast week
Charle

INTERNATIONAL PRESS

Basler Nachr.	(T.Ausg.)	Basel
" "	(F.Ausg.)	"
" Nationalztg.	(M.Bl.)	"
" "	(A.Bl.)	"
Berner Tagwacht		Bern
Luz.N.Nachrichten		Luzern
Motor-Reporter		Basel
Die Tat		Zürich
Neue Zürcher Nachr.		"
" Ztg.		"
Lichtst.Volksbl.		Liechtenstein

(33) Datum:

Festspiele in Edinburgh

Edinburgh feiert sein zehntes Festival und bisher hat der äussere Erfolg dieses Mammut-Veranstaltung recht gegeben. Zwischen Oper und Symphoniekonzerten, Kammermusik und Chormusik, Theater, Ballett und Kunstausstellungen bleibt wenig Zeit zum Bummeln, und das ist bestimmt von Vorteil, wenn, wie das neuer hier der Fall ist, der Regierungsrat regiert. Könnte man sich für seinen ganzen Jahresbedarf mit Kunsteindrücken vollstopfen, um sich dann in Ruhe zu verdauen, so wäre Edinburgh ein geeigneter Platz.

Wie natürlich in einem angelsächsischen Lande, konzentriert sich das Interesse auf die Oper. Wie schon einmal vor zehn Jahren, gastiert die Hamburger Staatsoper unter Günter Rennert. Der Spielplan dieser einen Woche umfasste Mozarts «Zauberflöte», einen Stravinsky-Abend mit «Oedipus Rex» und «Vagant» und den «Barbier von Bagdad» von Cornelius. Als Gesamteindruck stand der Letztgenannte bisher obenan. Von Rennert lebendig und [illegible] inszeniert, unter der Leitung von Albert Bittner mit Liebe und kammermusikalischer Feinheit [illegible] und mit drei vortrefflichen Hauptdarstellern, Isander Konya als Nureddin, Arnold von Milli als Barbier, Melitta Muszely als Margiana) hat diese liebenswürdigste, originellste deutsche Spieloper damit, wie es scheint, zum erstenmal in einer repräsentativen Aufführung die Grenzen des deutschen Sprachgebiets überschritten und der Erfolg scheint das Experiment zu rechtfertigen. Nicht ganz so glücklich steht es um die «Zauberflöte»; die gleichfalls von Rennert inszenierte, von Rudolf Kempe dirigierte Aufführung hat künstlerisches Niveau, aber der Bühnenstil ist etwas zu gemischt, und was die Sololeistungen anbelangt, sind eigentlich bloss die Pamina der Elisabeth Grümmer und der Papageno des Horst Günter in jeder Hinsicht befriedigend. In den beiden Werken des Strawinsky-Abends findet die vielseitige Begabung Rennerts als Spielleiter dankbare Objekte, und beide sind damit zum erstenmal in diesem Lande auf der Bühne erschienen. «Oedipus Rex» ist ganz aufs statistische inszeniert, mit Masken, regungslosem Chor und statuenhaft beherrschter, sparsamer Bewegung der Protagonisten, unter denen die wunderschöne, ausdrucksvolle Altstimme der Maria von Ilosvay durch ihre natürliche, ununterdrückbare Wärme beinahe aus dem Stil fällt. Die Aufführung ist in szenischer wie in musikalischer Hinsicht — Leopold Ludwig dirigiert — aus einem Guss, die Wirkung von unmenschlicher, niederschmetternder Gewalt. Dazu wäre als zweite Hälfte des Abends ein adäquates Gegengewicht nötig, das nun leider «Mawra» nicht zu geben geeignet ist: Eine komische Situation ist noch keine Komödie, und dieser Schwankszene — mehr ist es nicht — fehlt es an jedem Spannungselement. Aber wie reizend ist das auf die Bühne gestellt und musiziert! Rennert inszeniert es als Puppenspiel mit der Farbigkeit eines Bilderbogens, und Ludwig bringt aus dem permanenten, etwas angestrengten Scherzo der Musik so viel heraus, als darin zu finden ist. Aber schliesslich bleibt dieser prätentiöse Scherz doch ein Hors-d'oeuvre und entlässt den Zuschauer ohne rechte Befriedigung.

Das Konzertprogramm hat diesmal nicht ohne Glück, Persönlichkeiten in den Mittelpunkt des Interesses gestellt. Sir Thomas Beecham sieht alarmierend hinfällig aus, wenn er das Podium betritt und man merkt ihm an, dass er die Mitte der Siebzig überschritten hat. Aber wenn er den Taktstock ergreift, ist dieser immer streitbare, ganz und gar nicht ehrwürdige Veteran von faszinierender Straffheit und Jugendlichkeit, dabei ruhig und entspannt, ein Orchestersterbeherrscher von stürmischem Elan und untrügerischem Gefühl für alle Feinheiten der Rhythmik und des Klanges. Und sein Orchester, das er geformt und erzogen hat, das Londoner Royal Philharmonic, kann, namentlich mit seinen grossartigen Holzbläsern, jeden Vergleich vertragen. Dafür muss man

upon Harf

on seine gelegentliche Schwäche für Drittklassiges Kauf nehmen: Er setzt sich für einen schwachen rlioz («Waverley»-Ouvertüre) mit der gleichen erzeugung ein wie für einen starken («Harold»-nphonie) und zelebriert eine Symphonie von Bakirew mit der gleichen Begeisterung wie eine Brahms. Und in Beethovens «Neunter» f man sich auf allerhand Sonderbarkeiten gefasst hen, wird aber entschädigt durch ein Finale von ter hymnischer Breite und einer Vornehmheit des nges, wie ich sie bei diesem im vokalen Teil stänüberschrienen Stück selten erlebt habe. Dem s-Solisten dieser Aufführung aber, Kim Borg, f man ohne viel Risiko eine internationale Kare grössten Stils voraussagen: Da ist wieder einmal vokales und musikalisches Talent ersten Ranges. In einem dieser Konzerte dirigierte Arthur Bliss ei seiner jüngsten Werke. Eine dem Edinburger stival aus Anlass seiner Zehnjahresfeier gewidmete vertüre «Edinburgh» darf man wohl, mit allem spekt für den in allem Handwerklichen immer erlegen gestaltenden Komponisten, als Gelegenheitsrk abbuchen. Ungleich bedeutender ist sein Cami zugeeignetes und von ihm prächtig gespieltes olinkonzert, die wertvollste Neuheit dieser Woche. istreich in der Formlösung, immer anregend und rsönlich in der Erfindung, klar und durchsichtig im ang, dankbar für das Soloinstrument geschrieben, irde dieses Konzert die Aufmerksamkeit der Geiger rdienen.

Sir Thomas ist nicht der einzige berühmte Veteran eses Festes: Pierre Monteux kommt mit dem ostoner Orchester, und Ernst von Dohnányi t als Pianist seinen alten Zauber geübt, so wie er s Komponist von Charakter und überlegenem Könen seinen Rang in allem Wechsel der Zeiten beauptet hat. Er spielte mit dem Schottischen undfunkorchester unter Ian Whyte seine ariationen über ein Kinderlied, mit dem Edinit Campoli Sonaten. Ein herrlicher Musiker, hat mit neunundsiebzig Jahren seine alte, unvergleichche Anschlagskultur, Natürlichkeit und makellose auberkeit der Technik, und wenn er seine eigene usik spielt, so lebt sie und zeugt für einen, der ich nicht umbiegen und nicht unterkriegen lässt.

Im Rahmen der Kammerkonzerte wurde in zwei

[illegible] performed by the Melos Ensemble, with Gervase de Peyer as soloist. With its sustained lyrical flow and contrapuntal mastery, this is perhaps its composer's finest work; it scored a very great and well deserved success.

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE REGISTER
Circ. D. 23,142
SEP 3 1956

American Musicians Tour Europe

FOR THE FIRST TIME, the Boston Symphony orchestra was a part of the annual Edinburgh Festival, currently in its 10th season, during the orchestra's tour of 13 European countries this month. Five of the 27 concerts they will give abroad were played in Usher Hall in the Scottish capital.

The Boston Symphony was formally welcomed to the Edinburgh Festival by the Lord Provost of the city, the Rt. Honorable Sir John G. Banks.

In order to show Europe some of the work of outstanding contemporary American composers, each of the Symphony's 27 concerts in Europe will contain one American orchestral work. In Edinburgh the orchestra performed three works commissioned for its current, 75th anniversary season: Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky"; Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode"; and Walter Piston's "Symphony No. 6."

Following its five days in Edinburgh the Boston Symphony makes a swing through the Scandinavian capitals of Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki, then becomes the first American orchestra ever to visit Russia, giving two concerts in Leningrad and two in Moscow. Visits follow to Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London.

The Symphony's tour of Europe is being made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad. And America could not have a better "ambassador" than this great orchestra.

To Change the Subject

Boston C.S. Monitor Sept. 7, 56

Scots Rise to Defend Kilts ..... By Harold Hobson

Edinburgh

There has, it is said, been no rain in Sicily since May. This is hardly surprising to the American visitors to the Edinburgh Festival, for most of the rain available to Europe during a normal summer seems to have fallen on Princess Street and the Scott monument in the opening week of the annual celebrations.

The Iowa Girls' Pipe Band has been observed gazing up at the castle on its hill in the middle of the city, drenched to the skin. The members of this organization have aroused great interest in the city, and they have achieved the unique distinction of having a society formed—called Am Feile Beag—whose object is to protest against their wearing the kilt. This society, whose secretary has been writing letters to the Edinburgh papers, was established about four months ago, when first the rumors of the Iowa girls' impending visit to Edinburgh began to shake the foundations of its gray and ancient walls.

Having rested somewhat from pinching the Stone of Scone from Westminster Abbey, patriotic Scots began to brood on the subject of the kilt. For the kilt is a masculine garment, and Am Feile Beag felt, and feels, strongly that it should not be worn by girls, even by girls from Iowa. This, naturally, has brought the Iowa ladies prominently into the public eye, and they have probably had the best advertisement of any organization at present in Edinburgh.

Not that, in this matter of advertisement, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is far behind them. The public relations of this august body are handled by Walter Alford, and his management of them is regarded as a model by the newspapers of this city. His impromptu descriptions of the orchestra's tour through 13 countries are looked on almost with awe.

By the way, of the 105 members of the orchestra, 25 will be visiting the countries of their birth during their tour in Europe. Sixteen come from France, three from Russia, two from Czechoslovakia, two from Austria, and one each from Denmark and Germany.

Two members of the company, Doriot Anthony Dwyer (first flute) and Olivia Luetcke (second harp) are women. For some reason, surprise has been expressed that there are not more. After all, there are more than two in the Iowa Girls' Pipe Band.

It is a good thing for the finances of the festival that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not going to confine its attentions to Edinburgh only. This is what the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra did in 1951, with the result that the festival authorities had to pay the whole cost of bringing the orchestra over, a sum of £50,000 ($150,000). Happily, many European countries are joining Scotland in providing the Boston orchestra with its bread and butter, and a few hot dogs, on its present tour.

In its turn, the orchestra is gratified to be taking part in the biggest festival Edinburgh has yet had. This is the tenth festival, and there will be 164 performances of all kinds, in which 2,000 artists will participate. Some 250,000 visitors (besides the Iowa Girls' Pipe Band) are expected; and the sensible Scottish people are hoping they will spend £3,000,000.

London Times
Sept 7, 1956

The Arts

Veranstaltungen wieder einmal, das Melodram als Kunstform zur Diskussion gestellt. Es scheint, dass jede Generation aufs neue die Erfahrung machen muss, ob das gesprochene Wort sich mit Musik mischen lässt. Mit Schönbergs «Pierrot Lunaire», Waltons «Fassade» und — wer reitet so spät durch Nacht und Wind? — Richard Strauss' «Enoch Arden» wurde unter den denkbar verschiedensten stilistischen Voraussetzungen wieder einmal demonstriert, dass auf diesem Wege kein Neuland zu gewinnen und das Ergebnis in ästhetischer Hinsicht immer an der Grenze des Peinlichen ist. Dass sich Musiker solchen Kalibers dorthin verlocken lassen, zeigt bloss, wie naheliegend die Versuchung dieser Kombination ist.

hg.

NS OF SOUND FROM MUSIC

O NOTE-SPINNING

SIC CRITIC

l, their artistic value small, yet they rve a purpose that the pretentious orchesal work cannot serve. They are usually organized in simple forms and do not ramble; they sometimes have a title which precipitates their pervading emotion; they are often elegant; they serve as a flourish of ebullience at the end of a sober recital.

Sound-manipulation allied with sense is of course unobjectionable. When Tchaikovsky gives a section each to strings, wood and brass in the scherzo of his fourth symphony and Vaughan Williams similarly segregates whole movements for strings or wind and makes percussion dominant in the finale in his eighth symphony, they are using manipulations of sound for the exposition of musical ideas, or maybe their musical thought is even conditioned by the medium they have chosen. Certainly inspiration can be derived from the medium, as when an étude becomes a work of art (though it is not so much the sound as the technical problem of execution which is the composer's starting point in this type of composition).

It would seem then that this antithesis of sound and sense, of music and meaning, has to work on a sliding scale. In big music the sound is the medium for the meaning, note-spinning is not enough and clever scoring is no substitute for ideas. It is on this issue that value judgments are exercised: the manipulation of sounds and motifs, however ingenious, does not in itself make music

MEANS AND ENDS

On the other hand in the bonbons of organ music the thought need be no more than a focal pin-point for the sound. If the ear is tickled that is enough. Of a meringue it is only asked that it should be sweet and collapsible. Dr. Thalben Ball topped off his recital at Gloucester on Sunday with such meringues. But it is essential to observe the relationship of means and ends and not to invert them. The composer writing a commissioned showpiece for orchestra is easily misled into confusing his manipulations of sound with the ideas and impulses of true composition, but he deceives no one but himself. We still make value judgments in spite of logical positivists and Stravinskys and do not mistake manipulations for music.

haps a little disappointing, though it would be unreasonable to expect that every new work should add something of value to the listener's experience and absurd to suppose that it must have in it the seeds of permanence. Indeed a high mortality rate is the only possible condition of musical health, for some music is only fit for its own generation —some indeed like Bliss's Edinburgh Overture for a single purpose or occasion—and for longer endurance rigorous selection is necessary, or all our backs will be broken under the weight of the accumulation. Still, six is a lot in one festival to be still-born—though Piston's symphony may be excepted as having some kick of life in it.

What was wrong with the whole lot of them was that they were manipulations of sound rather than music. The difference? If a philosopher could supply the answer to that the chief problem in musical aesthetics would be solved, criticism provided with a scale of measurement and the old dilemma about abstract and programme music buried for ever. But philosophy lately has been running away in the other direction and declaring that there are no value judgments. If, it now says, you did not like Mr. Copland's nor Mr. Arnell's nor Mr. Frankel's new piece for orchestra you need not like them, but you are not entitled to say there was anything wrong with them.

ON OTHER MEN'S WORKS

Few musicians would agree that this is a correct description of the facts. Musicians are extremely critical of each other, and though no doubt certain emotions such as liking and disliking enter into their judgments more than into the critics' and the audiences' judgments, still they can recognize in other composers' productions, if not in their own, that some compositions are good, strong, and real, while others are rubbish, weak and not real music, mere manipulations of sound. When faced with one of these bits of audible fretwork the critic takes refuge in the phrase "well written for the instrument" and implies that it is all sound and no sense. The aesthetic doctrine that music has no meaning beyond itself, that it is a construction in sound, that it does not or ought not to "express" anything, has had the authority of Stravinsky to make it fashionable. But Stravinsky has used the doctrine to cover up the extinction of his own powers of invention and it remains just as inadequate to account for musical values as it did when Hanslick first formulated it.

Having looked the problem boldly in the face let us dodge round it by considering some unlikely examples of music, in which the sound is more important than the sense. (There is an additional difficulty in this discussion because "sense" no longer means "given by sense perception" but "approved by the intellect," so that "senseless" (i.e., brainless) music is in fact music whose only appeal is to the senses, ear-tickling, as we call it). The literature of the organ contains at the other end of the repertory from the substantial music of Bach some fripperies which make play with the sound-effects of mixtures, mutations and fancy stops. Their intellectual value is

SYMPHONY BY ALWYN

The B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra's 1956-57 season of fortnightly symphony concerts on Wednesdays will open at the Festival Hall on October 10 and end on March 20. There will be 10 concerts in all, with the following conductors: Sir John Barbirolli, Mr. Pedro de Freitas Branco, Sir Malcolm Sargent, Mr. Rudolf Kempe, and Mr. Igor Stravinsky.

At the opening concert, to be conducted by Sir John Barbirolli, there will be a first performance of William Alwyn's Symphony No. 3 commissioned by the B.B.C. At the second concert, on October 24, Alan Rawsthorne's Concerto No. 2 for Violin and Orchestra will be given its first performance by Mr. Endre Wolf. Mr. Freitas Branco will conduct. The first performance in England of Villa-Lobos's Concerto for harp and orchestra will be given by Nicanor Zabaleta on November 21.

Mr. Stravinsky will conduct a programme of his own music on December 5, when the B.B.C. Chorus and the B.B.C. Choral Society will join the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra. The works will be Symphony in C; Symphony of Psalms, for chorus and orchestra; and "Pulcinella" (ballet in one act with three solo voices).

[78]

To Change the Subject

Post & C.S. Monitor Sept. 7, 56

Scots Rise to Defend Kilts ..... By Harold Hobson

Edinburgh

There has, it is said, been no rain in Sicily since May. This is hardly surprising to the American visitors to the Edinburgh Festival, for most of the rain available to Europe during a normal summer seems to have fallen on Princess Street and the Scott monument in the opening week of the annual celebrations.

The Iowa Girls' Pipe Band has been observed gazing up at the castle on its hill in the middle of the city, drenched to the skin. The members of this organization have aroused great interest in the city, and they have achieved the unique distinction of having a society formed—called Am Feile Beag—whose object is to protest against their wearing the kilt. This society, whose secretary has been writing letters to the Edinburgh papers, was established about four months ago, when first the rumors of the Iowa girls' impending visit to Edinburgh began to shake the foundations of its gray and ancient walls.

Having rested somewhat from pinching the Stone of Scone from Westminster Abbey, patriotic Scots began to brood on the subject of the kilt. For the kilt is a masculine garment, and Am Feile Beag felt, and feels, strongly that it should not be worn by girls, even by girls from Iowa. This, naturally, has brought the Iowa ladies prominently into the public eye, and they have probably had the best advertisement of any organization at present in Edinburgh.

Not that, in this matter of advertisement, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is far behind them. The public relations of this august body are handled by Walter Alford, and his management of them is regarded as a model by the newspapers of this city. His impromptu descriptions of the orchestra's tour through 13 countries are looked on almost with awe.

By the way, of the 105 members of the orchestra, 25 will be visiting the countries of their birth during their tour in Europe. Sixteen come from France, three from Russia, two from Czechoslovakia, two from Austria, and one each from Denmark and Germany.

Two members of the company, Doriot Anthony Dwyer (first flute) and Olivia Luetcke (second harp) are women. For some reason, surprise has been expressed that there are not more. After all, there are more than two in the Iowa Girls' Pipe Band.

It is a good thing for the finances of the festival that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not going to confine its attentions to Edinburgh only. This is what the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra did in 1951, with the result that the festival authorities had to pay the whole cost of bringing the orchestra over, a sum of £50,000 ($150,000). Happily, many European countries are joining Scotland in providing the Boston orchestra with its bread and butter, and a few hot dogs, on its present tour.

In its turn, the orchestra is gratified to be taking part in the biggest festival Edinburgh has yet had. This is the tenth festival, and there will be 164 performances of all kinds, in which 2,000 artists will participate. Some 250,000 visitors (besides the Iowa Girls' Pipe Band) are expected; and the sensible Scottish people are hoping they will spend £3,000,000.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CUTTING BUREAU

Basler Nachr. (T.Ausg.)	Basel
" " (F.Ausg.)	"
" Nationalztg. (M.Bl.)	"
" " (A.Bl.)	"
Berner Tagwacht	Bern
Luz.N.Nachrichten	Luzern
Motor-Reporter	Basel
Die Tat	Zürich
Neue Zürcher Nachr.	"
" " Ztg.	"
Lichtst.Volksbl.	Lichtenstein

(33) Datum: 7 SEP 1956

Festspiele in Edinburgh

I

Edinburgh feiert sein zehntes Festival und bisher hat der äussere Erfolg der Idee dieser Mammut-Veranstaltung recht gegeben. Zwischen Oper und Symphoniekonzerten, Kammermusik und Chormusik, Theater, Ballett und Kunstausstellungen bleibt wenig Zeit zum Bummeln, und das ist bloss ein Vorteil, wenn, wie das heuer hier der Fall ist, der Regengott regiert. Könnte man sich für seinen ganzen Jahresbedarf mit Kunsteindrücken vollstopfen, um sie danach in Ruhe zu verdauen, so wäre Edinburgh ein geeigneter Platz.

Wie natürlich in einem opernarmen Lande, konzentriert sich das leidenschaftlichste Interesse auf die Oper. Wie schon einmal vor mehreren Jahren, gastiert die Hamburger Staatsoper unter Günter Rennert. Der Spielplan der ersten Woche umfasste Mozarts «Zauberflöte», einen Stravinsky-Abend mit «Oedipus Rex» und «Mawra» und den «Barbier von Bagdad» von Cornelius. Als Gesamteindruck stand der Letztgenannte bisher obenan. Von Rennert lebendig und humorvoll inszeniert, unter der Leitung von Albert Bittner mit Liebe und kammermusikalischer Finesse musiziert und mit drei vortrefflichen Hauptdarstellern (Sandor Konya als Nureddin, Arnold von Mill als Barbier, Melitta Muszely als Margiana) hat diese liebenswürdigste, originellste deutsche Spieloper damit, wie es scheint, zum erstenmal in einer repräsentativen Aufführung die Grenzen des deutschen Sprachgebiets überschritten und der Erfolg scheint das Experiment zu rechtferti-

Veranstaltungen wieder einmal, das Melodram als Kunstform zur Diskussion gestellt. Es scheint, dass jede Generation aufs neue die Erfahrung machen muss, ob das gesprochene Wort sich mit Musik mischen lässt. Mit Schönbergs «Pierrot Lunaire», Waltons «Fassade» und — wer reitet so spät durch Nacht und Wind? — Richard Strauss' «Enoch Arden» wurde unter den denkbar verschiedensten stilistischen Voraussetzungen wieder einmal demonstriert, dass auf diesem Wege kein Neuland zu gewinnen und das Ergebnis in ästhetischer Hinsicht immer an der Grenze des Peinlichen ist. Dass sich Musiker solchen Kalibers dorthin verlocken lassen, zeigt bloss, wie naheliegend die Versuchung dieser Kombination ist.

hg.

Beschränkung baulicher Eingriffe, Gewässerschutz, Milderung der schädigenden Eingriffe, Landschaftspflege und sinngemässe Gestaltung bei der Errichtung baulicher Werke. Prof. Imre Ormos (Ungarn) sprach über «Grünflächengestaltung am Plattensee». Die Ufer dieses Sees mit ihren weltbekannten natürlichen Reizen seien zu einer riesigen Erholungsstätte ausgebaut worden. Der Referent schilderte die dabei angewandten Methoden unter Wahrung naturschützlerischer Belange. Stadtgärtner Richard Arioli (Basel) schloss den Kongress mit einem zusammenfassenden Referat unter dem Titel «Gemeinschaftsarbeit in der Landschaftsplanung», in welchem er über die Aufgabe des Landschaftsgestalters als Verbindungsglied zwischen Naturwissenschafter, Architekt, Ingenieur und Wirtschafter sprach, eine Aufgabe, die heute bei den gewaltigen Eingriffen in die Landschaft zu ganz besonderer Bedeutung gelangt sei.

London Times Sept 7, 1956

upon Harfleur was exhilarating; the swaying fortunes of Agincourt were most imaginatively suggested in a kind of stylised ballet sequence; the comic episodes went with a swing; in short, Michael Langham had made excellent use of the cockpit stage, which suits this play admirably.

I rashly promised last week to say something about the new music performed at Edinburgh this year. Greatly to their credit, the Boston Symphony Orchestra included an unfamiliar American work in each of their five programmes; and the first two of these were full-scale symphonies, the Sixth of Walter Piston (born 1894) and the Second of Paul Creston (born 1906). After listening to these works, I feel inclined to echo Sir Thomas Beecham's advice to an English composer: "Not a symphony, my boy. There are far too many British symphonies this year—or in any other year for that matter!" For British, read American, French, German, Dutch, and the advice remains sound. Perhaps the symphony, pride and glory of European music for two centuries, is becoming an obsolescent form. There are eminent symphonists still living, but they are mostly in their seventies, their eighties and their nineties; with a few notable exceptions, the young rarely confide to this form their most vital thoughts. Merit could be discovered in the symphonies of both concert which began with this overture continued with a performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, under Pierre Monteux, of the most consummate beauty; London concert-goers may be glad to know that he is to play it again at the second of the Orchestra's two Festival Hall concerts, on September 25th.

Of the morning concerts at the Freemasons' Hall I have space to mention only the two at which Rosalyn Tureck impeccably played all the Partitas of Bach, and that at which Bliss's Clarinet Quintet was splendidly performed by the Melos Ensemble, with Gervase de Peyer as soloist. With its sustained lyrical flow and contrapuntal mastery, this is perhaps its composer's finest work; it scored a very great and well deserved success.

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR

---

m Superglanz
ätzlich:
ennessel-Petrol-Konzentrat
Konzentrat-Shampoo
achgeschäften
o. AG., Pratteln/BL
Haare

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE REGISTER
Circ. D. 23,142
SEP 8 1956

American Musicians Tour Europe

FOR THE FIRST TIME, the Boston Symphony orchestra was a part of the annual Edinburgh Festival, currently in its 10th season, during the orchestra's tour of 13 European countries this month. Five of the 27 concerts they will give abroad were played in Usher Hall in the Scottish capital.

The Boston Symphony was formally welcomed to the Edinburgh Festival by the Lord Provost of the city, the Rt. Honorable Sir John G. Banks.

In order to show Europe some of the work of outstanding contemporary American composers, each of the Symphony's 27 concerts in Europe will contain one American orchestral work. In Edinburgh the orchestra performed three works commissioned for its current, 75th anniversary season: Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky"; Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode"; and Walter Piston's "Symphony No. 6."

Following its five days in Edinburgh the Boston Symphony makes a swing through the Scandinavian capitals of Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki, then becomes the first American orchestra ever to visit Russia, giving two concerts in Leningrad and two in Moscow. Visits follow to Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London.

The Symphony's tour of Europe is being made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad. And America could not have a better "ambassador" than this great orchestra.

The Arts

MANIPULATIONS OF SOUND AS DISTINCT FROM MUSIC

THE OBJECTION TO NOTE-SPINNING

FROM OUR MUSIC CRITIC

None of the half-dozen novelties performed at the Edinburgh Festival amounted to anything, which was perhaps a little disappointing, though it would be unreasonable to expect that every new work should add something of value to the listener's experience and absurd to suppose that it must have in it the seeds of permanence. Indeed a high mortality rate is the only possible condition of musical health, for some music is only fit for its own generation —some indeed like Bliss's Edinburgh Overture for a single purpose or occasion—and for longer endurance rigorous selection is necessary, or all our backs will be broken under the weight of the accumulation. Still, six is a lot in one festival to be still-born—though Piston's symphony may be excepted as having some kick of life in it.

What was wrong with the whole lot of them was that they were manipulations of sound rather than music. The difference? If a philosopher could supply the answer to that the chief problem in musical aesthetics would be solved, criticism provided with a scale of measurement and the old dilemma about abstract and programme music buried for ever. But philosophy lately has been running away in the other direction and declaring that there are no value judgments. If, it now says, you did not like Mr. Copland's nor Mr. Arnell's nor Mr. Frankel's new piece for orchestra you need not like them, but you are not entitled to say there was anything wrong with them.

ON OTHER MEN'S WORKS

Few musicians would agree that this is a correct description of the facts. Musicians are extremely critical of each other, and though no doubt certain emotions such as liking and disliking enter into their judgments more than into the critics' and the audiences' judgments, still they can recognize in other composers' productions, if not in their own, that some compositions are good, strong, and real, while others are rubbish, weak and not real music, mere manipulations of sound. When faced with one of these bits of audible fretwork the critic takes refuge in the phrase "well written for the instrument" and implies that it is all sound and no sense. The aesthetic doctrine that music has no meaning beyond itself, that it is a construction in sound, that it does not or ought not to "express" anything, has had the authority of Stravinsky to make it fashionable. But Stravinsky has used the doctrine to cover up the extinction of his own powers of invention and it remains just as inadequate to account for musical values as it did when Hanslick first formulated it.

Having looked the problem boldly in the face let us dodge round it by considering some unlikely examples of music, in which the sound is more important than the sense. (There is an additional difficulty in this discussion because "sense" no longer means "given by sense perception" but "approved by the intellect," so that "senseless" (i.e., brainless) music is in fact music whose only appeal is to the senses, ear-tickling, as we call it). The literature of the organ contains at the other end of the repertory from the substantial music of Bach some fripperies which make play with the sound-effects of mixtures, mutations and fancy stops. Their intellectual value is nil, their artistic value small, yet they serve a purpose that the pretentious orchestral work cannot serve. They are usually organized in simple forms and do not ramble; they sometimes have a title which precipitates their pervading emotion; they are often elegant; they serve as a flourish of ebullience at the end of a sober recital.

Sound-manipulation allied with sense is of course unobjectionable. When Tchaikovsky gives a section each to strings, wood and brass in the scherzo of his fourth symphony and Vaughan Williams similarly segregates whole movements for strings or wind and makes percussion dominant in the finale in his eighth symphony, they are using manipulations of sound for the exposition of musical ideas, or maybe their musical thought is even conditioned by the medium they have chosen. Certainly inspiration can be derived from the medium, as when an étude becomes a work of art (though it is not so much the sound as the technical problem of execution which is the composer's starting point in this type of composition).

It would seem then that this antithesis of sound and sense, of music and meaning, has to work on a sliding scale. In big music the sound is the medium for the meaning, note-spinning is not enough and clever scoring is no substitute for ideas. It is on this issue that value judgments are exercised: the manipulation of sounds and motifs, however ingenious, does not in itself make music

MEANS AND ENDS

On the other hand in the bonbons of organ music the thought need be no more than a focal pin-point for the sound. If the ear is tickled that is enough. Of a meringue it is only asked that it should be sweet and collapsible. Dr. Thalben Ball topped off his recital at Gloucester on Sunday with such meringues. But it is essential to observe the relationship of means and ends and not to invert them. The composer writing a commissioned show-piece for orchestra is easily misled into confusing his manipulations of sound with the ideas and impulses of true composition, but he deceives no one but himself. We still make value judgments in spite of logical positivists and Stravinskys and do not mistake manipulations for music.

SYMPHONY BY ALWYN

The B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra's 1956-57 season of fortnightly symphony concerts on Wednesdays will open at the Festival Hall on October 10 and end on March 20. There will be 10 concerts in all, with the following conductors: Sir John Barbirolli, Mr. Pedro de Freitas Branco, Sir Malcolm Sargent, Mr. Rudolf Kempe, and Mr. Igor Stravinsky.

At the opening concert, to be conducted by Sir John Barbirolli, there will be a first performance of William Alwyn's Symphony No. 3 commissioned by the B.B.C. At the second concert, on October 24, Vaughan Rawsthorne's Concerto No. 2 for Violin and Orchestra will be given its first performance by Mr. Endre Wolf. Mr. Freitas Branco will conduct. The first performance in England of Villa-Lobos's Concerto for harp and orchestra will be given by Nicanor Zabaleta on November 21.

Mr. Stravinsky will conduct a programme of his own music on December 5, when the B.B.C. Chorus and the B.B.C. Choral Society will join the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra. The works will be Symphony in C; Symphony of Psalms, for chorus and orchestra; and "Pulcinella" (ballet in one act with three solo voices).

[78]

Wednesday, September 5, 195

. Lift Scot Fest's Level; urgh Shooting for 300,

By GORDON IRVING

Edinburgh, Sept

This Edinburgh Festival T
U.S. parlance, "jumping"
American and Canadian inf is hypoing the standards,
legit and music-wise.

Stratford (Ont.) Festival T troupe planed in direct fro treal, opened with Shake
"Henry V" in the ancient bly Hall apron stage, and i launch Sophocles' "Oedipus
in the W. B. Yeats version, row (Wed.). Boston Sympho another lap of world tour, i arrived to raise the musi
and garner top notices.

Rainy conditions have not ened b.o. prospects. There' sign the 1956 event will records. Visitors to Edinb
the entire three weeks' s
likely to pass the 300,00
thus beating the 1955 re
over 20,000.

The Boston orch, in fi
lin, Eire, after a matinee
ance, spent 32 hectic hou
or sailing to Scotland an their opening of five fest
certs in the vast 3000-se
Hall. It was a rush job.
officers examined instru baggage on the backst Dame Myra Hess played
ival audience in front.

Orch's 85 instruments
rect by boat to Glasgow rushed through by roa burgh. Operation was up that customs men
sealed the crates and low them to mov
then completed th
a few minutes bef
rehearsal.

As G. W. Rector
manager put it,
tled."

Critics Frat

The orch got ge tices from assemb
Goodwin, in Daily its music was "of a

(Continued o

INTERNATIONAL PRESSE

Basler Nachr.	(T.Ausg.)	Basel
" "	(F.Ausg.)	"
" Nationalztg.	(M.Bl.)	"
" "	(A.Bl.)	"
Berner Tagwacht		Bern
Luz.N.Nachrichten		Luzern
Motor-Reporter		Basel
Die Tat		Zürich
Neue Zürcher Nachr.		"
" " Ztg.		"
Lichtst.Volksbl.Lichtenstein

(33) Datum:

Festspiele in Edinburgh

I

Edinburgh feiert sein zehntes Festival und bi hat der äussere Erfolg der Idee dieser Mammutnstaltung recht gegeben. Zwischen Oper und Symp nkonzerten, Kammermusik und Chormusik, Thea Ballett und Kunstausstellungen bleibt wenig Zeit z Bummeln, und das ist bloss ein Vorteil, wenn, wie heuer hier der Fall ist, der Regengott regiert. Könn man sich für seinen ganzen Jahresbedarf mit Kun eindrücken vollstopfen, um sie danach in Ruhe zu ve dauen, so wäre Edinburgh ein geeigneter Platz.

Wie natürlich in einem opernarmen Lande, konzer riert sich das leidenschaftlichste Interesse auf die Oper. Wie schon einmal vor mehreren Jahren, gastiert die Hamburger Staatsoper unter Günter
Rennert. Der Spielplan der ersten Woche umfasste
Mozarts «Zauberflöte», einen Stravinsky-
Abend mit «Oedipus Rex» und «Mavra» und den «Barbier von Bagdad» von Cornelius. Als Gesamtein-druck stand der Letztgenannte bisher obenan. Von Rennert lebendig und humorvoll inszeniert, unter der Leitung von Albert Bittner mit Liebe und kam-mermusikalischer Finesse musiziert und mit drei vortrefflichen Hauptdarstellern (Sandor Konya als Nureddin, Arnold von Mill als Barbier, Melitta Mus-zely als Margiana) hat diese liebenswürdigste, ori-ginellste deutsche Spieloper damit, wie es scheint, zum erstenmal in einer repräsentativen Aufführung die Grenzen des deutschen Sprachgebiets überschritten und der Erfolg scheint das Experiment zu rechtferti-

Veranstaltungen wieder einmal, das Melodram als Kunstform zur Diskussion gestellt. Es scheint, dass jede Generation aufs neue die Erfahrung machen muss, ob das gesprochene Wort sich mit Musik mi-chen lässt. Mit Schönbergs «Pierrot Lunaire», Waltons «Fassade» und — wer reitet so spät
durch Nacht und Wind? — Richard Strauss' «Enoch Arden» wurde unter den denkbar verschiedenten stilistischen Voraussetzungen wieder einmal de-monstriert, dass auf diesem Wege kein Neuland zu gewinnen und das Ergebnis in ästhetischer Hinsicht immer an der Grenze des Peinlichen ist. Dass sich Musiker solchen Kalibers dorthin verlocken lassen, zeigt bloss, wie naheliegend die Versuchung dieser Kombination ist.

hg.

Beschränkung baulicher Eingriffe, Gewässerschut
Milderung der schädigenden Eingriffe, Landschaft pflege und sinngemässe Gestaltung bei der Errichtun baulicher Werke. Prof. Imre Ormos (Ungarn) spra über «Grünflächengestaltung am Plattensee». Die Ufe dieses Sees mit ihren weltbekannten natürlichen Re zen seien zu einer riesigen Erholungsstätte ausgebau worden. Der Referent schilderte die dabei angewand ten Methoden unter Wahrung naturschützlerische Belange. Stadtgärtner Richard Arioli (Basel schloss den Kongress mit einem zusammenfassende Referat unter dem Titel «Gemeinschaftsarbei in der Landschaftsplanung», in welcher er über die Aufgabe des Landschaftsgestalters als Ve bindungsglied zwischen Naturwissenschafter, Arch tekt, Ingenieur und Wirtschafter sprach, eine Aufgabe die heute bei den gewaltigen Eingriffen in die Land schaft zu ganz besonderer Bedeutung gelangt sei.

m Superglanz
ätzlich:
ennessel-Petrol-Konzentrat
Konzentrat-Shampoo
achgeschäften
o. AG., Pratteln/BL
laare

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE REGISTER
Circ. D. 23,142
SEP 8 1956

American Musicians Tour Europe

FOR THE FIRST TIME, the Boston Symphony orchestra was a part of the annual Edinburgh Festival, currently in its 10th season, during the orchestra's tour of 13 European countries this month. Five of the 27 concerts they will give abroad were played in Usher Hall in the Scottish capital.

The Boston Symphony was formally welcomed to the Edinburgh Festival by the Lord Provost of the city, the Rt. Honorable Sir John G. Banks.

In order to show Europe some of the work of outstanding contemporary American composers, each of the Symphony's 27 concerts in Europe will contain one American orchestral work. In Edinburgh the orchestra performed three works commissioned for its current, 75th anniversary season: Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky"; Aaron Copland's "Symphonic Ode"; and Walter Piston's "Symphony No. 6."

Following its five days in Edinburgh the Boston Symphony makes a swing through the Scandinavian capitals of Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki, then becomes the first American orchestra ever to visit Russia, giving two concerts in Leningrad and two in Moscow. Visits follow to Prague, Vienna, Stuttgart, Munich, Zurich, Berne, Paris, Chartres and London.

The Symphony's tour of Europe is being made in cooperation with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre and Academy, the professional agency appointed by the United States State Department to assist American performing artists to tour abroad. And America could not have a better "ambassador" than this great orchestra.

To Change the Subject

Boston C.S. Monitor Sept. 7, 56

Scots Rise to Defend Kilts ..... By Harold Hobson

Edinburgh

There has, it is said, been no rain in Sicily since May. This is hardly surprising to the American visitors to the Edinburgh Festival, for most of the rain available to Europe during a normal summer seems to have fallen on Princess Street and the Scott monument in the opening week of the annual celebrations.

The Iowa Girls' Pipe Band has been observed gazing up at the castle on its hill in the middle of the city, drenched to the skin. The members of this organization have aroused great interest in the city, and they have achieved the unique distinction of having a society formed—called Am Feile Beag—whose object is to protest against their wearing the kilt. This society, whose [illegible] retary has been writing let[illegible] rgh papers, was [illegible] ago, when first [illegible] pending visit to [illegible] foundations of [illegible]

[illegible] m pinching the [illegible] ter Abbey, pa- [illegible] the subject of [illegible] uline garment, [illegible] s, strongly that [illegible] even by girls [illegible] brought the [illegible] e public eye, [illegible] est advertise- [illegible] ent in Edin- [illegible]

[illegible] tisement, the [illegible] behind them. [illegible] st body are handled by Walter Alford, and his management of them is regarded as a model by the newspapers of this city. His impromptu descriptions of the orchestra's tour through 13 countries are looked on almost with awe.

By the way, of the 105 members of the orchestra, 25 will be visiting the countries of their birth during their tour in Europe. Sixteen come from France, three from Russia, two from Czechoslovakia, two from Austria, and one each from Denmark and Germany.

Two members of the company, Doriot Anthony Dwyer (first flute) and Olivia Luetcke (second harp) are women. For some reason, surprise has been expressed that there are not more. After all, there are more than two in the Iowa Girls' Pipe Band.

It is a good thing for the finances of the festival that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not going to confine its attentions to Edinburgh only. This is what the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra did in 1951, with the result that the festival authorities had to pay the whole cost of bringing the orchestra over, a sum of £50,000 ($150,000). Happily, many European countries are joining Scotland in providing the Boston orchestra with its bread and butter, and a few hot dogs, on its present tour.

In its turn, the orchestra is gratified to be taking part in the biggest festival Edinburgh has yet had. This is the tenth festival, and there will be 164 performances of all kinds, in which 2,000 artists will participate. Some 250,000 visitors (besides the Iowa Girls' Pipe Band) are expected; and the sensible Scottish people are hoping they will spend £3,000,000.

GRUNDIG
TK8-3D
Price
72 GNS.
(excluding microphone)

London Times Sept 7, 1956

The New Statesman and Nation, September 8, 1956

Piston and Creston, but the dominant impression left by both was that they were unnecessary: they seemed to have come into being, not because either composer felt an irresistible impulse to write that and nothing else, but because a symphony is still the very acme of musical respectability, and a composer without symphonies to his credit feels like a man whose wardrobe possesses neither dark suit nor dinner jacket. Creston especially, who is of Italian origin, disclosed a quite unsymphonic temperament in the two 10-minute movements of which his No. 2 was composed; the first of these movements was tuneful, lush and pleasantly unpretentious, while the second attempted an uneasy alliance between jazz content and contrapuntal device. Piston, a pupil of Nadia Boulanger and, thanks to his long tenure of the chair of music at Harvard, a central and fruitful figure in American musical life, is a far more intellectual type of composer than Creston. His mastery of orchestration makes a brilliant thing out of a quicksilver Scherzo, played with marvellous finesse by the Bostonians; but by the time we reached the finale the lack of arresting ideas and of rhythmic impulse had dulled our interest. Aaron Copland's revision of his 1929 Symphonic Ode I was unable to hear; Isadore Freed's Festival Overture proved entirely commonplace. But the concert which began with this overture continued with a performance of Brahms's Third Symphony, under Pierre Monteux, of the most consummate beauty; London concert-goers may be glad to know that he is to play it again at the second of the Orchestra's two Festival Hall concerts, on September 25th.

Of the morning concerts at the Freemasons' Hall I have space to mention only the two at which Rosalyn Tureck impeccably played all the Partitas of Bach, and that at which Bliss's Clarinet Quintet was splendidly performed by the Melos Ensemble, with Gervase de Peyer as soloist. With its sustained lyrical flow and contrapuntal mastery, this is perhaps its composer's finest work; it scored a very great and well deserved success.

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR

The Arts

MANIPULATIONS OF SOUND AS DISTINCT FROM MUSIC

THE OBJECTION TO NOTE-SPINNING

FROM OUR MUSIC CRITIC

None of the half-dozen novelties performed at the Edinburgh Festival amounted to anything, which was perhaps a little disappointing, though it would be unreasonable to expect that every new work should add something of value to the listener's experience and absurd to suppose that it must have in it the seeds of permanence. Indeed a high mortality rate is the only possible condition of musical health, for some music is only fit for its own generation —some indeed like Bliss's Edinburgh Overture for a single purpose or occasion—and for longer endurance rigorous selection is necessary, or all our backs will be broken under the weight of the accumulation. Still, six is a lot in one festival to be still-born—though Piston's symphony may be excepted as having some kick of life in it.

What was wrong with the whole lot of them was that they were manipulations of sound rather than music. The difference? If a philosopher could supply the answer to that the chief problem in musical aesthetics would be solved, criticism provided with a scale of measurement and the old dilemma about abstract and programme music buried for ever. But philosophy lately has been running away in the other direction and declaring that there are no value judgments. If, it now says, you did not like Mr. Copland's nor Mr. Arnell's nor Mr. Frankel's new piece for orchestra you need not like them, but you are not entitled to say there was anything wrong with them.

ON OTHER MEN'S WORKS

Few musicians would agree that this is a correct description of the facts. Musicians are extremely critical of each other, and though no doubt certain emotions such as liking and disliking enter into their judgments more than into the critics' and the audiences' judgments, still they can recognize in other composers' productions, if not in their own, that some compositions are good, strong, and real, while others are rubbish, weak and not real music, mere manipulations of sound. When faced with one of these bits of audible fretwork the critic takes refuge in the phrase "well written for the instrument" and implies that it is all sound and no sense. The aesthetic doctrine that music has no meaning beyond itself, that it is a construction in sound, that it does not or ought not to "express" anything, has had the authority of Stravinsky to make it fashionable. But Stravinsky has used the doctrine to cover up the extinction of his own powers of invention and it remains just as inadequate to account for musical values as it did when Hanslick first formulated it.

Having looked the problem boldly in the face let us dodge round it by considering some unlikely examples of music, in which the sound is more important than the sense. (There is an additional difficulty in this discussion because "sense" no longer means "given by sense perception" but "approved by the intellect," so that "senseless" (i.e., brainless) music is in fact music whose only appeal is to the senses, ear-tickling, as we call it). The literature of the organ contains at the other end of the repertory from the substantial music of Bach some fripperies which make play with the sound-effects of mixtures, mutations and fancy stops. Their intellectual value is nil, their artistic value small, yet they serve a purpose that the pretentious orchestral work cannot serve. They are usually organized in simple forms and do not ramble; they sometimes have a title which precipitates their pervading emotion; they are often elegant; they serve as a flourish of ebullience at the end of a sober recital.

Sound-manipulation allied with sense is of course unobjectionable. When Tchaikovsky gives a section each to strings, wood and brass in the scherzo of his fourth symphony and Vaughan Williams similarly segregates whole movements for strings or wind and makes percussion dominant in the finale in his eighth symphony, they are using manipulations of sound for the exposition of musical ideas, or maybe their musical thought is even conditioned by the medium they have chosen. Certainly inspiration can be derived from the medium, as when an étude becomes a work of art (though it is not so much the sound as the technical problem of execution which is the composer's starting point in this type of composition).

It would seem then that this antithesis of sound and sense, of music and meaning, has to work on a sliding scale. In big music the sound is the medium for the meaning, note-spinning is not enough and clever scoring is no substitute for ideas. It is on this issue that value judgments are exercised: the manipulation of sounds and motifs, however ingenious, does not in itself make music

MEANS AND ENDS

On the other hand in the bonbons of organ music the thought need be no more than a focal pin-point for the sound. If the ear is tickled that is enough. Of a meringue it is only asked that it should be sweet and collapsible. Dr. Thalben Ball topped off his recital at Gloucester on Sunday with such meringues. But it is essential to observe the relationship of means and ends and not to invert them. The composer writing a commissioned show-piece for orchestra is easily misled into confusing his manipulations of sound with the ideas and impulses of true composition, but he deceives no one but himself. We still make value judgments in spite of logical positivists and Stravinskys and do not mistake manipulations for music.

SYMPHONY BY ALWYN

The B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra's 1956-57 season of fortnightly symphony concerts on Wednesdays will open at the Festival Hall on October 10 and end on March 20. There will be 10 concerts in all, with the following conductors: Sir John Barbirolli, Mr. Pedro de Freitas Branco, Sir Malcolm Sargent, Mr. Rudolf Kempe, and Mr. Igor Stravinsky.

At the opening concert, to be conducted by Sir John Barbirolli, there will be a first performance of William Alwyn's Symphony No. 3 commissioned by the B.B.C. At the second concert, on October 24, Vaughan Rawsthorne's Concerto No. 12, for Violin and Orchestra will be given its first performance by Mr. Endre Wolf. Mr. Freitas Branco will conduct. The first performance in England of Villa-Lobos's Concerto for harp and orchestra will be given by Nicanor Zabaleta on November 21.

Mr. Stravinsky will conduct a programme of his own music on December 5, when the B.B.C. Chorus and the B.B.C. Choral Society will join the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra. The works will be Symphony in C; Symphony of Psalms, for chorus and orchestra; and "Pulcinella" (ballet in one act with three solo voices).

[78]

TIGHT BINDING

Boston Symphony at Edinburgh Festival — Play Fro

Varied Reactions to Programs in Scotland

By Felix Aprahamian
Edinburgh

The world's most perfect orchestral instrument displayed its qualities when the first of five Edinburgh Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given under Charles Munch at the Usher Hall on Sunday, Aug. 26. A packed house, which included the Princess Royal, the Earl and Countess of Harewood, and many other notables, gave the visitors a resounding welcome, matching the spontaneity and volume of sound with which the orchestra has regaled it.

This first program, containing one standard symphony and one contemporary American work, set a pattern for the remaining four evenings, which were shared equally by Mr. Munch and Pierre Monteux as conductors. But the opening item, Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B flat, provided a whip with which some of the critics have not hesitated to flay Mr. Munch. It was, of course, a bad choice, having regard to his naturally ebullient and impulsive reaction to all music, irrespective of its period, and the ever-increasing susceptibility of critics in matters of interpretative style.

Trend to Period Style

Only a week ago, at the Henry Wood Promenade Concerts in London—the most popular orchestral series in Great Britain—the Fourth Brandenburg Concerto was given, not only by a drastically reduced number of players, but with the two recorders specified by Bach instead of the two transverse flutes more usually encountered. These ideas of period style as well as original score, are fast winning ground; and at such a time, it is courting adverse criticism to employ a Haydn symphony as a vehicle for either the passionate temperament of a conductor or the sheer virtuosity of an orchestra.

Symphony No. 102 in B flat happens to be big enough to withstand such treatment, and in further extenuation, it may be said that Mr. Munch did nothing that is not latent in Haydn's score if approached in a fresh, uninhibited and un-historical way. Everything came out, however, magnified and intensified. Haydn could only have dreamed of such range of dynamics, such speed, such expressive nuances, and so fantastically precise an orchestral ensemble. Certainly he never knew them.

Samples of Opinion

On Tuesday we read notices like the following:

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra played in a manner worthy of its long reputation . . . everything done by this 100-strong force is conspicuously assured, collected, controlled. . . . The response is there almost before Munch demands it. This orchestra has freshness, alacrity, smartness. It snaps to its work, and the sound has an edge on it." (Daily Mail.)

". . . one of the finest orchestras ever assembled. Like so many superior things, it comes from Boston. . . . It is fairly sure to leave a train of red-faced jealousy and unkind comparisons in its wake. Not deliberately. It just can't help it. Koussevitzky and Munch have made it that way. Its playing can only be described as prodigious, perhaps the best that will ever have been heard in the Usher Hall." (The Scotsman.)

But there were other notices that refused to overlook stylistic anachronisms. Thus the oracular voice of The Times, after correctly assessing the tone quality of the orchestra, as nearer to that of the Philadelphia than to that of the New York Philharmonic Symphony, and revealing the usual English bias against French style, narrow-bore trumpets, by describing the Boston Symphony's as "indeed too shatteringly loud," took our visitors to task for their curtain-raiser:

"But orchestra and conductor blotted their copy books right at the beginning by an absurdly inflated performance of Haydn's B flat Symphony No. 102. Have French conductors no sense of style, and do they disregard the scholars' work done in the present century on the music of the eighteenth?"

The scarcely less austere Daily Telegraph referred to Mr. Munch's "tense, supercharged style and an inclination to exaggerations of rhythm and dynamics" in the Haydn Symphony, finding these "better suited to Strauss's 'Don Juan,' where the ear-splitting climaxes and excessively sumptuous orchestral palette emphasized the work's 'kolossal' character."

Program Suggestions

Starting off with "Le Carnaval Romain" or Chabrier's "Gwendoline" Overture might have avoided all this. But until some musically omniscient person, who can juggle with and reconcile several disparate elements—an orchestra's size and characteristic sonority, a hall's acoustics, a conductor's and the critics' foibles, the desires of a festival program committee, and the exigencies of the box-office—takes over the highly specialized task of program-building, the professional fault-finders will rightly pounce on whatever offends their ears. The very brilliance of sound and execution in Munch's Haydn provided splendid grist for their critical mills.

But in other respects the Boston Symphony and its two conductors have achieved a triumph. Munch's account of "L'Apprenti-Sorcier" was so dazzling in effect that the audience held its breath in the silent bars as well as beats, and was too entranced by the orchestral virtuosity even to smile at the great contrabassoon joke when it came. Even if Dukas intended us to laugh, he could hardly have objected to so stunning a performance.

Backstage glimpse of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, and the audience which filled Usher Hall to hear the orchestra at the Edinburgh Festival.

Monteux Offerings

Monteux's program on the following evening included Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra, an appropriate choice, for it was the Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky who launched this now world-famous orchestral showpiece. The veteran conductor's standard symphony was the great Schubert C major, with its Andante truly con moto. His American offering was the engaging Second Symphony of Paul Creston, which, with its warmer harmonies and happy dance rhythms, fell on our ears more gratefully than two Koussevitzky Foundation novelties introduced by Dr. Munch.

These were Piston's Sixth Symphony and Copland's Symphonic Ode. As expected from one whose admirable musical textbooks are published in England as well as in the United States, Piston left no doubt of his academic mastery. As fluent as any Hindemith piece, but with fewer harmonic asperities, his novelty made a good general impression on this, its first European performance. Its Scherzo proved immediately attractive, but its slow movement unduly drawn out. Copland's Ode proved tougher fare and left doubts as to whether its immense difficulties, on which time and trouble had obviously been lavished, were worth overcoming.

Speaking at a Festival press conference, Mrs. Olga Koussevitsky, widow of Serge Koussevitsky, told how, when her husband was a young man in St. Petersburg, he wrote a piece called "Andante Cantabile" which a publisher accepted. For that composition, which is still played from time to time, neither Koussevitsky nor any of his relatives received one kopek.

That incident, she said, made him want to do something to protect composers. Several years later he made a start by founding a publishing house in Berlin which protected Russian composers not covered by the Berne convention.

Mrs. Koussevitsky stressed here that commissioning new works is not, in itself, a complete service to composers. It is essential also that the works be performed and recorded so they can become known.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
SEP 13 1956

Boston State of the Nation

Mr. Stevenson's 'New America'

By JOSEPH C. HARSCH, Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston's most needed new grade school is opening today.

It is a school for 1,100 children across the street from New England's largest, and the nation's third-largest, public housing development, the Columbia Point project.

It is the first new school to be completed under the city's plan to spend $55,000,000 for land, schools, and equipment by 1962. It is the first completed of four new grade schools to be opened this year.

For the past two years most of the 1,100 Columbia Point youngsters have been going to school double session in a make-

Staff

Columbia

Boston kindergarteners hesitate

Gordon N. Converse, Staff Photographer

Charmed by the bagpipes a McNicol in Edinburgh Castle. phony get some pointers on case. Big business had no society there must be other complaints about the NRA, ambitions, other goals, for ball Bigness grew and fattened young men than sometime to ohio, during the early New Deal, be officers in a vast corporate most If the Republicans of these hierarchy."

ch I days are partially to blame, Certainly it is not true that be- their fault lies less in having in the United States of today

Tell the administration story . . . lay the facts on the line . . . and if people like the story, then they, perforce, must vote Republican.

Where Mr. Eisenhower spoke in military terms, referring to the lessons of the Battle of the Kasserine Pass where American GIs learned that fighting was a 24-hour-a-day job with no rest periods, Leonard W. Hall, Republican national chairman, and Vice-President Richard M. Nixon dealt in hard-hitting political talk.

The President, incidentally, paid the Vice-President a sizable tribute at the outset, telling these workers that "there is no man in the history of America who has had such a careful preparation as has Vice-President Nixon for carrying out the duties of the presidency, if that duty should ever fall upon him."

Nixon Sets Strategy

There was no special reason why Mr. Eisenhower should have interpolated this comment, except to advise delegates that they could be assured of able continuity of government, whatever might befall.

Mr. Nixon's talk was vigorous, but not vicious. He said that in his forthcoming 15,000-mile tour through 32 states, he would neither ignore the attacks of the Democratic opposition, nor would he attack the attackers and their integrity personally. Rather would he "set the record straight" at every opportunity.

The Vice-President said:

"We have a related problem, the problem of communism at home. This should not be an issue in this campaign. It ier, shouldn't be an issue which

United Press

President Eisenhower

GOP's high command to stir party enthusiasm, rouse crusading fervor, and send campaign workers home determined, in Vice-President Richard M. Nixon's words, to "let no doorbell go unrung."

Eisenhower Walker

President Eisenhower had a lot on his side this special afternoon.

He had a sparkling day, perfect Eisenhower weather.

He had most of his Cabinet on hand, impressive men, mingling with the delegates from California and Oregon, from Mississippi and Texas, from Ohio and Indiana.

[illegible] card of

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081
SEP 14 1956

In Saturday's Times

A FULL PAGE of pictures finds today's scho going set busy in an interesting variety pursuits after leaving the classrooms.

* * *

DESIGNER CEIL CHAPMAN solves the pro blem for women who wish to go directly from t office to a party—in the same dress.

* * *

SHOULD CLERGYMEN take sides in politic Should they use their pulpits for partisan p poses? Eight ministers from as many differe Protestant denominations offer their views this controversial and timely topic.

* * *

BRITISH MUSIC CRITICS liked the works American composers better than the Bost Symphony Orchestra that played them at t Edinburgh Festival, Irving Kolodin reports.

* * *

ONE-TIME GOVERNOR, one-time ambassad Chester Bowles sees the U. S. facing a new ki of international challenge calling for a "redefi tion of America's national purpose in the age global revolution" in his latest book, which Li ary Editor Theodore [illegible] Holden reviews.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
SEP 16 1956

English Critic Hail

A review of the Edinburgh con chester Guardian.

By

After he had finished his ly but sarcastically hoped that w

Last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its conductor Charles Munch, making its first appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, took over the evening concert at the Usher Hall, and alas for Sir Thomas's sarcasm and for our national pride, it was better — better than the Royal Philharmonic as incontrovertibly as it is better than the Scottish National, the B.B.C., or the Halle. Fortunately for our self-esteem, it is also no less clearly better than the New York Philharmonic, the Concertgebouw, or the Berlin Philarmonic.

Dazzling to Ear

So dazzling to the ear was its playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no "departments," no brass, wind, and strings to compare and evaluate: Its sound is a single marvellously rich silken texture in- to which every note of every instrument is so carefully wo en that everything can be heard except the joins. Even the austerest critics by temperament resistant to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of technique, and boiled hard by constant listening, were thrilled by it and that not only Strauss's "Don Juan," where the music can only gain from such orchestral luxury, but vehicle for either the passionate temperament of a conductor or that of the New York Philharmonic Symphony, and revealing "L'Apprenti-Sorcier" was so dazzling in effect that the audijust now, is second-place to discussions of campaign meth-ods.

'Recipes' from Washington

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Non-partisan
Circ. 161,675
SEP 13 1956

Edinburgh Visited

Boston Symphony Players on Tour

Musicians' Holiday

Charmed by the bagpipes and full regalia of Pipe Major James McNicol in Edinburgh Castle, four members of the Boston Symphony get some pointers on Scotland's traditional instrument. Left to right are Harry Ellis Dickson, violinist; Malcolm McNicol; Jacobus Langendoen, cellist; Rolland Tapley and Victor Manusevitch, violinists.

Taking Notes on Edinburgh

Leaving Edinburgh Castle, Boston Symphony members stride on to see other sights in this ancient capital city. They left Boston Aug. 14 and are expected back Oct. 2 after a flying tour of European cities that has taken them as far as Moscow, where they received a tumultuous welcome.

A Wee Bit o' Heather

In a nook of Edinburgh Castle wall, Boston Symphony players found this flower seller with a basketful of white-heather nosegays. They could not resist her wares.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

SEP 14 1956

In Saturday's Times

A FULL PAGE of pictures finds today going set busy in an interesting pursuits after leaving the classrooms.

* * *

DESIGNER CEIL CHAPMAN solves blem for women who wish to go directly office to a party—in the same dress.

* * *

SHOULD CLERGYMEN take sides in Should they use their pulpits for poses? Eight ministers from as many Protestant denominations offer their this controversial and timely topic.

* * *

BRITISH MUSIC CRITICS liked the American composers better than the Symphony Orchestra that played the Edinburgh Festival, Irving Kolodin repo

* * *

ONE-TIME GOVERNOR, one-time a Chester Bowles sees the U. S. facing a of international challenge calling for a tion of America's national purpose in t global revoluton" in his latest book, wh ary Editor Theodore L. Holden reviews

[79]

REDUCTION RATIO 18x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

TIGHT BINDING

RDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1956

— Play Fro

dience which filled Usher Hall to hear th chestra at the Edinburgh Festival.

g Agency, Inc.
chmond 2-4200
(e)
. Conn.
Democrat
,081
1956

n Saturday's Times

PAGE of pictures finds today's school- et busy in an interesting variety of ter leaving the classrooms.

* * *

ER CEIL CHAPMAN solves the prob- omen who wish to go directly from the party—in the same dress.

* * *

D CLERGYMEN take sides in politics? ey use their pulpits for partisan pur- ght ministers from as many different denominations offer their views on versial and timely topic.

* * *

ISH MUSIC CRITICS liked the works of composers better than the Boston Orchestra that played them at the Festival, Irving Kolodin reports.

* * *

IME GOVERNOR, one-time ambassador owles sees the U. S. facing a new kind tional challenge calling for a "redefi merica's national purpose in the age of voluton" in his latest book, which Life r Theodore L. Holden reviews.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 19 1956

Monteux Reminisces On His Travels; USSR Orch 'Fight Among Themselves'

Edinburgh, Sept. 11.

Festival audiences at concerts in Edinburgh are wonderfully appre- ciative, according to Pierre Mon- teux, conductor emeritus of the Boston Symphony orch.

"Generally, the first performance was a little down, but that is not so here," he said.

He described the acoustics of the Usher Hall, leading concert house at the Festival, as "very beauti- ful but difficult for rehearsals.

"It was the same in Boston," he said, "but I had a curtain put across the middle of the hall. Otherwise, the music goes 'wah, wah, wah, wah'."

According to Monteux, in some empty halls the echoes are so bad it is almost impossible to rehearse.

On current Bostonians trek, Monteux conducted in Moscow, which he has not visited since he led the orchestra of the Conserva- tory there in 1928.

Of the Moscow orch then, he said: "They were all fighting among themselves, and I had to turn my back and say, 'When you have fin- ished fighting I will go on with the rehearsal.' It was a terribly undis- ciplined orchestra, but they played very well."

Speaking at a Festival press con- fab, Mrs. Olga Koussevitsky, widow of Serge Koussevitsky, told how, when her husband was a young man in St. Petersburg, he wrote a piece called "Andante Cantabile" which a publisher accepted. For that composition, which is still played from time to time, neither Kous- sevitsky nor any of his relatives received one kopek.

That incident, she said, made him want to do something to pro- tect composers. Several years later he made a start by founding a publishing house in Berlin which protected Russian composers not covered by the Berne convention.

Mrs. Koussevitsky stressed here that commissioning new works is not, in itself, a complete service to composers. It is essential also that the works be performed and re- corded so they can become known.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
SEP 16 1956

English Critic

A review of the Edinbur chester Guardian.

After he had finish ly but sarcastically hoped t

Last night the Boston Sym- phony Orchestra under its con- ductor Charles Munch, making its first appearance at the Edin- burgh Festival, took over the evening concert at the Usher Hall, and alas for Sir Thomas's sarcasm and for our national pride, it was better — better than the Royal Philharmonic as incontrovertibly as it is better than the Scottish National, the B.B.C., or the Halle. Fortunate- ly for our self-esteem, it is also no less clearly better than the New York Philharmonic, the Concertgebouw, or the Berlin Philarmonic.

Dazzling to Ear

So dazzling to the ear was its playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no "depart- ments," no brass, wind and strings to compare and evalu- ate. Its sound is a single mar- vellously rich silken texture in- to which every note of every instrument is so carefully wo- ven that everything can be heard except the joins. Even the aus- terest critics by temperament resistant to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of techni- que, and boiled hard by con- stant listening, were thrilled by it and that not only Strauss's "Don Juan," where the music can only gain from such or- chestral luxury, but almost equally in a Haydn symphony, which could easily be ruined by it. The shining surface and per- fect drill, although sometimes unnecessary to, or even slightly out of keeping with, the music, were rarely achieved at its ex- pense, and much more often en- riched it.

In "Don Juan" Munch suc- ceeded in giving the orchestral writing all of the suaveness and sweetness of the typical or- chestration of Strauss's deca- dence, without sacrificing any- thing of its early Straussian virility and exuberance. So, too, in the Haydn, using the full or- chestra with on regard for the modern cult of "authenticity," he gave it a sound richer than Haydn could ever have im- agined, but one that he could only have gasped at in sheer disbelief that such good fortune could be true. How he would have liked the speed at which Munch took the minuet and the last movement is more debat- able.

Much Faster

They were much faster than he is ever likely to have thought possible, but at this speed they were played with a style, precision, and elegance of phrase that nobody could bet- ter, either at this or at a more "proper" speed and for this Haydn, being their inventor and creator, and not, like us modern pedants, a pious preserver, would probably have been de- lighted with this, too. Even we self-appointed guardians of the musical proprieties, who lacking Haydn's right to sanction it, could only disapprovingly ad- mire, guiltily enjoyed it.

This does not end the cata- logue of the orchestra's and Mr. Munch's virtues. At each of their five concerts they are in- troducing a work by an Ameri- can composer, three of them major ones receiving their first performance in Europe. At the opening concert it was Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, com- missioned by the orchestra for its seventy-fifth anniversary season earlier this year.

Piston has taken full advant- age of the orchestra's qualities and capabilities. In his scherzo he has given them just the kind of virtuoso piece (the modern equivalent of it, that is) that Munch makes for them out of the Haydn last movement, and througout the symphony he has exploited to the full (in the first movement sometimes rather too self-consciously) the experience of his exhaustive studies for his recently published book on orchestration.

Outer Movements

The best of its four move- ments are the middle two, the scherzo a brilliant piece in the vein of the best "motoric" movements of some of Hinde- mith's very witty early work, the adagio, a finely sustained melodic movement that bears comparison with some of the slow movements of Shostako- vich's latest works.

Unfortunately the outer movements are of inferior qual-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081
SEP 15 1956

U. S. Composers More Praised Than Orchestra

By IRVING KOLODIN

ONE of the virtues of such a tour as the Boston Sym- phony Orchestra is presently engaged with is the opportunity it provides for us to see our- selves as others see us. This applies not so much to the evaluation of the orchestra itself, which has earned solid admiration in a previous European tour, but rather to the examples of American music that it has taken along to repre- sent our creative thinking.

As of now, the reports are in from Edinburgh, where Charles Munch has conducted the sixth symphony of Walter Piston and Pierre Monteux has offered the Second Symphony of Paul Cres- ton, and the results make in- teresting reading. For one thing, nobody has dismissed either work as unworthy of the cir- cumstances, nor has there been anything but esteem for the professional qualities they em- body. It may yet become ac- cepted in Europe that if jazz is our most typical musical ex- pression, it is not necessarily the only valid one.

* * *

WRITING in "The London Sunday Times," the exacting Ernest Newman says of the Piston: "A work well representa- tive of the new spirt of Ameri- can music, forthright, efficient, hard-hitting music that was always interesting, with a finale of splendid energy." Of the Creston score he noted: "Here again we were conscious of a new national viewpoint, even though the overall meaning of the work rather evaded us.'

In somewhat similar vein, Frank Howes of "The London Times" described Piston's work as bearing "in general the American traits of being positive and free from mystery, ener- getic and rejoicing in its own functioning . . . It was interest- ing as an example of the way in which American composers are gradually forging a music of their own, though we onlookers have to beware of seeing too readily a generic picture of a continental culture in particu- lar works of individual com- posers."

* * *

ON THE WHOLE I would say this is a gratifying evaluation, whether or not it deals in superlatives. Those of us who wouldn't undertake to say that the "American character" is this or that must surely be illuminated to find that such demanding critics as Newman and Howes conceive that such a character exists, and Piston's Sixth Symphony is somehow expressive of it. It is certainly a long step forward from the days of Chadwick and Mac- Dowell, when the American character came into music via the Leipzig Gewandhaus or the Indian motif, and a principal consideration was whether a man could "orchestrate" or not.

It's just about 25 years now that Aaron Copland, speaking at a music festival in Yaddo, near Saratoga Springs, said "our composers have craftsman- ship, and the greater com- petence of their writing is a commonplace." Now that the affirmative opinion has also been registered in England, perhaps our own symphonic audiences will take pride in what, up till now, they have mostly only taken.

* * *

REPORTS from Edinburgh, show qualified enthusiasm for the Boston Symphony Orchestra itself, which is held in such high esteem in this country. The tonal quality was regarded —reasonably enough—as having more affinity with that of the Philadelphia Orchestra than with the New York Philhar- monic-Symphony (these are the two American orchestras that have made appearances in the British Isles).

There was, however, some resistance to "precision for precision's sake," and a definite objection to the big-scaled per- formance of a Haydn symphony (No. 102, in B flat).

hony

Orchestra in the Man-

omas Beecham kind- e as good.

d as much better than it y is, as they did Dukas's cerer's Apprentice," it is h hearing again.

Leningrad Hears Music by Americans

CHARLES MUNCH conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra in packed house to hear first American symphony orchestra. In- cluded in schedule were two other concerts in Moscow. [UP.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Otago Daily Times, New Zealand

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH

AMERICA'S BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA pictured in performance at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. After the Edinburgh Festival the orchestra is to travel through the Scandinavian countries to Leningrad and Moscow, returning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland and France. The 11,000-mile trip will end with concerts in London. Cost of the tour has been estimated at more than £100,000—but about half of this will be supplied by the State Department.

TIGHT BINDING

RDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1956

— Play Fro

dience which filled Usher Hall to hear the chestra at the Edinburgh Festival.

p Agency, Inc.
chmond 2-4200
(e)
. Conn.
Democrat
,081

1956

n Saturday's Times

PAGE of pictures finds today's school-et busy in an interesting variety of ter leaving the classrooms.

* * *

ER CEIL CHAPMAN solves the prob-omen who wish to go directly from the party—in the same dress.

* * *

D CLERGYMEN take sides in politics? ey use their pulpits for partisan pur-ght ministers from as many different denominations offer their views on versial and timely topic.

* * *

ISH MUSIC CRITICS liked the works composers better than the Bostonr Orchestra that played them at the Festival, Irving Kolodin reports.

* * *

IME GOVERNOR, one-time ambassador owles sees the U. S. facing a new kind tional challenge calling for a "redefi-merica's national purpose in the age of voluton" in his latest book, which Life r Theodore L. Holden reviews.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 19 1956

Monteux Reminisces On His Travels; USSR Orch 'Fight Among Themselves'

Edinburgh, Sept. 11.

Festival audiences at concerts in Edinburgh are wonderfully appreciative, according to Pierre Monteux, conductor emeritus of the Boston Symphony orch.

Generally, the first performance was a little down, but that is not so here," he said.

He described the acoustics of the Usher Hall, leading concert house at the Festival, as "very beautiful" but difficult for rehearsals.

"It was the same in Boston," he said, "but I had a curtain put across the middle of the hall. Otherwise, the music goes 'wah, wah, wah, wah'."

According to Monteux, in some empty halls the echoes are so bad it is almost impossible to rehearse.

On current Bostonians trek, Monteux conducted in Moscow, which he has not visited since he led the orchestra of the Conservatoire there in 1928.

Of the Moscow orch then, he said: "They were all fighting among themselves, and I had to turn my back and say, 'When you have finished fighting I will go on with the rehearsal.' It was a terribly undisciplined orchestra, but they played very well."

Speaking at a Festival press confab, Mrs. Olga Koussevitsky, widow of Serge Koussevitsky, told how, when her husband was a young man in St. Petersburg, he wrote a piece called "Andante Cantabile" which a publisher accepted. For that composition, which is still played from time to time, neither Koussevitsky nor any of his relatives received one kopek.

That incident, she said, made him want to do something to protect composers. Several years later he made a start by founding a publishing house in Berlin which protected Russian composers not covered by the Berne convention.

Mrs. Koussevitsky stressed here that commissioning new works is not, in itself, a complete service to composers. It is essential that the works be performed and recorded so they can become known.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. Monday's 81,081

Group Studies Children's Nursery

of the Red Cross Bloodmobile from 10 a. m. to 3 p. m. They are Mrs. Etta Chadd, Mrs. Emilie Aust, Mrs. Harriet Calver and Mrs. Doris Hanson. Robert Anderson, Unionville chairman says that more donors are needed to fill the 150-pint quota and urged anyone who can to appear at the church hall Monday, regardless of whether or not he has an appointment. A blood donor center will also be set up in Farmington at St. Patrick's Church Hall from 1 to 5:45 p. m.

The Rev. Harold G. S. King will preach at the Congregational Church, Sunday, on the topic, "As a Christian, I Make a Personal Protest." Paul N. L. Munson, Jr. will read the Scripture lesson, and the Parish Choir will sing. The Deacons will meet at 10:30 a. m. to greet seven new members who will unite with the Church at the 11 o'clock service. They are Gail Palmer Clark, Shirley May Slater, and Richard Adams Bowlby by Confirmation; Mr. and Mrs. Marshall B. Lee, Mr. Baldwin Lee, and and Mrs. Theodora T. Slater by Letter. The Rev. Mr. King has announced that he will pertorin the Sacrament of Christian Baptism at the Morning Service on Sunday, Sept. 23.

The WSCS of the Memorial Methodist Church Mon-fired Monseau of Windham Center.

The suit is the result of a one-car automobile accident Sept. 27, 1955, in Lebanon. Papers in the case were served Thursday by Deputy Sheriff George W. Larkins.

The plaintiff claims she was seriously injured when a car owned by Mr. Monseau and driven by his 18-year-old daughter, June, left the road, struck an embankment and overturned. Lorraine Monseau, another daughter of the defendant, was killed in the accident. June Monseau is made co-defendant in the action.

Leningrad Hears Music by Americans

CHARLES MUNCH conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra in packed house to hear first American symphony orchestra. Included in schedule were two other concerts in Moscow. [UP.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Otago Daily Times, New Zealand

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH

AMERICA'S BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA pictured in performance at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. After the Edinburgh Festival the orchestra is to travel through the Scandinavian countries to Leningrad and Moscow, returning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland and France. The 11,000-mile trip will end with concerts in London. Cost of the tour has been estimated at more than £100,000—but about half of this will be supplied by the State Department.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
SEP 16 1956

English Critic Hails Boston Symphony

A review of the Edinburgh concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Manchester Guardian.

By COLIN MASON

After he had finished his concerts on Friday Sir Thomas Beecham kindly but sarcastically hoped that what was to follow would be as good.

Last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its conductor Charles Munch, making its first appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, took over the evening concert at the Usher Hall, and alas for Sir Thomas's sarcasm and for our national pride, it was better—better than the Royal Philharmonic as incontrovertibly as it is better than the Scottish National, the B.B.C., or the Halle. Fortunately for our self-esteem, it is also no less clearly better than the New York Philharmonic, the Concertgebouw, or the Berlin Philarmonic.

Dazzling to Ear

So dazzling to the ear was its playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no "departments," no brass, wind, and strings to compare and evaluate. Its sound is a single marvellously rich silken texture into which every note of every instrument is so carefully woven that everything can be heard except the joins. Even the austerest critics by temperament resistant to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of technique, and boiled hard by constant listening, were thrilled by it and that not only Strauss's "Don Juan," where the music can only gain from such orchestral luxury, but almost equally in a Haydn symphony, which could easily be ruined by it. The shining surface and perfect drill, although sometimes unnecessary to, or even slightly out of keeping with, the music, were rarely achieved at its expense, and much more often enriched it.

In "Don Juan" Munch succeeded in giving the orchestral writing all of the suaveness and sweetness of the typical orchestration of Strauss's decadence, without sacrificing anything of its early Straussian virility and exuberance. So, too, in the Haydn, using the full orchestra with on regard for the modern cult of "authenticity," he gave it a sound richer than Haydn could ever have imagined, but one that he could only have gasped at in sheer disbelief that such good fortune could be true. How he would have liked the speed at which Munch took the minuet and the last movement is more debatable.

Much Faster

They were much faster than he is ever likely to have thought possible, but at this speed they were played with a style, precision, and elegance of phrase that nobody could better, either at this or at a more "proper" speed and for this Haydn, being their inventor and creator, and not, like us modern pedants, a pious preserver, would probably have been delighted with this, too. Even we self-appointed guardians of the musical proprieties, who lacking Haydn's right to sanction it, could only disapprovingly admire, guiltily enjoyed it.

This does not end the catalogue of the orchestra's and Mr. Munch's virtues. At each of their five concerts they are introducing a work by an American composer, three of them major ones receiving their first performance in Europe. At the opening concert it was Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, commissioned by the orchestra for its seventy-fifth anniversary season earlier this year.

Piston has taken full advantage of the orchestra's qualities and capabilities. In his scherzo he has given them just the kind of virtuoso piece (the modern equivalent of it that is) that Munch makes for them out of the Haydn last movement, and througout the symphony he has exploited to the full (in the first movement sometimes rather too self-consciously) the experience of his exhaustive studies for his recently published book on orchestration.

Outer Movements

The best of its four movements are the middle two, the scherzo a brilliant piece in the vein of the best "motoric" movements of some of Hindemith's very witty early work, the adagio, a finely sustained melodic movement that bears comparison with some of the slow movements of Shostakovich's latest works.

Unfortunately the outer movements are of inferior quality, the last commonplace and empty and the first very uneven. It has one very fine episode near the end of the first subject, heard in both exposition and recapitulation, in which the rhythmic melodic phrase and the very unorthodox and inelegant but beautiful harmonic procession strongly and pleasingly recall, with no hint of plagiarism, certain passages in Tippett's "Midsummer Marriage."

There are other attractive lyrical moments in it, but too much of what surrounds them is undistinguished or arid. In spite of these weaknesses, the work as a whole left an impression of real musical quality and some personality, and unless the orchestra and Mr. Munch, who lavished as much care and understanding on it as in the other work, were making it sound as much better than it really is, as they did Dukas's "Sorcerer's Apprentice," it is worth hearing again.

REDUCTION RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

2.0

2.2

2.5

2.8

3.2

3.6

4.0

4.5

5.0

5.6

6.3

7.1

8.0

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 113,081

SEP 15 1956

U. S. Composers More Praised Than Orchestra

By IRVING KOLODIN

ONE of the virtues of such a tour as the Boston Symphony Orchestra is presently engaged with is the opportunity it provides for us to see ourselves as others see us. This applies not so much to the evaluation of the orchestra itself, which has earned solid admiration in a previous European tour, but rather to the examples of American music that it has taken along to represent our creative thinking.

As of now, the reports are in from Edinburgh, where Charles Munch has conducted the sixth symphony of Walter Piston and Pierre Monteux has offered the Second Symphony of Paul Creston, and the results make interesting reading. For one thing, nobody has dismissed either work as unworthy of the circumstances, nor has there been anything but esteem for the professional qualities they embody. It may yet become accepted in Europe that if jazz is our most typical musical expression, it is not necessarily the only valid one.

* * *

WRITING in "The London Sunday Times," the exacting Ernest Newman says of the Piston: "A work well representative of the new spirt of American music, forthright, efficient, hard-hitting music that was always interesting, with a finale of splendid energy." Of the Creston score he noted: "Here again we were conscious of a new national viewpoint, even though the overall meaning of the work rather evaded us.'

In somewhat similar vein, Frank Howes of "The London Times" described Piston's work as bearing "in general the American traits of being positive and free from mystery, energetic and rejoicing in its own functioning . . . It was interesting as an example of the way in which American composers are gradually forging a music of their own, though we onlookers have to beware of seeing too readily a generic picture of a continental culture in particular works of individual composers."

* * *

ON THE WHOLE I would say this is a gratifying evaluation, whether or not it deals in superlatives. Those of us who wouldn't undertake to say that the "American character" is this or that must surely be illuminated to find that such demanding critics as Newman and Howes conceive that such a character exists, and Piston's Sixth Symphony is somehow expressive of it. It is certainly a long step forward from the days of Chadwick and MacDowell, when the American character came into music via the Leipzig Gewandhaus or the Indian motif, and a principal consideration was whether a man could "orchestrate" or not.

It's just about 25 years now that Aaron Copland, speaking at a music festival in Yaddo, near Saratoga Springs, said "our composers have craftsmanship, and the greater competence of their writing is a commonplace." Now that the affirmative opinion has also been registered in England, perhaps our own symphonic audiences will take pride in what, up till now, they have mostly only taken.

* * *

REPORTS from Edinburgh, show qualified enthusiasm for the Boston Symphony Orchestra itself, which is held in such high esteem in this country. The tonal quality was regarded —reasonably enough—as having more affinity with that of the Philadelphia Orchestra than with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony (these are the two American orchestras that have made appearances in the British Isles).

There was, however, some resistance to "precision for precision's sake," and a definite objection to the big-scaled performance of a Haydn symphony (No. 102, in B flat).

Leningrad Hears Music by Americans

CHARLES MUNCH conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra in packed house to hear first American symphony orchestra. Included in schedule were two other concerts in Leningrad Philharmonic Hall with first of two concerts in Leningrad. [UP.]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Otago Daily Times, New Zealand

46

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH

AMERICA'S BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA pictured in performance at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. After the Edinburgh Festival the orchestra is to travel through the Scandinavian countries to Leningrad and Moscow, returning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland and France. The 11,000-mile trip will end with concerts in London. Cost of the tour has been estimated at more than £100,000—but about half of this will be supplied by the State Department.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 19 1956

Moeteux Reminisces On His Travels; USSR Orch Fight Among Themselves'

Edinburgh, Sept. 11.

Festival audiences at concerts in Edinburgh are wonderfully appreciative, according to Pierre Monteux, conductor emeritus of the Boston Symphony orch.

Actually, the first performance was down, but that is not what he said.

He praised the acoustics of the Usher Hall, leading concert house of the festival, as "very beautiful," but difficult for rehearsals.

"It is the same in Boston," he said. "I had a curtain put up in the middle of the hall, so the music goes 'wah, wah, wah'."

According to Monteux, in some halls the echoes are so bad it is almost impossible to rehearse.

On current Bostonians trek, he conducted in Moscow, which he has not visited since he led the orchestra of the Conservatory there in 1928.

Of the Moscow orch then, he said: "They were all fighting among themselves, and I had to turn my back and say, 'When you have finished fighting I will go on with the rehearsal.' It was a terribly undisciplined orchestra, but they played very well."

Speaking at a Festival press confab, Mrs. Olga Koussevitsky, widow of Serge Koussevitsky, told how, when her husband was a young man in St. Petersburg, he wrote a piece called "Andante Cantabile" which a publisher accepted. For that composition, which is still played from time to time, neither Koussevitsky nor any of his relatives received one kopek.

That incident, she said, made him want to do something to protect composers. Several years later he made a start by founding a publishing house in Berlin which protected Russian composers not covered by the Berne convention.

Mrs. Koussevitsky stressed here that commissioning new works is not, in itself, a complete service to composers. It is essential also that the works be performed and recorded so they can become known.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604

SEP 16 1956

English Critic

A review of the Edinburgh Festival by the Manchester Guardian.

After he had finished ... ly but sarcastically hoped ...

Last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its conductor Charles Munch, making its first appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, took over the evening concert at the Usher Hall, and alas for Sir Thomas' sarcasm and for our national pride, it was better—better than the Royal Philharmonic and incontrovertibly as it is better than the Scottish National, the B.B.C., or the Halle. Fortunately for our self-esteem, it is also no less clearly better than the New York Philharmonic, the Concertgebouw, or the Berlin Philarmonic.

Dazzling to Ear

So dazzling to the ear was its playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no "departments," no brass, wind, and strings to compare and evaluate. Its sound is a single marvellously rich silken texture in which every note of every instrument is so carefully woven that everything can be heard except the joins. Even the austerest critics by temperament resistant to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of technique, and boiled hard by constant listening, were thrilled by it, and that not only Strauss's "Don Juan," where the music can only gain from such orchestral luxury, but almost equally in a Haydn symphony, which could easily be ruined by it. The shining surface and perfect drill, although sometimes unnecessary to, or even slightly out of keeping with, the music, were rarely achieved at its expense, and much more often enriched it.

In "Don Juan" Munch succeeded in giving the orchestral writing all of the suaveness and sweetness of the typical orchestration of Strauss's decadence, without sacrificing anything of its early Straussian virility and exuberance. So, too, in the Haydn, using the full orchestra with on regard for the modern cult of "authenticity," he gave it a sound richer than Haydn could ever have imagined, but one that he could only have gasped at in sheer disbelief that such good fortune could be true. How he would have liked the speed at which Munch took the minuet and the last movement is more debatable.

Much Faster

They were much faster than he is ever likely to have thought possible, but at this speed they were played with a style, precision, and elegance of phrase that nobody could better, either at this or at a more "proper" speed and for this Haydn, being their inventor and creator, and not, like us modern pedants, a pious preserver, would probably have been delighted with this, too. Even we self-appointed guardi...

...phony

...ny Orchestra in the Man-

...Thomas Beecham kind-
...be as good.

...und as much better than it
...ally is, as they did Dukas's
...Sorcerer's Apprentice," it is
...orth hearing again.

...'s Times

...s finds today's school
...interesting variety of
...classrooms.

*

...PMAN solves the prob...
...to go directly from th...
...ame dress.

*

...take sides in politic...
...lpits for partisan p...
...rom as many differe...
...offer their views
...ely topic.

*

...TICS liked the work...
...ter than the Bo...
...t played them at
...g Kolodin reports.

*

...R, one-time ambass...
...U. S. facing a new
...calling for a "rede...
...l purpose in the a...
...atest book, which
...Holden reviews.

Usher Hall to hear th...
...urgh Festival.

PTEMBER 8, 1956

lay Fro

ed Usher Hall to hear th
nburgh Festival.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 19 1956

...ax Reminisces On ... Travels; USSR Orch ... Fight Among Themselves'

Edinburgh, Sept. 11.

...audiences at concerts in ... are wonderfully appre... according to Pierre Mon... conductor emeritus of the ...hony orch.

...the first performance ... down, but that is not ... he said.

...the acoustics of the ... leading concert house ... festival, as "very beauti... difficult for rehearsals.

...the same in Boston," he ... I had a curtain put ... the middle of the hall. ... the music goes 'wah, ... wah, wah'."

...ing to Monteux, in some ... the echoes are so bad ... almost impossible to rehearse.

...current Bostonians trek, ... conducted in Moscow, ... he has not visited since he ... the orchestra of the Conserva... there in 1928.

...of the Moscow orch then, he ... "They were all fighting among ...selves, and I had to turn my ... and say, 'When you have fin... fighting I will go on with the ...rehearsal.' It was a terribly undis... ciplined orchestra, but they played very well."

Speaking at a Festival press con... fab, Mrs. Olga Koussevitsky, widow of Serge Koussevitsky, told how, when her husband was a young man in St. Petersburg, he wrote a piece called "Andante Cantabile" which a publisher accepted. For that composition, which is still played from time to time, neither Koussevitsky nor any of his relatives received one kopek.

That incident, she said, made him want to do something to protect composers. Several years later he made a start by founding a publishing house in Berlin which protected Russian composers not covered by the Berne convention.

Mrs. Koussevitsky stressed here that commissioning new works is not, in itself, a complete service to composers. It is essential also that the works be performed and recorded so they can become known.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Independent Democrat

...roup Studies
...rten Nursery

...of the Red Cross Bloodmobile ... from 10 a. m. to 3 p. m. They are Mrs. Etta Chadd, Mrs. Emilie Aust, Mrs. Harriet Calver and Mrs. Doris Han on. Robert Anderson, Unionville chairman says that more donors are needed to fill the 150-pint quota and urged anyone who can to appear at the church hall Monday, regardless of whether or not he has an appointment. A blood donor center will also be set up in Farmington at St. Patrick's Church Hall from 1 to 5:45 p. m.

The Rev. Harold G. S. Kinz will preach at the Congregational Church, Sunday, on the topic, "As a Christian, I Make a Personal Protest." Paul N. L. Munson, jr. will read the Scripture lesson, and the Parish Choir will sing. The Deacons will meet at 10:30 a. m. to greet seven new members who will unite with the Church at the 11 o'clock service. They are Gail Palmer Clark, Shirley May Slater, and Richard Adams Bowlby by Confirmation; Mr. and Mrs. Marshall B. Lee, Mr. Baldwin Lee, and and Mrs. Theodora T. Slater by Letter. The Rev. Mr. King has announced that he will perform the Sacrament of Christian Baptism at the Morning Service on Sunday, Sept. 23.

The WSCS of the Memorial ...

...ired Moneau of Winnam... Center.

The suit is the result of a one-car automobile accident Sept. 27, 1955, in Lebanon. Papers in the case were served Thursday by Deputy Sheriff George W. Larkins.

The plaintiff claims she was seriously injured when a car owned by Mr. Moneau and driven by his 18-year-old daughter, June, left the road, struck an embankment and overturned. Lorraine Moneau, another daughter of the defendant, was killed in the accident. June Moneau is made co-defendant in the action.

Leningrad Hears Music by Americans

CHARLES MUNCH conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra in packed house to hear first American symphony orchestra. Included in schedule were two other concerts in Moscow. UP.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Otago Daily Times, New Zealand

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH

AMERICA'S BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA pictured in performance at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. After the Edinburgh Festival the orchestra is to travel through the Scandinavian countries to Leningrad and Moscow, returning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland and France. The 11,000-mile trip will end with concerts in London. Cost of the tour has been estimated at more than £100,000—but about half of this will be supplied by the State Department.

...y's Times

...res finds today's school ...n interesting variety ... classrooms.

* *

...APMAN solves the prob... ...h to go directly from th... same dress.

* *

...N take sides in politic... ...pulpits for partisan p... from as many differ... ...ns offer their views ...mely topic.

* *

...RITICS liked the work ... better than the Bo... ...that played them at ...ing Kolodin reports.

* *

...NOR, one-time ambass... ...e U. S. facing a new ...ge calling for a "red... ...nal purpose in the a... ...latest book, which ... Holden reviews.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604
SEP 16 1956

English Critic Hails Boston Symphony

A review of the Edinburgh concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Manchester Guardian.

By COLIN MASON

After he had finished his concerts on Friday Sir Thomas Beecham kindly but sarcastically hoped that what was to follow would be as good.

Last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its conductor Charles Munch, making its first appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, took over the evening concert at the Usher Hall, and alas for Sir Thomas's sarcasm and for our national pride, it was better — better than the Royal Philharmonic as incontrovertibly as it is better than the Scottish National, the B.B.C., or the Halle. Fortunately for our self-esteem, it is also no less clearly better than the New York Philharmonic, the Concertgebouw, or the Berlin Philarmonic.

Dazzling to Ear

So dazzling to the ear was its playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no "departments," no brass, wind, and strings to compare and evaluate. Its sound is a single marvellously rich silken texture into which every note of every instrument is so carefully woven that everything can be heard except the joins. Even the austerest critics by temperament resistant to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of technique, and boiled hard by constant listening, were thrilled by it, and that not only Strauss's "Don Juan," where the music can only gain from such orchestral luxury, but almost equally in a Haydn symphony, which could easily be ruined by it. The shining surface and perfect drill, although sometimes unnecessary to, or even slightly out of keeping with, the music, were rarely achieved at its expense, and much more often enriched it.

In "Don Juan" Munch succeeded in giving the orchestral writing all of the suaveness and sweetness of the typical orchestration of Strauss's decadence, without sacrificing anything of its early Straussian virility and exuberance. So, too, in the Haydn, using the full orchestra with on regard for the modern cult of "authenticity," he gave it a sound richer than Haydn could ever have imagined, but one that he could only have gasped at in sheer disbelief that such good fortune could be true. How he would have liked the speed at which Munch took the minuet and the last movement is more debatable.

Much Faster

They were much faster than he is ever likely to have thought possible, but at this speed they were played with a style, precision, and elegance of phrase that nobody could better, either at this or at a more "proper" speed and for this Haydn, being their inventor and creator, and not, like us modern pedants, a pious preserver, would probably have been delighted with this, too. Even we self-appointed guardians of the

ity, the last commonplace and empty and the first very uneven. It has one very fine episode near the end of the first subject, heard in both exposition and recapitulation, in which the rhythmic melodic phrase and the very unorthodox and inelegant but beautiful harmonic procession strongly and pleasingly recall, with no hint of plagiarism, certain passages in Tippett's "Midsummer Marriage."

There are other attractive lyrical moments in it, but too much of what surrounds them is undistinguished or arid. In spite of these weaknesses, the work as a whole left an impression of real musical quality and some personality, and unless the orchestra and Mr. Munch, who lavished as much care and understanding on it as in the other work, were making it sound as much better than it really is, as they did Dukas's "Sorcerer's Apprentice," it is worth hearing again.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA BOSTON FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 28 1956

Leningrad Hears Music by Americans

CHARLES MUNCH conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra in packed house to hear first American symphony orchestra. Inclusive of two concerts in Leningrad Philharmonic Hall with included in schedule were two other concerts in Moscow. [UP.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Otago Daily Times, New Zealand

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH

AMERICA'S BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA pictured in performance at the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. After the Edinburgh Festival the orchestra is to travel through the Scandinavian countries to Leningrad and Moscow, returning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland and France. The 11,000-mile trip will end with concerts in London. Cost of the tour has been estimated at more than £100,000—but about half of this will be supplied by the State Department.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 253,604

SEP 16 1956

English Critic Hails Boston Symphony

A review of the Edinburgh concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Manchester Guardian.

By COLIN MASON

After he had finished his concerts on Friday Sir Thomas Beecham kindly but sarcastically hoped that what was to follow would be as good.

Last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its conductor Charles Munch, making its first appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, took over the evening concert at the Usher Hall, and alas for Sir Thomas's sarcasm and for our national pride, it was better — better than the Royal Philharmonic as incontrovertibly as it is better than the Scottish National, the B.B.C., or the Halle. Fortunately for our self-esteem, it is also no less clearly better than the New York Philharmonic, the Concertgebouw, or the Berlin Philarmonic.

Dazzling to Ear

So dazzling to the ear was its playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no "departments," no brass, wind and strings to compare and evaluate. Its sound is a single marvellously rich silken texture into which every note of every instrument is so carefully woven that everything can be heard except the joins. Even the austerest critics by temperament resistant to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of technique, and boiled hard by constant listening, were thrilled by it, and that not only Strauss's "Don Juan," where the music can only gain from such orchestral luxury, but almost equally in a Haydn symphony, which could easily be ruined by it. The shining surface and perfect drill, although sometimes unnecessary to, or even slightly out of keeping with, the music, were rarely achieved at its expense, and much more often enriched it.

In "Don Juan" Munch succeeded in giving the orchestral writing all of the suaveness and sweetness of the typical orchestration of Strauss's decadence, without sacrificing anything of its early Straussian virility and exuberance. So, too, in the Haydn, using the full orchestra with on regard for the modern cult of "authenticity," he gave it a sound richer than Haydn could ever have imagined, but one that he could only have gasped at in sheer disbelief that such good fortune could be true. How he would have liked the speed at which Munch took the minuet and the last movement is more debatable.

Much Faster

They were much faster than he is ever likely to have thought possible, but at this speed they were played with a style, precision, and elegance of phrase that nobody could better, either at this or at a more "proper" speed and for this Haydn, being their inventor and creator, and not, like us modern pedants, a pious preserver, would probably have been delighted with this, too. Even we self-appointed guardians of the musical proprieties, who lacking Haydn's right to sanction it, could only disapprovingly admire, guiltily enjoyed it.

This does not end the catalogue of the orchestra's and Mr. Munch's virtues. At each of their five concerts they are introducing a work by an American composer, three of them major ones receiving their first performance in Europe. At the opening concert it was Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, commissioned by the orchestra for its seventy-fifth anniversary season earlier this year.

Piston has taken full advantage of the orchestra's qualities and capabilities. In his scherzo he has given them just the kind of virtuoso piece (the modern equivalent of it that is) that Munch makes for them out of the Haydn last movement, and througout the symphony he has exploited to the full (in the first movement sometimes rather too self-consciously) the experience of his exhaustive studies for his recently published book on orchestration.

Outer Movements

The best of its four movements are the middle two, the scherzo a brilliant piece in the vein of the best "motoric" movements of some of Hindemith's very witty early work, the adagio, a finely sustained melodic movement that bears comparison with some of the slow movements of Shostakovich's latest works.

Unfortunately the outer movements are of inferior quality, the last commonplace and empty and the first very uneven. It has one very fine episode near the end of the first subject, heard in both exposition and recapitulation, in which the rhythmic melodic phrase and the very unorthodox and inelegant but beautiful harmonic procession strongly and pleasingly recall, with no hint of plagiarism, certain passages in Tippett's "Midsummer Marriage."

There are other attractive lyrical moments in it, but too much of what surrounds them is undistinguished or arid. In spite of these weaknesses, the work as a whole left an impression of real musical quality and some personality, and unless the orchestra and Mr. Munch, who lavished as much care and understanding on it as in the other work, were making it sound as much better than it really is, as they did Dukas's "Sorcerer's Apprentice," it is worth hearing again.

REDUCTION RATIO

17x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Southland Daily News, Invercargill, New Zealand

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH

4767

AMERICA'S BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is shown giving a performance in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. After the Edinburgh Festival the orchestra began a tour through the Scandinavian countries to Leningrad and Moscow, returning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland and France. The 11,000-mile trip will end with concerts in London. The cost of the tour has been estimated at more than £100,000 — but about half of this will be supplied by the State Department.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Otago Daily Times, New Zealand

By Ivor Brown, associate editor of the Observer.

Writing towards the close of the tenth and royally attended Edinburgh Festival of the Arts, I can fairly say that the weather was never worse and the attendance never better.

This brave undertaking of an international Arts Festival on the highest level opened in 1947 in a blaze of brilliant summer and also with some trepidation that the city might have issued its invitations to the world in vain. In 1956 the clouds lowered and the rain fell, but there was the warming and consoling knowledge that every year the experiment of 1947 had been amply justified.

Always the arrangement of performances grows larger and the numbers of patrons continually increase. So, amid much drenching from the skies, there was this year no depression or dampening of the spirit.

The statisticians could once more rejoice. Their annual slogan of "Bigger and Better" was again simple truth. Before the opening, at which the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh were present, more than 239,000 tickets valued at £138,000 had been printed, and it was estimated that 250,000 people would be visiting the city for a day or for a longer appreciation of its many pleasures.

It is necessary to stress the fact that the Festival is made worth while by the friendships it creates and also by the arguments it starts. When the concert, the opera, the ballet, the play and the film are over there is always the chance to discuss their merits.

Apart from the Festival Club, in the exquisite Assembly Rooms, scene of so many historic Edinburgh events and gatherings, there were seven other clubs open to overseas and native visitors, and in all these information could be gathered as to available shows, and informal discussion carried on concerning the best in each kind.

It always seems to me that this aspect of the Edinburgh Festival is apt to be underrated when the statisticians are piling up the figures: it is the cordiality of this great world-gathering, quite as much as the counting of heads, that gives worth to the annual three weeks of the Festival.

Certainly Edinburgh has completely destroyed the old idea that the Scottish capital has more head than heart, and that its romantic aspect is betrayed by a chilliness of temper and Scottish shyness and reserve. The affable and welcoming spirit has remained through the years, and I have once more heard grateful comment on the courtesy shown in all manner of ways.

Even in the absence of sunshine, the city cannot fail to look magnificent. Its contrast of the narrow, medieval Old Town on its rocky ridge with the spacious splendour and urbanity of the New Town to the north makes the whole scene intensely theatrical.

Always on re-entering Edinburgh I am vividly impressed with the personality of the place. Here is not just a collection of streets and houses of all periods and styles. Here is the embodiment of Scotland and of all its hard history down the centuries. So many Canadians have Scottish ancestry that they must inevitably respond to this grey mother of men who had no room for all her children and sent so many out to prosper in a larger world and to utilise wide-ranging opportunities.

The Canadian actors from Stratford, Ontario, were the first professional team from the New World to show their craft in Edinburgh and I found everywhere a warm welcome for their society as well as for their capacity. Mr Patterson, the chairman of Canada's Stratford-on-Avon Theatre, has impressed Edinburgh with his quiet, persuasive enthusiasm, and I am sure that he and his colleagues did not find the Thistle a prickly companion for the Maple Leaf.

The Festival has always had a double aspect. It is primarily international, seeking to collect the finest examples of the world's art. This year, with Canadian actors added to Italian, Scottish and Welsh, and with German opera and Boston's as well as Vienna's chief orchestras to be heard, the international aspect was served as well as ever. But, after all, this is Scotland's capital and the Scots are naturally anxious that the best of their products should be exhibited.

Thus the Canadian players, before they scored their success were anticipated at the Assembly Hall by a mixed entertainment called "Pleasures of Scotland" in which the folk-song, folk-music, and folk-dance of the country were picturesquely assembled: this was Scotland in search of its youth.

At the same time, the fact that the great Scottish portrait-painter, Raeburn, was born 200 years ago in Edinburgh made appropriate a collection of his work in the Scottish National Gallery, a collection which admirably mirrored the prosperous life of Raeburn's own society, the new Scotland, Whiggish in politics and realistic in philosophy, which was established after the last failure of the Jacobite Army in 1745.

Ponderous, sagacious, self-confident judges and country gentlemen looked gravely out of the superb canvases on to this new Edinburgh of 1956 and its Festival visitors, a world of bustle and turmoil of which they could never have dreamed.

Visitors to Scotland have always two kinds of civilisation to study: the romantic Gaeldom of the Highlands and the Islands, the pipes and the tartans, and the level-headed Scotland that got on with the work in the offices and law courts of the capital and built, painted, and wrote so grandly in the eighteenth century style.

In the shops, too, were the inevitable souvenirs, some ugly and tasteless, products of the trinket industry. But there were also the creations of Highland handicraft, not only tartan weaves, but pottery and metal-ware of authentic quality. After all, one cannot absorb culture at every hour of the day; a shopping interlude is necessary and popular with the ladies. The shopkeepers were pleased with the results.

Flags and flowers suffered from the battering of wind and weather. But the nocturnal illuminations were as striking as ever. Edinburgh Castle, on its lofty pinnacle of rock, became a magical site when floodlit. The top alone is lit-up, and since the rock on which the castle stands remains dark, it looks as though the castle itself had cut adrift and was a flying saucer of radiance.

This magical beauty of a city where nature has done its best for man, and man has responded by doing his best for nature, was made the more remarkable because, after dull days, the nights sparkled with man's contrivance of electricity.

One thing I am sure that the Canadian actors will never forget, in addition to the cordial acceptance of their work, was the entry to the scene of their labours. The Assembly Hall which provided their arena is reached by climbing the Mound between the New Town and the Old. Above the steeply-stepped approach there was ranged the noble facade of the old Town's ancient splendours, spires and turrets of Church and Parliament, a soaring panorama of architecture.

In such a place the actors were not only going to the theatre: they were moving in a theatrical masterpiece as they went.

(Observer Service.—Copyright.)

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Huddersfield Daily Examiner
20 SEP 1956

The Three Arts

Helping The "Neglected Composer"

4767

BY PLAYFELLOW

THE idea of the neglected composer turning out music by the ream which no-one ever plays is such that any scheme to give the man a chance must be welcomed.

The neglected composer, however, is a modern phenomenon. In the eighteenth century musicians got a living of a sort, and sometimes a good one, because they were attached to an aristocratic Court or to a wealthy household, and they wrote music when they were asked to do so by their patrons.

The greater part of the output of Haydn and Mozart was written "on demand." Someone wanted music for a mechanical organ, and Mozart supplied it, and no doubt was grateful for the fee. Haydn wrote a great deal of music for the baryton, now obsolete, because his patron, Prince Esterhazy, played the instrument and was avid for new pieces, just as Carl Philip Emmanuel Bach wrote a great deal for the flute because his master, Frederick the Great, thought well of himself as a flute player.

The Dedicated Artist

During the nineteenth century the attitude changed. The composer began to regard himself as a dedicated person, who wrote not to order but to fulfil a mission in life. Wagner was the great exemplar of this kind of composer. He burned with a fierce integrity and believed that the world should give him just what he wanted merely because he was Richard Wagner, a genius with a mission in the world, who wrote just what he wanted, not what others ordered.

As things turned out Wagner found an apostle who had the means and the judgment to give him all that he asked for—a new kind of opera house, a full orchestra of the kind hardly ever previously assembled, and the money with which to carry on. Few, however, could find a patron as powerful as the King of Bavaria, who was Wagner's benefactor, but even if a musician could find a helping hand stretched out towards him, as Tchaikovsky did with Nadezhda von Meck, who supplied him with annual stipend, the custom of helping the artist by commissioning particular works largely died.

An Example From The U.S.A.

Latterly there has been a change. One example of this is to be found in the United States, where the Koussevitzky Foundation has been instituted to commission composers to write music for performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In Great Britain the B.B.C. has commissioned a whole series of composers both of this country and of France to write works to celebrate the tenth birthday of the Third Programme; Rasine Fricker has been invited to write a work for the revived Leeds Festival.

There is also the cinema, for the film studios of this country, and to a greater extent of the United States, keep composers busy with jobs to write "background" music.

The Purist's Objection

Old-fashioned purists may object that writing music to order for the films in the fashion of two minutes of this and three minutes of that, and all of it to be ready, so to speak, at nine o'clock on Monday week, is not the kind of commission that an artist of integrity can accept. Mozart would never have understood why; and Bach, who spent the greater part of his life in writing works for particular occasions, would perhaps have been surprised to hear that there was any other condition in which music could be written at all.

It cannot, however, be said that the results of some recent commissions have been particularly impressive. I know nothing of the works commissioned by the B.B.C., but I heard several of the works written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the last Edinburgh Festival, and since these were brought to Britain for European performances one must presume that they were among the best—but what an indifferent best they were!

Not Music

A conclusion one might reach after hearing the American as well as the English commissioned works at the Festival is that apparently it is not at all difficult to find men who can cause an orchestra to produce agreeable or impressive sounds; but this does not constitute a work of music.

I know that in some parts of the United States it is the fashion to talk about music being "functional," a blessed word used to excuse anything that seems otherwise to exist without purpose or object; but I doubt that the talk really impresses even those who use it.

That at least four out of five commissioned works heard at Edinburgh were still-born must not, however, be held against the system. The mortality rate among new works of music is, and always has been, very high.

Failures To Be Expected

I suppose it is true to say that for every work that lives, a hundred have been composed which died soon after birth, and that unless we have the failures we shall never have the successes.

There has, by the way, when you think of it, been one most successful commission — Sir William Walton's last opera, "Troilus and Cressida."

The real trouble, I suppose, is that while you may order a work, you cannot put into commission genius if it is not there.

Boiler Na

Festspiele in Ed

II.

Das Bostoner Orchester riges Jubiläum mit einer Europa burgh ihren Anfang genommen rühmten amerikanischen Orucheste Philharmoniker und das Philadelp in den letzten Jahren hier zu hö Bostoner die Krone zu verdienen, überwältigende Fülle und Schönhe tons und die herrliche Kraft und barkeit seiner Hörner. In Werken behandlung wie dem Strauss's oder dem «Zauberlehrling» von Du ter Charles Münch zu hören waren, hörte man Klänge von unerhörter Ueppigkeit. Dazu muss freilich eine Einschränkung gemacht werden, denn selbst in diesen Fällen konnte man nicht umhin, sich Gedanken darüber zu machen, was notwendigerweise geschehen muss, wenn die technische Fertigkeit über ihren praktisch nützlichen Zweck hinauswächst. Wenn etwa ein Trompetensolo, mit gewaltiger Tonfülle und edlem Vibrato vorgetragen, durch den Klang schneidet wie ein Messer durch Käse, so berührt sich das Sublime mit dem Peinlichen und wir halten bei den ästhetischen Voraussetzungen eines Flügelhornsolos in der Militärmusik. Lässt man aber die Klangfreude so eines Heeres von Virtuosen auf eine Haydn-Symphonie los, so ist das Ergebnis katastrophal, nicht nur durch eine völlige Verschiebung der Klangstruktur, sondern durch einen erstaunlichen Mangel an Präzision in Rhythmus und Phrasierung. Das ist allerdings sehr eine Frage des Dirigenten: Unter Pierre Monteux konnte man eine wundervolle Aufführung der Dritten Symphonie von Brahms hören, die Spannung und Grösse hatte und in der jedes Detail mit Liebe geformt schien. Die Bostoner brachten in ihren Programmen eine Reihe zeitgenössischer amerikanischer Werke, die für das Jubiläum des Orchesters bestellt und geschrieben wurden. Die umfangreichste dieser Widmungen, die Sechste Symphonie von Walter Piston, wenig inspiriert und grau im Klang, war im Grunde die eindrucksloseste. Ansonsten schien am ansprechendsten eine dem Andenken von Kussewitzky gewidmete Elegie von Howard Hanson, die durch Ausdruck und vornehme Erfindung einnimmt. Die beinahe unwahrscheinliche Blechbläser konnte man in einer selt musikveranstaltung bewundern; diese — Trompeten, Hörner und Posaunen eingerichtete Musik des 16. Jahrhun ieli, Bonelli — und Genossen c, Berezowsky —, und es ist welcher Finesse alles Rhythmische gerät, wenn solche Meisterbläser ihwissen und Ehrgeiz Genüge tun, und sche Aufgaben haben, für die eine Posaune die Pasagenläufigkeit einer igt. Es war eine unbeabsichtigte aber ration grundlegender Tatsachen, als den Bostonern und im gleichen, 3000 den Saal die Londoner Mozart- unter der Leitung von Harry Blech nable von 36 ausgewählten Musikern, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert spielten, ein Musizieren von mustergültiger Sauberkeit und Stilvollendung.

Kirchenmusik der Wiener Klassiker bildete die Grundsubstanz von drei Konzerten der Wiener Hofmusikkapelle, die, in ihrer heutigen Form eine Kombination des Männerchors und Orchesters der Staatsoper mit einem vokaltechnisch wie musikalisch gleich sorgfältig gebildeten Knabenchor, vermutlich die älteste lebende Musikinstitution in Europa ist. Der seraphische Klang dieser Knabenstimmen, im Chor wie in den immer anonymen Soli, ist der Hauptreiz dieses Ensembles, das natürlich ganz anders klingt als ein normaler gemischter Chor. Seine Darbietungen standen unter dem Zeichen eines im letzten Moment nötig gewordenen Dirigentenwechsels: Rudolf Moralt hatte für den erkrankten Josef Krips einzuspringen, was vermutlich die Ursache gelegentlicher Ermüdungserscheinungen war, die durch Probenüberanstrengung so junger Stimmen leicht eintreten. Der Hauptgewinn waren, neben dem Requiem von Mozart und der C-dur-Messe von Beethoven, die hier selten oder nie gehörte Es-dur-Messe und kleinere Kirchenwerke von Schubert.

Die Hamburger Staatsoper brachte als viertes Werk ihres Opernrepertoires «Salome» von Strauss, worin die Titelrolle der ursprünglich als zweite Besetzung vorgesehenen Helga Pilarzyk einen Erfolg ersten Ranges eintrug. Von dieser jungen Sängerin darf man sich allerhand erwarten: sie hat eine schla Stimme von müheloser Fülle und Biegsamkeit echtes Bühnentalent. Auch sonst war diese Auf rung, von Leopold Ludwig dirigiert und von V Völker inszeniert, lebendig und eindrucksstark wäre es noch mehr gewesen ohne den gelegentlic dynamischen Uebereifer des Orchesters.

Die Kammermusik war diesmal etwas bescheide bedacht, denn ihr Platz in den täglichen Vormitta veranstaltungen war zum Teil durch eine Serie Klavier-Rezitals vertreten. Ueber das darin befol Prinzip der Spezialisierung mag man verschieden Meinung sein. Rosalyn Tureck spielte die sämtlich Partiten von Bach mit ihrer eigenen, fast unheimli sicheren Kontrolle des Klaviertons, die das Pianofor dem Bachstil in idealer Weise dienstbar macht. Leider i ihr Tempoinstinkt nicht von der gleichen Unfehlba keit. Ein Mozart-Programm von Nina Milkina Beethoven von Myra Hess gespielt, Schuman von Robert Casadesus, Liszt von Louis Kentner, ergaben eine Riesenfülle pianistischer Leistunge ausserordentlicher Art, neben denen ein Schubert Programm von Clifford Curzon durch stürmischen Impetus, vergeistigte Intensität und subtilsten Klang noch eine Stufe höher reichte. Was Vollendung echter Kammerkunst anbelangt, steht das Londoner Amadeus-Quartett an erster Stelle, aber auch ein Programm Mozartscher Violinsonaten, gespielt von Wolfgang Schneiderhan und Carl Seemann. Alle diese Künstler waren auch als Solisten an den Symphoniekonzerten beteiligt. In diesem Zusammenhang darf, als eine der grossartigsten Erscheinungen am heutigen Virtuosenhimmel, Isaac Stern nicht vergessen werden, der so weit auseinanderliegende Aufgaben wie das Beethovensche und Bartóksche Violinkonzert mit der gleichen stupenden Virtuosität bewältigte, die doch immer unter der Kontrolle eines unbeirrbaren Musikergewissens steht. Und die edle Liederkunst war durch die, wenn sie sich richtig gehen lässt, immer unwiderstehliche Irmgard Seefried und durch Gerhard Hüsch vertreten, der ein vielleicht zu einseitig lyrisch-betrachtendes Programm mit Yrjö Kilpinens sehr beachtenswerten, durchaus eigentümlichen «Liedern um den Tod» beschloss.

Unter den ungemein reichen dramatischen Darbietungen dieses Festivals sei vor allem das «Piccolo Teatro» aus Mailand genannt, dessen Goldoni-Aufführung («Der Diener zweier Herren») zum Be-

[81]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Southland Daily News, Invercargill,
New Zealand

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH

AMERICA'S BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is shown giving a performance in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. After the Edinburgh Festival the orchestra began a tour through the Scandinavian countries to Leningrad and Moscow, returning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland and France. The 11,000-mile trip will end with concerts in London. The cost of the tour has been estimated at more than £100,000 — but about half of this will be supplied by the State Department.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Otago Daily Times, New Zealand

By Ivor Brown, associate editor of the Observer.

Writing towards the close of the tenth and royally attended Edinburgh Festival of the Arts, I can fairly say that the weather was never worse and the attendance never better.

This brave undertaking of an international Arts Festival on the highest level opened in 1947 in a blaze of brilliant summer and also with some trepidation that the city might have issued its invitations to the world in vain. In 1956 the clouds lowered and the rain fell, but there was the warming and consoling knowledge that every year the experiment of 1947 had been amply justified.

Always the arrangement of performances grows larger and the numbers of patrons continually increase. So, amid much drenching from the skies, there was this year no depression or dampening of the spirit.

The statisticians could once more rejoice. Their annual slogan of "Bigger and Better" was again simple truth. Before the opening, at which the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh were present, more than 239,000 tickets valued at £138,000 had been printed, and it was estimated that 250,000 people would be visiting the city for a day or for a longer appreciation of its many pleasures.

It is necessary to stress the fact that the Festival is made worth while by the friendships it creates and also by the arguments it starts. When the concert, the opera, the ballet, the play and the film are over there is always the chance to discuss their merits.

Apart from the Festival Club, in the exquisite Assembly Rooms, scene of so many historic Edinburgh events and gatherings, there were seven other clubs open to overseas and native visitors, and in all these information could be gathered as to available shows, and informal discussion carried on concerning the best in each kind.

It always seems to me that this aspect of the Edinburgh Festival is apt to be underrated when the statisticians are piling up the figures: it is the cordiality of this great world-gathering, quite as much as the counting of heads, that gives worth to the annual three weeks of the Festival.

Certainly Edinburgh has completely destroyed the old idea that the Scottish capital has more head than heart, and that its romantic aspect is betrayed by a chilliness of temper and Scottish shyness and reserve. The affable and welcoming spirit has remained through the years, and I have once more heard grateful comment on the courtesy shown in all manner of ways.

Even in the absence of sunshine, the city cannot fail to look magnificent. Its contrast of the narrow, medieval Old Town on its rocky ridge with the spacious splendour and urbanity of the New Town to the north makes the whole scene intensely theatrical.

Always on re-entering Edinburgh I am vividly impressed with the personality of the place. Here is not just a collection of streets and houses of all periods and styles. Here is the embodiment of Scotland and of all its hard history down the centuries. So many Canadians have Scottish ancestry that they must inevitably respond to this grey mother of men who had no room for all her children and sent so many out to prosper in a larger world and to utilise wide-ranging opportunities.

The Canadian actors from Stratford, Ontario, were the first professional team from the New World to show their craft in Edinburgh and I found everywhere a warm welcome for their society as well as for their capacity. Mr Patterson, the chairman of Canada's Stratford-on-Avon Theatre, has impressed Edinburgh with his quiet, persuasive enthusiasm, and I am sure that he and his colleagues did not find the Thistle a prickly companion for the Maple Leaf.

The Festival has always had a double aspect. It is primarily international, seeking to collect the finest examples of the world's art. This year, with Canadian actors added to Italian, Scottish and Welsh, and with German opera and Boston's as well as Vienna's chief orchestras to be heard, the international aspect was served as well as ever. But, after all, this is Scotland's capital and the Scots are naturally anxious that the best of their products should be exhibited.

Thus the Canadian players, before they scored their success were anticipated at the Assembly Hall by a mixed entertainment called "Pleasures of Scotland" in which the folk-song, folk-music, and folk-dance of the country were picturesquely assembled: this was Scotland in search of its youth.

At the same time, the fact that the great Scottish portrait-painter, Raeburn, was born 200 years ago in Edinburgh made appropriate a collection of his work in the Scottish National Gallery, a collection which admirably mirrored the prosperous life of Raeburn's own society, the new Scotland, Whiggish in politics and realistic in philosophy, which was established after the last failure of the Jacobite Army in 1745.

Ponderous, sagacious, self-confident judges and country gentlemen looked gravely out of the superb canvases on to this new Edinburgh of 1956 and its Festival visitors, a world of bustle and turmoil of which they could never have dreamed.

Visitors to Scotland have always two kinds of civilisation to study: the romantic Gaeldom of the Highlands and the Islands, the pipes and the tartans, and the level-headed Scotland that got on with the work in the offices and law courts of the capital and built, painted, and wrote so grandly in the eighteenth century style.

In the shops, too, were the inevitable souvenirs, some ugly and tasteless, products of the trinket industry. But there were also the creations of Highland handicraft, not only tartan weaves, but pottery and metal-ware of authentic quality. After all, one cannot absorb culture at every hour of the day; a shopping interlude is necessary and popular with the ladies. The shopkeepers were pleased with the results.

Flags and flowers suffered from the battering of wind and weather. But the nocturnal illuminations were as striking as ever. Edinburgh Castle, on its lofty pinnacle of rock, became a magical site when floodlit. The top alone is lit-up, and since the rock on which the castle stands remains dark, it looks as though the castle itself had cut adrift and was a flying saucer of radiance.

This magical beauty of a city where nature has done its best for man, and man has responded by doing his best for nature, was made the more remarkable because, after dull days, the nights sparkled with man's contrivance of electricity.

One thing I am sure that the Canadian actors will never forget, in addition to the cordial acceptance of their work, was the entry to the scene of their labours. The Assembly Hall which provided their arena is reached by climbing the Mound between the New Town and the Old. Above the steeply-stepped approach there was ranged the noble facade of the old Town's ancient splendours, spires and turrets of Church and Parliament, a soaring panorama of architecture.

In such a place the actors were not only going to the theatre: they were moving in a theatrical masterpiece as they went.

(Observer Service.—Copyright.)

PRESSE-ARCHIV
INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU

Basler National Zeitung
21. Sep. 1956

Festspiele in Edinburgh

II.

Das Bostoner Orchester feiert sein 75jähriges Jubiläum mit einer Europareise, die in Edinburgh ihren Anfang genommen hat. Unter den berühmten amerikanischen Orchestern — die New Yorker Philharmoniker und das Philadelphia-Orchester waren in den letzten Jahren hier zu hören — scheint das Bostoner die Krone zu verdienen, vor allem durch die überwältigende Fülle und Schönheit seines Streichertons und die herrliche Kraft und technische Unfehlbarkeit seiner Hörner. In Werken virtuoser Orchesterbehandlung wie dem Strauss'schen «Don Juan» oder dem «Zauberlehrling» von Dukas, die beide unter Charles Münch zu hören waren, hörte man Klänge von unerhörter Ueppigkeit. Dazu muss freilich eine Einschränkung gemacht werden, denn selbst in diesen Fällen konnte man nicht umhin, sich Gedanken darüber zu machen, was notwendigerweise geschehen muss, wenn die technische Fertigkeit über ihren praktisch nützlichen Zweck hinauswächst. Wenn etwa ein Trompetensolo, mit gewaltiger Tonfülle und edlem Vibrato vorgetragen, durch den Klang schneidet wie ein Messer durch Käse, so berührt sich das Sublime mit dem Peinlichen und wir halten bei den ästhetischen Voraussetzungen eines Flügelhornsolos in der Militärmusik. Lässt man aber die Klangfreude so eines Heeres von Virtuosen auf eine Haydn-Symphonie los, so ist das Ergebnis katastrophal, nicht nur durch eine völlige Verschiebung der Klangstruktur, sondern durch einen erstaunlichen Mangel an Präzision in Rhythmus und Phrasierung. Das ist allerdings sehr eine Frage des Dirigenten: Unter Pierre Monteux konnte man eine wundervolle Aufführung der Dritten Symphonie von Brahms hören, die Spannung und Grösse hatte und in der jedes Detail mit Liebe geformt schien. Die Bostoner brachten in ihren Programmen eine Reihe zeitgenössischer amerikanischer Werke, die für das Jubiläum des Orchesters bestellt und geschrieben wurden. Die umfangreichste dieser Widmungen, die Sechste Symphonie von Walter Piston, wenig inspiriert und grau im Klang, war im Grunde die eindrucksloseste. Ansonsten schien am ansprechendsten eine dem Andenken von Kussewitzky gewidmete Elegie von Howard Hanson, die durch Ausdruck und vornehme Erfindung einnimmt. Die beinahe unwahrscheinliche Virtuosität der Blechbläser konnte man in einer seltsamen Kammermusikveranstaltung bewundern; diese Panzersolidron — Trompeten, Hörner und Posaunen — spielte dafür eingerichtete Musik des 16. Jahrhunderts — Gabrieli, Bonelli — und Zeitgenössisches — Poulenc, Berezowsky —, und es ist erstaunlich, mit welcher Finesse alles Rhythmische und Dynamische gerät, wenn solche Meisterbläser ihrem eigenen Gewissen und Ehrgeiz Genüge tun, und wenn sie technische Aufgaben haben, für die eine Trompete oder Posaune die Pasagenläufigkeit einer Klarinette benötigt. Es war eine unbeabsichtigte aber drastische Illustration grundlegender Tatsachen, als unmittelbar nach den Bostonern und im gleichen, 3000 Personen fassenden Saal die Londoner Mozart-Players, ein unter der Leitung von Harry Blech stehendes Ensemble von 36 ausgewählten Musikern, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert spielten, ein Musizieren von mustergültiger Sauberkeit und Stilvollendung.

Kirchenmusik der Wiener Klassiker bildete die Grundsubstanz von drei Konzerten der Wiener Hofmusikkapelle, die, in ihrer heutigen Form eine Kombination des Männerchors und Orchesters der Staatsoper mit einem vokaltechnisch wie musikalisch gleich sorgfältig gebildeten Knabenchor, vermutlich die älteste lebende Musikinstitution in Europa ist. Der seraphische Klang dieser Knabenstimmen, im Chor wie in den immer anonymen Soli, ist der Hauptreiz dieses Ensembles, das natürlich ganz anders klingt als ein normaler gemischter Chor. Seine Darbietungen standen unter dem Zeichen eines im letzten Moment nötig gewordenen Dirigentenwechsels: Rudolf Moralt hatte für den erkrankten Josef Krips einzuspringen, was vermutlich die Ursache gelegentlicher Ermüdungserscheinungen war, die durch Probenüberanstrengung so junger Stimmen leicht eintreten. Der Hauptgewinn waren, neben dem Requiem von Mozart und der C-dur-Messe von Beethoven, die hier selten oder nie gehörte Es-dur-Messe und kleinere Kirchenwerke von Schubert.

Die Hamburger Staatsoper brachte als viertes Werk ihres Opernrepertoires «Salome» von Strauss, worin die Titelrolle der ursprünglich als zweite Besetzung vorgesehenen Helga Pilarzyk einen Erfolg ersten Ranges eintrug. Von dieser jungen Sängerin darf man sich allerhand erwarten: sie hat eine schlanke Stimme von müheloser Fülle und Biegsamkeit und echtes Bühnentalent. Auch sonst war diese Aufführung, von Leopold Ludwig dirigiert und von Wolf Völker inszeniert, lebendig und eindrucksstark und wäre es noch mehr gewesen ohne den gelegentlichen dynamischen Uebereifer des Orchesters.

Die Kammermusik war diesmal etwas bescheidener bedacht, denn ihr Platz in den täglichen Vormittagsveranstaltungen war zum Teil durch eine Serie von Klavier-Rezitals vertreten. Ueber das darin befolgte Prinzip der Spezialisierung mag man verschiedener Meinung sein. Rosalyn Tureck spielte die sämtlichen Partiten von Bach mit ihrer eigenen, fast unheimlich sicheren Kontrolle des Klaviertons, die das Pianoforte dem Bachstil in idealer Weise dienstbar macht. Leider ist ihr Tempoinstinkt nicht von der gleichen Unfehlbarkeit. Ein Mozart-Programm von Nina Milkina, Beethoven von Myra Hess gespielt, Schumann von Robert Casadesus, Liszt von Louis Kentner, ergaben eine Riesenfülle pianistischer Leistungen ausserordentlicher Art, neben denen ein Schubert-Programm von Clifford Curzon durch stürmischen Impetus, vergeistigte Intensität und subtilsten Klang noch eine Stufe höher reichte. Was Vollendung echter Kammerkunst anbelangt, steht das Londoner Amadeus-Quartett an erster Stelle, aber auch ein Programm Mozartscher Violinsonaten, gespielt von Wolfgang Schneiderhan und Carl Seemann. Alle diese Künstler waren auch als Solisten an den Symphoniekonzerten beteiligt. In diesem Zusammenhang darf, als eine der grossartigsten Erscheinungen am heutigen Virtuosenhimmel, Isaac Stern nicht vergessen werden, der so weit auseinanderliegende Aufgaben wie das Beethovensche und Bartóksche Violinkonzert mit der gleichen stupenden Virtuosität bewältigte, die doch immer unter der Kontrolle eines unbeirrbaren Musikergewissens steht. Und die edle Liederkunst war durch die, wenn sie sich richtig gehen lässt, immer unwiderstehliche Irmgard Seefried und durch Gerhard Hüsch vertreten, der ein vielleicht zu einseitig lyrisch-betrachtendes Programm mit Yrjö Kilpinens sehr beachtenswerten, durchaus eigentümlichen «Liedern um den Tod» beschloss.

Unter den ungemein reichen dramatischen Darbietungen dieses Festivals sei vor allem das «Piccolo Teatro» aus Mailand genannt, dessen Goldoni-Aufführung («Der Diener zweier Herren») zum Bezauberndsten gehört, das es heute auf der Bühne gibt. Diese Menschen sind gleich vollendete Clowns, Schauspieler und Sprecher und ihr ganzer Darstellungsstil ist von unvergleichlicher Anmut. Und eine Ueberraschung besonderer Art war eine von Michael Langham meisterhaft inszenierte Aufführung von Shakespeares «Heinrich V.» durch eine junge kanadische Truppe, die Stratford Ontario-Players. Die Ballettaufführungen des Londoner Sadler's Wells-Ensembles haben ihr altes, unübertreffliches Niveau in allen Belangen des klassischen Ballettstils; weniger überzeugend wirkte eine Aufführung des «Wunderbaren Mandarins» von Bartók, wo eine fast sadistisch grimmige Tragödie von Individuen durch das Hineintragen der dekorativen Mittel des grossen Balletts eher abgeschwächt erschien.

Das ist freilich lange nicht alles. Es gibt eine vielbeachtete, das ganze Lebenswerk dieses Künstlers illustrierende Braque-Ausstellung, ein selbständig organisiertes, grosses Film-Festival und unzählige Randveranstaltungen von solchen, die etwas Dramatisches oder Musikalisches leisten können oder leisten zu können glauben, und so hat ausserhalb des offiziellen Programms jedes Sälchen, jede Kirche, jede Scheune ihr besonderes Festivalereignis.

Das einzige Rätselhafte ist, dass es für das alles ein Publikum zu geben scheint.

hg.

[81]

REDUCTION RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Southland Daily News, Invercargill, New Zealand

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH

4767

AMERICA'S BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is shown giving a performance in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. After the Edinburgh Festival the orchestra began a tour through the Scandinavian countries to Leningrad and Moscow, returning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland and France. The 11,000-mile trip will end with concerts in London. The cost of the tour has been estimated at more than £100,000 — but about half of this will be supplied by the State Department.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Otago Daily Times, New Zealand

By Ivor Brown, associate editor of the Observer.

Writing towards the close of the tenth and royally attended Edinburgh Festival of the Arts, I can fairly say that the weather was never worse and the attendance never better.

This brave undertaking of an international Arts Festival on the highest level opened in 1947 in a blaze of brilliant summer and also with some trepidation that the city might have issued its invitations to the world in vain. In 1956 the clouds lowered and the rain fell, but there was the warming and consoling knowledge that every year the experiment of 1947 had been amply justified.

Always the arrangement of performances grows larger and the numbers of patrons continually increase. So, amid much drenching from the skies, there was this year no depression or dampening of the spirit.

The statisticians could once more rejoice Their annual slogan of "Bigger and Better" was again simple truth Before the opening, at which the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh were present, more than 239,000 tickets valued at £138,000 had been printed, and it was estimated that 250,000 people would be visiting the city for a day or for a longer appreciation of its many pleasures.

It is necessary to stress the fact that the Festival is made worth while by the friendships it creates and also by the arguments it starts. When the concert, the opera, the ballet, the play and the film are over there is always the chance to discuss their merits.

Apart from the Festival Club, in the exquisite Assembly Rooms, scene of so many historic Edinburgh events and gatherings, there were seven other clubs open to overseas and native visitors, and in all these information could be gathered as to available shows, and informal discussion carried on concerning the best in each kind.

It always seems to me that this aspect of the Edinburgh Festival is apt to be underrated when the statisticians are piling up the figures: it is the cordiality of this great world-gathering, quite as much as the counting of heads, that gives worth to the anuual three weeks of the Festival.

Certainly Edinburgh has completely destroyed the old idea that the Scottish capital has more head than heart, and that its romantic aspect is betrayed by a chilliness of temper and Scottish shyness and reserve. The affable and welcoming spirit has remained through the years, and I have once more heard grateful comment on the courtesy shown in all manner of ways.

Even in the absence of sunshine, the city cannot fail to look magnificent. Its contrast of the narrow, medieval Old Town on its rocky ridge with the spacious splendour and urbanity of the New Town to the north makes the whole scene intensely theatrical.

Always on re-entering Edinburgh I am vividly impressed with the personality of the place. Here is not just a collection of streets and houses of all periods and styles. Here is the embodiment of Scotland and of all its hard history down the centuries. So many Canadians have Scottish ancestry that they must inevitably respond to this grey mother of men who had no room for all her children and sent so many out to prosper in a larger world and to utilise wide-ranging opportunities.

The Canadian actors from Stratford, Ontario, were the first professional team from the New World to show their craft in Edinburgh and I found everywhere a warm welcome for their society as well as for their capacity. Mr Patterson, the chairman of Canada's Stratford-on-Avon Theatre, has impressed Edinburgh with his quiet, persuasive enthusiasm, and I am sure that he and his colleagues did not find the Thistle a prickly companion for the Maple Leaf.

The Festival has always had a double aspect It is primarily international, seeking to collect the finest examples of the world's art. This year, with Canadian actors added to Italian, Scottish and Welsh, and with German opera and Boston's as well as Vienna's chief orchestras to be heard, the international aspect was served as well as ever. But, after all, this is Scotland's capital and the Scots are naturally anxious that the best of their products should be exhibited.

Thus the Canadian players, before they scored their success were anticipated at the Assembly Hall by a mixed entertainment called "Pleasures of Scotland" in which the folk-song, folk-music, and folk-dance of the country were picturesquely assembled: this was Scotland in search of its youth.

At the same time, the fact that the great Scottish portrait-painter, Raeburn, was born 200 years ago in Edinburgh made appropriate a collection of his work in the Scottish National Gallery, a collection which admirably mirrored the prosperous life of Raeburn's own society, the new Scotland, Whiggish in politics and realistic in philosophy, which was established after the last failure of the Jacobite Army in 1745.

Ponderous, sagacious, self-confident judges and country gentlemen looked gravely out of the superb canvases on to this new Edinburgh of 1956 and its Festival visitors, a world of bustle and turmoil of which they could never have dreamed.

Visitors to Scotland have always two kinds of civilisation to study, the romantic Gaeldom of the Highlands and the Islands, the pipes and the tartans, and the level-headed Scotland that got on with the work in the offices and law courts of the capital and built, painted, and wrote so grandly in the eighteenth century style.

In the shops, too, were the inevitable souvenirs, some ugly and tasteless, products of the trinket industry. But there were also the creations of Highland handicraft, not only tartan weaves, but pottery and metal-ware of authentic quality. After all, one cannot absorb culture at every hour of the day; a shopping interlude is necessary and popular with the ladies. The shopkeepers were pleased with the results.

Flags and flowers suffered from the battering of wind and weather. But the nocturnal illuminations were as striking as ever. Edinburgh Castle, on its lofty pinnacle of rock, became a magical site when floodlit. The top alone is lit-up, and since the rock on which the castle stands remains dark, it looks as though the castle itself had cut adrift and was a flying saucer of radiance.

This magical beauty of a city where nature has done its best for man, and man has responded by doing his best for nature, was made the more remarkable because, after dull days, the nights sparkled with man's contrivance of electricity.

One thing I am sure that the Canadian actors will never forget, in addition to the cordial acceptance of their work, was the entry to the scene of their labours. The Assembly Hall which provided their arena is reached by climbing the Mound between the New Town and the Old. Above the steeply-stepped approach there was ranged the noble facade of the old Town's ancient splendours, spires and turrets of Church and Parliament, a soaring panorama of architecture.

In such a place the actors were not only going to the theatre: they were moving in a theatrical masterpiece as they went.

(Observer Service.—Copyright.)

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Huddersfield Daily Examiner
20 SEP 1956

The Three Arts

Helping The "Neglected Composer"

4767

BY PLAYFELLOW

THE idea of the neglected composer turning out music by the ream which no-one ever plays is such that any scheme to give the man a chance must be welcomed.

The neglected composer, however, is a modern phenomenon. In the eighteenth century musicians got a living of a sort, and sometimes a good one, because they were attached to an aristocratic Court or to a wealthy household, and they wrote music when they were asked to do so by their patrons.

The greater part of the output of Haydn and Mozart was written "on demand." Someone wanted music for a mechanical organ, and Mozart supplied it, and no doubt was grateful for the fee. Haydn wrote a great deal of music for the baryton, now obsolete, because his patron, Prince Esterhazy, played the instrument and was avid for new pieces, just as Carl Philip Emmanuel Bach wrote a great deal for the flute because his master, Frederick the Great, thought well of himself as a flute player.

The Dedicated Artist

During the nineteenth century the attitude changed. The composer began to regard himself as a dedicated person, who wrote not to order but to fulfil a mission in life. Wagner was the great exemplar of this kind of composer. He burned with a fierce integrity and believed that the world should give him just what he wanted merely because he was Richard Wagner, a genius with a mission in the world, who wrote just what he wanted, not what others ordered.

As things turned out Wagner found an apostle who had the means and the judgment to give him all that he asked for—a new kind of opera house, a full orchestra of the kind hardly ever previously assembled, and the money with which to carry on. Few, however, could find a patron as powerful as the King of Bavaria, who was Wagner's benefactor; but even if a musician could find a helping hand stretched out towards him, as Tchaikovsky did with Nadezhda von Meck, who supplied him with annual stipend, the custom of helping the artist by commissioning particular works largely died.

An Example From The U.S.A.

Latterly there has been a change. One example of this is to be found in the United States, where the Koussevitzky Foundation has been instituted to commission composers to write music for performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In Great Britain the B.B.C. has commissioned a whole series of composers both of this country and of France to write works to celebrate the tenth birthday of the Third Programme. Racine Fricker has been invited to write a work for the revived Leeds Festival.

There is also the cinema, for the film studios of this country, and to a greater extent of the United States, keep composers busy with jobs to write "background" music.

The Purist's Objection

Old-fashioned purists may object that writing music to order for the films in the fashion of two minutes of this and three minutes of that, and all of it to be ready, so to speak, at nine o'clock on Monday week, is not the kind of commission that an artist of integrity can accept. Mozart would never have understood why; and Bach, who spent the greater part of his life in writing works for particular occasions, would perhaps have been surprised to hear that there was any other condition in which music could be written at all.

It cannot, however, be said that the results of some recent commissions have been particularly impressive. I know nothing of the works commissioned by the B.B.C., but I heard several of the works written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the last Edinburgh Festival, and since these were brought to Britain for European performances one must presume that they were among the best—but what an indifferent best they were!

Not Music

A conclusion one might reach after hearing the American as well as the English commissioned works at the Festival is that apparently it is not at all difficult to find men who can cause an orchestra to produce agreeable or impressive sounds; but this does not constitute a work of music.

I know that in some parts of the United States it is the fashion to talk about music being "functional," a blessed word used to excuse anything that seems otherwise to exist without purpose or object; but I doubt that the talk really impresses even those who use it.

That at least four out of five commissioned works heard at Edinburgh were still-born must not, however, be held against the system. The mortality rate among new works of music is, and always has been, very high.

Failures To Be Expected

I suppose it is true to say that for every work that lives, a hundred have been composed which died soon after birth, and that unless we have the failures we shall never have the successes.

There has, by the way, when you think of it, been one most successful commission — Sir William Walton's last opera, "Troilus and Cressida."

The real trouble, I suppose, is that while you may order a work, you cannot put into commission genius if it is not there.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
Telephone 35
Basl

4767

Festspiele

Das Bostoner Or
riges Jubiläum mit einer burgh ihren Anfang gen
rühmten amerikanischen O
Philharmoniker und das
in den letzten Jahren hi Bostoner die Krone zu ver überwältigende Fülle und tons und die herrliche Kraft und technische Unfehlbarkeit seiner Hörner. In Werken virtuoser Orchesterbehandlung wie dem Strauss'schen «Don Juan» oder dem «Zauberlehrling» von Dukas, die beide unter Charles Münch zu hören waren, hörte man Klänge von unerhörter Ueppigkeit. Dazu muss freilich eine Einschränkung gemacht werden, denn selbst in diesen Fällen konnte man nicht umhin, sich Gedanken darüber zu machen, was notwendigerweise geschehen muss, wenn die technische Fertigkeit über ihren praktisch nützlichen Zweck hinauswächst. Wenn etwa ein Trompetensolo, mit gewaltiger Tonfülle und edlem Vibrato vorgetragen, durch den Klang schneidet wie ein Messer durch Käse, so berührt sich das Sublime mit dem Peinlichen und wir halten bei den ästhetischen Voraussetzungen eines Flügelhornsolos in der Militärmusik. Lässt man aber die Klangfreude so eines Heeres von Virtuosen auf eine Haydn-Symphonie los, so ist das Ergebnis katastrophal, nicht nur durch eine völlige Verschiebung der Klangstruktur, sondern durch einen erstaunlichen Mangel an Präzision in Rhythmus und Phrasierung. Das ist allerdings sehr eine Frage des Dirigenten: Unter Pierre Monteux konnte man eine wundervolle Aufführung der Dritten Symphonie von Brahms hören, die Spannung und Grösse hatte und in der jedes Detail mit Liebe geformt schien. Die Bostoner brachten in ihren Programmen eine Reihe zeitgenössischer amerikanischer Werke, die für das Jubiläum des Orchesters bestellt und geschrieben wurden. Die umfangreichste dieser Widmungen, die Sechste Symphonie von Walter Piston, wenig inspiriert und grau im Klang, war im Grunde die eindrucksloseste. Ansonsten schien am ansprechendsten eine dem Andenken von Kussewitzky gewidmete Elegie von Howard Hanson, die durch Ausdruck und vornehme Erfindung einnimmt. Die beinahe unwahrscheinliche sit t der Blechbläser konnte ma Kammermusikveranstaltung b sq adron — Trompeten, Hörne lte dafür eingerichtete Musik

— Gabrieli, Bonelli —
— Poulenc, Berezowsky lie, mit welcher Finesse alle na nische gerät, wenn solche M ge en Gewissen und Ehrgeiz G sie technische Aufgaben haben te oder Posaune die Pasagenl tte benötigt. Es war eine unbea drastische Illustration grundlegender unmittelbar nach den Bostonern und im
Personen fassenden Saal die London Players, ein unter der Leitung von stehendes Ensemble von 36 ausgewähl
Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert spi
sizieren von mustergültiger Sauberkeit endung.

Kirchenmusik der Wiener Klassike
Grundsubstanz von drei Konzerten der W musikkapelle, die, in ihrer heutige
Kombination des Männerchors und O
Staatsoper mit einem vokaltechnisch lisch gleich sorgfältig gebildeten Knaben lich die älteste lebende Musikinstitution i Der seraphische Klang dieser Knabenstim wie in den immer anonymen Soli, ist der H ses Ensembles, das natürlich ganz andei ein normaler gemischter Chor. Seine I standen unter dem Zeichen eines im letz nötig gewordenen Dirigentenwechsels: Ruc hatte für den erkrankten Josef Krips ei was vermutlich die Ursache gelegentlicher erscheinungen war, die durch Probenüber so junger Stimmen leicht eintreten. Der H waren, neben dem Requiem von Mozar
C-dur-Messe von Beethoven, die hier nie gehörte Es-dur-Messe und kleinere Ki von Schubert.

Die Hamburger Staatsope
als viertes Werk ihres Opernrepertoi lome» von Strauss, worin die Tit ursprünglich als zweite Besetzung vo Helga Pilarzyk einen Erfolg erste eintrug. Von dieser jungen Sängerin

[81]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Southland Daily News, Invercargill, New Zealand

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN EDINBURGH

4767

AMERICA'S BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is shown giving a performance in the Usher Hall, Edinburgh. After the Edinburgh Festival the orchestra began a tour through the Scandinavian countries to Leningrad and Moscow, returning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland and France. The 11,000-mile trip will end with concerts in London. The cost of the tour has been estimated at more than £100,000 — but about half of this will be supplied by the State Department.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

Extract from
Otago Daily Times, New Zealand

By Ivor Brown, associate editor of the Observer.

Writing towards the close of the tenth and royally attended Edinburgh Festival of the Arts, I can fairly say that the weather was never worse and the attendance never better.

This brave undertaking of an international Arts Festival on the highest level opened in 1947 in a blaze of brilliant summer and also with some trepidation that the city might have issued its invitations to the world in vain. In 1956 the clouds lowered and the rain fell, but there was the warming and consoling knowledge that every year the experiment of 1947 had been amply justified.

Always the arrangement of performances grows larger and the numbers of patrons continually increase. So, amid much drenching from the skies, there was this year no depression or dampening of the spirit.

The statisticians could once more rejoice Their annual slogan of "Bigger and Better" was again simple truth Before the opening, at which the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh were present, more than 239,000 tickets valued at £138,000 had been printed, and it was estimated that 250,000 people would be visiting the city for a day or for a longer appreciation of its many pleasures.

It is necessary to stress the fact that the Festival is made worth while by the friendships it creates and also by the arguments it starts. When the concert, the opera, the ballet, the play and the film are over there is always the chance to discuss their merits.

Apart from the Festival Club, in the exquisite Assembly Rooms, scene of so many historic Edinburgh events and gatherings, there were seven other clubs open to overseas and native visitors, and in all these information could be gathered as to available shows, and informal discussion carried on concerning the best in each kind.

It always seems to me that this aspect of the Edinburgh Festival is apt to be underrated when the statisticians are piling up the figures: it is the cordiality of this great world-gathering, quite as much as the counting of heads, that gives worth to the anuual three weeks of the Festival.

Certainly Edinburgh has completely destroyed the old idea that the Scottish capital has more head than heart, and that its romantic aspect is betrayed by a chilliness of temper and Scottish shyness and reserve. The affable and welcoming spirit has remained through the years, and I have once more heard grateful comment on the courtesy shown in all manner of ways.

Even in the absence of sunshine, the city cannot fail to look magnificent. Its contrast of the narrow, medieval Old Town on its rocky ridge with the spacious splendour and urbanity of the New Town to the north makes the whole scene intensely theatrical.

Always on re-entering Edinburgh I am vividly impressed with the personality of the place. Hefe is not just a collection of streets and houses of all periods and styles. Here is the embodiment of Scotland and of all its hard history down the centuries. So many Canadians have Scottish ancestry that they must inevitably respond to this grey mother of men who had no room for all her children and sent so many out to prosper in a larger world and to utilise wide-ranging opportunities.

The Canadian actors from Stratford, Ontario, were the first professional team from the New World to show their craft in Edinburgh and I found everywhere a warm welcome for their society as well as for their capacity. Mr Patterson, the chairman of Canada's Stratford-on-Avon Theatre, has impressed Edinburgh with his quiet, persuasive enthusiasm, and I am sure that he and his colleagues did not find the Thistle a prickly companion for the Maple Leaf.

The Festival has always had a double aspect It is primarily international, seeking to collect the finest examples of the world's art. This year, with Canadian actors added to Italian, Scottish and Welsh, and with German opera and Boston's as well as Vienna's chief orchestras to be heard, the international aspect was served as well as ever. But, after all, this is Scotland's capital and the Scots are naturally anxious that the best of their products should be exhibited.

Thus the Canadian players, before they scored their success were anticipated at the Assembly Hall by a mixed entertainment called "Pleasures of Scotland" in which the folk-song, folk-music, and folk-dance of the country were picturesquely assembled: this was Scotland in search of its youth.

At the same time, the fact that the great Scottish portrait-painter, Raeburn, was born 200 years ago in Edinburgh made appropriate a collection of his work in the Scottish National Gallery, a collection which admirably mirrored the prosperous life of Raeburn's own society, the new Scotland, Whiggish in politics and realistic in philosophy, which was established after the last failure of the Jacobite Army in 1745.

Ponderous, sagacious, self-confident judges and country gentlemen looked gravely out of the superb canvases on to this new Edinburgh of 1956 and its Festival visitors, a world of bustle and turmoil of which they could never have dreamed.

Visitors to Scotland have always two kinds of civilisation to study, the romantic Gaeldom of the Highlands and the Islands, the pipes and the tartans, and the level-headed Scotland that got on with the work in the offices and law courts of the capital and built, painted, and wrote so grandly in the eighteenth century style.

In the shops, too, were the inevitable souvenirs, some ugly and tasteless, products of the trinket industry. But there were also the creations of Highland handicraft, not only tartan weaves, but pottery, and metal-ware of authentic quality. After all, one cannot absorb culture at every hour of the day; a shopping interlude is necessary and popular with the ladies. The shopkeepers were pleased with the results.

Flags and flowers suffered from the battering of wind and weather. But the nocturnal illuminations were as striking as ever: Edinburgh Castle, on its lofty pinnacle of rock, became a magical site when floodlit. The top alone is lit-up, and since the rock on which the castle stands remains dark, it looks as though the castle itself had cut adrift and was a flying saucer of radiance.

This magical beauty of a city where nature has done its best for man, and man has responded by doing his best for nature, was made the more remarkable because, after dull days, the nights sparkled with man's contrivance of electricity.

One thing I am sure that the Canadian actors will never forget, in addition to the cordial acceptance of their work, was the entry to the scene of their labours. The Assembly Hall which provided their arena is reached by climbing the Mound between the New Town and the Old. Above the steeply-stepped approach there was ranged the noble facade of the old Town's ancient splendours, spires and turrets of Church and Parliament, a soaring panorama of architecture.

In such a place the actors were not only going to the theatre: they were moving in a theatrical masterpiece as they went.

(Observer Service.—Copyright.)

PRESSE-ARCHIV
INTERNATIONAL PRESS CUTTING BUREAU
Telefon 3505

Basler National Zeitung
21. Sep. 1956

15

Festspiele in Edinburgh

II.

Das Bostoner Orchester feiert sein 75jähriges Jubiläum mit einer Europareise, die in Edinburgh ihren Anfang genommen hat. Unter den berühmten amerikanischen Oruchestern — die New Yorker Philharmoniker und das Philadelphia-Orchester waren in den letzten Jahren hier zu hören — scheint das Bostoner die Krone zu verdienen, vor allem durch die überwältigende Fülle und Schönheit seines Streichertons und die herrliche Kraft und technische Unfehlbarkeit seiner Hörner. In Werken virtuoser Orchesterbehandlung wie dem Strauss'schen «Don Juan» oder dem «Zauberlehrling» von Dukas, die beide unter Charles Münch zu hören waren, hörte man Klänge von unerhörter Ueppigkeit. Dazu muss freilich eine Einschränkung gemacht werden, denn selbst in diesen Fällen konnte man nicht umhin, sich Gedanken darüber zu machen, was notwendigerweise geschehen muss, wenn die technische Fertigkeit über ihren praktisch nützlichen Zweck hinauswächst. Wenn etwa ein Trompetensolo, mit gewaltiger Tonfülle und edlem Vibrato vorgetragen, durch den Klang schneidet wie ein Messer durch Käse, so berührt sich das Sublime mit dem Peinlichen und wir halten bei den ästhetischen Voraussetzungen eines Flügelhornsolos in der Militärmusik. Lässt man aber die Klangfreude so eines Heeres von Virtuosen auf eine Haydn-Symphonie los, so ist das Ergebnis katastrophal, nicht nur durch eine völlige Verschiebung der Klangstruktur, sondern durch einen erstaunlichen Mangel an Präzision in Rhythmus und Phrasierung. Das ist allerdings sehr eine Frage des Dirigenten: Unter Pierre Monteux konnte man eine wundervolle Aufführung der Dritten Symphonie von Brahms hören, die Spannung und Grösse hatte und in der jedes Detail mit Liebe geformt schien. Die Bostoner brachten in ihren Programmen eine Reihe zeitgenössischer amerikanischer Werke, die für das Jubiläum des Orchesters bestellt und geschrieben wurden. Die umfangreichste dieser Widmungen, die Sechste Symphonie von Walter Piston, wenig inspiriert und grau im Klang, war im Grunde die eindruckslose Ansonsten schien am ansprechendsten eine dem Andenken von Kussewitzky gewidmete Elegie von Howard Hanson, die durch Ausdruck und vornehme Erfindung einnimmt. Die beinahe unwahrscheinliche Virtuosi[illegible]t der Blechbläser konnte n[illegible] samen K[illegible]ammermusikveranstaltung [illegible] Panzersq[illegible]adron — Trompeten, Hörn[illegible] — spielte[illegible] dafür eingerichtete Musik[illegible] derts — [illegible]abrieli, Bonelli — [illegible] sches — [illegible]oulenc, Berezowsk[illegible] erstaunli[illegible], mit welcher Finesse al[illegible] und Dyna[illegible]mische gerät, wenn solche[illegible] rem eige[illegible]n Gewissen und Ehrgeiz [illegible] wenn sie [illegible] technische Aufgaben habe[illegible] Trompete [illegible] oder Posaune die Pasagen[illegible] Klarinette [illegible] benötigt. Es war eine unbe[illegible] drastische [illegible] Illustration grundlegender [illegible] unmittelbar nach den Bostonern und i[illegible] Personen [illegible] fassenden Saal die Londo[illegible] Players, ein unter der Leitung von [illegible] stehendes Ensemble von 36 ausgewäh[illegible] Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert s[illegible] sizieren von mustergültiger Sauberke[illegible] endung.

Kirchenmusik der Wiener Klassik[illegible] Grundsubstanz von drei Konzerten der W[illegible] musikkapelle, die, in ihrer heutig[illegible] Kombination des Männerchors und [illegible] Staatsoper mit einem vokaltechnisch[illegible] lisch gleich sorgfältig gebildeten Knabe[illegible] lich die älteste lebende Musikinstitution [illegible] Der seraphische Klang dieser Knabenstim[illegible] wie in den immer anonymen Soli, ist der [illegible] ses Ensembles, das natürlich ganz and[illegible] ein normaler gemischter Chor. Seine [illegible] standen unter dem Zeichen eines im le[illegible] nötig gewordenen Dirigentenwechsels: R[illegible] hatte für den erkrankten Josef Krips e[illegible] was vermutlich die Ursache gelegentliche[illegible] erscheinungen war, die durch Probenübe[illegible] so junger Stimmen leicht eintreten. Der [illegible] waren, neben dem Requiem von Moza[illegible] C-dur-Messe von Beethoven, die hier [illegible] nie gehörte Es-dur-Messe und kleinere K[illegible] von Schubert.

Die Hamburger Staatsop[illegible] als viertes Werk ihres Opernreperto[illegible] lomes von Strauss, worin die T[illegible] ursprünglich als zweite Besetzung v[illegible] Helga Pilarzyk einen Erfolg ers[illegible] eintrug. Von dieser jungen Sängerin

[8]

NY IN EDINBURGH

HESTRA is shown giving a performance in the Usher stival the orchestra began a tour through the Scandin-eturning through Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, trip will end with concerts in London. The cost of £100,000 — but about half of this will be supplied by State Department.

sociate editor of the Observer.

of the tenth and royally attended Edinburgh y say that the weather was never worse and he Canadian players, before ed their success were anticithe Assembly Hall by a mixed ment called "Pleasures of

" in which the folk-song, sic, and folk-dance of the were picturesquely as-this was Scotland in search uth.

e same time, the fact that the Scottish portrait-painter, Rae-as born 200 years ago in Edin-made appropriate a collection work in the Scottish National a collection which admirably the prosperous life of Raeown society, the new Scotland, sh in politics and realistic in phy, which was established he last failure of the Jacobite
n 1745.

erous, sagacious, self-confident and country gentlemen looked out of the superb canvases on new Edinburgh of 1956 and its visitors, a world of bustle rmoil of which they could never dreamed.

ors to Scotland have always nds of civilisation to study, the tic Gaeldom of the Highlands
e Islands, the pipes and the tar-and the level-headed Scotland ot on with the work in the of-nd law courts of the capital and painted, and wrote so grandly eighteenth century style.

he shops, too, were the inevitouvenirs, some ugly and tasteproducts of the trinket industry.
here were also the creations of nd handicraft, not only tartan
s, but pottery and metal-ware thentic quality. After all, one t absorb culture at every hour e day; a shopping interlude is tary and popular with the ladies.
shopkeepers were pleased with esults.

gs and flowers suffered from the ring of wind and weather. But octurnal illuminations were as ng as ever: Edinburgh Castle, on fty pinnacle of rock, became a al site when floodlit. The top , is lit-up, and since the rock on h the castle stands remains dark, oks as though the castle itself ut adrift and was a flying saucer diance.

This magical beauty of a city where nature has done its best for man, and man has responded by doing his best for nature, was made the more remarkable because, after dull days, the nights sparkled with man's contrivance of electricity.

One thing I am sure that the Canadian actors will never forget, in addition to the cordial acceptance of their work, was the entry to the scene of their labours. The Assembly Hall which provided their arena is reached by climbing the Mound between the New Town and the Old. Above the steeply-stepped approach there was ranged the noble facade of the old Town's ancient splendours, spires and turrets of Church and Parliament, a soaring panorama of architecture.

In such a place the actors were not only going to the theatre: they were moving in a theatrical masterpiece as they went.

(Observer Service.—Copyright.)

PRESSE-ARCHIV
INTERNATIONAL PRESS
CUTTING BUREAU
Telefon 3505
Basler National Zeitung
21. Sep. 1956

15

Festspiele in Edinburgh

II.

Das Bostoner Orchester feiert sein 75jähriges Jubiläum mit einer Europareise, die in Edinburgh ihren Anfang genommen hat. Unter den berühmten amerikanischen Oruchestern — die New Yorker Philharmoniker und das Philadelphia-Orchester waren in den letzten Jahren hier zu hören — scheint das Bostoner die Krone zu verdienen, vor allem durch die überwältigende Fülle und Schönheit seines Streichertons und die herrliche Kraft und technische Unfehlbarkeit seiner Hörner. In Werken virtuoser Orchesterbehandlung wie dem Strauss'schen «Don Juan» oder dem «Zauberlehrling» von Dukas, die beide unter Charles Münch zu hören waren, hörte man Klänge von unerhörter Ueppigkeit. Dazu muss freilich eine Einschränkung gemacht werden, denn selbst in diesen Fällen konnte man nicht umhin, sich Gedanken darüber zu machen, was notwendigerweise geschehen muss, wenn die technische Fertigkeit über ihren praktisch nützlichen Zweck hinauswächst. Wenn etwa ein Trompetensolo, mit gewaltiger Tonfülle und edlem Vibrato vorgetragen, durch den Klang schneidet wie ein Messer durch Käse, so berührt sich das Sublime mit dem Peinlichen und wir halten bei den ästhetischen Voraussetzungen eines Flügelhornsolos in der Militärmusik. Lässt man aber die Klangfreude so eines Heeres von Virtuosen auf eine Haydn-Symphonie los, so ist das Ergebnis katastrophal, nicht nur durch eine völlige Verschiebung der Klangstruktur, sondern durch einen erstaunlichen Mangel an Präzision in Rhythmus und Phrasierung. Das ist allerdings sehr eine Frage des Dirigenten: Unter Pierre Monteux konnte man eine wundervolle Aufführung der Dritten Symphonie von Brahms hören, die Spannung und Grösse hatte und in der jedes Detail mit Liebe geformt schien. Die Bostoner brachten in ihren Programmen eine Reihe zeitgenössischer amerikanischer Werke, die für das Jubiläum des Orchesters bestellt und geschrieben wurden. Die umfangreichste dieser Widmungen, die Sechste Symphonie von Walter Piston, wenig inspiriert und grau im Klang, war im Grunde die eindrucksloseste. Ansonsten schien am ansprechendsten eine dem Andenken von Kussewitzky gewidmete Elegie von Howard Hanson, die durch Ausdruck und vornehme Erfindung einnimmt. Die beinahe unwahrscheinliche Virtuosität der Blechbläser konnte man in einer seltsamen Kammermusikveranstaltung bewundern; diese Panzersquadron — Trompeten, Hörner und Posaunen — spielte dafür eingerichtete Musik des 16. Jahrhunderts — Gabrieli, Bonelli — und Zeitgenössisches — Poulenc, Berezowsky —, und es ist erstaunlich, mit welcher Finesse alles Rhythmische und Dynamische gerät, wenn solche Meisterbläser ihrem eigenen Gewissen und Ehrgeiz Genüge tun, und wenn sie technische Aufgaben haben, für die eine Trompete oder Posaune die Pasagenläufigkeit einer Klarinette benötigt. Es war eine unbeabsichtigte aber drastische Illustration grundlegender Tatsachen, als unmittelbar nach den Bostonern und im gleichen, 3000 Personen fassenden Saal die Londoner Mozart-Players, ein unter der Leitung von Harry Blech stehendes Ensemble von 36 ausgewählten Musikern, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert spielten, ein Musizieren von mustergültiger Sauberkeit und Stilvollendung.

Kirchenmusik der Wiener Klassiker bildete die Grundsubstanz von drei Konzerten der Wiener Hofmusikkapelle, die, in ihrer heutigen Form eine Kombination des Männerchors und Orchesters der Staatsoper mit einem vokaltechnisch wie musikalisch gleich sorgfältig gebildeten Knabenchor, vermutlich die älteste lebende Musikinstitution in Europa ist. Der seraphische Klang dieser Knabenstimmen, im Chor wie in den immer anonymen Soli, ist der Hauptreiz dieses Ensembles, das natürlich ganz anders klingt als ein normaler gemischter Chor. Seine Darbietungen standen unter dem Zeichen eines im letzten Moment nötig gewordenen Dirigentenwechsels: Rudolf Moralt hatte für den erkrankten Josef Krips einzuspringen, was vermutlich die Ursache gelegentlicher Ermüdungserscheinungen war, die durch Probenüberanstrengung so junger Stimmen leicht eintreten. Der Hauptgewinn waren, neben dem Requiem von Mozart und der C-dur-Messe von Beethoven, die hier selten oder nie gehörte Es-dur-Messe und kleinere Kirchenwerke von Schubert.

Die Hamburger Staatsoper brachte als viertes Werk ihres Opernrepertoires «Salome» von Strauss, worin die Titelrolle der ursprünglich als zweite Besetzung vorgesehenen Helga Pilarzyk einen Erfolg ersten Ranges eintrug. Von dieser jungen Sängerin darf man sich allerhand erwarten: sie hat eine schlanke Stimme von müheloser Fülle und Biegsamkeit und echtes Bühnentalent. Auch sonst war diese Aufführung, von Leopold Ludwig dirigiert und von Wolf Völker inszeniert, lebendig und eindrucksstark und wäre es noch mehr gewesen ohne den gelegentlichen dynamischen Uebereifer des Orchesters.

Die Kammermusik war diesmal etwas bescheidener bedacht, denn ihr Platz in den täglichen Vormittagsveranstaltungen war zum Teil durch eine Serie von Klavier-Rezitals vertreten. Ueber das darin befolgte Prinzip der Spezialisierung mag man verschiedener Meinung sein. Rosalyn Tureck spielte die sämtlichen Partiten von Bach mit ihrer eigenen, fast unheimlich sicheren Kontrolle des Klaviertons, die das Pianoforte dem Bachstil in idealer Weise dienstbar macht. Leider ist ihr Tempoinstinkt nicht von der gleichen Unfehlbarkeit. Ein Mozart-Programm von Nina Milkina, Beethoven von Myra Hess gespielt, Schumann von Robert Casadesus, Liszt von Louis Kentner, ergaben eine Riesenfülle pianistischer Leistungen ausserordentlicher Art, neben denen ein Schubert-Programm von Clifford Curzon durch stürmischen Impetus, vergeistigte Intensität und subtilsten Klang noch eine Stufe höher reichte. Was Vollendung echter Kammerkunst anbelangt, steht das Londoner Amadeus-Quartett an erster Stelle, aber auch ein Programm Mozartscher Violinsonaten, gespielt von Wolfgang Schneiderhan und Carl Seemann. Alle diese Künstler waren auch als Solisten an den Symphoniekonzerten beteiligt. In diesem Zusammenhang darf, als eine der grossartigsten Erscheinungen am heutigen Virtuosenhimmel, Isaac Stern nicht vergessen werden, der so weit auseinanderliegende Aufgaben wie das Beethovensche und Bartóksche Violinkonzert mit der gleichen stupenden Virtuosität bewältigte, die doch immer unter der Kontrolle eines unbeirrbaren Musikergewissens steht. Und die edle Liederkunst war durch die, wenn sie sich richtig gehen lässt, immer unwiderstehliche Irmgard Seefried und durch Gerhard Hüsch vertreten, der ein vielleicht zu einseitig lyrisch-betrachtendes Programm mit Yrjö Kilpinens sehr beachtenswerten, durchaus eigentümlichen «Liedern um den Tod» beschloss.

Unter den ungemein reichen dramatischen Darbietungen dieses Festivals sei vor allem das «Piccolo Teatro» aus Mailand genannt, dessen Goldoni-Aufführung («Der Diener zweier Herren») zum Bezauberndsten gehört, das es heute auf der Bühne gibt. Diese Menschen sind gleich vollendete Clowns, Schauspieler und Sprecher und ihr ganzer Darstellungsstil ist von unvergleichlicher Anmut. Und eine Ueberraschung besonderer Art war eine von Michael Langham meisterhaft inszenierte Aufführung von Shakespeares «Heinrich V.» durch eine junge kanadische Truppe, die Stratford Ontario-Players. Die Ballettaufführungen des Londoner Sadler's Wells-Ensembles haben ihr altes, unübertreffliches Niveau in allen Belangen des klassischen Ballettstils; weniger überzeugend wirkte eine Aufführung des «Wunderbaren Mandarins» von Bartók, wo eine fast sadistisch grimmige Tragödie von Individuen durch das Hineintragen der dekorativen Mittel des grossen Balletts eher abgeschwächt erschien.

Das ist freilich lange nicht alles. Es gibt eine vielbeachtete, das ganze Lebenswerk dieses Künstlers illustrierende Braque-Ausstellung, ein selbständig organisiertes, grosses Film-Festival und unzählige Randveranstaltungen von solchen, die etwas Dramatisches oder Musikalisches leisten können oder leisten zu können glauben, und so hat ausserhalb des offiziellen Programms jedes Sälchen, jede Kirche, jede Scheune ihr besonderes Festivalereignis.

Das einzige Rätselhafte ist, dass es für das alles ein Publikum zu geben scheint. hg.

[81]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2
Extract from
GRAMOPHONE RECORD REVIEW,
London
OCT 1956

BERLIOZ, Hector (1803-1869)

SYMPHONIE FANTASTIQUE (47 mins.)

Boston Sym. Orch., cond. Münch. HMV ALP1384 (39/7½)

BERLIOZ'S "SYMPHONIE FANTASTIQUE" WAS INSPIRED BY HIS OWN LOVE affair with the Shakespearean actress, Harriet Smithson and the scandalous stories he heard about her and which drove him nearly insane, indeed it has been said that for two whole nights he wandered desolate, without food and without sleep, through the countryside around Paris, meditating his betrayal and the perfidies of Miss Smithson.

Of the six previous modern recordings of the "Fantastique", I am familiar with all except that of Markevitch (which I understand has some excellent features) but for purposes of comparison I think it is only necessary to consider those of van Beinum and Karajan to which I referred respectively on "GRR" pages 12, March, 1952, and 311, April, 1955. While it is true that van Beinum's Decca dates back some years, I have in my possession a very recent pressing concerning which I can only think it has undergone some quite remarkable process of rejuvenation, because this version now stands up most satisfactorily to the high technical standards of to-day.

Charles Münch and the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra created tremendously favourable impressions at their recent Edinburgh and London (Royal Festival Hall) appearances, as will also the present performance of Berlioz's vivid and dramatic symphony which has been described as a masterpiece of exhibitionism and self-pity. The recording is amongst the very best we have had from RCA-Victor, it is delightfully clear throughout but has not quite the fine sense of depth of either Columbia or Decca, while balance is occasionally a bit questionable. The harp, for example, at the commencement of "Un Bal" is unduly prominent, then again treble generally seems to show just a little too much emphasis. Nevertheless, this is a record one can well be proud to own and where it scores so heavily over its two main rivals is in having the break for turnover after the second movement, instead of midway through the third. Münch takes 27 minutes for the last three movements and which is certainly not overdoing things as far as the record side is concerned, while I suppose Karajan was at a disadvantage over his timing which runs to 53 minutes for the symphony as against the 47 minutes required by Charles Münch.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, incidentally, was formed in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, and since those far-off days has enjoyed an almost unbroken and ever-increasing record of successes; not only have the concerts been multiplied tenfold—the potential audiences have been increased beyond reckoning by radio and, of course, by records. George Henschel (later Sir George) was the first conductor, Koussevitsky held the post for 25 years and the Strasbourg-born Ch[illegible]münch since 1949.

MOORE ORR

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2
Extract from
Dunedin Evening Star, New Zealand
29 SEP 1956

Inadequate Facilities For Edinburgh Festival

(From Betty Upton Hughes)

LONDON (Airmail).—You might suppose that a city like Edinburgh, which has held its international festivals so successfully for 10 years, would at least provide good theatres for famous visiting artists. Not so.

What is there for ballet? A theatre whose dangerously sloping stage provoked criticism from Beryl Grey, of the Sadler's Wells company.

For plays? One production is always given in the Assembly Hall of the Church of Scotland, which is effective only for arena-style productions.

For opera? An adequate theatre is used, and this year Sir Arthur Bliss, Master of the Queen's Musik, appealed to Edinburgh to build a national opera house.

But Mr Robert Ponsonby, the festival's new young artistic administrator, replied that the cost, at about £1,000,000, would be too great at present. Others said that Edinburgh could not support such a building for the rest of the year.

For concerts? Morning chamber concerts have to be held in a Masonic hall which is too small, although there is a satisfactory hall for symphony concerts.

TATTOO DRENCHED

This year, the usual gay displays of flowers in the streets glowed through constant rain, and spectators and performers at the open-air military tattoo on the Castle Esplanade were soaked on several nights. For the troops taking part twice nightly, special drying processes for their sodden uniforms were provided at the castle. Triumphantly it was announced that none of the men reported sick the day after the worst drenching in Edinburgh tattoo history.

Drama was given new impetus this year. From Canada came the Stratford (Ontario), company. With Tyrone Guthrie as one of their producers, they were indeed like an Old Vic offshoot.

Henry V. was played with an absence of Canadian accents, a young king modelled on Sir Laurence Olivier but less poetic, and much shouting and charging up and down the aisles of the Assembly Hall.

The only trans-Atlantic note was the appearance of French Canadians as the enemy, but their speech was often hard to follow.

The company also performed Sophocles's 'Oedipus Rex' in masks, and were seen too (at the concurrently held Edinburgh Film Festival), in a filmed version of the play. Oddly enough, 'Oedipus Rex' also took two other forms at the festival—Stravinsky's opera performed by the Hamburg State Opera, and a Jean Cocteau play by Aberdeen performers. I found the opera, sung in Latin and staged as a tableau, initially impressive but soon tedious.

CONTROVERSIAL

Dylan Thomas's 'Under Milk Wood' was the most controversial of the Edinburgh shows. The voices of the original radio production became "visual" in an imaginative way. The bawdiness was not stressed, and I found the village setting too drab. But I enjoyed the ingenuity with which the characters appeared in little rooms almost up in the flies, or were wheeled on in their beds, or pushed on in shops. Donald Houston, known to New Zealanders through his films, linked all together as the narrator.

The exciting music of Richard Strauss's opera, 'Salome,' made as much impact as when it was written half a century ago. In the title role the Hamburg Company's soprano, Helga Pilarczyk, not only sang, acted, and danced with passion, but—unusually for an opera singer—looked the part, both in her veils and without them.

A major attraction was the Boston Symphony Orchestra, soon to be the first western orchestra to visit Soviet Russia. Its performances were much praised, but critics who have in the past clamoured for new music did not show much pleasure in the modern American works offered this time.

Three "grand old men" who enlivened festival music were Sir Thomas Beecham, who obliged reporters with the remark, "All festivals are bunk"; Pierre Monteux, the 81-year-old French conductor; and the 79-year-old pianist-composer, Dohnanyi, who played the solo part in his Variations on a Nursery Song with the B.B.C. Scottish Orchestra and appeared in chamber music.

GRISLY NOVELTY

A grisly novelty was 'The Miraculous Mandarin,' as given by the Sadler's Wells Ballet. With music by Bela Bartok, this ballet has rarely been performed, and never before in Britain. It was thought to be unstageable because of the violence of the story.

The Australian, Elaine Fifield, newest Sadler's Wells ballerina, danced well, but too coldly as a girl who lured a mandarin (Michael Somes) into a den of thugs, chief of whom was danced by the New Zealander Alexander Grant. The mandarin survives stabbing, suffocation and hanging for love of the girl and dies only when she embraces him out of pity.

With choreography by Alfred Rodrigues, this ballet struck many people, including myself, as too brutal to be artistic.

In Coppelia I saw Rowena Jackson dancing the lead, and found her style (often criticised over here as being rather brittle) entirely suited to the animated, mischievous part. Her technique, as usual, was excellent.

How to give Scotland itself a worthy part in the festival is an annual headache. But this year the entertainment of songs, dances and piping called 'Pleasure of Scotland' proved one of the most popular. And the producer was a young Englishman, Anthony Besch.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2
Extract from
The Musical Times
LONDON
Date - - OCT 1956

Connoisseurs of orchestral sonorities will have been struck by the remarkable range of timbre and dynamics displayed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, visiting the Edinburgh Festival. The orchestra has travelled a long way both in distance and accomplishments since it was formed by Henry Lee Higginson seventy-five years ago. At first it was largely made up of German musicians, but later things were softened somewhat by the gradual addition of other nationalities and styles. What has resulted, as everyone knows, is a musical merger that has to be heard to be believed, and heard preferably in some building with a more absorbent acoustic than Usher Hall, where the tuttis sounded deafening. Piston wrote his sixth symphony for this orchestra, inspired by the individual tone-colour and technique of the principal players, so that in a sense the orchestra wrote the symphony for him. It would be difficult to think of any other band of players (except one London group) capable even of playing the notes of the Scherzo. Precision and timing here came to the immediate foreground, and it was noted with approval that the brass section did as well as, if not better than, the woodwind and strings.

Münch secured a good performance of Piston's work, but his Haydn was too violent and impetuous to make any impression other than a painful one. Symphonic poems by Strauss and Dukas fared better, and there was an opportunity for contrast when Monteux took over for a later concert. He introduced an 'American Overture' by Isadore Freed, elegant in its thematic content, slightly less so in its scoring, but well worth another hearing. Brahms's third symphony came over with warmth and élan, never too ingratiating, though Heaven knows what the conductors had to resort to in the old days when Symphony Hall, Boston, sported notices over certain doorways saying 'Exit in case of Brahms'. Monteux continues to enjoy an impressive and lively maturity: long may he reign! There are few great figures in the conducting world today who can claim to have given first performances of ballets by Ravel and Stravinsky in the years before World War I. Our own Sir Thomas Beecham, also in fine fettle at the same festival, is of comparable vintage and gave mellowed but none the less fiery performances of Beethoven. We would give a good deal to hear his comments on the way in which the B.B.C. introduced the Prime Minister's speech on Suez. The Triumphal March from 'Aïda' to lay the ghost of the Khedive? Not a bit of it; they gave us a gramophone record of Ibert's 'The Little White Donkey'.

The blame for this must not, of course, [illegible]

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Times Sept. 26

SECOND CONCERT WITH MR. MONTEUX

During the European tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the direction has been shared between its two principal conductors, both Frenchmen, Mr. Charles Munch and the veteran Mr. Pierre Monteux. To Mr. Monteux has fallen the introduction of the second American symphony to be included in the programmes, and last night he conducted it, Paul Creston's second symphony numbered opus 35, at the Festival Hall, as he had done a month ago at the Usher Hall in Edinburgh.

Creston is a New York organist, more or less self-taught in composition and now 50 years old. The plan of his symphony is unusual, being cast in two large movements which are conceived "as an synthesis of the two foundations of all music, song and dance." Each movement falls into two sections and the basic thematic material is common to all. It runs some danger of being amorphous, but saves itself by not going on too long. The thematic material is not very distinctive, but that very fact allows it to undergo a transformation from something slightly like plainsong to something like jazz. The Song part is euphonious but rhythmically and harmonically rather dull, whereas the Dance part is at any rate rhythmically exciting. This pulls the symphony together to a climax which commends it to an audience; the jazz idioms make it indigenously American.

In strong contrast with it Brahms's third symphony was played very spaciously—Mr. Monteux's tempi were moderate and his reading straightforward. The third (allegretto) movement indicated what is wrong with this fine orchestra—the wood-wind, though individually good if not very distinguished, is not a good chorus, so that when the orchestra embarks on a tutti its powerful brass is not adjusted to its lustrous strings by an adequate balance from the wood-wind. Strauss's Rosenkavalier suite, with which the concert ended, therefore sounded coarse, once the lusciousness of the string passages had been savoured. In any case, what was the point of including anything so unsatisfactory in itself and so unsuitable to concert performance as to leave behind for a last memory of a notable visit an impression of blatancy?

Times Sept 23 56

TH

GRAMOPHONE

SUNDAY TIMES

Records of the Month

CLASSICAL

RAVEL: "Daphnis et Chloé"—Ballet. Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Münch. (H.M.V./ALP 1374.)

STREAKING through town on its way back to Boston, the world's finest orchestra (in my judgment) plays at the Royal Festival Hall tomorrow and Tuesday evenings. For a time, sounds heard there in the wake of this musical comet will inevitably fall rather flat. Happily, some of its fiery tail is captured on this remarkable record.

Here is instrumental virtuosity at its peak and dazzling orchestral colour: playing and timbre vying with each other in clarity and brightness.

Ravel's masterpiece is given complete, with choir (two choruses trained by Robert Shaw singing the difficult unaccompanied passage perfectly in tune). This score, with all its tenderness and iridescence, its contrasts of dynamic and tempi, and its exciting climaxes, is one admirably suited to Münch's temperament, and his performance leaves nothing to be desired.

—FELIX APRAHAMIAN

[82]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
GRAMOPHONE RECORD REVIEW,
London OCT 1956

BERLIOZ, Hector (1803-1869)

SYMPHONIE FANTASTIQUE (47 mins.)

Boston Sym. Orch., cond. Münch. HMV ALP1384 (39/7½)

BERLIOZ'S "SYMPHONIE FANTASTIQUE" WAS INSPIRED BY HIS OWN LOVE affair with the Shakespearean actress, Harriet Smithson and the scandalous stories he heard about her and which drove him nearly insane, indeed it has been said that for two whole nights he wandered desolate, without food and without sleep, through the countryside around Paris, meditating his betrayal and the perfidies of Miss Smithson.

Of the six previous modern recordings of the "Fantastique", I am familiar with all except that of Markevitch (which I am told has some excellent features) but for purposes of comparison I think it is only necessary to consider those of van Beinum and Karajan to which I referred respectively on "GRR" pages 12, March, 1952, and 311, April, 1955. While it is true that van Beinum's Decca dates back some years, I have in my possession a very recent pressing concerning which I can only think it has undergone some quite remarkable process of rejuvenation, because this version now stands up most satisfactorily to the high technical standards of to-day.

Charles Münch and the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra created tremendously favourable impressions at their recent Edinburgh and London (Royal Festival Hall) appearances, as will also the present performance of Berlioz's vivid and dramatic symphony which has been described as a masterpiece of exhibitionism and self-pity. The recording is amongst the very best we have had from RCA-Victor, it is delightfully clear throughout but has not quite the fine sense of depth of either Columbia or Decca, while balance is occasionally a bit questionable. The harp, for example, at the commencement of "Un Bal" is unduly prominent, then again treble generally seems to show just a little too much emphasis. Nevertheless, this is a record one can well be proud to own and where it scores so heavily over its two main rivals is in having the break for turnover after the second movement, instead of midway through the third. Münch takes 27 minutes for the last three movements and which is certainly not overdoing things as far as the record side is concerned, while I suppose Karajan was at a disadvantage over his timing which runs to 53 minutes for the symphony as against the 47 minutes required by Charles Münch.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, incidentally, was formed in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, and since those far-off days has enjoyed an almost unbroken and ever-increasing record of successes; not only have the concerts been multiplied tenfold—the potential audiences have been increased beyond reckoning by radio and, of course, by records. George Henschel (later Sir George) was the first conductor, Koussevitsky held the post for 25 years and the Strasbourg-born Charles Münch since 1949.

MOORE ORR

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
The Musical Times
LONDON
Date OCT 1956

Connoisseurs of orchestral sonorities will have been struck by the remarkable range of timbre and dynamics displayed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, visiting the Edinburgh Festival. The orchestra has travelled a long way both in distance and accomplishments since it was formed by Henry Lee Higginson seventy-five years ago. At first it was largely made up of German musicians, but later things were softened somewhat by the gradual addition of other nationalities and styles. What has resulted, as everyone knows, is a musical merger that has to be heard to be believed, and heard preferably in some building with a more absorbent acoustic than Usher Hall, where the tuttis sounded deafening. Piston wrote his sixth symphony for this orchestra, inspired by the individual tone-colour and technique of the principal players, so that in a sense the orchestra wrote the symphony for him. It would be difficult to think of any other band of players (except one London group) capable even of playing the notes of the Scherzo. Precision and timing here came to the immediate foreground, and it was noted with approval that the brass section did as well as, if not better than, the woodwind and strings.

Münch secured a good performance of Piston's work, but his Haydn was too violent and impetuous to make any impression other than a painful one. Symphonic poems by Strauss and Dukas fared better, and there was an opportunity for contrast when Monteux took over for a later concert. He introduced an 'American Overture' by Isadore Freed, elegant in its thematic content, slightly less so in its scoring, but well worth another hearing. Brahms's third symphony came over with warmth and élan, never too ingratiating, though Heaven knows what the conductors had to resort to in the old days when Symphony Hall, Boston, sported notices over certain doorways saying 'Exit in case of Brahms'. Monteux continues to enjoy an impressive and lively maturity: long may he reign! There are few great figures in the conducting world today who can claim to have given first performances of ballets by Ravel and Stravinsky in the years before World War I. Our own Sir Thomas Beecham, also in fine fettle at the same festival, is of comparable vintage and gave mellowed but none the less fiery performances of Beethoven. We would give a good deal to hear his comments on the way in which the B.B.C. introduced the Prime Minister's speech on Suez. The Triumphal March from 'Aïda' to lay the ghost of the Khedive? Not a bit of it; they gave us a gramophone record of Ibert's 'The Little White Donkey'.

The blame for this must not, of course, ...

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
Dunedin Evening Star, New Zealand

Inadequate Facilities For Edinburgh Festival

(From Betty Upton Hughes)

LONDON (Airmail).—You might suppose that a city like Edinburgh, which has held its international festivals so successfully for 10 years, would at least provide good theatres for famous visiting artists. Not so.

What is there for ballet? A theatre whose dangerously sloping stage provoked criticism from Beryl Grey, of the Sadler's Wells company.

For plays? One production is always given in the Assembly Hall of the Church of Scotland, which is effective only for arena-style productions.

For opera? An adequate theatre is used, and this year Sir Arthur Bliss, Master of the Queen's Musik, appealed to Edinburgh to build a national opera house.

But Mr Robert Ponsonby, the festival's new young artistic administrator, replied that the cost, at about £1,000,000, would be too great at present. Others said that Edinburgh could not support such a building for the rest of the year.

For concerts? Morning chamber concerts have to be held in a Masonic hall which is too small, although there is a satisfactory hall for symphony concerts.

TATTOO DRENCHED

This year, the usual gay displays of flowers in the streets glowed through constant rain, and spectators and performers at the open-air military tattoo on the Castle Esplanade were soaked on several nights. For the troops taking part twice nightly, special drying processes for their sodden uniforms were provided at the castle. Triumphantly it was announced that none of the men reported sick the day after the worst drenching in Edinburgh tattoo history.

Drama was given new impetus this year. From Canada came the Stratford (Ontario), company. With Tyrone Guthrie as one of their producers, they were indeed like an Old Vic offshoot.

Henry V. was played with an absence of Canadian accents, a young king modelled on Sir Laurence Olivier but less poetic, and much shouting and charging up and down the aisles of the Assembly Hall.

The only trans-Atlantic note was the appearance of French Canadians as the enemy, but their speech was often hard to follow.

The company also performed Sophocles's 'Oedipus Rex' in masks, and were seen too (at the concurrently held Edinburgh Film Festival), in a filmed version of the play. Oddly enough, 'Oedipus Rex' also took two other forms at the festival—Stravinsky's opera performed by the Hamburg State Opera, and a Jean Cocteau play by Aberdeen performers. I found the opera, sung in Latin and staged as a tableau, initially impressive but soon tedious.

CONTROVERSIAL

Dylan Thomas's 'Under Milk Wood' was the most controversial of the Edinburgh shows. The voices of the original radio production became "visual" in an imaginative way. The bawdiness was not stressed, and I found the village setting too drab. But I enjoyed the ingenuity with which the characters appeared in little rooms almost up in the flies, or were wheeled on in their beds, or pushed on in shops. Donald Houston, known to New Zealanders through his films, linked all together as the narrator.

The exciting music of Richard Strauss's opera, 'Salome,' made as much impact as when it was written half a century ago. In the title role the Hamburg Company's soprano, Helga Pilarczyk, not only sang, acted, and danced with passion, but—unusually for an opera singer—looked the part, both in her veils and without them.

A major attraction was the Boston Symphony Orchestra, soon to be the first western orchestra to visit Soviet Russia. Its performances were much praised, but critics who have in the past clamoured for new music did not show much pleasure in the modern American works offered this time.

Three "grand old men" who enlivened festival music were Sir Thomas Beecham, who obliged reporters with the remark, "All festivals are bunk"; Pierre Monteux, the 81-year-old French conductor; and the 79-year-old pianist-composer, Dohnanyi, who played the solo part in his Variations on a Nursery Song with the B.B.C. Scottish Orchestra and appeared in chamber music.

GRISLY NOVELTY

A grisly novelty was 'The Miraculous Mandarin,' as given by the Sadler's Wells Ballet. With music by Bela Bartok, this ballet has rarely been performed, and never before in Britain. It was thought to be unstageable because of the violence of the story.

The Australian, Elaine Fifield, newest Sadler's Wells ballerina, danced well, but too coldly as a girl who lured a mandarin (Michael Somes) into a den of thugs, chief of whom was danced by the New Zealander Alexander Grant. The mandarin survives stabbing, suffocation and hanging for love of the girl, and dies only when she embraces him out of pity.

With choreography by Alfred Rodrigues, this ballet struck many people, including myself, as too brutal to be artistic.

In Coppelia I saw Rowena Jackson dancing the lead, and found her style (often criticised over here as being rather brittle) entirely suited to the animated, mischievous part. Her technique, as usual, was excellent.

How to give Scotland itself a worthy part in the festival is an annual headache. But this year the entertainment of songs, dances and piping called 'Pleasure of Scotland,' proved one of the most popular. And the producer was a young Englishman, Anthony Besch.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
TIMES
Sept. 26

SECOND CONCERT WITH MR. MONTEUX

During the European tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the direction has been shared between its two principal conductors, both Frenchmen, Mr. Charles Munch and the veteran Mr. Pierre Monteux. To Mr. Monteux has fallen the introduction of the second American symphony to be included in the programmes, and last night he conducted it, Paul Creston's second symphony numbered opus 35, at the Festival Hall, as he had done a month ago at the Usher Hall in Edinburgh.

Creston is a New York organist, more or less self-taught in composition and now 50 years old. The plan of his symphony is unusual, being cast in two large movements, which are conceived "as an apotheosis of the two foundations of all music, song and dance." Each movement falls into two sections and the basic thematic material is common to all. It runs some danger of being amorphous, but saves itself by not going on too long. The thematic material is not very distinctive, but that very fact allows it to undergo a transformation from something slightly like plainsong to something like jazz. The Song part is euphonious but rhythmically and harmonically rather dull, whereas the Dance part is at any rate rhythmically exciting. This pulls the symphony together to a climax which commends it to an audience; the jazz idioms make it indigenously American.

In strong contrast with it Brahms's third symphony was played very spaciously—Mr. Monteux's tempi were moderate and his reading straightforward. The third (allegretto) movement indicated what is wrong with this fine orchestra—the wood-wind, though individually good if not very distinguished, is not a good chorus, so that when the orchestra embarks on a tutti its powerful brass is not adjusted to its lustrous strings by an adequate balance from the wood-wind. Strauss's Rosenkavalier suite, with which the concert ended, therefore sounded coarse, once the lusciousness of the string passages had been savoured. In any case, what was the point of including anything so unsatisfactory in itself and so unsuitable to concert performance as to leave behind for a last memory of a notable visit an impression of blatancy?

Times Sept 23 56

TH

GRAMOPHONE
SUNDAY TIMES

Records of the Month

CLASSICAL

RAVEL: "Daphnis et Chloé" —Ballet. Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Münch. (H.M.V./ALP 1374.)

STREAKING through town on its way back to Boston, the world's finest orchestra (in my judgment) plays at the Royal Festival Hall tomorrow and Tuesday evenings. For a time, sounds heard there in the wake of this musical comet will inevitably fall rather flat. Happily, some of its fiery tail is captured on this remarkable record.

Here is instrumental virtuosity at its peak and dazzling orchestral colour; playing and timbre vying with each other in clarity and brightness.

Ravel's masterpiece is given complete, with choir (two choruses trained by Robert Shaw singing the difficult unaccompanied passage perfectly in tune). This score, with all its tenderness and iridescence, its contrasts of dynamic and tempi, and its exciting climaxes, is one admirably suited to Münch's temperament, and his performance leaves nothing to be desired.

—FELIX APRAHAMIAN

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CUTTING BUREAU BOSTON FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 28 1956
Sports

THE SUNDAY TIMES, OCTOBER 7, 1956

MUSIC ◆ TELEVISION ◆ RADIO

MISPLACED VIRTUOSITY

By ERNEST NEWMAN

BOTH Mr. Aprahamian and I will remember the Edinburgh Festival of 1956 to the end of our days, for it made us aware of some occupational risks not likely to figure, I think, in the insurance policy of any member of our craft. Mr. Aprahamian merely went down with chicken-pox; I came away with the agonised feeling that the first thing I would have to do when I got back to London would be to consult an aurist.

Nor was this all. By saying in my Edinburgh notice that I had listened to a good deal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert under Charles Münch with my fingers in my ears, and that their performances of a Haydn symphony, Strauss's "Don Juan" and "L'Apprenti Sorcier" were the worst I had ever heard of these works, I ran the risk of creating yet another international "provocation."

✦ ✦ ✦

I AM still unrepentant: never in a fairly long life of concert-going have my ears been afflicted with so much sheer noise as they were that evening. Everyone agrees that the B.S.O. is a truly magnificent musical body; but other people besides myself found its tone now and then unendurably noisy. To some extent, as we all recognised, the Usher Hall was answerable. Every concert hall has its own acoustic peculiarities: the one fault of the handsome and agreeable Usher Hall is that it tends to become over-resonant in big orchestral fortissimi; and everyone who has heard much music-making there will recognise that for part at least of the ear-shattering din made at times by the B.S.O., the blame must be laid on the acoustics of the hall.

But that is not the whole story. For one thing, the question of the conducting had to be taken into account; for another, some people have found the orchestra inclined to elephantiasis of tone even in our own Festival Hall, and that under another conductor than Mr. Münch. I find, for example, one critic of the recent concert of the B.S.O. in the Festival Hall saying that even in a work like Brahms's Third Symphony, under a conductor so experienced and so discreet as Monteux, "there was a tendency to overweight the sonorities of the orchestration"—in other words, the fortissimi were occasionally on the rampageous side.

Mr. Dyneley Hussey went to the root of the matter in a discussion of the Edinburgh concert in the "Listener," where he singled out the conductor as the nigger in the wood pile. After paying a handsome tribute to the superb constitution of the Boston orchestra he said: "If the brass was sometimes overbearing, whose fault was that but the conductor's?" Whose, indeed? "The danger of these 'crack' orchestras," he continued, "is that they tempt conductors to abuse their virtuosity; so we had at the first concert [under Mr. Münch] an absurdly inflated performance of Haydn's symphony in B flat (No. 102), and Strauss's 'Don Juan' was subjected to some unnecessary touches of bravura."

✦ ✦ ✦

BOTH Mr. Münch and the orchestra must finally be held equally to blame for these distressing crudities: the latter has apparently come to delight in flaunting its consummate virtuosity, and the former I have always thought better at showmanship than at getting to the heart of a great work.

In my original article on this topic I said that the whole situation had been illuminated for me, soon after the Edinburgh concert, by a chance remark from a friend from Boston. It was to the effect that she preferred the orchestra under Münch — its regular conductor, by the way—because under anyone else it sounded just like any other orchestra, whereas under him it was always unmistakably the B.S.O. And that, I fancy, is the whole trouble. Both the orchestra and its conductor seem to me too much given to showing off—if the expression will be forgiven me—their technical bravura; a big brass ensemble, for example, will be seized upon as a pretext, whatever the work or the passage may be, for a stunning display of super-fortissimo tone and a machine-gun-like precision of attack and volley.

And one unpleasant result, so far as I am concerned, of this tendency to turn the virtuosity tap full on on all occasions that look, to innocent eyes, the same, is that the works performed all have a curious air of having been composed in the same period by the same man: even a Haydn symphony is made to sound in large part like Strauss or Dukas.

"Ruth"

THERE can be no stage drama when no character undergoes any psychological change from first to last, and so the Eric Crozier-Lennox Berkeley one-act "Ruth," produced by the English Opera Group in the Scala Theatre on Tuesday, is not really an opera but a mixture of cantata, edifying moral tale and sermon. Naomi, Ruth and Boaz being insufficient to engage our whole interest for an hour or so, some choral ensembles have had to be inserted, and these are in the main the best things in the interesting score. The musical idiom is in general a curious alternation of new and old, the former being always the more impressive.

Anna Pollak, Una Hale and Peter Pears were a competent Ruth, Naomi and Boaz respectively, though the unvarying power of the Naomi's voice was psychologically rather incongruous with her rôle as against Ruth's. The small part of Orpah is superfluous. Charles Mackerras conducted.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Daily Mirror, London,
13 NOV 1956

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York
MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
OCT 1956

ONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
RAND, LONDON, W.C.2
Extract from
AND MUSICIANS,
London
OCT 1956

RRE MONTEUX, 81-years-old asso- conductor of the Boston Symphony testra, carried his copy of MUSIC AND ICIANS under his arm in Edinburgh Conductor's Pet Poodle and Historic ical Riot, this page).

Photo: M & M

Conductor's Pet Poodle

COUPLE of years ago I mentioned the favourite poodle of conductor Pierre iteux, called Fifi, which travels around him wherever he goes.

t British quarantine regulations being they are—a dog brought into England remain in quarantine for six months—re Monteux's visits to this country are and far between.

his time, on his visit with the Boston phony Orchestra, Monteux not only came without Fifi, but without his wife as well. Fifi crossed the Atlantic, but remained behind on the Continent with Mme. Monteux. Veteran Pierre couldn't get back to Amsterdam to rejoin them fast enough.

Monteux, although he proudly wears in his buttonhole the rosette of the French Legion of Honour, is no longer a French citizen. He became a naturalised American in 1942.

Historic Musical Riot

IN Edinburgh, during the Boston orchestra's visit, I had a long talk one morning with 81-years-old Monteux. We talked about that famous night 43 years ago, in 1913, when he conducted for Diaghilev's ballet the first performance of Stravinsky's The Rite of Spring.

It took place in the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées in Paris, and the audience wer a complete ri

Edinburgh International Festival

By M. Lindsay-Oliver

Crossing the Atlantic to hear the Boston Symphony at the 10th Edinburgh Festival was a far-flung approach, but having missed the London Philharmonic dates there I thoroughly enjoyed the familiar Boston under Charles Munch who gave unknown works on his four programs to meet the Committee's demands for unhackneyed items. Of these I heard the Howard Hanson "Elegy to the Memory of my Friend Koussevitzky" which had poetry, feeling and harmonious cadences in contrast to Honneger's harsher 4th symphony. Both were receiving a European premiere; and while the Edinburgh critics were generally cool (as they ever have been!) Munch was recalled again and again by warm and enthusiastic audiences, especially after a notable performance of Debussy's "Le Mer." Clifford Curzon cleverly contributed the Schumann Concerto. Such was the example of many orchestral events in Usher Hall I was able to hear which included the Scottish National Symphony Orchestra under Karl Rankl with Myra Hess in a Mozart Concerto and a specially fine performance of the Bruckner Symphony No. 4; the Vienna Hopmusickkapelle and Choir Boys under Rudolf Moralt,—substituting for Krips who was ill,—an amazing performance by the boys with this ancient organization that dates back to the Renascence,—and the London Mozart Players under Harry Blech. Also the Amadeus String Quartet, a Curzon Schubert recital; the spectacular Ram Gopal Indian Ballet in a world premiere of "The Legend of Taj Mahal"; the artistic Canadian Stratford Festival Co. in "Henry V" at the Assembly Hall of the Church of Scotland (which many Scots still think was a sacrilege in the Church Assembly!); Shaw's "Fanny's First Play" and "A Village Wooing"; "The Anatomist" by James Bridie: and the Piccolo Teatro of Milan in "Tonight we Improvise"—a truly hectic affair. I would like to have heard the Vegh String Quartet and many more recitals, but was lucky to receive as many tickets for only ten days of the three week festival. The Raeburn Loan Exhibit was another outstanding event.

It is generally conceded the 10th Festival was the most successful of Edinburgh's unique effort to bring visitors from more than 50 countries together for better understanding and peace through the Arts. Sir John Falconer, the founder, voiced it in 1946 as "a trumpet-call to the Peoples of the World to live at peace and to find a new way of life"—than which there could be no greater objective. Robert Ponsonby, artistic director, already has plans for next year that will include a Russian Orchestra and soloists, and is invited immediately to Russia for this purpose. The Bavarian State Radio Orchestra under Klemperer as a leading German orchestra will come; the Grand Ballet du Marquis de Cuevas, and foreign drama in the hands of Compagnie Jean-Louis Barrault and Madelaine Renaud. Edinburgh is contemplating the building of a Festival Hall to reduce separation of the places for most important events. In spite, however, of the downpour of the third week, every event had a packed house, and rain was welcomed after weeks of drought! Streets and shops were crowded and masses of brilliant flowers everywhere besides the usual in Princess Street Gardens. The Festival Club, Press Headquarters' Lounge, International House and other Club Centers served every kind of visitors' need for social contact. One of the largest "invitation receptions" given by The Scotsman—a backer of the Festival from the beginning—was quite brilliant,—where I met the Earl of Minto, Lady Roseberry who is Chairman of The Scottish National Symphony Orchestra, the Earl of Huntingdon and other Scots' Borderers and artists,—all keen on music toward world peace.

I write this in the home of a Scotch friend at Helensburgh on the Gareloch, but must now get back to London where I hope to again see Louise Trenton, the long-time representative of the LEADER, before she goes to The States.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Daily Mirror, London,
13 NOV 1956

SAYS

CRAZY MIX-UP!

● And give the kids a break

I WAN mixe and giv break.

Teena country and all over America want to hear the best jazz.

They can't all go around paying big sums of money to hear the "greats" when the big names play their jazz history-making concerts.

So the kids have to rely on records.

But because of all sorts of involved union rulings, which date from the time when jazz musicians were considered undesirable vagabonds, recordings are not usually made of these international jazz occasions.

They Will Sit In

Take an example. At midnight tonight, Lionel Hampton and his band—one of the all-time top-liners—will play a farewell concert at the Royal Festival Hall in London, at which some of Britain's greatest jazz musicians will sit in and play.

Names that mean plenty to teenagers all over this land will be making music on a big jazz occasion—Ronnie Scott, Jimmy Duchar, Humphrey Lyttelton, and several other aces will probably be sitting in.

It's too late and too expensive for most of the fans to go—even those who live in London. This is a concert for musicians.

Yet the union has flatly refused the request of impresario Harold Davidson that this concert should be recorded.

WHY?

Because Vic Lewis and his band, who went to America in exchange for the visit of Hampton and his band to this country, did not record in the States.

Doesn't that sound crazy? Even jazz musicians think so—and the union is supposed to be protecting their interests.

British Decca would be more than happy to record this landmark in jazz. Jazz fans all over the world would love to hear it.

But the Musicians' Union persists in having only an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. No record.

THIS doesn't apply to long-hair music. The Boston Symphony Orchestra came over for the Edinburgh Festival and then toured the country.

The union didn't demand that a British symphony orchestra should tour America in exchange. Yet those symphony orchestra players are union members as much as the smallest saxophonist in a nightspot.

Why Deny Them?

So why discriminate? Why deny teenagers the chance to hear their music, while permitting the long-hair fans to hear their preference?

THE same rules apply to television appearances.

Last night Lionel Hampton was interviewed by Jack Payne on TV. Every teenager in this country has heard of Hampton. Every looker-in would have liked to hear him play. Hampton wanted to play.

But if he had so much as played one note on TV—the Musicians' Union would have banned his concert tonight and prevented him ever from returning to this country.

I'd like to see the Musicians' Unions on both sides of the Atlantic get together in the interests of the kids all over the world—and of the musicians themselves—and stop the cold war.

WITH a bunch of chaps, including a 6ft. guy from Western Canada called Donn Reynolds, who has four times won the title of World's Champion Singing Cowboy, we were talking about whiskers yesterday.

"I always wish I'd grown a beard," I said.

"Brother—you're lucky," grunted Donn.

"All my twenty-eight years I've been looking for a dame to marry me.

"Then I came over here to play in a movie and had to grow a beard for the part.

"By this time I was going steady with a blonde—but when she saw the beard she walked out. 'No guy with whiskers for me,' she said.

The Fungus

"So I met another dame with whom I could see myself walking down the aisle. But she says to me: 'Donn, I could go for you in a big way—if it wasn't for the face-fungus.' And she walked out.

"So now," said Donn, "I'm going home for Christmas—to Mum. Brother, let me warn you, if you want to get a gal—don't get a beard!"

Advertiser's Announcement

The SHORTS way to stardom...?

REMEMBER the famous picture of Sylvana Mangano in "Bitter Rice"—the pouting picture in short pants and a blouse?

You do? So does every up-and-coming Italian starlet.

Even though that picture made eyes goggle a long while ago—they still copy the pose.

It gets a lot of them anywhere.

But this girl, Marisa Rossi, is going places. She was discovered (and so many starlets are finding this a good place to be discovered) at an airport.

She was just hanging around—and wearing this outfit. A Hollywood producer saw her—and missed his plane. Now, at seventeen, she has a big American film offer.

THE SUNDAY TIMES, OCTOBER 7, 1956

MUSIC ◆ TELEVISION ◆ RADIO

MISPLACED VIRTUOSITY

By ERNEST NEWMAN

BOTH Mr. Aprahamian and I will remember the Edinburgh Festival of 1956 to the end of our days, for it made us aware of some occupational risks not likely to figure, I think, in the insurance policy of any member of our craft. Mr. Aprahamian merely went down with chicken-pox; I came away with the agonised feeling that the first thing I would have to do when I got back to London would be to consult an aurist.

Nor was this all. By saying in my Edinburgh notice that I had listened to a good deal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert under Charles Münch with my fingers in my ears, and that their performances of a Haydn symphony, Strauss's "Don Juan" and "L'Apprenti Sorcier" were the worst I had ever heard of these works, I ran the risk of creating yet another international "provocation."

✦ ✦ ✦

I AM still unrepentant: never in a fairly long life of concert-going have my ears been afflicted with so much sheer noise as they were that evening. Everyone agrees that the B.S.O. is a truly magnificent musical body; but other people besides myself found its tone now and then unendurably noisy. To some extent, as we all recognised, the Usher Hall was answerable. Every concert hall has its own acoustic peculiarities: the one fault of the handsome and agreeable Usher Hall is that it tends to become over-resonant in big orchestral fortissimi; and everyone who has heard much music-making there will recognise that for part at least of the ear-shattering din made at times by the B.S.O., the blame must be laid on the acoustics of the hall.

But that is not the whole story. For one thing, the question of the conducting had to be taken into account; for another, some people have found the orchestra inclined to elephantiasis of tone even in our own Festival Hall, and that under another conductor than Mr. Münch. I find, for example, one critic of the recent concert of the B.S.O. in the Festival Hall saying that even in a work like Brahms's Third Symphony, under a conductor so experienced and so discreet as Monteux, "there was a tendency to overweight the sonorities of the orchestration"—in other words, the fortissimi were occasionally on the rampageous side.

Mr. Dyneley Hussey went to the root of the matter in a discussion of the Edinburgh concert in the "Listener," where he singled out the conductor as the nigger in the wood pile. After paying a handsome tribute to the superb constitution of the Boston orchestra he said: "If the brass was sometimes overbearing, whose fault was that but the conductor's?" Whose, indeed? "The danger of these 'crack' orchestras," he continued, "is that they tempt conductors to abuse their virtuosity; so we had at the first concert [under Mr. Münch] an absurdly inflated performance of Haydn's symphony in B flat (No. 102), and Strauss's 'Don Juan' was subjected to some unnecessary touches of bravura."

✦ ✦ ✦

BOTH Mr. Münch and the orchestra must finally be held equally to blame for these distressing crudities: the latter has apparently come to delight in flaunting its consummate virtuosity, and the former I have always thought better at showmanship than at getting to the heart of a great work.

In my original article on this topic I said that the whole situation had been illuminated for me, soon after the Edinburgh concert, by a chance remark from a friend from Boston. It was to the effect that she preferred the orchestra under Münch — its regular conductor, by the way—because under anyone else it sounded just like any other orchestra, whereas under him it was always unmistakably the B.S.O. And that, I fancy, is the whole trouble. Both the orchestra and its conductor seem to me too much given to showing off—if the expression will be forgiven me—their technical bravura; a big brass ensemble, for example, will be seized upon as a pretext, whatever the work or the passage may be, for a stunning display of super-fortissimo tone and a machine-gun-like precision of attack and volley.

And one unpleasant result, so far as I am concerned, of this tendency to turn the virtuosity tap full on on all occasions that look, to innocent eyes, the same, is that the works performed all have a curious air of having been composed in the same period by the same man: even a Haydn symphony is made to sound in large part like Strauss or Dukas.

"Ruth"

THERE can be no stage drama when no character undergoes any psychological change from first to last, and so the Eric Crozier-Lennox Berkeley one-act "Ruth," produced by the English Opera Group in the Scala Theatre on Tuesday, is not really an opera but a mixture of cantata, edifying moral tale and sermon. Naomi, Ruth and Boaz being insufficient to engage our whole interest for an hour or so, some choral ensembles have had to be inserted, and these are in the main the best things in the interesting score. The musical idiom is in general a curious alternation of new and old, the former being always the more impressive.

Anna Pollak, Una Hale and Peter Pears were a competent Ruth, Naomi and Boaz respectively, though the unvarying power of the Naomi's voice was psychologically rather incongruous with her rôle as against Ruth's. The small part of Orpah is superfluous. Charles Mackerras conducted.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street - New York

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
OCT 1956

Phi Beta National Awards 1955-1956 Announced

The National Council of Phi Beta, National Professional Fraternity of Music and Speech, recently announced the following coveted awards to outstanding chapters and members for the year 1955-1956:

The Gavel Award, for outstanding active chapter, accomplishment, was presented to Alpha Zeta, George Peperdine College, and Alpha Iota, Centenary College, Special mention for chapter improvement was given to Gamma, American Conservatory of Music. In recognition of outstanding leadership, the recipients of the Awards of Honor were Mary Jo Tyler, of Northwestern University, Dolores Baer, American Conservatory, Charlotte Lambert, Kappa, University of Kentucky, and Ann Stearns, Pi, University of Oregon.

Award for the alumnae chapter with greatest professional activity, Pi Tau, Portland, Ore. alumnae chapter won Honorable Mention for chapter improvement, and Pi Theta, New Orleans alumnae received Honorable Mention for scholarship activities. Lotta Cavill, past national director of extension, claim so deservedly tendered him.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
Daily Mirror, London.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.
Extract from
MUSIC AND MUSICIANS,
London. OCT 1956

PIERRE MONTEUX, 81-years-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, carried his copy of MUSIC AND MUSICIANS under his arm in Edinburgh (see Conductor's Pet Poodle and Historic Musical Riot, this page).

Photo: M & M

Conductor's Pet Poodle

A COUPLE of years ago I mentioned the favourite poodle of conductor Pierre Monteux, called Fifi, which travels around with him wherever he goes.

But British quarantine regulations being what they are a dog brought into England must remain in quarantine for six months—Pierre Monteux's visits to this country are few and far between.

This time, on his visit with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Monteux not only came without Fifi, but without his wife as well. Fifi crossed the Atlantic, but remained behind on the Continent with Mme. Monteux. Veteran Pierre couldn't get back to Amsterdam to rejoin them fast enough.

Monteux, although he proudly wears in his buttonhole the rosette of the French Legion of Honour, is no longer a French citizen. He became a naturalised American in 1942.

Historic Musical Riot

IN Edinburgh, during the Boston orchestra's visit, I had a long talk one morning with 81-years-old Monteux. We talked about that famous night 43 years ago, in 1913, when he conducted for Diaghilev's ballet the first performance of Stravinsky's The Rite of Spring.

It took place in the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées in Paris, and the audience went into a complete riot, yelling and screaming and fighting.

What did they object to—the ballet or the music? That is a question that has always puzzled me.

"Quite obviously to the ballet," declared Monteux emphatically. "I suspected at the time that it was not the music, and so, a little while later on, determined that such a score should not be lost, I suggested to Stravinsky that we should play the music at one of the Colonne concerts. We did, and it was an enormous success and has remained so ever since. The fact that the music has survived, and has even gained in popularity, and that the ballet has died, proves my original judgment."

DAILY MIRROR

★ NOEL WHITCOMB SAYS

STOP THIS CRAZY MUSIC MIX-UP!

● And give the kids a break

I WANNA stop a crazy mixed up music war and give the kids a break.

Teenagers all over this country and all over America want to hear the best jazz.

They can't all go around paying big sums of money to hear the "greats" when the big names play their jazz history-making concerts.

So the kids have to rely on records.

But because of all sorts of involved union rulings, which date from the time when jazz musicians were considered undesirable vagabonds, recordings are not usually made of these international jazz occasions.

They Will Sit In

Take an example. At midnight tonight, Lionel Hampton and his band—one of the all-time top-liners—will play a farewell concert at the Royal Festival Hall in London, at which some of Britain's greatest jazz musicians will sit in and play.

Names that mean plenty to teenagers all over this land will be making music on a big jazz occasion—Ronnie Scott, Jimmy Duchar, Humphrey Lyttelton, and several other aces will probably be sitting in.

It's too late and too expensive for most of the fans to go—even those who live in London. This is a concert for musicians.

Yet the union has flatly refused the request of impresario Harold Davidson that this concert should be recorded.

WHY?

Because Vic Lewis and his band, who went to America in exchange for the visit of Hampton and his band to this country, did not record in the States.

Doesn't that sound crazy? Even jazz musicians think so—and the union is supposed to be protecting their interests.

British Decca would be more than happy to record this landmark in jazz. Jazz fans all over the world would love to hear it.

But the Musicians' Union persists in having only an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. No record.

THIS doesn't apply to long-hair music. The Boston Symphony Orchestra came over for the Edinburgh Festival and then toured the country.

The union didn't demand that a British symphony orchestra should tour America in exchange. Yet those symphony orchestra players are union members as much as the smallest saxophonist in a nightspot.

Why Deny Them?

So why discriminate? Why deny teenagers the chance to hear their music, while permitting the long-hair fans to hear their preference?

THE same rules apply to television appearances.

Last night Lionel Hampton was interviewed by Jack Payne on TV. Every teenager in this country has heard of Hampton. Every looker-in would have liked to hear him play. Hampton wanted to play.

But if he had so much as played one note on TV—the Musicians' Union would have banned his concert tonight and prevented him ever from returning to this country.

I'd like to see the Musicians' Unions on both sides of the Atlantic get together in the interests of the kids all over the world—and of the musicians themselves—and stop the cold war.

WITH a bunch of chaps, including a 6ft. guy from Western Canada called Donn Reynolds, who has four times won the title of World's Champion Singing Cowboy, we were talking about whiskers yesterday.

"I always wish I'd grown a beard," I said.

"Brother—you're lucky," grunted Donn.

"All my twenty-eight years I've been looking for a dame to marry me.

"Then I came over here to play in a movie and had to grow a beard for the part.

"By this time I was going steady with a blonde—but when she saw the beard she walked out. 'No guy with whiskers for me,' she said.

The Fungus

"So I met another dame with whom I could see myself walking down the aisle. But she says to me: 'Donn, I could go for you in a big way—if it wasn't for the face-fungus.' And she walked out.

"So now," said Donn, "I'm going home for Christmas—to Mum. Brother, let me warn you, if you want to get a gal—don't get a beard!"

Advertiser's Announcement

The SHORTS way to stardom...

REMEMBER the famous picture of Sylvana Mangano in "Bitter Rice"—the pouting picture in short pants and a blouse?

You do? So does every up-and-coming Italian starlet.

Even though that picture made eyes goggle a long while ago—they still copy the pose.

It gets a lot of them nowhere.

But this girl, Marisa Rossi, is going places. She was discovered (and so many starlets are finding this a good place to be discovered) at an airport.

She was just hanging around—and wearing this outfit. A Hollywood producer saw her—and missed his plane. Now, at seventeen, she has a big American film offer.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
The Musical Times
LONDON

Date

- NOV 1956

4767

Radio Notes

By DENIS STEVENS

IT would be extremely interesting to discover how many professional musicians, whatever their station or halt, own and enjoy a television set. Men whose working day must often appear to amount to a blur of dots are hardly likely to console themselves in the evenings with a blur of lines, but there may nevertheless be some who welcome with justifiable joy the musical fare which appears from time to time in the B.B.C.'s television programmes. At the present moment I.T.A. programmes do not cater for music-lovers. Indeed, the Authority has so far declined even to appoint a Music Adviser, thus confirming the dictum of Aristotle that 'vulgarity in the audience usually influences the music'—presumably in automatic fashion.

What is less amusing is the fact recently stressed by the Incorporated Society of Musicians that outside the realm of light entertainment opportunities for musical artists are few and far between. Sir Arthur Bliss sounded a similar note in his speech at the annual luncheon of the Performing Right Society: 'I fear that when it comes to the more durable of the music in our great catalogue we can expect very little benefit'. It is, of course, the duty of every musician, teacher, and connoisseur in these islands to see to it that the vulgarity of the audience is effectively counteracted, not only because good taste in music is a worthy end, but also because the livelihood of musicians depends upon it to a very large degree.

During the past few weeks the B.B.C. television service has covered a remarkably wide field. The Sunday-evening celebrity series has brought before the cameras such artists as Moura Lympany and Nathan Milstein, while Sunday afternoons have featured artists from the Edinburgh Festival and that great cellist André Navarra. Delights for both eye and ear have included the last night of the Proms and a shortened version of Bizet's most famous opera directed by Vic Oliver. Rumours that this truncated version will in future be known as 'Carmen Oliver' are, to the best of our knowledge, unfounded. Isaac Stern's performance of the Beethoven violin concerto, with Münch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was an outstanding relay from Edinburgh, and one which should not have been missed by young violinists willing to learn by observing close-ups of the soloist. From a visual point of view, this work was well produced: if only the quality of the sound could match the interest of the vision, the combined effect of the two would be even more telling.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
MUSIC AND MUSICIANS,
London.

- OCT 1956

GH HAD A PLAN IN

Edinburgh's great International Festival, the tenth since its inception, this year took on a different meaning under its new director, Robert Ponsonby. Our Edinburgh correspondent Ian Hutton covers the first week, and Evan Senior the second, of a musical feast that was more an integrated unity than the usual Festival mixture of unrelated events.

QUEUE FOR CHAMBER MUSIC: Long queues formed early every morning during the Festival outside Freemasons' Hall for splendid concerts. Many were unable to obtain seats.
Photo: M & M

First Week
by IAN HUTTON

THE opening week of the Edinburgh Festival was memorable for the scintillating concerts in the Usher Hall by the RPO under Sir Thomas Beecham. There was an uplift of the spirit that removed any fears that Beecham may have been right when he declared that all festivals were "bunk".

These Usher Hall concerts, and — to a lesser extent—the recitals at the Freemasons' Hall, had the genuine flavour of Festival. But the King's Theatre, on the other hand, with the Hamburg State Opera in occupation, was a centre of gravity rather than of delight.

It is inevitable that Hamburg should be measured against Glyndebourne, which so often provides Edinburgh's festival opera fare. But such a comparison is less than fair to the Germany company, which is a permanent organisation whose function it is to offer a huge repertoire of opera to a public less fussy than Glyndebourne's, a public to whom opera is an essential part of aesthetic experience rather than an occasional delight.

Guest Artists Needed

Without having seen Salome, it seemed that the Hamburg company showed some falling off from their own achievements here in 1952. The difference lay almost entirely in the absence of distinguished guest artists, of whom the company appears to have much more need than does Covent Garden.

Nowhere was this more evident than in The Magic Flute, in which only Horst Günter as Papageno and Arnold van Mill as Sarastro revealed international standards. There was a competent Pamina in Anny Schlemm; but Rudolf Schock's Tamino and Colette Lorand's Queen of Night were disappointing; while the novelty of seeing the Three Genii played by authentic boys was offset by their erratic intonation. Best features were Günther Rennert's direction of the Priests and the fine balance between orchestra and stage secured by Rudolph Kempe.

Cornelius' The Barber of Bagdad has had a curious history since its first performance a century ago. Many in Germany regard it as a neglected masterpiece; and it is possible that its Edinburgh showing may result in a wider circulation. I found it a tuneful, unpretentious little work, capable of providing pleasant entertainment.

Arnold van Mill sang well in the role of the Barber, the comedian of the Arabian Nights story, and the rest of the cast was adequate without ever setting the heather on fire. Thanks to the amusing sets of Alfred Siercke the performance had more enchantment for the eye than for the ear.

Most important of the Hamburg offerings was the Stravinsky double bill of the opera-oratorio Oedipus Rex and the tiny one-act opera buffa, Mavra, both in first British stage productions.

Fearful Fascination

Oedipus Rex was presented in a series of tableaux, each introduced by a white-tie-and-tails clad Narrator. For the work, designer Theo Otto and producer Rennert had contrived a spectacle that held the eye in fearful fascination, and as the work progressed I was increasingly gripped by the cold and terrible ingenuity of Stravinsky's score. Helmut Melchert, the Oedipus, had no understudy, and sang with a bad cold, and the orchestra under Leopold Ludwig was disappointing. I was impressed only by the Jocasta of Maria von Ilosvay.

Too short to stand on its own, Oedipus Rex requires a companion-piece; but Mavra does not quite fill the bill except in contrast. The witty set by Theo Otto aroused high expectation, but the little joke took a long 25 minutes to tell.

This opera section was only a partial success. The works were worth going some way to see, but they were not given as well, on the whole, as they might have been.

The Freemasons' Hall recitals presented a much brighter musical picture. Rosalyn Tureck more than confirmed the fine impression she made last year. In two recitals she played the six Partitas of Bach, and again exploded the theory that such works are unsuited to the modern concert grand piano.

This question of instruments arose again when Nina Milkina used a re-created fortepiano and later a modern piano in her Mozart recital. Her performances on both instruments were impeccable, though they showed again that there is no compelling reason to put back the clock.

Welcome was the spry, exuberant veteran Ernst von Dohnányi, playing at Freemasons' Hall with the Edinburgh Quartet and later with Campoli. He played his much-loved Variations on a Nursery Theme to the alert accompaniment of Ian Whyte and the BBC Scottish Orchestra in an afternoon Usher Hall concert. With all the justification in the world, Dohnányi delights in his own music, and plays it with great wit and dexterity.

The Nimble Sitwell

A more sophisticated audience swooped exultantly on the somewhat esoteric Pierrot Lunaire–Façade recital, odd listening on a Monday morning. Schönberg's essay in sprechgesang still has its earnest champions. But for me it was merely to be endured for the chance to hear Dame Edith Sitwell nimbly reciting her poems, albeit through a somewhat faulty microphone. Façade has triumphantly survived its initial ferocious opposition. But Pierrot Lunaire should now be allowed to decompose in peace.

Beecham's RPO concerts included two "novelties"—Bliss's Edinburgh Overture and OPERA FINALE: Arnold van Mill, as Sarastro, blesses the union of (from left) Papageno (Horst Günter) and Papagena (Anneliese Rothenberger), and Pamina (Anny Schlemm) and Tamino (Rudolf Schock), in the finale of the Hamburg Opera's Edinburgh Festival performance of The Magic Flute.

THE WORLD OF MUSIC
N.Y. Times
Dec. 18, 1957

Boston Symphony to Play for First Time at Edinburgh Next Fall

By ROSS PARMENTER

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at next year's Edinburgh Festival.

And this item is only one of the news nuggets to be found in the festival's prospectus. Others: The opera schedule will include a revival of Cornelius' "The Barber of Bagdad"; the drama wing will include Shakespeare's "Henry V," with the Stratford Ontario Festival Company being imported to give it, and the major ensembles will include the Vienna Hofmusikapelle, which is made up of instrumentalists and choristers from the Vienna Opera and the youngsters of the Vienna Boys' Choir.

The Boston Symphony will be the second major American orchestra to go to Edinburgh, for the New York Philharmonic-Symphony already has played there twice—in 1951 and this year. The Boston orchestra will give five concerts between Aug. 26-30, with Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux as its leaders. The appearances in Scotland will be worked into the orchestra's European tour, which may include a visit to Moscow if the arrangements can be made.

The Cornelius opera was introduced by Liszt in 1858, when he was conducting at Weimar. Its revival will be good news to those who love Cornelius' songs and who feel he has not had his due as a composer. It will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, which will be the festival's resident opera company, as it was in 1952. The company's other productions will be Strauss' "Salome," a double bill of Stravinsky's "Mavra" and "Oedipus Rex" and the production of Mozart's "Die Zauberfloete," with which it reopened the new Hamburg Opera House in October.

Aug. 19 to Sept. 8 will be the dates of the Edinburgh Festival, which will be the tenth of its kind. The ninth festival this year attracted a record-breaking crowd of 84,416. Of these, 11,783 were Americans.

[84]

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
The Musical Times
LONDON

Date

Radio Notes

By DENIS STEVENS

IT would be extremely interesting to discover how many professional musicians, whatever their station or halt, own and enjoy a television set. Men whose working day must often appear to amount to a blur of dots are hardly likely to console themselves in the evenings with a blur of lines, but there may nevertheless be some who welcome with justifiable joy the musical fare which appears from time to time in the B.B.C.'s television programmes. At the present moment I.T.A. programmes do not cater for music-lovers. Indeed, the Authority has so far declined even to appoint a Music Adviser, thus confirming the dictum of Aristotle that 'vulgarity in the audience usually influences the music'—presumably in automatic fashion.

What is less amusing is the fact recently stressed by the Incorporated Society of Musicians that outside the realm of light entertainment opportunities for musical artists are few and far between. Sir Arthur Bliss sounded a similar note in his speech at the annual luncheon of the Performing Right Society: 'I fear that when it comes to the more durable of the music in our great catalogue we can expect very little benefit'. It is, of course, the duty of every musician, teacher, and connoisseur in these islands to see to it that the vulgarity of the audience is effectively counteracted, not only because good taste in music is a worthy end, but also because the livelihood of musicians depends upon it to a very large degree.

During the past few weeks the B.B.C. television service has covered a remarkably wide field. The Sunday-evening celebrity series has brought before the cameras such artists as Moura Lympany and Nathan Milstein, while Sunday afternoons have featured artists from the Edinburgh Festival and that great cellist André Navarra. Delights for both eye and ear have included the last night of the Proms and a shortened version of Bizet's most famous opera directed by Vic Oliver. Rumours that this truncated version will in future be known as 'Carmen Oliver' are, to the best of our knowledge, unfounded. Isaac Stern's performance of the Beethoven violin concerto, with Münch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was an outstanding relay from Edinburgh, and one which should not have been missed by young violinists willing to learn by observing close-ups of the soloist. From a visual point of view, this work was well produced: if only the quality of the sound could match the interest of the vision, the combined effect of the two would be even more telling.

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Times
18 1956

Boston Symphony to Play for First Time at Edinburgh Next Fall

By ROSS PARMENTER

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at next year's Edinburgh Festival.

And this item is only one of the news nuggets to be found in the festival's prospectus. Others: The opera schedule will include a revival of Cornelius' "The Barber of Bagdad"; the drama wing will include Shakespeare's "Henry V," with the Stratford Ontario Festival Company being imported to give it, and the major ensembles will include the Vienna Hofmusikapelle, which is made up of instrumentalists and choristers from the Vienna Opera and the youngsters of the Vienna Boys' Choir.

The Boston Symphony will be the second major American orchestra to go to Edinburgh, for the New York Philharmonic-Symphony already has played there twice—in 1951 and this year. The Boston orchestra will give five concerts between Aug. 26-30, with Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux as its leaders. The appearances in Scotland will be worked into the orchestra's European tour, which may include a visit to Moscow if the arrangements can be made.

The Cornelius opera was introduced by Liszt in 1858, when he was conducting at Weimar. Its revival will be good news to those who love Cornelius' songs and who feel he has not had his due as a composer. It will be given by the Hamburg State Opera, which will be the festival's resident opera company, as it was in 1952. The company's other productions will be Strauss' "Salome," a double bill of Stravinsky's "Mavra" and "Oedipus Rex" and the production of Mozart's "Die Zauberfloete," with which it reopened the new Hamburg Opera House in October.

Aug. 19 to Sept. 8 will be the dates of the Edinburgh Festival, which will be the tenth of its kind. The ninth festival this year attracted a record-breaking crowd of 84,416. Of these, 11,783 were Americans.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS-CUTTING BUREAU
184, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

Extract from
MUSIC AND MUSICIANS,
London.

OCT 1956

GH HAD A PLAN IN

Edinburgh's great International Festival, the tenth since its inception, this year took on a different meaning under its new director, Robert Ponsonby. Our Edinburgh correspondent Ian Hutton covers the first week, and Evan Senior the second, of a musical feast that was more an integrated unity than the usual Festival mixture of unrelated events.

QUEUE FOR CHAMBER MUSIC: Long queues formed early every morning during the Festival outside Freemasons' Hall for splendid concerts. Many were unable to obtain seats.
Photo: M & M

First Week

by IAN HUTTON

THE opening week of the Edinburgh Festival was memorable for the scintillating concerts in the Usher Hall by the RPO under Sir Thomas Beecham. There was an uplift of the spirit that removed any fears that Beecham may have been right when he declared that all festivals were "bunk".

These Usher Hall concerts, and—to a lesser extent—the recitals at the Freemasons' Hall, had the genuine flavour of Festival. But the King's Theatre, on the other hand, with the Hamburg State Opera in occupation, was a centre of gravity rather than of delight.

It is inevitable that Hamburg should be measured against Glyndebourne, which so often provides Edinburgh's festival opera fare. But such a comparison is less than fair to the Germany company, which is a permanent organisation whose function it is to offer a huge repertoire of opera to a public less fussy than Glyndebourne's, a public to whom opera is an essential part of aesthetic experience rather than an occasional delight.

Guest Artists Needed

Without having seen Salome, it seemed that the Hamburg company showed some falling off from their own achievements here in 1952. The difference lay almost entirely in the absence of distinguished guest artists, of whom the company appears to have much more need than does Covent Garden.

Nowhere was this more evident than in The Magic Flute, in which only Horst Günter as Papageno and Arnold van Mill as Sarastro revealed international standards. There was a competent Pamina in Anny Schlemm; but Rudolf Schock's Tamino and Colette Lorand's Queen of Night were disappointing; while the novelty of seeing the Three Genii played by authentic boys was offset by their erratic intonation. Best features were Günther Rennert's direction of the Priests and the fine balance between orchestra and stage secured by Rudolph Kempe.

Cornelius' The Barber of Bagdad has had a curious history since its first performance a century ago. Many in Germany regard it as a neglected masterpiece; and it is possible that its Edinburgh showing may result in a wider circulation. I found it a tuneful, unpretentious little work, capable of providing pleasant entertainment.

Arnold van Mill sang well in the role of the Barber, the comedian of the Arabian Nights story, and the rest of the cast was adequate without ever setting the heather on fire. Thanks to the amusing sets of Alfred Siercke the performance had more enchantment for the eye than for the ear.

Most important of the Hamburg offerings was the Stravinsky double bill of the opera-oratorio Oedipus Rex and the tiny one-act opera buffa, Mavra, both in first British stage productions.

Fearful Fascination

Oedipus Rex was presented in a series of tableaux, each introduced by a white-tie-and-tails clad Narrator. For the work, designer Theo Otto and producer Rennert had contrived a spectacle that held the eye in fearful fascination, and as the work progressed I was increasingly gripped by the cold and terrible ingenuity of Stravinsky's score. Helmut Melchert, the Oedipus, had no understudy, and sang with a bad cold, and the orchestra under Leopold Ludwig was disappointing. I was impressed only by the Jocasta of Maria von Ilosvay.

